KSI300815	AKYEAMPONG	KWAKU
KSI300816	QUANSAH	PETER
KSI300817	OSEI	KWADWO
KSI300818	BONSU	ADDAI
KSI300819	ODOOM	MARY
KSI300820	AFRIYIE	AKUA
KSI300821	MAWUYOME-ADUKPO	JOSEPH
KSI300822	ASARE	STEPHEN MENSAH
KSI300823	OPOKUAA	YAA
KSI300824	DANKWAAH	AUGUSTINA
KSI300825	KYEI-BAFFOUR	KWAME
KSI300826	NARH	JOSEPH TETTEH
KSI300827	YEBOAH	CHRISTOPHER KOFI
KSI300828	KARIKARI	JAMES KOFI
KSI300829	ACHEAMPONG	THERESA
KSI300830	BOAKYE	AKWASI
KSI300831	BOWI	KWABENA
KSI300832	AGYEKUM	EMMANUEL
KSI300833	NYARKO	YAA
KSI300834	ASANTE	BARIMA
KSI300835	ANKOMAH	YAA
KSI300836	AGYEMANG	YAA
KSI300837	MANU	JANET
KSI300838	MIKOYAN	LATEVI ANASTAS K.
KSI300839	DUFIE	MARY ABENA
KSI300840	KYEI	MATTHEW
KSI300841	OSEI POKU	STEPHEN
KSI300842	OHEMENG	KWADWO
KSI300843	OWUSU	NANA KOFI
KSI300844	NYAMEKYE	ALBERT ABOAGYE
KSI300845A	SAGOE	EDWARD CHARLES
KSI300845B	AWUAH	YAW ALBERT
KSI300846	MENASHER	LORD
KSI300847	ASANTE	DANIEL
KSI300848	MANU	AMMA
KSI300849	KWAKYE	YAW

KSI300850	AYISI ARKOH	NANA
KSI300851	ADJEI	MICHAEL KWADWO
KSI300852	NARH	BARNABAS
KSI300853	AGYEI	AKWASI
KSI300854	ASARE	HANNALY
KSI300855	DARKO	KWADWO
KSI300856	TAMAKLOE	GODWIN SEFAKOR K.
KSI300857	AKUOKO	GAMBIA A.K.
KSI300858	OBENG KYERE	KWAKU
KSI300859	APIAH	KWABENA
KSI300860A	OKRA	ALBERT OMANE
KSI300860B	AKROBIRE	NANA BUDU
KSI300861A	OPPONG-BOADU	SAMUEL
KSI300861B	AKOMEA	CECILIA
KSI300862A	AGYEIWAAH	AFUA
KSI300862B	SIAW-ADDO	BEATRICE
KSI300863A	AMPONSAH	ELIZABETH
KSI300864A	ADJEI-LARBI	SAMUEL
KSI300864B	KWAKYE	KOFI AGYIREY
KSI300865A	ARMAH	LYDIA
KSI300865B	OWUSUA	AKOSUA
KSI300866	BURUWAA	ABENA
KSI300867	AMOH	EMMANUEL OWUSU
KSI300868	ADOMAKO	KWABENA
KSI300869	APIAH	EMMANUEL OWUSU
KSI300870	AMPADU	KWABENA
KSI300871	SIMPE	STEPHEN YAW
KSI300872	AYEKPLE	FELIX DIO
KSI300873A	AWUKU	FRANCIS KWADWO OWURANI
KSI300874	OFORI	EMMANUEL
KSI300875	SERWAAH	AMA
KSI300876	ADARKWA-YIADOM	GORDON
KSI300877	KWAFO	EMMANUEL
KSI300878	NORGA	YAKUBU
KSI300879	MENSAH-BONSU	EDWARD
KSI300880	BOATENG	OWUSU ISAAC
KSI300881	ZAKARIA	ABDUL KARIM
KSI300882	ASAMOAH	AKWASI
KSI300883	YEBOAH	SAMUEL ADDO
KSI300884	TUTU	ISAAC OSEI
KSI300885	ALIDU	SEIDU
KSI300886	GATOR	FRANCIS KWAKU
KSI300887	ADOBEA	GRACE
KSI300888	KUTIN	KWESI
KSI300889	OBIMPE	AKUA
KSI300890	DANSO	KWAKU
KSI300891	BAAH	ESSARKWA NANA
KSI300892	BAWA	KWADWO
KSI300893	DONKOR	JOSEPH
KSI300894	AMANKWAA	YAA
KSI300895	MENSAH	ALICE
KSI300896	ARTHUR	JOSEPH
KSI300897	SAGOE	BEN KOBINA
KSI300898	BAAH	AFUA
KSI300899	KUNDANA	MINTANA
KSI300900	DANSOAA	AFUA
KSI300901	OPPONG	VICTORIA
KSI300902	WOOD	JOHN BENJAMIN

KSI300903	KYEI	PETER KWAKU
KSI300904	OSEI	ANTHONY
KSI300905	MAHAMA	THOMPSON
KSI300906	ABUBAKARI	DAWADA
KSI300907	AMPONSA ANTWI	NANA
KSI300908	YEBOAH	PHILIP
KSI300909	KARIKARI	KOFI
KSI300910A	ADDAI	JOHN ALBERT KWAKU
KSI300910B	BREW	REYNOLDS
KSI300911	SARBENG	MATTHEW KOFI
KSI300912	APIAH KUSI BRIMPONG
KSI300913	JACHIE	JAMES
KSI300914	MENSAH	EVANS OPUNI
KSI300915	GRUSI	KWADWO
KSI300916	TWUMASI	ELLIOT NSIA KWADWO
KSI300917	SAKYI	KOFI MARTIN
KSI300918	AGYEMAN-DUA	KING
KSI300919	MPRENGO	AKUA
KSI300920	AKYAA	ADWOA
KSI300921	OSEI	FRANCISCA
KSI300922	IBRAHIM	AKWASI
KSI300923	AMOA	KWADWO
KSI300924	DAGOMBA	ZAKARIYA
KSI300925	ASAMOA	OBENG (DR.)
KSI300926	ATUAHENE	EMMANUEL
KSI300927	TABASE	AGNES BANDASOA
KSI300928	BOATENG	AKUAMOA
KSI300929	BOAMAH	PETER
KSI300930	ADOMAH	AFUA
KSI300931	DANKWAAH	AKUA
KSI300932	AMANKWAH	JOSEPH
KSI300933	AMPOFOWAA	AMA
KSI300934	APPAU	RICHARD
KSI300935	ASARE	JOHN
KSI300936	NYAMEKYE	MARY
KSI300937	ODOLE	FELICIA
KSI300938	ANTWI-POAKWA	DIANA
KSI300939	KANIN	JOSEPH GYEMPEH
KSI300940	BOATENG	KOFI
KSI300941	TETTEY	SAMPSON
KSI300941	TETTEY	SAMPSON GIDEON K.
KSI300942	DEDE	KOFI
KSI300943	IBRAHIM	ZAKARI
KSI300944	DABODA	ANACHIE
KSI300945	ASANTE	TUFFOUR
KSI300945	ASANTE	TUFFOUR
KSI300947	YEBOAH	MARGARET
KSI300947	YEBOAH	MARGARET
KSI300948	ADJEI	CECILIA
KSI300949	TAWIAH	ANNA
KSI300949	TAWIAH	ANNA
KSI300951	SEY	PHILOMENA
KSI300952	BOATEMAAH	AKUA
KSI300953	YEBOAH	CHARLES
KSI300954	ABAYIE	JANET ABREFI
KSI300955	OPPONG	GEORGE
KSI300956	GYAMFI	KWABENA
KSI300957	ODEI	ANTHONY

KSI300958	YEBOAH	KWAKU
KSI300959	OSEI	JANET
KSI300960	FOSU	PATRICIA
KSI300961	FRIMPOMAA	AKUA
KSI300962	ACHIAA	YAA
KSI300963	ACHIAMAA	ADWOA
KSI300964	ASANTEWAA	AMA
KSI300965	DEBRAH	COMFORT
KSI300965	DEBRAH	COMFORT
KSI300966	AGYEMANG	COMFORT
KSI300966	AWUAH	NICHOLAS
KSI300967	ANTWI	PETER
KSI300968	AFRIYIE	AKUA
KSI300969	KONADU	AMA
KSI300970	AKOTO	DANIEL
KSI300971	COKER	JOE
KSI300972	BOAKYE	AKWASI
KSI300973	AGYAPOMAA	YAA
KSI300974	AMANKWAA	SUSUANA
KSI300975	SERWAH	AKUA
KSI300976	AFRIYIE	IBRAHIM
KSI300977	ASANTEWAAH	ABENA
KSI300978	DARKO	MENSAH
KSI300979	DEBRA	ANTHONY NANA
KSI300980	AMOA	STEPHEN EMMIL
KSI300981	DUA	OPANIN KWAKU
KSI300982	ASIEDU	KWADWO
KSI300983	MINTAH	PAUL
KSI300984	FOSU	KWAKU
KSI300985	DONKOR	ANDREWS
KSI300986	FOSU	CHARLES YAW
KSI300987	AGYEI-MANU	PETER
KSI300988	AFRRAKOMA	YAA
KSI300989	BAAH	PETER KWAKU
KSI300990	KONADU	AKUA
KSI300991	AFRIFA	ATTA
KSI300992	GRUSHIE	ADAMU
KSI300993	GRUSHIE	PETER LUU
KSI300994	ASANTEWAAH	YAA
KSI300995	BEKOE	EDMOND
KSI300996	ADDAI	SAMUEL KWESI
KSI300997	OSEI-TUTU	STEVEN
KSI300998	AMEYAW	JOSEPH KWAKU
KSI300999	YORKE	CHRISTOPHER SAM ALBERT
KSI3001000	OFORI	SAMPSON
KSI3001001	FORKUO	AGNES
KSI3001002	BROBBEY	PAUL KWASI
KSI3001003	ZIEBAH	JAMES ZOUMUG

APPENDIX D 2

LIST OF PETITIONERS

FILE NUMBER	SURNAME	FIRST NAMES
BLG100160	ABARTEY	GRACE AMA
BLG100082	ABDULAI	SAFANA
BLG100070	ABELINGO	ALIKA
BLG100161	ABU	MAHAMA
BLG100006	ABUBAKARI	ISSIFU
BLG100139	ABUDULAI	SAADIA
BLG100032	ABUGUMZIO	RICHARD KWABENA
BLG100036	ACHANA	CLETUS
BLG100085	ACHAW	GEORFREY-TAMALE
BLG100046	ACHAW	MARGARET
BLG100007	ACQUAH	COMFORT KESEWAA
BLG100086	ADAMU	ALHAJI
BLG100004	ADDY	JAMES ADUAH
BLG100054	ADOMBILA	COSMAS
BLG100059	ADOMBILLA	GEORGE ASEKO
BLG100096	ADOMBIRE	ANEERO
BLG100138	ADOMBIRE	LARDI
BLG100058	ADOMOGRI	TUOKETE
BLG100089	ADOMOLGA	BINGLORO
BLG100132	ADONGO	ADAKOORA
BLG100026	ADUKO	FUSEINE
BLG100064	AGANA	JAMES
BLG100092	AGARTEY	YAKUBU
BLG100005	AGONA	KOJO
BLG100126/136	AGONGO	ATANGA
BLG100136	AGONGO	ATANGA
BLG100055	AGORIGO	ROLAND
BLG100075	AKALINKOSA	ABIATEKUM
BLG100043	AKIBI	ESSI-AKIRA
BLG100068	AKOLOGO	AYAMBILA
BLG100062	AKOLOGO	IBRAMHIM
BLG100159	AKOLOGU	ABAA
BLG100158	AKOLOGU	MUSAH
BLG100049	AKOLOR	KENNETH
BLG100013	AKONGNE	ADUAH
BLG100137	AKUMOLGA	ABUGRE
BLG100033	ALAPELUM	AZURE
BLG100113	ALHASSAN	ABUDUGAFAR
BLG100051	ALHASSAN	HAMIDU
BLG100012	AMADU	ZENABU
BLG100040	AMOAHA	SYLVESTER
BLG100061	AMORI	AGNES
BLG100084	ANAABA	ABAGNA
BLG100031	ANABILA	AGIBASSE
BLG100010	ANAMOLGA	JOSEPH
BLG100134	ANAMOO	ABESAARE
BLG100088	ANAMOO	NSOH

BLG100135	ANAMOO	RUTH
BLG100093	ANAPALUM	REGINA
BLG100098	ANOLUSKO	ASSEBI
BLG100029	ANONSIGE	AYUURA
BLG100023	APAABA	ASABILLA
BLG100001	APAMBILLA	WILLIAM
BLG100035	APASNORIN	CLIFF ATAMPUGRI
BLG100063	APEEKSIYA	AKARIM
BLG100076	APENTIHK	LAMISI
BLG100047	ASEKABTA	MOSES
BLG100101	ASIBIGA	ATINTORO
BLG100116	ASIMA	DANIEL DUMAH
BLG100094	ATAMPOKA	ADONGO
BLG100050	ATANGA	GILBERT
BLG100107	ATANGARA	ASANYURE
BLG100025	ATANGOSIGO	GEORGE AMASON
BLG100028	ATENG	GEORGE
BLG100077	ATIBILLA	MARTINA
BLG100053	ATINCHINA	JOHN AYAMGA
BLG100131	ATOBELGO	ADAMU
BLG100157	ATOYEPORUM	KANAA
BLG100041	ATULARI	SOLOMON TULLE
BLG100042	ATULE	BOB NSOH
BLG100067	AWINEBUNO	NNONGE
BLG100149	AWINEBUNO	NNONGE
BLG100015	AWUVIRI	GILBERT NEWTON
BLG100127	AYAMGA	ATANGA
BLG100017	AYAMGA	AWALIGAH
BLG100060	AYAMGA	BASIDU
BLG100003	AYAMGA	BUKARI BAWA
BLG100142	AYANYIRE	SECSENA
BLG100129	AYELEME	ATANGA
BLG100038	AYEMLEME	ATANGA
BLG100073	AYIRIGIYA	ELIASU
BLG100071	AYIRIYA	ELIASU
BLG100156	AYUA	ALUDI
BLG100130	AZARA	ABDULAI
BLG100140	AZARA	IBRAHIM
BLG100072	AZORTAH	ASUKUWING
BLG100048	AZUBIRE	NABA THOMAS
BLG100109	AZURE	IBRAHIM
BLG100104	AZUURE	ABASIGA
BLG100128	AZUURE	AKANYERE
BLG100081	BAAWINE	KWAKU
BLG100066	BADGIE	FRANCIS
BLG100016	BARNAADA	ADORNIA
BLG100065	BAYIGWANAMU	NAMOO
BLG100103	BIBETA	HARUNA
BLG100014	BOAHEN	NSOWAH
BLG100021	BOGOBIRI	IDDRISU SEIDU
BLG100108	BRAIMAH	ZETU
BLG100100	BUKARI	MOHAMMED JIMMY
BLG100027	CAMARA	ISSAH

LIST OF PETITIONERS

FILE NUMBER	SURNAME	FIRSTNAMES
HVR200001	FETOR	SIMON KWAME
HVR200002	NUTSUGAH	CHRISTOPH
HVR200003	AHIAKU	SAMUEL
HVR200004	ADOM	JOHN KWABENA
HVR200005	AMENYO S. K.	LETSU
HVR200006	BAAH	ROCKY YAO
HVR200007/8	ATTIANAH	RICKY NELSON
HVR200010	DAVOR	ADOLPH
HVR200011	HONU	ALFRED
HVR200012	HONU	ESMIR
HVR200013	BOBI	JULIANA YAWA
HVR200014	OBENG	STEPHEN KWAME
HVR200015	AMEFIA	KOMLA KUMA
HVR200016	DUMHASSIE	MICHAEL
HVR200017	MENSAH	CHRISTIAN
HVR200018	DZAMESI	AFI MADONUNAWO
HVR200019	DIAMEH	WILLIAM
HVR200020	ASHIAKPOR	VINCENT (TOGBUI)
HVR200022	AFFOR	MEDERIS
HVR200023	DOAMEKPOR	DANIEL MENSAH
HVR200024	AKPANYA	EMMANUEL G.
HVR200025	DEDZO-DZOKOTO	COMFORT AKU
HVR200026	DUGBATSE	GLADYS
HVR200027	ATAGBA	JOHN JACOB
HVR200028	AHIAKONU	FRANCIS KWADZO
HVR200029	AKOTO	CEPHAS M.
HVR200030	BOATENG	MUSTAPHA
HVR200031	AHIAKU	AGBEKO SAMUEL
HVR200032	ATENGBLE	EDWARD
HVR200034	ANTWI-BARIMA	EMMANUEL
HVR200035	BEDIAKO	HOSEA
HVR200036	AGBANA	RUTH DELALI
HVR200037	AGBAKU	ELIZABETH
HVR200038	ANANIE	EMMANUEL
HVR200039	BAKU	GILBERT VICTOR KUDJO
HVR200040	OBLAWU-BEDIAKO	KWAKU
HVR200041	KUSI	VALISIA YAWA L.
HVR200042	DEY-AGBAGLO	HELLEN ADZO
HVR200043	ANTOR	ROBERT KWAME
HVR200044	ASAMOAH	JACOB
HVR200045	ASIMADU	HENRY
HVR200047	ADABLAH	SAMUEL KWAME
HVR200048	AGBEMASU	FREEMAN KOFI
HVR200049	KUMENI	MARY ANTONIA
HVR200050	PUPLAMPU	WILLIAM
HVR200051	AGAHEY	ELIAS
HVR200052	OBUADZO	ALEXANDER
HVR200053	BOAMPONG	EDWARD OTAPA
HVR200054	FOMEVOR	KODZO
HVR200055	ASASE	MOSES KOFI
HVR200056	ABAKE	JOHNSON

HVR200057	ZIGA	YAK
HVR200058	GBEGBLE	GILBERT KWASHIVI
HVR200059	AYITEVI	JOHN
HVR200060	ANKU	MATHIAS KOMLA
HVR200061	OBERKO	CLEMENCE K.
HVR200063	DOMPREH	GERSHON KWAKU
HVR200064	LADZEKPO	ELLEN
HVR200065	DONKOR	DRAI GABRIEL
HVR200066	GBEKU	CHRISTIAN
HVR200067	KWAWU	STEPHEN ROBERT
HVR200068	LARBI	RAPHAEL K,
HVR200069	TITIATI	EMMANUEL KWASI
HVR200070	TEDEKU	EMMANUEL
HVR200071	AGBETSOAMEDO	SEBASTIAN
HVR200072	KATAKO	JOHNSON KWASI
HVR200073	DZANDU	JOSEPH
HVR200074	ANTOR	LUCY YAWA
HVR200075	AGBAVOR	KWAME
HVR200076	AGBADZI	DIVINE CRESPIN
HVR200077	APAWU	SOLOMON
HVR200079	DEMORDZIE	EVANS BRIGHT K.
HVR200080	AFAKE	HENRY KWAKU
HVR200081	COFIE	SAMUEL
HVR200082	ADZOVIE	MICHAEL KOMLA
HVR200083	MOTTEY	HENRY KOFI
HVR200084	APEDU – DOH	JEROME
HVR200085	DANQUAH	GODFRIED
HVR200086	GOKU	MOSES ARKU AMENYA
HVR200087	EWORNYI	DANIEL K
HVR200088	AWUNYE-KPOBI	EMMANUEL MAWULI
HVR200089	ANABILLA	ATIBILLA
HVR200091	ADZROE	JAMES YAO
HVR200093	AMEGBOR	GABRIEL
HVR200094	TOGBUI AKPAO II
HVR200096	EDEM-YAO	FRANCIS EMMANUEL
HVR200097	SENANU	LOVELACE
HVR200098	AGBLEY	EMIL KOFI
HVR200099	MIREKU	SAMUEL KWADJO
HVR200100	NARCCOR-TSEY	KWAMI WINFRED
HVR200101	BAAH	FRED KWAME
HVR200102	AMANKWA	VINCENT
HVR200103	TSIAGBE	KWEKU ANSAH
HVR200104	KOTTOH	KWAME
HVR200105	VIEW	KWADZO
HVR200106	HOEZAME	VICTOR
HVR200107	SIABI	PROSPER KOJO
HVR200108	OPOKU	MARTIN
HVR200109	DUNYO	FRANCIS
HVR200112	SAKOR	ANTHONY KOFI
HVR200113	ADZOKLO	PHILIP
HVR200114	TSIAGBE	DAN R
HVR200115	KETORWOKO	AUGUSTINE ADDY
HVR200116	AYIFLI	KWAME DONKOR
HVR200117	MENSAH	DAKETSE ISSAC
HVR200118	MENORKPOR	BENJAMIN KOFI

HVR200119	ADUKONU	AGNES
HVR200120	TOGBE NKWANTA VI
HVR200121	ATTAH	CHRISTIAN B. K.
HVR200122	TOGBE AGBANA II
HVR200123	AMEVIAH	GODWIN KWABLAH
HVR200124	AMEGAH	FAITH ESI
HVR200127	AGBAYIZA	GODWIN
HVR200128	ANKU	RAPHAEL
HVR200130	DUNYO	PATRICK KWAME
HVR200131	ASEMPA	EVANS AKPABLI
HVR200132	AFFRAM	LUCY ABLA
HVR200133	DOMIE	GIBSON KUDZO
HVR200134	TRE	ANDREWS KWAME
HVR200135	AGUSA	DANIEL
HVR200136	BUAMI	EMMANUEL QUARCOO
HVR200137	ZU I	JOHN KOSI ZU
HVR200138	ASIEDU	NEWLOVE E. K.
HVR200139	ADZOGBLE	ALFRED
HVR200140	AKPAKPLA	JAPHET
HVR200141	OSEI	GILLY KING
HVR200142	VANLARE-KARTEY	ROSE
HVR200143	ZUTTAH	DAN
HVR200149	ANTO	BOAS YAW
HVR200150	BOAMAH	MARY
HVR200151	ADIH	PATRICK KWASIE
HVR200153	NTIAMOAH	BENJAMIN
HVR200155	ISIFU	TAHIRU CHIEF
HVR200158	ASHONG	NORBERT KOFI
HVR200162	AMPONY	FRANCIS
HVR200163	AGBOZO	ELIZABETH
HVR200164	NUKRO	EDMUND
HVR200165	AKATOR	GIDEON KWASI
HVR200167	DUSU	WILLIAM
HVR200168	DUSU	EMMANUEL KOJO
HVR200170	AKUMEAH	HAYFORD
HVR200172	AZAH	HOGBAYO G.
HVR200173	ADDIM	PEACE A.
HVR200174	BOAKYE	BEATRICE
HVR200175	AKAKPO	VALENTINE
HVR200178	AGUDEY	EVANS KWAKU
HVR200179	CLUTSE	OSWALD KWAME
HVR200180	MORTTEY	SAMUEL KWAME
HVR200181	TUPRAH	BERNARD
HVR200182	ATTAH	WILLIAMS
HVR200184	AYITEY	VINCENT
HVR200185	TETTEY	SAMUEL
HVR200187	ASHIAKPOR	TOGBE IV
HVR200190	EKPE	EBENEZER M.K.
HVR200191	ZAVOR	FLORENCE
HVR200192	ATIDOGAH	KWESI
HVR200193	AGEVE	CHRISTINE
HVR200194	FANSEY	COMFORT AKU
HVR200195	DOTSOO	KWEKU ANSAH
HVR200196	MANSAH	PEACE A.
HVR200197	AHADZI	REGINA

HVR200198	NANOR	WILLIAM
HVR200199	TEYE-AGBENYO	S
HVR200200	ANKRAH	LETICIA
HVR200201	GIDI	ANNA
HVR200202	TIKAH	AWUSI
HVR200203	TETTEY-DOH	E. C.
HVR200204	AKEY	DADZO
HVR200205	HABADA	ELIZABETH
HVR200206	AHIAFOR	MABEL
HVR200207	ABEW	VICTORIA
HVR200208	TEHO	KATE
HVR200209	KPEGLO	JANET M.
HVR200210	TOGO	SONOHWE
HVR200211	BAKAH	PEACE A.
HVR200212	EDZE	MAMLE
HVR200213	NARH-ZIKPI	MATHIAS KOMLA
HVR200214	ADJAKY	FRANCIS
HVR200215	AGYEMAN	COMFORT AKU
HVR200216	LAWEH	PROSPER KOJO
HVR200217	AHAGBAGBO	ISAAC
HVR200218	GBEMU	DANIEL
HVR200219	TEE	ADIM
HVR200220	ADIMEH	TETE S.
HVR200221	GANU	SOGBE
HVR200222	AZUMAH	EMMANUEL K.
HVR200223	GIDI-NARH	MAXWELL
HVR200224	ANKRAH	AMA
HVR200225	GBADAGO	PAULINA
HVR200226	AKPO	KORKOR
HVR200227	KPENEY	ANNA
HVR200228	TEE	ATIFA
HVR200229	ZIKPI	OLIVIA
HVR200230	AHORLU	CHARITY
HVR200231	FIAWOYIFE	MILLICENT
HVR200232	OSABU	YOHANA
HVR200233	LAWEH	KATE
HVR200234	FIAWOYIFE	GRACE
HVR200235	AGBOKU	GEORGINA
HVR200236	AHUNKPO	DEDE
HVR200237	ASEREVI	MARGARET
HVR200238	MATI	KOFI
HVR200239	MANKRADO	DZAM V
HVR200240	AGBODO	COMFORT AKU
HVR200241	KPENEY	CHRISTOPHER TETTEY
HVR200242	AWOR	BALEY H.
HVR200243	TEKI	AGBODO
HVR200244	SALLAH	BONIFACE
HVR200245	AGBOZO	MARTHA
HVR200247	AZUMAH	APAM JANET
HVR200248	GBETEI	TETE S.
HVR200250	ADISIE	AFI
HVR200251	KAVI	RUTH YOEWIE
HVR200252	ADDIM	MALWINE
HVR200255	ATIGAH	BEBI YAA
HVR200256	ATIDOGAH	H FREEMAN

HVR200257	AGAH	JOHN
HVR200259	AMUZU	EDITH
HVR200260	AHADZI	REGINA T.
HVR200261	FANSEY	PROSPER
HVR200264	DZANDU	STEPHEN KWAME
HVR200267	DZANKU	K. K. SHAG
HVR200268	ZOGLI	S. KODZO
HVR200269	GBINDE J.	KORKU
HVR200270	AGBALE	DANIEL Y.
HVR200271	ANKRAH	LETICIA
HVR200272	VAN-SAGODO	J. W.
HVR200273	BUBU	EDITH TEE
HVR200274	ADJIMAH	JOACHIM S.
HVR200275	NYAMEKYE	JOHN K.
HVR200276	KLU	ZAKOUR G.
HVR200277	ADJEI	GABRIEL K.
HVR200278	ADELAYITA	EMMANUEL K.
HVR200279	AGBEDZOFE	EMMANUEL B.
HVR200280	TORGBENU	ISAAC TETTEH
HVR200281	PUPLAMPU	AWOYO
HVR200282	PUPLAMPU	DORA
HVR200283	AWUDI	SEWOR EMMANUEL
HVR200284	AKLI	DANIEL
HVR200285	MOTey	SALIFU FIERDZINU
HVR200286	OPOSIKA-AGUDEY	C.
HVR200287	OTCHIE	AKUAFO DANIEL
HVR200288	APRONTI	OFOTSU B.
HVR200289	DJAGBLETEY	FRANCIS W.
HVR200290	PUPLAMPU	TETTEH
HVR200291	SOTI	OSMAN
HVR200292	KLOKPAH	DAWAYE
HVR200293	SOTI	ABDULAI
HVR200294	ABEASI	MARGARET ADZO
HVR200295	SOTI	HAMIDU
HVR200296	BOSUMPRAH	TEYE
HVR200297	SAPPOR	VIDA NMONMLOKIE
HVR200298	OUT	MANGERTEY S.
HVR200299	NYAMEDOR	NATHAN
HVR200300	ANIM	AMARKWOR
HVR200301	SEBI	MAMLE MANSA
HVR200302	KORLEY	TEYE ABEL
HVR200303	AYORNU	MOSES
HVR200304	AGBOVE	VICTORIA D.
HVR200305	KORLEY	NARTEY ANDREWS
HVR200306	NARTEY	AKUTEYE
HVR200307	OUT AYITTAH	ALBERT
HVR200308	SEBI	AKU
HVR200310	AYITTAH LAWER	ALBERT
HVR200311	LARWERTEH	JAMES
HVR200312	AMEVOR	ANIM AMAKI Z.
HVR200313	TEILLAH	TETTEH
HVR200314	ADODOADZI	ATTEH
HVR200315	MONTEY	SALIFU FIERDZINU
HVR200316	AKPALU	ELVIS
HVR200317	GOTA	DAKOMESI MARY

HVR200318	OBUOR	KORLEKI
HVR200319	NAMEY	ASIDAAHE
HVR200320	AGBONOR ABLAYO	FELICIA
HVR200321	MENSAH	ALEX KWAKU
HVR200322	METEKU-AGBEKO	E. K.
HVR200323	AWIDI	SEWOR EMMANUEL
HVR200324	NYAME	KWABENA
HVR200325	SAREBA	YAW
HVR200326	ALHAJI TANIMU	S. B.
HVR200327	PAPAYE	JOSEPH KOFI
HVR200328	BRONYA	DANIEL KWABENA
HVR200329	KHRA	COSMAS YAO
HVR200330	NANA	KANYA II
HVR200331	AGBAGOE	SIMPLICITY W. K.
HVR200332	CHARTY	ROBERT KWAME
HVR200333	NANA	OTAPO III
HVR200334	NANA	DJANTRUBI II (NIFAHENE)
HVR200335	NANA	ANIAMOAH I
HVR200336	OKYEAME	KWASI KUMAH
HVR200337	YENTUMI	YAW
HVR200338	NSANA	AMA BUOR REBECCA
HVR200339	KONDO	EMMANUEL KWAME
HVR200340	ANKU	JOANA ADZOA
HVR200344	ANIAKU	ARKU
HVR200345	SUNKWA	ALEX KOFI DOMINIC
HVR200346	AYITEY	THOMAS NII
HVR200348	GBEWONYO	LOVESTONE K.
HVR200349	TOGBE	AKPAO II
HVR200350	GEDZAH	NOAH KWAKU
HVR200351	OWUSU-KYEI	S. K.
HVR200352	DATSOMOR	BEN
HVR200353	FIAGBENU	JOHN K.
HVR200354	KLIDZA	ANOME
HVR200355	LUMOR	CHARLES K.
HVR200356	DZOTEPE	MAWUTOR K.
HVR200357	AGBETIAFA	MICHAEL A.
HVR200358	HODZI	LINUS K.
HVR200359	ASHINYO	ALEXANDER A.
HVR200360	QUAO	PHILIP A. (SGT.)
HVR200361	AMEGADZE	KWAMI G.
HVR200362	KPODO	SHADRACH
HVR200363	MAWUTOR	PHILIP P. (DR.)
HVR200364	DOGBEY	KORKU
HVR200365	TOGBE	ASINYO MITEFA
HVR200366	AGBENYEGAH	STEPHEN KWAME
HVR200367	AHIAKPA	YAWA
HVR200368	ADORVLO	XORLALI J.K.
HVR200369	MENSAH	NAZA
HVR200370	AKPABLI	MARY
HVR200371	ADZIBOLO	HELLEN
HVR200372	AKORLATSE	KWAME F.H.
HVR200373	KAMASAH	HUDZEKOR
HVR200374	DZILAH	CATHERINE A.
HVR200375	ABOGEY	KOETHEY S.
LIST OF PETITIONERS

LIST OF PETITIONERS

REG NUMBER	SURNAME	FIRST NAMES
TDI400038	ABA	YAA
TDI400102	ABAI DOO	EMMANUEL KID
TDI400569	ABAKA	NANA
TDI400523	ABAKAH	FRANCIS
TDI400475	ABAKA-KWANSA	KOW
TDI400210	ABAKROW	JOSEPH KWAME
TDI400018	ABEKA	FRANCIS
TDI400269	ABENDINGO AMEBAYELA	FRANCIS
TDI400527	ABIAW	ALBERT
TDI400511	ABIAW	ALBERT
TDI400452	ABOKYI	KWAKU
TDI400030	ABROKWA	WILLIAM
TDI400465	ABU	SEIDU
TDI400672/715	ABUENYI	MARY
TDI400678	ACKAH	FRANCIS ADEKE
TDI400056	ACKAH	JOHN BUNYAN
TDI400689	ACKAH	JOSEPH EKALLA
TDI400257	ACKAH	NYAMENKEH
TDI400031/33/301	ACKON	JOHN KOJO (NANA ABUKU ABAA1IV)
TDI400530	ACKON	LUCY
TDI400332	ACQUAH	EDWARD NASH
TDI400589	ACQUAH	EGYA
TDI400740	ADAA	NANA ADUURI
TDI400548	ADAMS	FRANCIS
TDI400007	ADAMS	KWESI MATTHEW
TDI400079/81	ADAMS	ROBERT DADSON
TDI400643	ADARKWA	KOFI
TDI400576	ADDAE	SAMUEL ASIEDU
TDI400626	ADDAI	EMMNUEL KOJO
TDI400233	ADDO	ALFRED KWAME
TDI400208	ADENYO	ABLAH
TDI400034	ADIAMAH	HENRY
TDI400027	ADIKA	WISDOM
TDI400492	ADISA	EFUA
TDI400070	ADISSAH	HAJIA
TDI400499	ADJEI-MENSAH	ANDREWS
TDI400446	ADOMA	AMA
TDI400510	ADUKU-ADAA IV
TDI400006	ADUSEI- POKU	PHILIP
TDI400474	ADZENYAN ESSUMAN	EMMANUEL
TDI400151	AFARIE	DE-GRAFT WALTER
TDI400478/79	AFFUL	CHRISTINA

TDI400242	AFFUL	ESTHER
TDI400164	AFFUL	JOSEPH
TDI400520	AFFUL	PHILOMINA
TDI400515	AFFUL	STEPHEN
TDI400091	AFLAKPUI	COSMAS
TDI400471	AFRAM	ASUO
TDI400073	AFRIYIE	JOHN KWESI
TDI400168	AFUM	KWEKU YAW
TDI400670/714	AGGNEY	GODFREY JOSEPH
TDI400572	AGGREY	SAMUEL
TDI400219	AGIDI	JOHN
TDI400139	AGYEIWAA	JOYCE
TDI400111	AGYEN BERKO	ALFRED
TDI400143	AGYENKWA MINTAH	BARNABAS
TDI400112	AGYESAH BASSAW	KOFI
TDI400504	AGYILIHA	DAVID
TDI400488	AHEMMA	NANA
TDI400379	AHWIREN	CHARLES
TDI400390	AIDOO	CHRISTOPHER
TDI400627	AIDOO	JOHN KWAME
TDI400124	AIDOO	JOHN KWESI
TDI400593	AIDOO	SAMPSON KWESI
TDI400586	AIDOO	YAW
TDI400250	AIKINS	CECILIA
TDI400013	AIKINS	SARAH
TDI400014	AIKINS	SARAH MERCY
TDI400236	AINOOSON	DORCAS
TDI400694	AKESE	FRANCIS
TDI400359	AKOM I	KOFI
TDI400063/64	AKONOR	GEOFFERY
TDI400559	AKROFI	EMMANUEL
TDI400343	AKUFFO-WE	ADJANOR
TDI400435	AKYERE	EFUA
TDI400514	ALI	MAHAMMED
TDI400609	ALLU	JOHN
TDI400699	AMBROSE	EDDIE
TDI400389	AMEGBOR	ROLAND
TDI400021	AMENUKU	KWESI
TDI400166	AMETOGLO	GODFRED
TDI400255	AMGBOME	AKWA
TDI400357	AMIAKPU	KWESI
TDI400207	AMIHHERE	FRANCIS
TDI400132	AMIHHERE	FRANCIS ASSUAH
TDI400101	AMISSAH	ANTHONY KOJO
TDI400080	AMISSAH	B. KOJO
TDI400144	AMISSAH	BAIDEN
TDI400371/2/8	AMISSAH	KOBINA
TDI400378	AMISSAH	KOBINA

TDI400583	AMISSAH	KWAME
TDI400408	AMISSAH	SARAH
TDI400450	AMMOAH	KOJOH
TDI400285	AMMOBRA	EFUA
TDI400391	AMO	KOFI
TDI400153	AMOA	DANIEL
TDI400187	AMOA	ISAAC
TDI400315	AMOA	THOMAS
TDI400036	AMPIAH	EBENEZER
TDI400608	AMPIAH	JOSEPH
TDI400127	AMPIAW	JAMES FRED
TDI400684	ANAMAN	J, H.
TDI400200	ANAMAN	JOSEPH BAIWIE
TDI400658	ANDOH	JOSEPH ERIC
TDI400681	ANDOH	MARTIN TAYIE
TDI400306	ANFAN	KOJO
TDI400272	ANIM-OTCHERE	CHRISTIANA
TDI400614	ANING	RUTH
TDI400652/3	ANKAI-MAC AIDOO	JOHN
TDI400341	ANKAMAH	JOHN
TDI400298	ANNAN	GEORGE
TDI400738	ANNAN	JOSEPH OBOH
TDI400396	ANNAN	KWEKU
TDI400220	ANING	BEATRICE
TDI400366/7	ANSAH	JOHN A ELEPHANT
TDI400426	ANSAH	JOHN SULIVAN
TDI400286/7	ANSAH	JULIUS
TDI400624	ANSAH	KOJO
TDI400276	ANSAH	MERCY
TDI400119	APATINGA	MICHAEL
TDI400237	APPARTAIM	PHILIP
TDI400141	APPIA	ABENA
TDI400420	APPIAH	ELIZABETH
TDI400675/718	APPIAH	JOSEPH LORD
TDI400497	APPIAH	KOFI
TDI400708	APPIAH	ROGER KWABENA
TDI400644	APPIAH	YAW
TDI400397	APPO	KWAME
TDI400581	APPOH	MICHAEL
TDI400316	ARIZIKU	OLDLOVE
TDI400352/3	ARKAIFIE	SAMUEL
TDI400642	ARKO	CHRISTINA
TDI400417	ARKO	MARGARET
TDI400404	ARKO	YAW
TDI400089	ARKOO-OTOO	EBENEZER
TDI400693	ARKU	ANNOR
TDI400295	ARMAH	JOSEPH
TDI400742	ARMAH	JOSHUA

TDI400202	ARMOO	NYAMEKEY
TDI400654	ARMOO	PAUL KWASI
TDI400205	ARMOO-KWAW	EMMANUEL
TDI400691	ARPELLEH	DANIEL EVANS
TDI400181	ARTHUR	ALBERT
TDI400265	ARTHUR	CECICLIA
TDI400238	ARTHUR	MARY
TDI400412/13/14/15	ARTHUR	MATTHEW
TDI400145	ARYEE	REBECCA
TDI400344	ASAAM	NATHANIEL
TDI400155	ASABIL	BENTUM
TDI400331	ASAMANI	DANIEL
TDI400648	ASAMOAH	GODFRED
TDI400213	ASANTE	ANTHONY KOFI
TDI400183	ASANTE	KOJO
TDI400225	ASANTE	KOJO
TDI400737	ASANTE	MICHAEL DICKSON
TDI400562	ASARE	JOSEPH
TDI400294	ASARE	THOMAS OPPONG
TDI400328	ASEIDU	KWABENA
TDI400597	ASHER	ARABA
TDI400224	ASHER	BARBARA
TDI400538	ASHER	JULIANA
TDI400103	ASIBI	FELICIA
TDI400519	ASIEDU	F. R.
TDI400724/5	ASMAH	JOSEPH AMO
TDI400704	ASSABIEH	MOSES
TDI400544	ASSAN	JOSEPH
TDI400160	ASSUON	BERNARD KOJO
TDI400305	ATAKORA	YAW
TDI400126	ATIGYIMAH	CECILIA
TDI400493	ATOABA	ABENA
TDI400136	ATOLOGIE	FATI
TDI400407	ATTA	KOFI
TDI400325	ATTA	KWABENA
TDI400629	ATTA	PETER KOFI
TDI400110	ATTAH	KWABENA
TDI400393	ATTAH	KWEKU
TDI400668/711	ATTIPOE	JOJO BULUSA
TDI400567	ATTOBRAH	MATTHEW
TDI400517	AWORTWE	FAUSTINA
TDI400169	AWORTWE	NANA
TDI400534	AWORTWE	STEPHEN
TDI400490	AWOTWE	MOHAMMED
TDI400358	AWUBEY	QUAME
TDI400455	AWULAE AGYENFI KWAME II
TDI400554	AWUSI	PAUL
TDI400637	AYENFOWA	AMA

TDI400442	AYIMAH	AMA
TDI400312	AYINEMI	SAMUEL
TDI400354	AYISHETU	ADWOA
TDI400228	BAAFI	JAMES
TDI400121	BAAFI	JAMES KWAME
TDI400266	BAAFI	KWAKU
TDI400720	BAAH	SOLOMON SIAW
TDI400540	BAAWA	ABENA
TDI400201	BADOO	KABENLA
TDI400628	BADU	ADWOA
TDI400660	BADU	EKUA
TDI400440	BADUWA	ESI
TDI400483	BAIDEN	JAMES E.
TDI400340	BAIDEN-AMISSAH	JOHN
TDI400706	BAIDOE	VICTORIA
TDI400088	BAIDOO	ANDREWS JACOB
TDI400123	BAIDOO	JAMES
TDI400409	BAISIE	KOFI
TDI400531	BANKAH	JAMES
TDI400592	BARNES	PETER F. Y
TDI400015/48	BARTELS	GEORGE
TDI400032/55/112	BASSAW	KOFI
TDI400625	BAWA	AGAMA
TDI400176	BECKLEY	CEPHAS
TDI400290	BEDFORD	SAMUEL
TDI400564	BEDIAKO	ANTHONY
TDI400491	BEKOE	JOHN
TDI400524	BENEE	KAKU
TDI400618	BENEE & OLD SEAMEN	KAKU
TDI400053	BENTIL	NANA KOFI
TDI400107	BENTSI-ENCHILL	EBO
TDI400410	BENTUM	KOBINA
TDI400120	BENYAH	JOHN ISAAC
TDI400278	BESSAH	JOSHUA
TDI400403	BINEY	FRANCIS
TDI400351	BINEY	RACHEL GHARTEY
TDI400277	BINNAH	JOHN WAYNE
TDI400612	BIO	KOFI
TDI400598	BLANKSON	OKYERE
TDI400029	BLAY	GEORGE
TDI400536	BLAY	KWASI
TDI400050	BLAY	MARY
TDI400662	BLAY	NYAMEKEH
TDI400215	BOADI	AWONZOE
TDI400247	BOADU	ANTHONY
TDI400011	BOAFO	PETER
TDI400159	BOAHIN	FRANCIS KWEKU
TDI400058	BOAKYE	MOSES YAW

TDI400098	BOAMAH	AMA
TDI400105	BOAMAH	AMA
TDI400659	BOATENG	CHARLES
TDI400460-3	BOATENG	SAMUEL KWABENA
TDI400049	BOHAM	GIFTY
TDI400385	BONNAM	KOFI
TDI400573	BONSU	EFIA
TDI400731	BOSOMEFI	THERESA
TDI400268	BOSOMTWE	JANET
TDI400227	BOYE	ALEX KWESI
TDI400596	BOYE	KOJO
TDI400739/741	BREW	JAMES EBENEZER
TDI400743	BROBBEY	JONES K.
TDI400025	BRONI	KWESI
TDI400135	BROWN	KWAME AHENKRA
TDI400590	BUABEN	KOFI
TDI400084	BUABENG	MAXWELL
TDI400695	BUAH	JOHN ADE
TDI400128	BUCKMAN	ALLAN ATTA
TDI400605	BUCKMAN	MARGARET
TDI400487	BUDU-ANGUAH	EKOW
TDI400311	BUTT	RICHARD
TDI400723	CANN	JOSEPH ALPHEUS
TDI400320	CARSON	ISHMAEL
TDI400547	CHEWBY	KWEKU
TDI400239	CHURCHER	ISAAC
TDI400221	CLEMENT	ESTHER
TDI400066	COBBINA	MARGARET NKETIABA
TDI400249	COBBINA	PETER
TDI400154	COBBINA	SABINA
TDI400631	COBBINAH	MOSES
TDI400046	COBBOLD	JAMES SETZ
TDI400692	COFIE	JOSEPH EDIEME
TDI400270	COMEY	AMA ELIZABETH
TDI400291	COMEY	ELIZABETH
TDI400061	CON - NUTSUGAH	ALEXANDER
TDI400003	CUDJOE	ALBERT KWEKU
TDI400518	CUDJOE	ANTHONY KWAW
TDI400299	CUDJOE	HARRISON
TDI400683	CUDJOE	MATHEW
TDI400078	CUDJOE	THOMAS KWAMENA
TDI400161	DADZIE	JOSEPH
TDI400096	DADZIE	FAUSTNA
TDI400502	DADZIE	JOSEPH EBEN
TDI400430	DADZIE	PATIENCE
TDI400640	DADZIE	MARY
TDI400206	DAGARTI	YAW MOSSI
TDI400271	DANI	KWEKU

TDI400721	DANSO	EMANUEL AYISI
TDI400575	DARKO	FREDERICK KOBINA
TDI400013	DARKO	MARGARET
TDI400222	DARKO	SAM NII
TDI400496	DAUDA	ABRAHAM
TDI400495	DAUDA	KENNETH
TDI400421	DE-GRAVES	DOROTHY
TDI400467	DENNIS	FESTUS
TDI400195	DENSON	ABRAHAM
TDI400040	DESBORDES	JOSEPH
TDI400097	DJORHOE	FRANKLIN
TDI400179	DOE	MEMORDZIE
TDI400617	DOKU	JOHN
TDI400429	DONKOH	BENJAMIN
TDI400436	DONKOR	ADJOA
TDI400398	DONKOR	ELIZABETH
TDI400157	DONTOH	EDWARD OKAI
TDI400679	DUKU	SAMUEL KENNE
TDI400506	DUNCAN	EMMANUEL
TDI400209	DZOKOTO	MATHIAS
TDI400485	DZOKOTO	SED
TDI400665	EBBAH	PAUL KWESI
TDI400685	EBOYI	KWAMENLA
TDI400533	EDJAH	MARIAN
TDI400388	EDJAMEH	DOMUNOS ELIAS KWASHI
TDI400012	EDUKU	EKUBAH
TDI400682	EDUKU	FRANCIS FORSAH
TDI400580	EDUMA	ABENA
TDI400310	EGHAN	JONATHAN
TDI400060	EGYA-BLAY	JOHN KWAME
TDI400108	EHWI	SLYVESTER YAMOA
TDI400131	EKELLAH	JEREMIAH
TDI400466	ELIEVI ESSIN	THOMAS
TDI400611	ENCHILL	MICHAEL
TDI400235	ENKSON	GEORGE
TDI400254	ENU	BLAYCHIE
TDI400363	EQUAGOO	CHARLES
TDI400680	ERZUAH	JOHN
TDI400655	ERZUAH	JOSEPH BOGLO
TDI400192	ESHUN	ELIZABETH
TDI400041	ESHUN	FRANCES KWASI
TDI400069	ESHUN	GEORGINA
TDI400667	ESHUN	JAMES EKOW
TDI400732	ESHUN	JOSEPH TAYI
TDI400604	ESHUN	REBECCA
TDI400252	ESSAH	NANA PETER
TDI400599	ESSEL	NORA
TDI400383/4	ESSEL	THERESA

TDI400677	ESSIEN	JOHN ADAKA
TDI400234	ESSIEN	JOSEPH
TDI400184	ESSIEN	THOMAS
TDI400645	ESSIEN	VICTORIA
TDI400727	ESSO	MOSES
TDI400336	ESSON	ARABA
TDI400323	ESSON	KOFI
TDI400037	ESSON	KWAME
TDI400115	ESSON	MARK KINGSFORD
TDI400313	ESSON	NANA
TDI400369/370/377/556	ESSON	SIMON KOBINA
TDI400470	ESSUMAN	ANNA
TDI400635	ESSUMAN	HENRY PETER
TDI400134	ESSUN	STEPHEN
TDI400579	ESUAMA	KWEKU
TDI400578	ETUA	AKUA
TDI400507/8	EUDAH-AMOA	FRANCIS
TDI400584	EWUAH	KWESI
TDI400607	FAIBIL III
TDI400722	FERGUSSON	IRENE
TDI400175	FIAGBE	EMMANUEL
TDI400240	FIANKO	KOFI
TDI400535	FORSON	EMMA
TDI400226	FORSON	MARY
TDI400719	FOSU	MARGARET
TDI400304	FRAFRA	ABIBA
TDI400477	FRAFRA	GYATO
TDI400338	FRAFRA	NDASOA
TDI400245	FRAFRA	TAMALE
TDI400521	FRENCH	JOSEPH
TDI400318	FRIMPONG	REGINA
TDI400650	GADAU	JAMES
TDI400071	GARBRAH	MARTHA
TDI400546	GBIDI	EMMANUEL
TDI400542	GHARTEY	DANIEL
TDI400174	GHARTEY BINEY	RACHEL
TDI400639	GOMA	MUSSA
TDI400423	GYEKYE	CECILIA
TDI400526	HAGAN	WINIFRED
TDI400424	HAGAN	JAMES
TDI400656	HALM	DAVID KOFI
TDI400355	HAMMOND	JOHN
TDI400666	HANSON	JOSEPH WIABO
TDI400170/71/72	HARRISON	SAMUEL
TDI400356	HAYFORD	FRANCIS
TDI400419	HAYFORD	GIFTY
TDI400447	HAYFORD	GIFTY
TDI400173	HAYFORD	JOSEPHINE AKO

TDI400472/73	HAYFORD	ROCK KWESI
TDI400480	HAYFORD	ROCKFELLER
TDI400368	HAYFRON	JOSEPH ARTHUR
TDI400163	HORNEY	JOSPEH
TDI400443	IDUN	ANASTASIA
TDI400375	IMBRAH	VICTORIA
TDI400585	INKOOM	JOHN
TDI400243/44	INSAIDOO	FRANCIS
TDI400539	ISSAH	AWUDU
TDI400326/7	ISSAH	SULEMAN
TDI400002	JABIALU	ANTHONY
TDI400296	JAMES	OSEI
TDI400701	JAYI	JOSEPH
TDI400093	JOHNSON	CHARLES
TDI400100	JOHNSON JUMAH	BENJAMIN
TDI400094	JONFIAH	FRANK
TDI400090	JORDAN	NICKY
TDI400035	KAINYAH -ERZUAH	MOSES
TDI400603	KAKRABA	AKUA
TDI400223	KAKRABA	KWESI
TDI400019/20	KANKAM	JOSEPH
TDI400649	KANTOR	EKOW
TDI400713	KARIKARI	ARABA
TDI400671	KARIKARI	CHRISTIANA HEMANS
TDI400387	KASU	JOHN
TDI400092	KERSON	STEPHEN M.
TDI400288	KESEWA	MADAM
TDI400703	KETIBUAH	FRANCIS HENRY
TDI400004	KISSI	EMMANUEL
TDI400194	KOBBINAH	CECILIA
TDI400595	KOFIE	JOHN
TDI400399	KONTOH	MARY
TDI400068	KOOMSOM	JOHN KWAMENA
TDI400333/4/5	KOOMSON	ALICE
TDI400400	KOOMSON	COMFORT
TDI400275	KOOMSON	JOHN
TDI400142	KOOMSON	KWEKU
TDI400274	KOOMSON	MARGARET
TDI400039	KOOMSON	MARK ANTHONY
TDI400062	KOOMSON	SUSANNA
TDI400427	KORANKYE	ISAAC
TDI400074	KORANTENG	EMMANUEL
TDI400345	KORDIEH	FRANCIS YAW
TDI400330	KORSAH	CHARLOTTE
TDI400284	KOTEY	DANIEL
TDI400283	KOTEY	JOSEPH
TDI400156	KOWFIE	JOSEPH SALBY
TDI400733	KRAKUE	MARIAM

TDI400551	KRAKUE	THERESA
TDI400241	KRAMPAH	ALBERT
TDI400601	KROFUAH	SOPHIA
TDI400361	KROOCHIE	TIMOTHY
TDI400042	KRUH-OCRAN	MATTHEW
TDI400380	KUM	KOFI
TDI400197	KUM	KWASI
TDI400365	KUMA	KWAKU
TDI400043	KUMI	EMMANUEL EARL
TDI400438	KURANTSIWA	EFUA
TDI400386	KUWORNU	VICTOR
TDI400610	KWAAAYIE	EKUA
TDI400616	KWAKYE	KWAME
TDI400016	KWAPONG-ESSIGYAN	PERCY
TDI400307	KWATENG	ANTHONY YAW
TDI400308	KWATENG	PRINCE TONY
TDI400382	KWAW	JAMES
TDI400253	KWAW-ASASETRE	BEYI
TDI400297	KWEKU	JOHN
TDI400437	KWENU	KWABENA
TDI400565	KWOFIE	ALBERT
TDI400122	KWOFIE	JOHN HALIDAY
TDI400324	KWOFIE	JOHN KOFI
TDI400113	KWOFIE	N. H.
TDI400052	KWOFIE	NORBERT HARUNA
TDI400125	KWOFIE	ROBERT
TDI400459	KWOFIE	SARAH
TDI400381	KWOFIE	THOMAS
TDI400086	KYEREBOAH	KOJO
TDI400317	KYEREMU	KWESI
TDI400129	LARBI	MERCY
TDI400082	LAWSON	FLORENCE
TDI400280	LEEWARD	JAMES
TDI400422	LYDIA	AMA
TDI400638	MAANAN	ADWOA
TDI400005	MACLEAN	THOMAS
TDI400606	MANSA	ABENA
TDI400416	MANSA	ESI
TDI400600	MANSA	ESI
TDI400664	MANSAH	AKOSUAH
TDI400072	MANTEAW	SOPHIA
TDI400189	MANU	PETER KINGSLEY
TDI400728	MARTEY	HENRY AGUDEY
TDI400085	MBEA	KWAME
TDI400001	MENSAH	CECILIA
TDI400445	MENSAH	CECILIA
TDI400309	MENSAH	FRANK-XAVIER
TDI400734	MENSAH	HANNAH

TDI400045	MENSAH	JAMES
TDI400448	MENSAH	KWESI
TDI400178	MENSAH	THERESA
TDI400185	MENSAH	VICTORIA
TDI400329	MENSAH	ELIZABETH
TDI400008/9	MENSAH-WADDIEH	EDWARD
TDI400149	MILLS	THERESAH
TDI400418	MINTAH	CECILIA
TDI400232	MOHAMMED	ABASS
TDI400700	MORKEH	JOHN AWONZOE
TDI400686	MORKEH	PATRICK
TDI400017	NAMLEBIGYA	DAVID APPIAH
TDI400033	NANA ADUKU ADAA IV
TDI400256	NANA ASUA MMIA II
TDI400258/63	NANA BRUMIAH TWUM IV
TDI400451	NANA DEKYI II
TDI400454	NANA FOSUAKU II
TDI400646	NANA INTSIFUL ASARE II
TDI400647	NANA KWABENA KRUKU II
TDI400570	NANA KWANYONWA IV
TDI400730	NANA KWASI ITU I
TDI400261/2	NANA KWASI KUTUWAH IV
TDI400707	NANA KWAW ARKAA II
TDI400673/716	NANA KWESI GYEBI II
TDI400498	NANA NDAMA KUNDUMOAH V
TDI400561	NANAKWASI KETEWA IV
TDI400482	NARTEY	GEORGE
TDI400095	NDA BLAY	GEORGE
TDI400292/3	NDEDE	JOHN COBBINA
TDI400702	NDEDE	JOHN KWABENA
TDI400259	NDEDE	SIMON
TDI400687	NDEDE	THOMAS
TDI400669/712	NDOR	EBUSUA BANYIN
TDI400138	NELSON	THERESAH
TDI400322	NIMO	ANTHONY
TDI400528	NIPA	KOJO
TDI400260	NKANSAH	COSMOS KOFI
TDI400558	NKETSIAH	PETER
TDI400411	NKRUMAH	KWESI
TDI400553	NKRUMAH	RANSFORD
TDI400726	NOKOE	JOSEPH ARTHUR
TDI400503	NORTEY	JAMES MENSAH
TDI400337	NTAAMA	CECILIA
TDI400619/20/21/22	NTSIFUL	ALEXANDER
TDI400481	NTSIFUL	CHARLES
TDI400509	NUAKO	KWAKU
TDI400279	NYAME	KINGSFORD SAMUEL
TDI400513	NYAMEKEH	JAMES ABOAGYE

TDI400525	NYAMEKYE	JOSEPH
TDI400076	NYAMEKYE	THERESA
TDI400177	NYAMEKYE	ISAAC KOFI
TDI400392	NYARKO	JERRY ODEI
TDI400054	NYARKO	KOJO BOB
TDI400342	NYARKO	KWESI
TDI400395	NYARKOH	JOHN
TDI400543	OBENG	ABDUL RAHMAN
TDI400150	OBENG	FRANCIS KWESI
TDI400651	OBENG	JOSEPH
TDI400152	OBENG	KWEKU
TDI400218	OBOSUO	KWAME
TDI400203	OCRAN	CLAUDIA
TDI400696	OCRAN	DANIEL
TDI400204	OCRAN	FRANCIS
TDI400130	OCRAN	JOHN BENJAMIN
TDI400458	OCRAN	KWESI
TDI400146	OCRAN	GEORGE &GPHA WORKERS
TDI400563	OCRAN	KATE
TDI400348	ODAMETHEY	EVANS
TDI400114	ODOOM	CHRISTIAN SAMUEL
TDI400537	ODOOM	JOSEPH
TDI400188	ODOOM	KWEKU
TDI400180	ODUM	KWAME
TDI400431	ODURA	EKUA
TDI400591	OFORI	DOMINIC
TDI400571	OFORI	FRANCIS
TDI400555	OFORI-ATTA	JAMES
TDI400047	OHENE-NYARTWI	JOHN
TDI400347	OKAI	KOFI
TDI400394	OKYERE	FRANK
TDI400494	OKYEREWAA	ADJOA
TDI400486	ONOMAH	AGNES
TDI400167	ONYINAH	JOSEPH NELSON
TDI400634	OPOKU	ALFRED
TDI400613	OPOKU	JOSEPH
TDI400246	OPOKU	YAW
TDI400059	OPPONG	GEOFFREY GALAHA
TDI400615	OSEI	DAVID KOBINA
TDI400339	OSEI	JOHN ALEXANDER
TDI400545	OSEI-AKOTO	PETER
TDI400428	OTOO	GADDIEL HACKMAN
TDI400425	OTOO	HACKMAN
TDI400301/1/2/3	OTUWA	AMA
TDI400117	OWARE	DANIEL
TDI400405	OWIRADU	MARGARET
TDI400529	OWOO	ELIZABETH
TDI400633	OWUSU	JOSEPH KWAKU

TDI400588	PAINTSIL	FAUSTINA
TDI400432	PANYIN	KWAME
TDI400674/717	PARKER	O. K.
TDI400067	PEPRAH	FREDERICK
TDI400023	PEPRAH	SAMUEL
TDI400376	PEPRAH	VICTOR
TDI400022/4	PIADU	ELIZABETH
TDI400406	POBEE	MILLICENT
TDI400532	POBEE-MENSAH	AGNES
TDI400505	POH	NANA AKOSUA
TDI400500/1	POLLEY	JOSEPH
TDI400705	POLLEY	RANSFORD NAMUAH
TDI400441	PRAH	BENJAMIN
TDI400087	PRAH	EKOW
TDI400439	PRAH	EMMANUEL
TDI400057	PRAH	JOHN KWAME
TDI400116	PRAH	SOPHIA
TDI400251	PRINTSON	JOSEPHINE
TDI400198	QUAICOE	ALEX
TDI400568	QUAICOE	WILLIAM
TDI400522	QUAIDOO	MOSES
TDI400075	QUANSAH	EBENEZER KOFI
TDI400636	QUANSAH	ROBERT
TDI400641	QUANSAH	SUSUANA
TDI400698	QUARM	ADAYI
TDI400182	QUARM	FRANCIS
TDI400028	QUARM	GEORGE
TDI400211	QUARM	PETER
TDI400360	QUARM	PHILOMENA ADWOA
TDI400582	QUARSHIE	JAMES BONSU
TDI400196	QUARTEY	KOJO GYAN
TDI400736	QUAW	FRANCIS
TDI400489	QUAYSON	COMFORT
TDI400230/1	RABIU	MOHAMMED
TDI400148	RICHIE-MILLS	GERALD
TDI400314	ROBERTS (SNR)	F. MICHEAL
TDI400349	ROBERTSON	JOSEPH
TDI400402	SAAH	ISAAC
TDI400282	SACKEY	JOHN
TDI400158	SACKEY	JOHN ARMAH
TDI400273	SACKEY	JOSEPH
TDI400587	SAGOE	KOJO
TDI400051	SAGOE	MARY
TDI400289	SAGRAZA	OSWALD
TDI400663	SAI	LUDWINE AYI
TDI400602	SAKYIWA	AKUA
TDI400516	SALIFU	NOMBRE
TDI400566	SALIFU	TAWIAH

TDI400444	SAM	ELIZABETH
TDI400401	SAM	HARRIET
TDI400632	SAM	KWEKU
TDI400449	SAM	RICHARD
TDI400364	SAM	THEODORE
TDI400549	SAM	VICTORIA
TDI400044	SAM	FAUSTINA
TDI400140	SAM	MARY
TDI400190	SARKODIE	ADU
TDI400193	SARKODIE	ADU
TDI400191	SARKWA	KOBINA
TDI400676	SCHECK	J. KOJO
TDI400661	SEDEGAH	WISE
TDI400560	SEIDU	ABU
TDI400248	SEKYI HUGHES	EBENEZER
TDI400346	SERWAA	AMA
TDI400109	SEY	ARMAH
TDI400552	SHAIBU	MOHAMMED
TDI400550	SHAIBU	THERESA
TDI400065	SMITH	VERONICA BAABA
TDI400464	SOWAH	THERESA
TDI400557	STEPHENS	ALBERT
TDI400729	STEPHENS	CHRISTINA
TDI400710	SUNNEY	VALENTINE AUGUSTUS
TDI400104	TABSOBA	ALHAJI SALIFU
TDI400077/83	TACHIE-MENSON	ROBERT
TDI400657	TAKYI	ABRAHAM
TDI400697	TANDOH	GEOBERE EDUKU
TDI400453	TANDOH	KOJO
TDI400321	TATRAH	KWEKU
TDI400165	TAWIA	ERIC KWAKU
TDI400594	TAWIA	ESI
TDI400281	TAWIAH	KOBINA
TDI400162	TAWIAH	KWAKU
TDI400229	TAYLOR	JOSEPHINE
TDI400630	TAYLOR	MARY
TDI400484	TAYLOR	PHILIP
TDI400216	THOMPSON	ROBERT KWABENA
TDI400476	TIMITEY	ISSAH
TDI400362	TINDAANBIL	GEORGE
TDI400512	TINDANA	AYANGA
TDI400010	TONGO	BABA ZATO
TDI400623	TONTO	JOSEPH ADDAI
TDI400137	TURKSON	JOHN K.
TDI400709	TWENEFOUR	HAYFORD
TDI400373/4	TWINTOH	JACOB KOFI
TDI400319	TWUM	DAVID
TDI400574	TWUMASI	ALBERT

TDI400433/34	VROOM	MARY
TDI400300	WARDIEH	EDWARD NKANSA
TDI400147	WASHINGTON ADAMS	JOSEPH
TDI400690	WHAJAH	JOSEPH KOFFIS
TDI400688	WHAJAH	MICHAEL ANTHONY
TDI400212	WHYTE	EMMANUEL ATO
TDI400186	WILLIAMS	KOFI
TDI400264	WILSON	ANNANG K.
TDI400577	WILSON	ARABA
TDI400541	WOODE-ESHUN	AUGUSTINE
TDI400556	YAMSON	BARTHOLOMEW KOJO
TDI400456/57	YAMSON	BATHOLOMEW
TDI400214	YANKEY	AGNES
TDI400099	YANKEY	AMBROSE
TDI400133	YANKEY	DANIEL KOFI
TDI400026	YANKEY	JOHN
TDI400468/69	YANKSON	GENEVIEVE
TDI400106	YANKSON	SAMUEL ATTUMBO
TDI400735	YANKSON M.&BENNET M.
TDI400199	YANNEY	ALFRED KOW
TDI400217	YEBOAH	JOSEPH
TDI400350	YEBOAH	KOFI
TDI400118	YINYE	JOSEPH
TDI400267		JOHN

LIST OF PETITIONERS

FILE NUMBER	SURNAME	FIRST NAMES
TML500144	ADJEI BANIE	FRANCIS
TML500036	TETTEH	JOSEPH EX-WOII
TML500127	ABABIO	THOMAS GYASI
TML500098	ABDUL - RAHAMAN	ALIYATU
TML500050	ABDULAI	ABDULAI
TML500137	ABDULAI	ABDUL-RAHMAN
TML500300	ABDULAI	ABIBATA
TML500182	ABDULAI	ADISAH
TML500161	ABDULAI	AHMED ZAKARI
TML500232	ABDULAI	AISHEITU
TML500307	ABDULAI	AZARA
TML500468	ABDULAI	BAAKO ZAKARI
TML500464	ABDULAI	BADAWI
TML500188	ABDULAI	BAWA
TML500449	ABDULAI	HARUNA
TML500133	ABDULAI	IMORO
TML500114	ABDULAI	LAMNATU
TML500322	ABDULAI	MAHAMADU
TML500176	ABDULAI	NAIDATU
TML500170	ABDULAI	RUFAI
TML500289	ABDULAI	SA'ADATU
TML500219	ABDULAI	SAFURA
TML500343	ABDULAI	SUKENA
TML500031	ABDULAI	HARUNA
TML500033	ABDULAI	YAHAYA
TML500177	ABDULAI-MUUMIN	ABU
TML500261	ABDUL-KARIM	YAKUBU
TML500192	ABDULMANAN	AISHA
TML500200	ABDUL-MUMUNI	BABA
TML500266	ABDUL-RAHAMAN	ABUBAKARI
TML500273	ABDUL-RAZAK	DAHAMATU
TML500222	ABDURAHAMANI	AYISHETU
TML500195	ABDURAMAN	GRUMPAA
TML500335	ABEBRESE	JOANA MAYFAIR
TML500340	ABU	MEMUNATU
TML500160	ABUBAKARI	DAUDA
TML500279	ABUBAKARI	FATI

TML500462	ABUBAKARI	HAWA
TML500075	ABUBAKARI	SEIDU
TML500406	ABUBAKARI	SULEMANA
TML500112	ABUBAKARI	YAKUBU
TML500048	ABUDU	IDDRISU
TML500347	ABUDU	PAUL BRAIMAH
TML500359	ABUDULAI	FATI
TML500043	ABUDURAHAMANI	YAKUBU
TML500038	ABUKARI	HARUNA BABA
TML500052	ABUKARI	IBRAHIM
TML500166	ABUKARI	IMORU
TML500205	ABUKARI	RAFATU
TML500064	ACHEAMPONG	AMOH-BEDIAKO
TML500370	ADAM	ABIBATA
TML500148	ADAM	ABUBAKARI
TML500099	ADAM	AFISHA
TML500451	ADAM	AMIDU
TML500173	ADAM	AMISHETU
TML500151	ADAM	AYISHETU
TML500254	ADAM	GURUNDAA
TML500156	ADAM	HAJIA SAFIA
TML500360	ADAM	IDDRISU
TML500327	ADAM	MEMUNATU
TML500280	ADAM	NIMATU
TML500390	ADAM	RAHINATU
TML500303	ADAM	SALIFU
TML500174	ADAM	SAMATA
TML500249	ADAM	SANDUA KABAKYE
TML500010	ADAM	YAKUBU
TML500041	ADAM	YAKUBU
TML500013	ADJEI	TIA
TML500059	ADOM	KWAKU FRIMPONG
TML500108	ADU-DONYINA	STEPHEN
TML500436	AGYAPONG	KWADWO
TML500315	AGYAPONG	KWAKU
TML500425	AGYEI	THOMAS
TML500106	AGYEKUM	EMMANUEL
TML500089	AGYEMANG	MARGARET AKOSUA
TML500399	AKABORI	AKOSUA
TML500	AKOGTE	CHARLES
TML500288	AKOGTE	CHARLES
TML500314	AKOSAH	GRACE AKUA

TML500456	AKURUGU	IMORO JOHN
TML500042	ALHANDU	ALHASSAN BUKARI
TML500321	ALHASSAN	ADISA
TML500154	ALHASSAN	ALHAJI SIRAZU
TML500465	ALHASSAN	ALIDU
TML500326	ALHASSAN	AYISHETU
TML500363	ALHASSAN	BARICHISU
TML500267	ALHASSAN	FATI
TML500251	ALHASSAN	IDDRISU
TML500233	ALHASSAN	ISSAHAKU
TML500077	ALHASSAN	M.
TML500040	ALHASSAN	MAHAMOUD
TML500229	ALHASSAN	MARIATU
TML500358	ALHASSAN	MARY
TML500395	ALHASSAN	SAFIYA
TML500074	ALHASSAN	SAYIBU
TML500164	ALHASSAN	TANI
TML500352	ALHASSAN	ZUBERU
TML500201	ALHASSAN-YAKUBU	BABA
TML500345	ALHSSAN	ADISAH
TML500467	ALI	ALHASSAN
TML500368	ALI	MOHAMMED BAWA
TML500366	ALI	MUSAH
TML500111	ALIDU	ABUBAKARI
TML500214	ALIDU	MARIAMAH
TML500305	ALIDU	MOHAMMED
TML500076	AMADU	ABUKARI
TML500203	AMADU	AMINA
TML500272	AMADU	BABA AMO AIL
TML500394	AMADU	BAMBA
TML500275	AMADU	FATI
TML500500	AMADU	HAJIA RAHMA
TML500398	AMADU	MARIAMA
TML500027	AMARU	MOHAMMAD
TML500474	AMOAH	PAUL RAYMOND
TML500312	AMPONSAH	SETH YAW
TML500028	ANANE-ADJEI	JACOB
TML500141	ANING	DANIEL ASANTE
TML500080	ANKAMA	SYLVESTOR KWADJO
TML500333	ANNING-BOATENG	YAW
TML500123	ANSAH	IBRAHIM
TML500384	ANSU	KWAME
TML500316	ANSU-ANANE
TML500424	ANSU-GYEABOUR	PETER
TML500417	ANSUH	KWADWO
TML500415	APPEAGYEI	JOHN KOFI
TML500414	APRAKU	KWAME JOSEPH

TML500381	ARTHUR	ALICE
TML500382	ARTHUR	SAMUEL GEORGE
TML500	ASAMOAH	EMMANUEL
TML500007	ASAMOAH	EMMANUEL
TML500103	ASAMOAH	MIKE KOFI
TML500387	ASANOAH	ESI
TML500142	ASARE	CHEREMEH DOMINIC
TML500472	ASOBONO	GEORGE ASAKEYA
TML500393	AZIRI AZIZI	ABIBATA
TML500405	BAANI	RABI
TML500087	BADU	JOSEPH
TML500063	BADU	KWABENA
TML500061	BADU-DAPAAH	RICHARD
TML500435	BAE	KWABENA
TML500431	BAFFO	JOHN AGYEMANG
TML500471	BAFFOUR	ROSE
TML500442	BANNOBI	ADAM
TML500376	BANNOBI	ZARA
TML500248	BAPONYE	JONAS NGAAYEN
TML500373	BARIMAH	SANATU
TML500104	BOAKYE	PHILIP KWABENA
TML500069	BOAKYE	AGYEMANG NANA
TML500330	BOAMAH	STEPHEN KWAKU
TML500334	BOATENG	BENJAMIN
TML500107	BOATENG	GEORGE OBENG
TML500101	BOATENG	KWAME ALIAS KASSIM
TML500372	BRAIMAH	FATIMAH
TML500348	BRAIMAH	MAHAMADU
TML500374	BRAIMAH	MARIAMA
TML500460	BUKARI	BARICHISU
TML500423	BUKARI	ISSIFU BUSANGA
TML500157	BUKARI	SEIDU
TML500029	CHANTIWUNI	SALIFU
TML500459	DAAJEEB	SUIJAR
TML500282	DAGOMBA	ADISSAH
TML500016	DAMMA	WUNI
TML500439	DAPAAH	SUSANA YEBOAH
TML500223	DARAMANI	MARIAMA
TML500012	DAWUNI	EMMANUEL (LT. COL.)
TML500397	DEGBE	STEPHEN
TML500473	DONKOR	EMMANUEL KWAKU
TML500450	DUFIE	AKOSUA AGNES
TML500002	DULUGU	ADAMS
TML500001	EDDY-COCKORA	ZIBLIM
TML500003	ESSAH	KWEKU
TML500308	FATO'AM	YUSSIF
TML500364	FETRI	JOHN KOJO

TML500296	FOKUO	EDWARD KWAKU
TML500475	FRIMPONG	ANOKYE
TML500317	FRIMPONG	YAW
TML500208	FUSEINI	ADISA
TML500217	FUSEINI	AWABU
TML500037	FUSEINI	FULERA
TML500243	FUSEINI	HARUNA
TML500299	FUSEINI	MAHAMADU
TML500209	FUSEINI	MARIAMA
TML500320	FUSEINI	NAFISAH
TML500193	FUSEINI	YAKUBU
TML500446	FUSEINI	ZAKARIA
TML500263	FUSENA	ABUKARI
TML500100	GAMPSON	JOSEPH
TML500461	GARIBA	OSMAN
TML500438	GYAMFI	ANTHONY OSEI
TML500339	GYAMFI	KWAKU
TML500313	GYAMFI	MARK YAW
TML500129	GYEBI	EX-INSP. SHOWCROSS
		KENNETH
TML500429	GYIMAH	ISAAC KOFI
TML500072	HAIDU	HARUNA
TML500091	HAMIDU	HUSEINI
TML500302	HARUNA	AYI
TML500225	HARUNA	BEIDAU
TML500325	HARUNA	MARIAMA
TML500058	HUSEINI	ISSAH
TML500224	IBRAHIM	ALIMA
TML500162	IBRAHIM	HUSEINI
TML500463	IBRAHIM	MARIAMA
TML500119	IBRAHIM	MARTHA
TML500371	IBRAHIM	MASTERHUDU
TML500147	IBRAHIM	SALIFU
TML500389	IBRAHIMA	ZAKARIA
TML500211	IDDI	BUKARI
TML500255	IDDIRISU	HARUNA
TML500004	IDDISAH CECILIA	MARIAMA
TML500246	IDDRISU	FULERA
TML500361	IDDRISU	SUALEY
TML500032	IDDRISU-DULUGU	ALHASSAN
TML500163	IDI	MAAMAH
TML500025	IDRISU-KPABILA	ALHASAN
TML500055	IMORO	ALHSSAN
TML500277	IMORO	FUSEINI
TML500178	IMORO	SALIFU
TML500184	IMORO	SALIFU
TML500260	IMORO	YAHAYAH
TML500306	INUSAH	ADISAH

TML500323	INUSAH	RUKAYA
TML500444	ISSAH	AMINA
TML500448	ISSAH	FATIMA
TML500294	ISSAH	KULSUMU
TML500357	ISSAH	RAHINATU
TML500180	ISSAH	SALAMATU
TML500024	ISSAHAKU	ABUKARI
TML500268	ISSAHAKU	AZARATU
TML500150	ISSAHAKU	ZUWERA
TML500309	ISSAHAKU DE LIMAN	AZARATU
TML500234	ISSAKA	ADAM
TML500291	ISSIFU	ADAM BABA
TML500269	ISSIFU	MOHAMMED
TML500270	ISSIFU	RUKAYA
TML500167	ISSIFU	SALAMATU
TML500207	JAPAT	JAMES ABASS
TML500407	JINJER	PETER
TML500105	JOHN	YAW
TML500250	KALEEM	AMINA
TML500210	KALEEM	MAHAMADU
TML500258	KALIM	ALIMATU
TML500409	KANTSONG	LABIK
TML500476	KARIWA	LAARI
TML500453	KOMONG	LAARE-BIK
TML500318	KONTOR	EUGENE
TML500332	KORANG	NICHOLAS OBIRI
TML500257	KOTOCHI	ABU
TML500477	KOUNLAN	GEORGE FEIKAB
TML500284	KOYIRI	GEORGE GHAKUNWA
TML500020	KPABIA-MADUGU	IDRISU
TML500437	KUMAA	GRACE YAA
TML500102	KUMAH	ALEX KWAME
TML500433	KUMAH	KWAME BELTON
TML500083	KUSI	GEORGE
TML500421	KUSI-APEA
TML500143	KUSI-AWITI	EMMANUEL
TML500006	KUUSOYIR	CLEMENT KUUCHE
TML500401	KWAPAH	BRAIMAH BENJAMIN
TML500426	KWATENG	KINGSLEY
TML500120	KYERE	KWAME
TML500478	LAAR	AKOSUA
TML500021	LABADAN	FUSEINI
TML500440	LABIK	JACK
TML500301	LAMINU	KASSIM
TML500281	LAMUSAH	AMADU
TML500458	LANGBON	IMORO
TML500005	LANSAH	SEIDU
TML500457	LEBATIB	YENULONIN

TML500452	LEMIN	PETER
TML500247	MADUGU	ABDALLAH ALHASSAN
TML500135	MAHAMA	ABIBA
TML500404	MAHAMA	ABIBATA
TML500216	MAHAMA	ABU
TML500096	MAHAMA	ADAM
TML500094	MAHAMA	FRANCIS
TML500202	MAHAMA	HAWABU
TML500079	MAHAMA	IBRAHIM
TML500181	MAHAMA	IBRAHIM
TML500187	MAHAMA	IBRAHIM
TML500026	MAHAMA	IMORO
TML500218	MAHAMA	KUBRA
TML500285	MAHAMA	MAHAMADU-TAMALGU
TML500264	MAHAMA	MARIAMA
TML500469	MAHAMA	SAHABI
TML500039	MAHAMA	SEIDU PRINCE
TML500445	MAHAMA	SHEITU
TML500304	MAHAMA	SOFO
TML500391	MAHAMA	TUFELU
TML500392	MAHAMA	YAHAYA
TML500342	MAHAMA	ZALIA
TML500045	MAHAMA	ABUKARI
TML500245	MAHAMADU	ABDULAI
TML500276	MAHAMADU	AMADU
TML500095	MAHAMADU	ISSAH
TML500242	MAHAMADU	SHETU
TML500034	MAHAMAH	ALI
TML500259	MAHAMAH	ISSAHAKU
TML500165	MAHAMAN	ABURUWA
TML500213	MAHAMAN	DAGOMBA
TML500230	MAHAMUD	ABUBAKARI
TML500292	MAHAMUDU	FATI
TML500385	MAHMOOD	MUMUNI
TML500124	MAMA SALIA	ALHAJI
TML500152	MAMUDU	HAJIA HAWAWU
TML500081	MANU	JOHN KOFI
TML500331	MANU	JOSEPH YAW
TML500191	MASHOOD	BARICHISU
TML500018	MBEMA	MAHAMA
TML500066	MENSAH	EDMOND YAW
TML500060	MENSAH	JOSEPH YAW
TML500088	MENSAH	PATRICK
TML500199	MIZIMMA	ZEENATU
TML500046	MOHAMADU	FUSEINI
TML500047	MOHAMMED	ABDULAI
TML500049	MOHAMMED	ABDULAI (FERNANDO)
TML500092	MOHAMMED	HASSAN

TML500044	MOHAMMED	ISSAH
TML500113	MOHAMMED	TALHATU
TML500056	MOHAMMED-SANNI	TOYIBU
TML500183	MORO	ALHASSAN
TML500190	MORO	ALIDU
TML500226	MORO	SANATU
TML500379	MUHAMED	IBRAHIM
TML500278	MUHAMED	SULEMANA
TML500324	MUHAMMED	AYISHETU
TML500022	MUMUNI	FUSEINI
TML500297	MUMUNI	ISSAKA
TML500138	MUMUNI	MAHAMADU ZOONA
TML500011	MUMUNI	MUSA
TML500110	MUNKAILA	ZENABU
TML500109	MUNUFIE	YAW
TML500009	MUSAH	ABDUL-SAMED
TML500353	MUSAH	ABEBA
TML500341	MUSAH	ADAMA
TML500354	MUSAH	ADISAH
TML500132	MUSAH	ALHASSAN
TML500286	MUSAH	HAWA
TML500179	MUSAH	MAHAMADU
TML500070	MUSAH	MOHAMMED
TML500171	MUSAH	SALIMA
TML500355	MUSAH	SEIDU
TML500295	MUSAH	ZAHARAWU
TML500310	MUTARM	SAMATA
TML500367	NABILA	AMINA
TML500430	NANA AFFUL NYANTEKYI II
TML500085	NANA BOAKYE-TROMO II
TML500084	NANA OPPONG GYABENEH I
TML500071	NASSAM	ABDULAI
TML500466	NIBI	OSCAR MOI
TML500057	NINDOW	ALHASSAN
TML500051	NINDOW	JOHN IDDI
TML500351	OFOSU-AGYEKUM	KWABENA
TML500128	OHENE PEPRAH	SIMON
TML500388	OPARE	SAMUEL
TML500145	OPPONG	BENJAMIN KUFFOUR
TML500121	OPPONG	KWAME
TML500434	OPPONG	PAUL KWASI
TML500062	OSEI	JAMES
TML500338	OSEI	JOSEPH OSEI
TML500197	OSEI	KWAKU
TML500082	OSEI	NICOLAS ANDREWS
TML500386	OSEI	SAMUEL
TML500252	OSMAN	MUHAMED
TML500227	OSMAN	RUKAYA

TML500212	OSMANU	AYISHATA
TML500019	OSUMANU	AFABILA
TML500336	OWUSU	EDWARD YAW
TML500428	OWUSU	KWAME
TML500067	OWUSU	SETH
TML500311	OWUSU-ANSAH	THOMAS
TML500231	PANYEZI	FUSEINI
TML500454	PARIMAK	LAARE-BIK
TML500068	PEPRAH	ANDREWS KWAME
TML500337	POKU	KWABENA
TML500420	POKUA	AGNES
TML500221	RAUF	FATI
TML500228	SAAKA	AMINA
TML500172	SAAKA	ZENABUBILA
TML500455	SAANA	ACHIRIFA
TML500014	SAIBU	ALHAJI ABDUL KADR
TML500274	SAIBU	ASHEITA
TML500015	SAIBU	IDDRISU BABA
TML500375	SAIBU	MEMUNATU
TML500158	SAIBU	TALHATU
TML500159	SAIBU	ZENABU
TML500346	SALIFU	ABDUL-FATAW
TML500262	SALIFU	ABUKARI
TML500136	SALIFU	ADAM
TML500118	SALIFU	ASIA
TML500053	SALIFU	IBRAHIM
TML500290	SALIFU	IDDRISU
TML500344	SALIFU	SEIDU
TML500349	SALIFU	WAKASO
TML500265	SALIFU	YAKUBU
TML500298	SALIFU	YAKUBU
TML500149	SANATU	NINDOO
TML500185	SANDOW	IDDRISU
TML500383	SARPONG	JONES
TML500215	SAYIBU	MARIAMA
TML500238	SAYIBU	MUHAMEDU TAHIRU
TML500253	SEIDU	ABDULRAZAK
TML500078	SEIDU	ABDURAHAMAN
TML500422	SEIDU	ABEBA
TML500198	SEIDU	AMADU BAWA
TML500206	SEIDU	FUSEINI
TML500117	SEIDU	ISSAH
TML500365	SEIDU	MAHAMA
TML500400	SEIDU	SALIFU
TML500416	SERWAA	FLORENCE AFIA
TML500319	SERWAAH	COMFORT
TML500134	SHISHI	ABUBAKAR IMORO
TML500122	SIKAYENA	AMA

TML500240	SULE	SADIA
TML500175	SULEMANA	ALHASSAN
TML500115	SULEMANA	MUNIRATU
TML500073	SULEMANA	YAKUBU
TML500189	SUMANI	FATI
REG	SURNAMES	FORENAMES
REG	SURNAMES	FORENAMES
TML500126	TABIRI	EMMANUEL MENSAH
TML500239	TAHIRU	FULERA
TML500413	TAKYIWAA	RAHEL
TML500481	TAMBRO	JONATHAN KOFI
TML500402	TAMIMU	FATI
TML500480	TETTEH	CHRISTIAN KWAME
TML500125	TUA-YEBOAH	KWASI
TML500470	TWENE	KWAMI NANA
TML500035	WIREDU	ABRAHAM
TML500412	WIREKO	WILLIAMS
TML500140	WOLI	YAW
TML500139	WULANA	ALHASSAN
TML500023	WUMBEI	ALHASSAN
TML500380	WUNNI	AZARA
TML500256	YAHAYA	AYISHETU
TML500443	YAHAYA	MAHAMADU
TML500350	YAKUBU	ABDULAI
TML500362	YAKUBU	ABDUL-RAHAMANI
TML500271	YAKUBU	ADAM
TML500377	YAKUBU	ADAM ANYAME
TML500356	YAKUBU	ADAMU
TML500328/9	YAKUBU	AMINA
TML500116	YAKUBU	BARICHISU
TML500236	YAKUBU	IDDRISU
TML500169	YAKUBU	ISSIFU
TML500369	YAKUBU	MOHAMMED
TML500090	YAKUBU	MUMUNI
TML500155	YAKUBU	MUSAH
TML500093	YAKUBU	RUFAI
TML500186	YAKUBU	SALIMATA
TML500130	YAKUBU	SARATU (HAJIA)
TML500131	YAKUBU	SAWDATU
TML500030	YAKUBU	ZIBLIM
TML500408	YAMBIR	PAUL
TML500168	YAMUSAH	DAMATA
TML500244	YAYA	ISSAH
TML500086	YEBOAH	KWABENA
TML500146	YINZUOB	CHARLES BONAG
TML500204	YOBO	DAVID YUSSIPH
TML500441	YOGBAT	ANDREWS
TML500241	YUSSIF	BARICHISU

TML500097	YUSSIF	SEIDU
TML500153	ZAKARI	ABDUL RAHMAN
TML500220	ZAKARI	ALABIRA
TML500378	ZAKARI	HAWA
TML500235	ZAKARI	JALIATU
TML500293	ZAKARIA	AYI
TML500008	ZAKARIA	FUSEINI
TML500396	ZAKARIA	SAFURA
TML500196	ZAKARIA	ZALIATU
TML500065	ZA-SAKPAKU	HIMA KORBLAH
TML500283	ZAZAH	NINA
TML500237	ZEBLEM	IDDRISU
TML500287	ZIBLIM	ISSIFU
TML500194	ZUU	ISSAHAKU

VOLUME 2APPENDIX A

PRISONERS EXECUTED BY FIRING SQUAD BETWEEN 14TH MAY 1983 AND 17TH MAY 1993

NO.	NAME OF PRISONER	DATE ADMITTED	DATE EXECUTED	PRISON HELD
1.	Emmanuel Boadi @ Padmore	13/5/83	14/5/83	Ussher Fort
2.	No. GH 264 Major Samuel Boaten Okyere	2/8/83	13/8/83	Medium Security Prison Male Nsawam
3.	Pte Evans Tekpor	4/8/83	13/8/83	Ussher Fort
4.	Cpl Edward Ofei	4/8/83	13/8/83	“
5.	Pte Henry Obeng	13/8/83	13/8/83	“
6.	J. Amartey Quaye	15/8/83	18/8/83	“
7.	Johnny Dzandu	15/8/83	18/8/83	“
8.	Michael Senyah	15/8/83	31/8/83	“
9.	Sulemana Tijani	19/5/83	19/5/84	“
10.	Samuel Awuley Lartey	26/4/84	19/5/84	“
11.	Samuel Ofei Kwame Fianko	26/4/84	19/5/84	Medium Security Prison Male Nsawam
12.	Joseph Ebenezer Ferguson	22/5/84	26/5/84	“
13.	Ebenezer Sackey Okine	22/5/84	26/5/84	“
14.	Joseph Aryee	22/5/84	26/5/84	“
15.	Francis Nketsia Coleman	22/5/84	26/5/84	Medium Security Prison

VOLUME 2

				Male Nsawam
16.	Kwakuvi Fudzagbo	7/10/83	29/9/84	Ussher Fort
17.	Kofi Nworkpor @ Agboga	10/7/83	29/9/84	Ussher Fort
18.	Flt Lt Robert Kojo Lee	9/12/83	29/9/84	Medium Security Prison Male Nsawam
19.	Adjinakor George @ Teye Wayo	22/12/83	29/9/84	Ussher Fort
20.	Azura Dagarti	9/5/84	29/9/84	“
21.	Kojo Nyamekye	9/5/84	29/9/84	“
22.	Sumaila Mohammed	19/7/84	29/9/84	Medium Security Prison Male Nsawam
23.	Issaka Fuseini @ Black Power	19/7/84	29/9/84	“
24.	Issaka Bukari @ Alhaji Bukari	19/7/84	29/9/84	“
25.	Richard Nii Amu Addy	13/9/84	29/9/84	“
26.	Danjuma Abudu Ramani	17/3/85	22/3/85	“
27.	Tetteh Nartey @ Negro	17/3/85	22/3/85	“
28.	Douglas Ayitey	17/3/85	22/3/85	“
29.	Pte Alfred Holdbrook	15/3/84	25/5/85	“
30.	Major Nana Twumasi Anto	1/4/85	25/5/85	“
31.	Shaibu Ibrahim @ Baba	1/4/85	25/5/85	“
32.	Sgt Joseph Issaka	1/4/85	25/5/85	“
33.	Major John Ocran	1/4/85	25/5/85	Ussher Fort
34.	Sgt. Francis Duku	1/1/85	25/5/85	“
35.	Taller	17/3/85	25/5/85	Medium Security Prison

VOLUME 2

				Male Nsawam
36.	Azura Nartey @ Tibey	17/3/85	25/5/85	“
37.	George Salami	17/5/85	23/5/85	“
38.	Augustus Owoo	17/5/85	23/5/85	“
39.	Ritz Kofi Osei	17/5/85	23/5/85	“
40.	Joseph Nelson Kwame Adu	23/5/85	31/5/85	“
41.	Bernard Apertey Odonkor	23/5/85	31/5/85	“
42.	Mark Nyame Boham	27/5/85	31/5/85	“
43.	Baba Abana	26/6/85	27/6/85	“
44.	Seth Amponsah	15/3/84	21/6/86	Ussher Fort
45.	L/Cpl George Badame Doog	6/4/84	21/6/86	Medium Security Prison Male Nsawam
46.	Sgt Richard Kwashie Kwaku	19/5/85	21/6/86	“
47.	Kwaku Torsu @ Adzewordo	19/5/85	21/6/86	“
48.	Seidu Issifu	8/5/84	21/6/86	“
49.	Ahmed Denteh @ Braimah Kankani	15/5/86	21/6/86	“
50.	Anthony Coffie @ Alass	30/4/84	21/6/86	“
51.	Samuel Boamah Panyin	15/5/86	21/6/86	“
52.	Kwame Addo	8/5/84	21/6/86	“
53.	Kyereme Djan	15/5/86	21/6/86	Ussher Fort
54.	Yaw Brefo Berko	15/5/86	21/6/86	“
55.	Sulemana Mohammed @ Killer	19/12/85	21/6/86	“
56.	Pte Charles Koomson	15/5/86	21/6/86	Medium Security Prison Male Nsawam
57.	WOII Samuel Charles Lartey	15/5/86	21/6/86	Ussher Fort

VOLUME 2

	Aforo
58.	Godwin Mawuli @ Kofi Dra Goka	15/5/86	21/6/86	Medium Security Prison Male Nsawam
59.	Kwame Mathias	14/11/84	27/12/86	Ussher Fort
60.	Iddrisu Busu	13/8/85	27/12/86	Medium Security Prison Male Nsawam
61.	Musah Landan	13/8/85	27/12/86	“
62.	Issakah Mamudu	13/8/85	27/12/86	“
63.	Atia Frafra	13/8/85	27/12/86	“
64.	Ali Hansah	13/8/85	27/12/86	“
65.	Sule Zabrama	13/8/85	27/12/86	“
66.	Gariba Adamu	13/8/85	27/12/86	“
67.	Kasum Moshie	13/8/85	27/12/86	“
68.	Osumanu Zabramah	2/10/85	27/12/86	Ussher Fort
69.	Joseph Forson @ Kwadwo Nyarko	30/4/86	27/12/86	“
70.	Kwabena Sarfo	30/4/86	27/12/86	“
71.	Osumanu Mohammed	30/1/87	16/7/87	Medium Security Prison Male Nsawam
72.	Sotormw Sogobadzi @ More	28/2/87	16/7/87	Medium Security Prison Male Nsawam
73.	Godson Adams @ Cake Pan	28/2/87	16/7/87	“
74.	Ekyire Joseph Kekesi @German Cargo	28/2/87	16/7/87	“
75.	Emmanuel Milebar	28/2/87	16/7/87	“

VOLUME 2

76.	Joseph Kojo Ataklo @ Las Palmas	28/2/87	16/7/87	“
77.	Moses Mark Ali @ Maconi	28/2/87	16/7/87	“
78.	Edward Marby @ Bob Marley	28/2/87	16/7/87	“
79.	Okoe Otoo @ Zion	28/2/87	16/7/87	“
80.	Wahabu Musah @ Smart	28/2/87	16/7/87	“
81.	George Kudaya @ KC	28/2/87	16/7/87	“
82.	Safahu Dzogbedoh @ Choco Spanner	28/2/87	16/7/87	“
83.	Issaka Alidu @ Giwa	28/2/87	16/7/87	“
84.	Kwasi Twum	28/2/87	16/7/87	“
85.	Sefianu Adamu @ Love Chico	28/2/87	16/7/87	“
86.	Afatsoo Dogbatse	15/5/87	27/6/88	Medium Security Prison Male Nsawam
87.	Mohammed Adamu Dantatwa Kwabena Amoako	15/5/87	27/6/88	“
88.	Narh Kofi @ John Wayne	15/5/87	27/6/88	“
89.	Martin Marquaye	20/5/87	27/6/88	“
90.	Martin Balanayin	20/5/87	27/6/88	“
91.	Sanni Haruna	20/5/87	27/6/88	“
92.	Kwabena Asare @ Ko-Hwe	10/11/86	27/6/88	“
93.	Joseph Jarjo Annan	21/11/86	27/6/88	“
94.	Merings Mohammed @ Sannie Halidu	2/7/87	27/6/88	“
95.	Rashid Awolwo @ Filapa Alhaji	2/7/87	27/6/88	“

VOLUME 2

96.	Francis Annobil Awaab	11/4/84	3/9/88	“
97.	Philip Boakye Dua (Dr)	12/9/85	3/9/88	Ussher Fort
98.	Kwaku Duah	18/3/86	3/9/88	“
99.	Kofi Bour	18/3/86	3/9/88	...
100.	Gariba Kussasi @ Attah Kussasi	18/3/86	3/9/88	Medium Security Prison Male Nsawam
101.	Kwasi Ataa Kakraba @ Sea Man	19/12/86	3/9/88	“
102.	Ranfu Binney @ Anthony Olu	19/12/86	3/9/88	“
103.	Kwaku Acheampong	19/12/86	3/9/88	“
104.	Opoku Ware Aboagye @ Cudjoe	19/12/86	3/9/88	“
105.	Emmanuel Mensah Hammond @ Osa Mensah	19/12/86	3/9/88	“
106.	Safiana Moro @ Talata	19/12/86	3/9/88	“
107.	Okomfo Ofori Agyeman	9/8/88	1/10/88	“
108.	Kwame Ofori	9/8/88	1/10/88	“
109.	Benjamin Affi @ Ackaah	24/8/88	1/10/88	“
110.	Joseph Kumah @ Yaw Kwarteng	24/8/88	1/10/88	“
111.	Paul Jackson @ Boadu, @ JB Jomo	24/8/88	1/10/88	“
112.	Bafour Twene	5/9/88	1/10/88	“
113.	Nana Kwasi Agyei II @ Nana Gyabey @ K.G	24/8/88	1/10/88	“
114.	John Bosco	5/9/88	1/10/88	“
115.	Sidiki Abubakari	5/9/88	1/10/88	“

VOLUME 2

116.	Koikoi Debiera Dery	5/9/88	1/10/88	“
117.	Issifu Salifu @ Uroy	27/5/87	3/2/90	“
118.	Kwaku Dagbah Agododzo @ Yente Gyae	31/7/87	3/2/90	“
119.	Hamidu Mohammed @ Mustapha	26/10/87	3/2/90	“
120.	Emmanuel Torgbor Arbenzar	9/11/87	3/2/90	“
121.	Kwasi Koranteng @ Quist	7/12/87	3/2/90	Medium Security Prison Male Nsawam
122.	Benjamin Aryee Teiko	22/6/88	3/2/90	“
123.	Seth Akrong Sowah @ Roger	22/6/88	3/2/90	“
124.	Francis Kwasi @ Agbenyor Flash	12/11/88	3/2/90	“
125.	Awudu Sulley @ Davies	8/8/89	3/2/90	“
126.	Kwame Azanu @ Owura	8/8/89	3/2/90	“
127.	Benjamin Mireku @ Kwasi Mireku	13/5/84	17/7/93	Ussher Fort
128.	Issah Isaka @ Issah Agege	26/6/85	17/7/93	Medium Security Prison Male Nsawam
129.	Kwame Nkansah @ Bob Darling	26/6/85	17/7/93	“
130.	Zakari Salifu	26/6/85	17/7/93	“
131.	Kwepey Yartey	26/6/85	17/7/93	“
132.	Kofi Kodua	13/6/85	17/7/93	“
133.	Mohammed Ali	7/5/87	17/7/93	“
134.	Mohammed Yao	11/4/88	17/7/93	“

VOLUME 2

	Midoagbodzi
135.	Amadu Seidu @ Saaire @ Oldman	15/7/88	17/7/93	“
136.	John Cudjoe @ Torsu @ Etse	9/12/88	17/7/93	“
137.	Kwadwo Ackon	13/3/89	17/7/93	“
138.	Atta Bruce @ Guy	13/3/89	17/7/93	“
139.	Vincent Kodzo Ayivor	13/3/89	17/7/93	“
140.	Eric Nii Addo	13/3/89	17/7/93	“
141.	Samuel Kofi Akitta @ The Boy	19/12/86	17/7/93	“
142.	Courage Aryee @ Markoe	16/3/89	17/7/93	“
143.	Dieter Hansen Odartey Aryee @ Good Show	19/12/86	17/7/93	“
144.	Godfred Nyavie	17/4/89	17/7/93	“
145.	Mustapha Bruce	17/4/89	17/7/93	“
146.	Abu Bashiru	11/5/84	17/7/93	“

VOLUME 2APPENDIX B*REPORT ON EXHUMATION OF THE REMAINS OF CERTAIN EXECUTED PERSONS

UNDER CORONER'S ORDER: NO. MS.36/2003; DATED APRIL 17, 2003

CORONER'S COURT: Osu District Court

AUTHORITY REQUESTING FOR ORDER OF EXHUMATION: National Reconciliation Commission

EXHUMATION

DATE: 1st September 2003

TIME: 10.30 a.m.

UNDER DIRECTION OF: Professor Edwin Kwame Wiredu, Consultant Pathologist

OTHER MEMBERS OF TEAM:

1. S. Ramaswamy, Forensic Anthropologist and Anatomist
2. Dr. Robert Kumoji, Senior Medical Officer
3. Dr. Henry Armah, Medical Officer
4. Mr. William Kwaku, Chief Prosecutor
5. Mr. James Tackie, Prosecutor

SITE: Public Cemetery, Mile 11, near Weija and off the Accra-Cape Coast road.

GRAVES IDENTIFIED BY: Alhaji Annan (Senior Sexton) and Isaac Aryee (Sexton-in-charge) on identification given by Mr. H.O. Korney (Director of Prisons), ASP Vincent Asare (Manhyia local prison), SCO P.K. Mensah (Kumasi Central prison), ACO Ben Biney (Kumasi Central prison), ACO Owusu Ansah (Kenyasi) and ACO Joseph Hormeku (Tamale Central prison).

IN THE PRESENCE OF:

1. Supt. (Rtd.) Ben Ameleke (Investigating Officer, N.R.C.)
2. Mr. W.A. Marfo (Head of Environmental Health and Sanitation Unit, Min. of Local Govt. & Rural Development)
3. Mr. Jonas Annan (Public Health Department, A.M.A.)
4. Christian Goka, brother of Godwin Mawuli Kofi Dra Goka

VOLUME 2

5. Selorm Goke, nephew of Godwin Mawuli Kofi Dra Goka
6. Mrs. Evelyn Owusu (nee Djan), sister of Kyereme Djan
7. Godfred Boakye, nephew of Kyereme Djan
8. Madam Benneh Djan, sister of Kyereme Djan
9. Osei Boakye, nephew of Kyereme Djan
10. Mr. Samuel Robert Ofori, Head of Family of Samuel Charles Aforo
11. Solomon Charles Aforo, senior brother of Samuel Charles Aforo
12. Augustina Aforo-Yeboah, sister of Samuel Charles Aforo
13. Atta Kuma alias Ampadu Dacosta, twin brother of Samuel Boamah Panyin

GRAVES: Two unmarked, earth mound graves were identified to the exhumation team. Both graves were approximately fifty (50) metres from the road, in an east-south-east direction, and to the Sexton's office.

Grave 1 contained three (3) bodies, individually wrapped in grey blankets and lying predominantly side-by-side. Each body was carefully removed and placed in individually labelled body bag for further examination later.

Grave 2 contained five (5) bodies, also individually wrapped in grey blankets and lying predominantly side-by-side. Each body was carefully removed and placed in individually labelled body bag for further examination later.

EXAMINATION OF BODIES

DATE: 5th – 7th September 2003

PROCEDURE:

All relations who were present at the time of examination were interviewed and given brief counselling before viewing items of clothing for possible identification of deceased relation. Relations were given the choice of not using visual identification because of the extent of decomposition and the effect the procedure might have on them. All of them chose to provide visual identification. Description of items of clothing likely to aid in identification were taken before viewing of bodies and clothings.

The bodies were examined one after the other in no particular sequence except for convenience of the team. Examination of a body was completed on each occasion before moving to another. Each body bag was opened, the blanket and clothing carefully removed and the bones taken out, identified and placed in their normal position in the body. Injuries to bones were noted. Items of clothing were also carefully examined for bullet holes and where these were found matched to identified bony injuries where possible. Any peculiarities of clothing or body that might serve as means of identification were also noted. Photographs were taken to aid the process.

VOLUME 2

DESCRIPTION AND IDENTITIES OF BODIESA. GRAVE 1*1. BODY 1*STATE OF BODY:

Completely, skeletonised body with fragmentation (fractures) of the verbal bones in the region of the T10 to L1 and fragmented ribs (probably fractures). Lower jaw shows loss of all teeth from right incisors through to first molar inclusive and replaced by denture. A bullet entry hole is present just below the left mandibular condyle with linear fracture through the ramus. The upper jaw shows the loss of both left upper premolars, which are replaced by corresponding denture.

Femoral length is 35.6 cm.

CLOTHING:

- i. Long-sleeved shirt, with dark blue background and green cross-hatching giving it a “tartan-like” pattern. The shirt bore:
 - a. two small gunshot entry holes in the right upper chest region with two corresponding larger exit holes in the region of the right shoulder blade.
 - b. a large probably gunshot exit hole in the back approximately 28 cm from the shoulder and corresponding to the level of the fracture vertebral bones (T10 to L1)
 - c. two holes in the right side of the collar, either a bullet entry-exit hole pair or exiting bullet holes
- ii. Pale blue trousers
- iii. Open heel, slip-on, shoes measuring 27.5 cm from toe to heel.

IDENTITY: YAW BREFO BERKO

Identified by Kate Barbara Berko of North Kaneshie (contact phone number 024-691166), house number E33 (also B349/10) daughter of deceased and Kwaku Adade of Nsuta, nephew of deceased.

MEANS OF IDENTIFICATION: Clothing and shoes (items described by relations during interview prior to identification).

2. BODY 2:

VOLUME 2

STATE OF BODY: Completely skeletonised body. The skull bears a bullet entry hole in the right temporal bone approximately 1 cm in maximum dimension, 30 cm above the external auditory meatus and 40 cm from the right asterion anteriorly. There is loss of the squamous temporal bone. There is a fracture extending posteriorly for 30 cm from the entry hole, then coronally across the right parietal bone, ending 45 cm from the left parietal bone to the infero-lateral margin of the bone, ending 45 cm from the left asterion and in continuity with a transverse fracture of the middle cranial fossa. The exit is through the anterior part of the left temporal fossa with loss of the left squamous temporal and part of the left frontal bone. A fracture across the frontal bone connects the entry and exit paths of the bullet. There are fractures involving the third to seventh cervical vertebrae (C3 to C7) suggesting passage of bullet (s) through the neck. Femoral length is 45.4 cm.

CLOTHING:

- i. Blue political suit
- ii. Red shoes with a strap across the tongue
- iii. Pale plain socks
- iv. Leather belt

IDENTITY: SAMUEL BOAMAH PANYIN ALIAS ATTA KULULU

Identified by Atta Kumah alias Ampadu Dakota of Kokomlemle (contact phone number 024-8500370, twin brother of deceased).

MEANS OF IDENTIFICATION: Red shoes with strap across the front (Item described by brother during interview prior to identification).

3. BODY 3

STATE OF BODY: Completely skeletonised body with intact skull. The right scapula (shoulder blade) is shattered suggesting passage of bullet (s). The right upper ribs are shattered also suggesting the passage of bullet (s). The third and fourth cervical vertebrae are also shattered indicating probably passage of bullet. Femoral length 50 cm (19.6”).

CLOTHING

- i. Shirt made of synthetic material, whitish with black patterns bearing a hole in the back (likely a bullet hole)
- ii. Vest with hole in the back corresponding to hole in the shirt
- iii. Black belt with a flat metal buckle
- iv. Black rosary
- v. Green sports shorts with white trimmings
- vi. “Charlie wote” slippers

IDENTITY: SAMUEL CHARLES LARTEY AFORO

VOLUME 2

Identified by Solomon Charles Aforo of A75 Teshie Tsui Bleo (opposite Manna Hospital), and Augustina Aforo-Yeboah (contact phone number 022 401332) of Sakumono, brother (elder) and sister respectively of deceased.

MEANS OF IDENTIFICATION: Belt, rosary and sports shorts by Solomon and rosary and sports shorts by Augustina.

Described as the tallest of the deceased persons by all the Prison Officers. Femoral length of 50 cm marks him as the tallest.

B. GRAVE 21. BODY 1

STATE OF BODY: Completely skeletonised body. Skull bones shattered into many fragments suggesting passage of bullets through the head. Femoral length 48.1 cm.

CLOTHING:

- i. Pair dark brown, lace-up, ankle length shoes with toe cap
- ii. Pair white socks
- iii. ?Pale brown ?dark brown trousers with Margaret Howell designer label
- iv. Dark blue underpants
- v. Handkerchief, white with brown borders
- vi. Leather belt with narrow stitched tongue and metal buckle

IDENTITY: GODWIN MAWULI KOFI DRA GOKA

Identified by Christian Goka of No. 13 First Ringway, Osu-RE (contact phone number 024-235390), brother of deceased and Esinam Adjei of No. 9 Jonkobri Walk, Lartebikorshie (contact phone number 021-306967), cousin of deceased.

MEANS OF IDENTIFICATION: Shoes and Margaret Howell designer trousers (label mentioned by Christian during interview prior to identification).

2. BODY 2

STATE OF BODY: Completely skeletonised body. Proximal phalanx (side not identified) was stained green likely from copper salt deposition from cooper or brass ring. Four (4) rusted metal fragments were found with the bones. ?Bullet.

CLOTHING

VOLUME 2

- i. Blue canvass shoes with white trimming, five (5) lace holes on each side.
- ii. Black woollen socks
- iii. Long-sleeved button-down shirt (buttoned) with orange plastic buttons. Shirt is white, pale brown or grey, thin pale blue stripes
- iv. Elasticated band with red and black stripes likely from underpants
- v. Dark blue metal zip likely from trousers.

IDENTITY: CHARLES KOOMSON

Identified by Samuel Koomson, brother and Diana Koomson, sister in law and wife of Samuel Koomson, both of House number 413/2 Madina Old Road (contact phone number 024-519633).

MEANS OF IDENTIFICATION: Dark blue canvass shoes with white trim.

3. BODY 3

STATE OF BODY: Completely skeletonised body. Skull and hip fragmented bones. Right femoral length is 44.5 cm.

CLOTHING:

- i. Pair ?brown leather ankle-length boots with zip along the medial side
- ii. Pair dark blue socks
- iii. Pair dark ?blue trousers
- iv. Pale blue short-sleeved shirt with orange buttons, one flapped breast pocket on each side of chest and dark blue trims along sleeve seam. Bears label "Paris Gentleman".

IDENTITY: AHMED DENTEH A.K.A. BRAIMAH KANKANI

Identified by Prison Officers led by Joseph Kofi Hormeku (No. 5737), Assistant Chief Officer, Ghana Prisons Service, Tamale.

MEANS OF IDENTIFICATION: Shoes

4. BODY 4

STATE OF BODY: Completely skeletonised body. Skull bones fragmented. Large amount of brown hair present.

CLOTHING:

- i. Pair white-to-cream coloured slippers with cross-hatched (trellis-like) plastic top
- ii. Pale brown trousers (material quite "heavy")
- iii. White short-sleeved shirt, double-pocketed, with "Yamaha" logo over left breast and back.

VOLUME 2

IDENTITY: Kyeremeh Djan

Identified by Joseph Kofi Homeku (No. 5737), Assistant Chief Officer, Ghana Prisons Service, Tamale.

MEANS OF IDENTIFICATION: Trousers and “albino” hair.

5. BODY 5

STATE OF BODY: Completely skeletonised body. Completely shattered pelvic and vertebral bones (probably from multiple bullet impacts). Left tibia length 39.3 cm.

CLOTHING:

- i. Pair of “Deportins Yonkys” canvass shoes with white lace
- ii. Pair ankle-length sports socks with blue and yellow bands
- iii. Heavy (jute-like) brown trousers with interwoven black thread
- iv. Pair white sports shorts.

IDENTITY: GEORGE BADAME DOOG

Identified by Prison Officers led by Joseph Kofi Hormeku (No. 5737), Assistant Chief Officer, Ghana Prisons Service, Tamale.

MEANS OF IDENTIFICATION: Shattered bones – was sprayed in the abdomen with bullets according to the Prison Officers.

PROF. E.K. WIREDU

VOLUME 2APPENDIX C*REPORT ON EXHUMATION OF THE REMAINS OF CERTAIN PERSONS AT TARKWA

AUTHORITY REQUESTING FOR ORDER OF EXHUMATION: National Reconciliation Commission.

EXHUMATION

DATE: 17th May 2004

TIME: 10.00am.

UNDER DIRECTION OF: Professor Edwin Kwame Wiredu, Consultant Pathologist.

OTHER MEMBERS OF TEAM:

1. Mr. S. Ramaswamy, Forensic Anthropologist and Anatomist
2. Dr. Robert Kumoji, Senior Medical Officer
3. Dr. Henry Armah, Medical Officer.

SITE: Public Cemetery, Aboso near Tarkwa

GRAVES IDENTIFIED BY: Opanin Kwame Obeng, Sexton

IN THE PRESENCE OF:

1. Mr. Samuel Kwame Appiah (Investigating Officer, N. R. C)
2. Mr. E. L. Ampofo (Investigating Officer, N. R. C)
3. Inspector Tommy Thompson (Divisional Police Headquarters, Tarkwa)
4. Constable Alex Okyere (Divisional Police Headquarters, Tarkwa)
5. Constable Sam Ofosuhene (Divisional Police Headquarters, Tarkwa)
6. Constable Evans Ahiati (Divisional Police Headquarters, Tarkwa)
7. Nana Kyei Baafo (Chief of Aboso)
8. Opanin Thomas Ankomah (Elder of Aboso)
9. Opanin Alex Eghan (Linguist)
10. Three cemetery labourers

GRAVES: Two unmarked, earth mound graves were identified to the exhumation team. All bodies had been buried in wooden coffins all of which had completely disintegrated leaving the human remains embedded in soil, resulting in admixture of the remains.

Grave 1 was determined to contain two (2) bodies.

Grave 2 contained many admixture bones and the number of bodies could not be determined on site.

VOLUME 2EXAMINATION OF BODIES

DATE: 18th –21st May 2004

PROCEDURE:

The procedure adopted was to separate the bones from a particular grave, match paired bones to each bone other, determined sex and age and match to unpaired bones.

Using this process it was determined that:

Grave 1 contained two (2) bodies identified as those of a male adolescent and a tall male adult.

Grave 2 was determined to contain three (3) the bodies: of a female adult and two (2) male adults.

Without further information on the height and build of the deceased persons during life it was not possible to continue the process of identification beyond this.

In all cases, because of exposure, the bones were brittle and soft and injuries sustained before death could not be reliably distinguished from artefacts caused by handling and deterioration. However, in all cases there were extensive fracture of the skull, presumed to have occurred when the bodies were thrown down the mine shaft.

PROF. E. K. WIREDU

VOLUME 2APPENDIX D*NON-JURISDICTIONAL

The Commission found the under listed petition to be in whole, or in part, outside its jurisdiction.

Kosi Kedem 1956 plebiscite in trans-Volta Togoland.

Enoch Mate disbursement of an amount of ₵500 million paid by the Volta River Authority into the account of the Volta Resettlement Trust Fund on or about 31 March 1995.

James Jackie arrest and detention for three days by soldiers in 1996.

Abdallah Alhassan Madugu shot in the foot on 1 March 1994.

Zalia Mahama demolition of a wooden structure in 1994.

Safohen Kobina Esson claim to occupancy of the stool of Ekon (Queen Anne's Point), Cape Coast.

Ansah Ibrahim termination of contract to build a water treatment plant at Nkoranza.

Emmanuel Kusi Awiti proof of a will.

Eugene Kontor re Augustine Owusu Frimpong allegation that certain private individuals conspired to murder petitioner's brother, Frimpong.

Kenneth Yeboah claim against Paul Sagoe Sawmill Limited, a private company, for wrongful dismissal.

Brandford Asante calculation of entitlements on retirement from the Army in 1995.

Robert Kwame Charty complaint of torture and destruction of property by security personnel on 1 March 1993.

Allan Atta Buckman running down accident which occurred on 12th July 1993.

Albert Kwasi Addai demolition of a structure by the KMA in 1999.

Christiana Aryee re Emmanuel Appiah alleged killing of Appiah on 29th November 1998.

VOLUME 2

Isaac Frimpong alleged assault by ACDR members and security personnel during a protest march on 13th February 1993.

Boateng Peprah alleged assault by thugs on demonstrators during a protest march (Kumepreko) on 11th May 1995 over the introduction of the Value Added Tax.

Ebenezer Kweku Andoh demolition of a house in 1997.

Rocky Yao Baah dismissal from the Ghana Navy in 1997 for examination malpractice.

Hutchison Carl Bartels an arrest which took place in December 1993.

Victor Kobina Andoh arrest and detention, seizure of property in 1997.

Eric Osei assault by Police officers resulting in the loss of an eye on 13th February 1994.

Vincent Avashiam assault by soldiers at Kwamoso, Eastern Region on 28th June 1998.

Gyasi Amoako arrest, imprisonment and dismissal from the Police Service in 1994.

Bennet Kudjo Gyedu assault by soldiers on members of a household at Asylum Down on 8th June 2000.

Joseph Smith Adomakoh Jnr. seizure of a house in 1999.

Nii Boye Odoi Quaye quantum of entitlements after retiring from the Public Service in 1997.

David Kwame Essel dismissal from the Prison's Service in 1996.

Vivian Adu Acheampong deprivation of property in 1996 and 1990.

Mahmud Karim sentence of death for murder imposed by a Public Tribunal in 1996.

Esi Hammond payment of allocation fee of ₵350,000 to AMA for a wall space at Ashiedu Keteke Central market on 3rd May 1995.

Larweh Therson-Coffie an employee of the Graphic Corporation, he was dismissed on 28th October 1993.

Nana Obrimpong Kanya II petition for restoration of the Paramountcy of the Benamse-Nchumuru Stool.

VOLUME 2

Joseph Aryai Armah termination of employment by the National Savings & Credit Bank Limited, a private company with limited liability.

Prince Boateng termination of employment by Ghana Commercial Bank Limited, a private company.

Philip Kwame Anipaede a collision between a military vehicle and a private vehicle driven by petitioner's father resulting in the father's death.

Rose Dede Bodua re Humphrey Tettey Bodua dispute between Leticia Acquah and Rose's late husband, Bodua, as to enforcement of an oral agreement for the sale of a house.

Dan Zuttah petitioner wants a scholarship to Dartmouth College, USA which he claims was withdrawn in 1977, restored.

Esmir Kosi Honu payment of balance of end of service benefit by Ghana Textile Printing Company Limited.

Edward Otapah Boampong allegations of assault and murder committed by private individuals against petitioner and members of his family.

Cosmos Yaw Khra complaint that Konkomba settlers have trespassed onto Krachi and other lands.

James Harwerteh he was sleeping in the open inside his home during curfew hours when three policemen entered the house. He panicked and ran into the bush and sustained scratches on his body.

William Brew Hagan enforcement of a decision of CHRAJ that a confiscated estate house at Tema be deconfiscated and restored to petitioner.

Nana Serwaa Akyempim dispute as to proper person to succeed Nana Akwasi Adokwabo as Twafohene of Otumfuo the Asantehene.

Musah Mahama claim by a soldier for compensation for injuries sustained by him during a training exercise.

Alhassan Iddrissu Dulugu land dispute between petitioner's family and Choggu Naa.

Ama Otuwa recovery of a private debt.

Kwasi Nyarko trespass to land.

F. R. Asiedu claim for the value of goods supplied to members of the CDR.

VOLUME 2

Henry Laryea Schandorf claim against the TDC for the recovery of his personal effects or their value.

Joseph Komla Kudjordji payment of a fine by a limited liability company.

Alex Eugene Appeah Danquah purported destoolment of a person as a chief.

Lord Sey dispute between petitioner and one Frank Eshun over the ownership of a TDC estate house.

Togbui Ashiakpor IV purported destoolment of a person as a chief.

Emmanuel Yaw Kissi rival claims of Timhire Limited and Contal Shipping Agencies to ownership of trucks and equipment sold to Subin Timbers Limited.

Henry Kofi Mattey claim by a person to be the Fiaga or Paramount Chief of Ho.

Nana Kwasi Bulumia Twum claim to be entitled to administer the estate of a deceased person.

Matthew Narh Tetteh claim of a person to be a chief.

Godfried Odame Kissi enforcement of orders made by CHRAJ.

Serwaa Yeboah Afari dispute among shareholders of a limited liability company.

Yaw Konadu claim against the KMA on a quantum meruit.

Yaw Barima refusal by the Ministry of Education to recommend petitioner's book for use in schools.

Budu Akrobire demolition of a kiosk put up at an unauthorized place.

Anthony Sackey claim for the return by the State of printing machines used in printing fake currency notes.

Alex Yao Tsetse leaving the country on one's own volition to live abroad.

Joseph Arthur Claim against Ashanti Goldfields Ltd.

Ben Kobina Sagoe Claim against Ashanti Goldfields Ltd

Minta Kundana Claim against Ashanti Goldfields Ltd

VOLUME 2

Emmanuel Nyamekye-Osei a wholesale-keeper of the GNTC. He admitted to joining other employees to inflate the prices of goods to the detriment of the public. Even though his employers lost nothing, they were entitled to dismiss him. In any case, GNTC is not the government nor did it purport to be acting on behalf of the government.

John Frimpong Frimpong reported a vision he had seen of the second coming of Christ. He refused counseling which might have determined the state of his mind and the cause or causes of his condition. In the absence of evidence that his condition was brought on or otherwise induced by any act or acts constituting human rights violations, the Commission cannot be of any assistance to him.

Thomas Bonah complaint against a private company (Ashanti Goldfields Limited) for overtime allowance.

Samuel Charles Owusu-Akonnor termination of employment by Saltpond Ceramics Limited, a private company.

John Yeboah claim for unpaid salaries against Construction Pioneers, a private company.

Benny Ashun petitioner alleges that one Ofei sold a plot of land in Accra to him. While petitioner was in exile, he sent moneys to Ofei and an agent to whom he had granted a power of attorney to build a house on the land. He alleges that upon completion Ofei and the agent sold the land to a third party. It is best resolved in a court of law.

Benoni Kwaku Abaye claims to be owner of a piece of land at Biriwa. When he tried to assert his title to the land, the High Court, Cape Coast, found against him. He sought government intervention but this came to nothing. This is a dispute over land between private individuals. The courts are the proper forum.

Philip Yarose Navro in 1975, Navro and one Musah who were living in houses in Community 4, Tema decided to exchange them. The one for the other. Later Musah took action in the courts to claim back his property. However, he refused to give Navro's property back to him. In 1983, Navro took action in the courts to recover his property. He failed and now seeks assistance from the Commission. Enquiries made by the Commission have disclosed that the house Navro claims to be his is now in the name of one Benedicta Ampson.

Abdulai Feernando Mohamed confiscation of kiosk by Tamle Municipal Assembly in 1998.

Jacob Asamoah was assaulted by Commandos in 2000.

Kofi Yeboah lived in Libya, in 1998 he gave money to officials at the Ghanaian Embassy in Libya in 2000 he was informed that the money was missing.

VOLUME 2

Anome Klidza re Agbeko Kodzo Sedzedo was shot by Policemen and died shortly afterwards in 2000.

Linus Koku Hodzi was shot in the hip by policemen in 1996.

Anani Alexander Ashinyo re Kwashie Asinyo was shot and killed by a Customs Officer by name Seidu Malik Tansobah.

James Moshie seizure of implements for brewing palm wine by officials of the Game and Wildlife Department in 1997.

Isaac Boadi BNI operative was dismissed in 1998.

Joseph Gyempeh Kanin demolition of his house in 1998.

Patricia Akua Kobi was injured by a stray bullet fired by some policemen in 1993.

Francis Amoako was dismissed from his job at the Sekyere East District Assembly in 2001.

Alex Kwame Kumah Shot by private individual in 1994.

Haruna Abukari lost property during Nanumba-Konkonba disturbances in 1994.

Joseph Yaw Amoah applied for a job in the Cocoa Services Division of the Ministry of Agriculture in 1965 and was not employed.

Issah Seidu complains of inadequate pension paid to him in 2000.

Abubakari Imoro Shishi conflict between two Moslem sects in 2002.

Joseph Kodzo Dzandu dismissed for absenting himself from work without permission.

Samuel Kwame Adovor refusal by military authorities to pay him money reward as informant.

Christian Samuel Odoom had his right eye damaged while on official duty in 1995.

James Adduah Addy was jailed for manslaughter by Public Tribunal.

Ebenezer Arkoh and five others had their contracts terminated in 1998.

VOLUME 2

David Tongo was dismissed from Ashanti Goldfields Company (a limited liability company).

Kwaku Benony Abaye land dispute that has been decided by the Court of Appeal.

Samuel Kofi Odonkor involved in a motor accident and sustained serious injuries and was compensated by employers.

Edward Atengble had his name deleted from the payroll of State Construction Corporation in 1995.

Kennedy Noah Hlover dismissed for insubordination.

Victoria Mensa Majdub complains of pollution in her house since 1994.

Emeritus Prof. Samuel Nyarko wants monetary compensation for being sent to the psychiatrist hospital by his family.

Akwasi Bronya was shot by a private person.

Benjamin Boateng was enstooled as chief in 1994 and has faced opposition ever since.

Henry Kwasi Asimadu was dismissed for embezzlement even though he refunded the money.

Samuel Amponsah Fordwoo re Ex WOI Fordwoo was discharged from Ghana Army in 1979 but petitioner claims Ex WOI Fordwoo was on duty on the 4th of June 1979 and had his human rights violated.

Elvis Akpalu discharged from the Ghana Armed Forces for impregnating a sixteen-year-old girl in 2000.

Winfried Simplicity Agbegoe complains of the non-payment of some claims in 1996.

Togbe Asinyo land dispute pending in Ho High Court since 1965.

Mary Akpabli re Dzifa Boso was allegedly defiled by Dotse Ayikpa in or about 1998.

Thomas Oppong Asare was assaulted by macho men in 2000.

Adamu Mahama Adams private land dispute.

Gaddiel Hackman Otto demolishing of house by a Chief.

VOLUME 2

Albert Adu-Gyamfi visa fraud between two private individuals.

Francis Ofori cocoa farmer had his seeds for planting washed away by rain.

Rockson Anthony Appiah proof of will in 1993.

Banahene Adu-Gyamfi was arrested and maltreated by police in 2000.

Yaw Kankam Boadu termination of appointment and paid inadequate compensation by Guinness Ghana Ltd (private company) in 1996.

Joe Coker went to London without genuine documentation was maltreated by British policemen and pressmen

Anthony Kwame Odei dispute over the distribution of family land.

Kofi Amponsah retrenched by Kumasi Brewery Ltd. in 1993.

Kwadwo Wireko had his machines seized in 1999.

Kwame Amankwah retrenched by Kumasi Brewery Ltd. in 1993.

Festus Asare-Danso retrenched by Kumasi Brewery Ltd. in 1993.

Matilda Darko retrenched by Kumasi Brewery Ltd. in 1993.

Peter Quansah retrenched by Kumasi Brewery Ltd. in 1993.

Raynolds Brew retrenched by Kumasi Brewery Ltd. in 1993.

Kwadow Grusi retrenched by Kumasi Brewery Ltd. in 1993.

Ebenezer Agyei Koranteng was not paid as polling agent for his services to the National Democratic Congress during the 1992 elections.

Felicia Odole gave her properties to a soldier by name Twumasi Ankrah for safe keeping before 1981. After the 1981 coup this soldier was declared wanted so he fled. She has been unable to trace these properties.

Nana Amponsah Antwi was invited by BNI for interrogation after some allegations had been made against him by a private citizen. He also had his house destroyed. Both events occurred in 1993.

VOLUME 2

Thompson Mahama was inflicted with cutlass wounds in or about 1999 by private citizens.

Mintana Kundana employee of Ashanti Goldfields Company a limited liability Company. He retired in 1989 but was paid inadequate benefits, his Social Security has also not been paid since 1990.

Ben Kobina Sagoe employee of Ashanti Goldfields Company, a limited liability Company. In 1979 he was accused of stealing a piece of gold and was subsequently dismissed. He alleges that the right procedure was not followed.

Peter Kwaku Kyei employee of Ashanti Goldfields Company, a limited liability Company. In 1983 he was wrongly dismissed.

Solomon Kobina Asiedu employee of Ghana Broadcasting Corporation. He retired in 1993 but was paid inadequate retirement benefits.

Joseph Arthur employee of Ashanti Goldfields Company, a limited liability Company. He retired in 1989. He alleges that his retirement benefits were inadequate.

Albert Omane Okra a private citizen erected an illegal structure on his land in 1994.

Godwin Sefakor K. Tamakloe was dismissed from the Ghana Water and Sewage Corporation in 1994.

Hannah Asare was deprived of space she used to engage in her business in 1996.

Akwasi Bakye was assaulted by police during interrogation in 2000.

Mary Odoom suitability of her house for human habitation after a road was constructed close to it in or about 1997.

Akosua Tiwaah was injured during a quarrel with a private citizen in 1994.

Mohammed Muda was involved in an industrial accident in 1998 and has not received any insurance.

Hanson Owusu had goods he imported from Togo seized by officials of the Customs Excise and Preventive Service in 1998.

Samuel Godfred Boateng retired in 1995 and has not received his retirement benefits.

Godwin Sefakor Tamakole termination of contract of employment by GWSC in 1994.

VOLUME 2

Kofi Amponsah retrenchment by GWSC in 1994.

Reynolds Brew retrenchment by GWSC in 1994.

Albert Adu Gyamfi victim of fraud committed by a private person.

Solomon Kobina Asiedu claim for SSNIT benefits.

Akwasi Boakye arrested on a criminal charge in 2000.

Joshua Kwabena Appiah claim by Border Guardsman for allowances for attending military tribunal to give evidence.

Edward Kwabla Degre Atsakpo demolition of a house in 1994.

Nana Amponsah Antwi destruction of property in February 1993.

Thompson Mahama claim for damages for assault committed on petitioner in 1999.

Albert Omane Okra claim for damages for trespass to land occurring in 1994.

Francis Amoako claim for salary for period January 2000 – March 2001 from a District Assembly.

Patricia Akua Kobi claim for damages for gunshot wounds suffered in August 1993.

Hannah Asare enforcement of promise made by Municipal Chief Executive in 1996 to allocate a store to her.

Akosua Tiwaa assaulted in January 1995.

Mahammed Muda claim for compensation for injuries suffered in 1998.

Hanson Owusu seizure of goods in 1996.

Samuel Godfred Boateng claim for pension from 1999.

Michael Anning-Adjei claim for retirement benefits from PBC. Retirement was in 1999.

Herman Kwabena Adjapong & 35 Others variation of judgment of a court.

VOLUME 2

Veronica Baaba Smith enforcement of a customary gift of a house.

Edward Kwablah Degre Atsakpo wrongful dismissal by Shell (Ghana) Ltd.

Philip Kweku Anti trespass to land.

Thomas Birdie Nartey retrieval of funds held by Standard Chartered Bank Ltd.

Isaac Ofori Agyemang a Principal Executive Officer in the sub-District Administration at New Abirem was convicted of selling rice above the control price in 1983. He was sentenced to a term of imprisonment. He petitioned for a Presidential pardon and re-instatement.

Emmanuel Ocloo land dispute between private individuals.

Edward Nyarko return of a motor bicycle confiscated after his conviction for counterfeiting.

Joseph Sarpong short delivery of goods imported through Tema Harbour.

Joseph Adjei Otweima lawyer/client relationship.

Nana Yeboah Kodie III enforcement of arbitration award.

Alex Kwame Kumah shooting of petitioner at Banda Ahenkro in 1994 resulting in amputation of his hand.

Zalia Mahama destruction of building in Tamale in 1994.

Abubakar Imoro Shishi violent clashes between two Muslim sects in Damongo in 2002.

Jonathan Ernest Addae termination of employment by Standard Chartered Bank.

Joseph Yaw Amoah petitioner applied for a position with the CSD of the CMB in 1965 but was not employed. He has no cause of action.

Haruna Abukari destruction and loss of properties in 1994 during the Nanumba- Konkomba conflict.

Nana Otimakro Adu-Boateng claim for long service award from National Cultural Centre, Kumasi.

Kofi Boah Yeboah claim against Ghana Embassy for money had and received in 1998 to petitioner's use.

VOLUME 2

Jacob Asamoah alleged assault by NDC thugs on petitioner at NPP office in Ho in 2000.

Edward Atengble termination of employment in 1995.

Samuel Kofi Donkor claim by a worker for medical expenses incurred in 1995.

Victoria Mansah Majdoub claim in nuisance against GPRTU arising in 1994.

Benjamin Okyere Boateng chieftaincy dispute and land dispute between members of a family.

Akwasi Bronga gun-shot wound sustained in political violence between CPP and UP supporters in 1958.

Kwabena Mensah murder for ritual purposes.

Gaddiel Hackman Otoo enforcement of promise to rebuild family house demolished on the order of a chief.

Thomas Oppong Asare alleged assault by NDC thugs on petitioner, a leper, for mobilizing lepers to vote for the NPP in 2000.

James Agyei Moshei seizure of property in 1997 for farming in a forest reserve.

Elisabeth Atta Mensah dispute as to title to property.

Kwadzo Atsakpo enforcement of a judgment of the High Court, Ho.

Benjamin Amoah Sefa termination of employment by UAG Ghana Ltd.

Isaac Kwarteng-Amaning termination of employment by Anhwiankwanta Oil Mill Ltd.

Abdullah Yakubu termination of employment by Ghana Firestone Rubber Co. Ltd.

Christian Sanniez trespass to land by 31st December Womens' Movement.

Ebenezer Martey chased out of Winneba by factions in chieftaincy dispute.

Isaac Boadu dismissed from the BNI in 1998.

Joseph Gyempeh Kanin destruction of building in 1998.

Kwadwo Wireko seizure of a Dormer Machine by Forestry Department in 1999.

VOLUME 2

Elvis Akpalu dismissal from the Ghana Air Force in 2000.

Francis Ofori compensation for cocoa washed away in 1999.

Rockson Anthony Appiah proof of will of person who died in December, 1993.

Banahene Adu Gyamfi assault by police on petitioner in July, 2000.

Alexander Anani Ashinyo killing of petitioner's son, Kwashie Ashinyo by a custom officer in February, 1995.

Winfried Agbegoe claims against GES dating from 1996.

Linus Koku Hodzi shot by a policeman at Aflao in 1996.

Anome Klidza shooting a petitioner's son, Agbeko Sedzedo, at Aflao in 2000.

James Aleander Appiah removal from office as Managing Director of Abuakora Rural Bank Ltd on 8th January, 1993.

Issah Seidu an employee of Grains Development Board who retired in 1999 seeks re-computation of his gratuity and pension and claim for Workmen's compensation for accident occurring on 7th January, 1993.

Ebenezer Arkoo-Otoo claim for compensation for being declared redundant by the GPHA on 31st January, 1997.

Adamu Mahama Adams dispute over ownership of a plot of land at Dumkwa-on-Offin.

Gilbert Atariba Agunga claim for SSNIT pension.

Richard Akoi-Frempong claim for Long Service Award from Centre for National Culture, Kumasi.

Lloyd A. K. Quashie wrongful dismissal by Ashanti Goldfields Corporation.

Gemal Sam Abass claim against Ghana Telecom for medical treatment.

Hakim Asana Sarpong application for space in Kumasi for purposes of trading.

Kwaku Benony Abaye retrieval of copy of Ordinary Level Certificate.

Gerffrey Kwasi Appiagyei retrieval of copy of Ordinary Level Certificate.

VOLUME 2

Richmond Agyeman-Duah destructing a building under construction in July 1993.

David Tongo claim against Ashanti Goldfields Corporation.

Samuel Adu killing of Kwame Duo, a UP activist, at Adansi Brofoyedru in 1956.

Naba Adongo Bingloro III dispute over ownership of a corn mill.

Abasah Nchor recovery of a debt from a soldier.

Chrisanthus Dery motor accident involving a private vehicle.

Thomas Azubire enforcement of an agreement for the sale of Yamaha Pumping Machine.

S/Sgt Michael Aryee wrongful dismissal by Tema Oil Refinery Ltd.

Noah Kodwo Ashey Antwi eviction of an officer from a Government owned bungalow to make way for another officer, claim for allowances as an officer in the Ghana Foreign Service.

Georgina Appiah recovery of land title documents from a lawyer and friend.

Kwame Kwarteng ejection from rented premises owned by TDC.

Larweh Theson-Cofie dismissed from employment with Graphic Corporation in Oct. 1993.

Philip Lutterodt trespass alleged to have been committed by Buckman, Commissioner of Police on land claimed by petitioner.

George Nartey summary dismissal by the Ghana Household Utilities Manufacturing Co.Ltd.

Richard Butt alleged breach of a contract of employment by the State in 1998.

Joseph Nii Ankrah termination of employment by Graphic Corporation in November 1993.

Charles Takyi Marshall injuries sustained on 4th May 1993 from accidental explosion of hand grenade.

Maria O’Sullivan-Djentu harassment, assault and destruction of property by state agents in 2000.

VOLUME 2

Ruth Akua Gyamfouh Asante breach of promise of marriage.

John Kwame Letsey discharge from the Army on 16th September 1993.

Andrew Kissi Agyare enforcement of judgment for salary and other relief against Shell Ghana Ltd.

Isaac Aseba Alou discharge from the Army in November 1993.

Dora Amnuvuvor claim to be provided with accommodation by Korle Bu Hospital.

Akwasi Asamoah injuries sustained in pre-independence political violence.

Christiana Aryee killing of Emmanuel Aboa Appiah at the Castle, Osu in 1998.

Eliezer Gyau Bekoe failure by the cement dealer to supply 400 bags of cement paid for in 1979.

Emma Aba Garr claim for assistance in locating lost children.

Emmanuel Nyarkoh being trailed by evil spirits.

William Sackey claim for workmen's compensation for injury at the work-place.

Tufuhen Baidoe claim that Nkrumah hailed from Nkroful in Nzema.

Gambia Akuoko Claim for compensation for loss of employment as an official of the Young Pioneer Movement.

Felix Dio Ayekple inadequacy of gratuity paid by GNTC

Daniel Asante claim against Donkudzi Adzadi, a private individual, for damage to an outboard motor.

Anthony Nana Debrah a teacher stationed at Besease Anglican Primary School in Mpraeso District wants to be transferred to Nkawkaw.

Joseph Tetteh Narh claim for compensation for injuries received in a motor accident by the reckless driving of one Emmanuel Yaw Boateng, a private individual. Vehicle was self-owned and uninsured.

Anthony Yaw Gyasi claim against Bibiani Wood/Metal Limited.

VOLUME 2

John Minah Appiah claim for pension by petitioner who retired in 1995.

Agnes Welbeck, wife of Nathaniel Welbeck, a Minister of State in the Nkrumah government petitioned for the recovery of an estate house she claimed Welbeck bought for her at Cape Coast. Agnes' claims are disputed by Elisabeth Atabrah, the administrator of Welbeck's estate. The matter went to court with Agnes as plaintiff and Elisabeth as defendant. Agnes concedes that her action was dismissed when her lawyer failed to turn up for the hearing. Since Elisabeth contends that late Welbeck bought the estate house for his maternal family the courts are the appropriate forum to resolve the issue

Kwame Ansu In 1988, Ansu's brother, Nana Twene Baafuor, Krontihene of Abesim, near Sunyani was tried and convicted of the murder of a woman. It was alleged that the murder was for ritual purpose. Orders made at the end of the trial included confiscations of certain properties which the petitioner, a brother, claimed were family properties.

This is not the proper forum for a determination of the issue whether the properties were self-acquired or family properties.

Victor Asare Korang, a Ghanaian resident in the United Kingdom, was arrested in Ghana and detained for several months in 1989/90 on suspicion of being involved in a plot to overthrow the government of the PNDC. On his release, he went back to the United Kingdom, but returned to Ghana in January 1993. He attended the funeral of a family member on 7th May. After the wake keeping he went home to change his clothes and return to join the other family members to accompany the body to Adukrom, their hometown. He failed to show up at the appointed time and has not been seen since.

Margaret Adu Poku In the 1970's petitioner's husband, Enoch, acquired a piece of land at Achimota, Accra. They built a house on it. In 1987 one Akua Antoaduro and her husband also acquired an adjacent plot and built their house on it. There is now a dispute between the two families as to ownership of land lying between their plots. This dispute has been in the courts since 1988 and is still pending. The court is the proper body to adjudicate on the rival claims.

CHAPTER ONE

THE SECURITY SERVICES

1.0 INTRODUCTION

1.0.1 A requirement for every modern state is security, both internal and external, to enable it to maintain public order and protect it from external aggression. This is even more important for the new states that emerged from colonialism in the second half of the twentieth century. As with all such states, Ghana also inherited or established its own security services to serve its interests and to promote a sense of nationhood.

1.0.2 In the course of their existence, Security Services have been responsible for the perpetration of human rights abuses and violations. These events have occurred mainly in the course of their involvement in national politics.

1.0.3 The Commission examined the role, if any, played by the Security Services in human rights violations and abuses, during the period between 6th March ,1957 and 6th, January, 1993. In this chapter, the term “Security Services“ has been used to describe the following institutions:

- Ghana Armed Forces;
- Ghana Police Service;
- Ghana Prisons Service;
- The Bureau of National Investigations (BNI);
- The Border Guards (BG);
- President’s Own Guard Regiment (POGR0;
- Presidential Detail Department (PDD);
- The Army and Police Commandos;
- The para-military organisation, People’s Militia or Civil Defence Organisation (CDO).

1.0.4 In the main, however, references to “Security Services” mean the first two institutions. Other agencies now recognised as part of the Security Services namely, Fire Service, Customs Excise and Preventive Service (CEPS) and Ghana Immigration Service (GIS) are not included in this chapter because there was no evidence before the Commission of their involvement in human rights violations or abuses within the mandate period.

1.0.4 The term “Military Government” has been used loosely, to mean every government that is headed by a soldier, regardless of his rank or position in the Armed Forces. However, it is appreciated that in military terms a “Military

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

Government” is one that has the Chief of Defence Staff (CDS) at the top, or at least, as a member of the ruling body.

1.1 HISTORICAL BACKGROUND OF THE SECURITY SERVICES1.1.1 THE GHANA ARMED FORCES¹*1.1.1.1 THE GHANA ARMY

1.1.1.1.1 The Ghana Army, as a standing army, is deemed to have its origins in the Gold Coast Constabulary (GCC), raised in 1874 with a nucleus of 350 men of the “Lagos (Glover’s) Hausas” after the Sagrenti War (1873-74). However, as far back as 1821, the then Governor of the Gold Coast, Sir Charles McCarthy had raised the Royal African Colonial Corps of Light Infantry (RACCLI) but this force was nearly annihilated in the Battle of Nsamankaw, during the Anglo-Asante War in 1824. The next attempt at raising a force was the formation of the Gold Coast Corps in 1852 but this force was disbanded in 1863 for its mutinous character. The Gold Coast Rifles, established in 1873 and officered by indigenes for the Sagrenti War was also disbanded in 1874 for no apparent reason. It however seems that the British preferred the “fighting qualities of the Hausa race” and hence gave birth to the GCC.

1.1.1.1.2 The GCC was re-organised in 1879 into an armed police with a strength of 975 men and was more thoroughly organised in 1886-87 after an Indian Infantry Regiment type Company with 16 British Officers, a European Sergeant Major, British NCOs and over 1,203 Africans recruited almost entirely from the Northern Territories comprising Mossi, Grunshie, Mamprusi and Frafra.

1.1.1.1.3 From 1st January, 1901, the GCC was redesignated as the Gold Coast Regiment (GCR) and amalgamated with others from the other West Coast Colonies to form the Royal West African Frontier Force (RWAFF) under the Command of Lord Frederick Lugard. The RWAFF was charged with maintaining internal security against warring tribes and defending colonial frontiers.

1.1.1.1.4 In 1923, the GCR was charged with the defence of the Gold Coast, the maintenance of order and any such duties as might from time to time be defined by the Governor. Thus the Governor could order the whole Regiment to be employed in the service of Her Majesty to defend the Dominion. This saw the GCR as part of the RWAFF in the Second World War.

1.1.1.1.5 At Independence, the GCR, which had now become the Ghana Regiment of Infantry, had to be equipped to meet the new socio-political context in which it found itself. There was the need to concentrate on the defence of the new nation and to meet the political aspirations of the Prime Minister, Dr. Kwame Nkrumah, in his liberation campaign across the continent. The Ghana Army was then composed of an Infantry Brigade under the Command of Brigadier D. H. Tadman. The Brigade consisted of 3 Infantry Battalions, a Recce Squadron (formerly Ghana Artillery), a Field Squadron (formerly Ghana Engineers), Ghana Signal Squadron, Ghana Army Supply and Transport Service, Ghana Army Educational Service, Ghana Army Ordinance Service, Ghana Army Medical Service, Ghana Army Electrical and Mechanical Engineers and the Ghana Army Pay Service.

¹ Festus Aboagye (Lt Col), The Ghana Army A Concise Contemporary Guide To Its Centennial Regimental History, 1897-1999, SEDCO Publishing Ltd., Accra, 1999, pp. 191-193.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.1.1.1.6 The need for further restructuring to meet the changing political trends in Sub-Saharan Africa compelled the government to reorganise the Army in 1959. Consequently, the Ghana Navy and Ghana Air Force were formed from the ranks of existing troops. The expanded Ghana Regiment of Infantry became the 'Ghana Armed Forces' (GAF), made up of Ghana Army, Ghana Navy and Ghana Air Force, and given statutory backing by The Ghana Armed Forces Act, 1962, (Act 105).

1.1.1.1.7 The reorganisation also saw the establishment of the Military Academy and Training Schools (MATS), and the division of the Army into two Infantry Brigade Groups. In October, 1969, the ancillary services and units were grouped under the newly formed Support Services Brigade Group.

1.1.1.1.8 Major General A G V Paley served as the first General Officer Commanding (GOC) from 1957 to 1959 but his appointment covered only the Army. When Major General Alexander was appointed in 1959, he was designated Chief of Defence Staff (CDS) in view of the formation of the Navy and Air Force. The two newer Services had their own Commanders, though the CDS, Major General Alexander, was also the Commander of the Army. It was only in 1961, when the strength of the British team was reduced, that the Army had its own Commander, Brigadier Joseph Arthur Ankrah, separate from the CDS, Major General Stephen. J A Otu.

1.1.1.1.9 The primary roles of the Ghana Army can be defined as follows:

- (i) defending the territorial integrity of Ghana against external aggression;
- (ii) assisting the Police Service in the maintenance of public order; and
- (iii) providing relief services in times of emergency.

1.1.1.1.10 Apart from its primary functions, the Ghana Armed Forces have the additional responsibility of supporting the United Nations UNO), the African Union (AU), and the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), in international and regional peacekeeping operations. These responsibilities have internationalised the outlook, requirements and expectations of the personnel of the GAF.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 11.1.1.2 THE GHANA NAVY²

1.1.1.2.1 The Ghana Navy, composed of the Naval Headquarters and two Commands namely, the Eastern Naval Command (ENC) and the Western Naval Command (WNC), was raised in June, 1959, under the Command of the British Royal Naval Officers on secondment. The Royal Navy altered the nature of this relationship on 1st May, 1962, when it formed the Royal Navy Element of the British Joint Services Training Team. The first Chief of Naval Staff was Commodore D A Foreman, a retired British Naval Officer, who was granted Presidential Commission as a Ghana Naval Officer in that rank. The Navy began with a fleet of two HAM Class Sweepers, GNS YOGAGA and GNS AFADZATO from the British Government that were re-commissioned on 31st October, 1959. Rear Admiral David A. Hansen was transferred from the Ghana Army as the first Ghanaian Chief of Naval Staff (CNS).

1.1.1.2.2 Naval operations generally covered anti-smuggling, fishery protection, environmental protection, search and rescue mission on a routine basis.

1.1.1.3 THE GHANA AIR FORCE³

1.1.1.3.1 The Ghana Air Force was formed in May, 1959, under the Command of Air Commodore K. Jaswant-Singh of the Indian Air Force. An Israeli Training/Technical Support Team manned the training aircraft. Pakistan also provided Technical Flying Support services.

1.1.1.3.2 In 1961, a Canadian training team arrived in Ghana to strengthen the Flying Training School (FTS).

1.1.1.3.3 In 1963, Air Commodore J E S De-Graft Hayford was appointed the first Ghanaian Chief of Air Staff (CAS).

1.1.1.3.4 The Air Force trained its first batch of Ghanaian pilots at Ternhill (UK) in 1961 in the use of Hindustan and Piston Provost Aircraft. So were the first Ghanaian Instructors. Other training was undertaken in the Soviet Union and Czechoslovakia.

1.1.1.3.5 The last expatriate staff left the Air Force in 1970.

1.1.1.4 History of Training Institutions, Training and Recruitment

The history of training institutions in the Ghana Armed Forces began with the West Africa Command Training School (WACTS). The WACTS was established in 1940 and by 1943, had three schools under it, namely, the West Africa Command Jungle Battle School in Nigeria, the West Africa Command Clerks Training School in the Gold Coast and the West Africa Command School of Education in Sierra Leone.

1.1.1.4.2 In 1953, the Regular Officers Special Training School (ROSTS) was established to provide six months potential officer training for cadets from The ² See Aboagye, supra, pp.345-346.

³ See Aboagye, op. cit supra, pp.349-350.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

Gambia, the Gold Coast, Nigeria, and Sierra Leone before their further training overseas.

1.1.1.4.3 In 1956, the WACTS was re-designated the Royal West African Frontier Force Training School (RWAFFTS). From 1960 onwards the Military Academy and Training Schools (MATS) was established to provide training in Ghana.⁴

1.1.1.4.4 The ROSTS was closed down on 31st March, 1960. The GMA was then formed at the Whistler Barracks from the ROSTS on 1st April, 1960. Initially one could enter the school with Ordinary Level Certificate passes. From 1971, the minimum entry requirement was an Advanced Level Certificate pass. In 1984, the structure of cadet training was changed significantly. The length of training for Regular Officers was increased from 18 months (72 weeks) to 22 months (88 weeks) consisting of 26 weeks of tri-service Standard Military Course and 62 weeks of the Regular Career Course.

1.1.1.4.5 The Armed Forces Recruit Training Centre (AFRTC) was first designated as such on 10th July, 1960, having evolved from the Regimental Depot that was established in 1926. In 1960, the recruit intake was increased from 350 to 800 and the course duration was reduced from 35 weeks to 26 weeks for General Duty personnel, and from 24 weeks to 17 weeks for Tradesmen. Further reductions in the duration of the training were made but were subsequently reversed in 1963. The recruit training of 26 weeks consisted of physical training, map reading, drill, weapon training, field craft, and minor tactics. The training did not cover studies in citizenship and political education.

1.1.1.4.6 The Junior Leaders Company (JLC), popularly known as Boys Company, was under the AFRTC. The JLC was to train boys of 14years –16 years in military and academic courses. They were a potential source of Instructors, Non-Commissioned Officers (NCOs) and Technicians. Some eventually made it to the commissioned Officer grade. In 1969, the JLC became autonomous when the AFRTC was moved from Kumasi to Tamale.

1.1.1.4.7 Another military institution of interest is the Jungle Warfare School, established in 1964 at Achiase. It was intended to provide military training in jungle setting for both officers and other Ranks. In accordance with the foreign policy of the government of the First Republic, the school was also used to train African Freedom Fighters (AFF). This role was abolished in the wake of the 1966 coup d'état.

1.1.1.4.8 The Ghana Armed Forces Command and Staff College (GAFSC) was established at Teshie in 1976, with a Senior Division at Otu Barracks and the Junior Division at the Whistler Barracks. The Senior Division has been designed to train

⁴ The Schools under the MATS were increased from five to ten in 1985. Currently these are Schools under the MATS: the Ghana Military Academy (GMA), Army Combat Training School (ACTS), Physical Training School (PTS), Clerks Training School (CTS), Catering Training School (CATS), School of Education, Jungle Warfare School (JWS), Engineering Training School (ETS), Signal Training School (STS), Armed Forces Mechanical Transport School (AFMTS), Armed Forces Fire Service Training School (AFFSTS), School of Ordnance and Army Drill Duties (ADDS).

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

officers for Senior Command and Staff appointments in GAF and other African Armed Forces.

1.1.1.4.9 British colonial policy attached a great deal of importance to training; hence the large number of training schools that were established, in the Gold Coast. Provision was also made for officers and other ranks to be trained abroad.

POST- INDEPENDENCE

1.2 ISSUES OF RECRUITMENT AND TRAINING

1.2.1 Recruitment

1.2.1.1 Recruitment was done centrally during the mandate period. In the colonial era, when this began, there was a consistent policy of informing communities of opportunities for recruitment of other ranks into the Armed Forces. However, over time, this policy was not always adhered to, with the result that only persons connected with military personnel heard of such opportunities. This in turn bred nepotism in recruitment as the phenomenon of “barracks boy” developed. The central recruitment at one location also presented difficulties for persons who either could not receive the information on the recruitment by reason of geographical disadvantage, or make the journey by reason of poverty. These developments created ethnic imbalance as some groups were over-represented and others under-represented. This distortion in the ethnic make-up of the lower ranks of the Armed Forces presented challenges of national inclusion and national stability.

1.2.1.2 The selection of candidates for commissioning into the Officer Corps was also governed by regulations inherited from the British Army. Candidates were obtained by visits to secondary schools by commissioned officers, and putting out advertisements in the press. The process involved the writing of entry examinations, after which successful candidates were vetted and then made to face a selection board, for further assessment for officer-quality. Successful candidates then had to go through Medical Examinations, before proceeding to training.

1.2.1.3 These rigorous steps involved in recruitment to ensure quality material for officer training, were not adhered to during some periods of the mandate period. Persons who ought not to have been considered because of their well-known character in their communities and previous educational institutions still got cleared to proceed to the next stage of the process. There were complaints that selection boards were not always fair, with the result that many people felt disadvantaged by reason of their ethnic or other backgrounds. This also meant that those who were well-connected, managed to overcome institutional hurdles.

1.2.1.4 A parallel system of accepting unofficial recommendations, developed with the “Africanisation” policy of the First Republic. Having originated for improper reasons, the system became open to cronyism, nepotism, etc with the resultant degeneration in standards and morale of the officer-corps, and distortion of loyalties within the junior ranks.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.2.1.5 Governments seemed to have left matters pertaining to recruitment policies in the hands of the professionals within the services, as there was no conscious national policy to develop a national Armed Forces based on inclusiveness.

1.2.2 Training

1.2.2.1 During training, there was emphasis on normal military training, but nothing on political education, civic education, nor any exposure to International Conventions such as the Geneva Convention, and other United Nations Conventions on Humanitarian Law as well as the Law of War in general. The result of this lop-sided training was that soldiers did not have sufficient exposure to the kind of education that made them conscious of the human rights issues involved in their work.

1.2.2.2 There appeared to be a culture of bullying and abuse of the vulnerable, in Military Training Institutions. This culture of abuse developed attitudes that were transferred to the civilian population when the military became involved in civil life as a result of the coups d' état that took place in the country. The abuses that were perpetrated all over the country and within the entire mandate period, were so similar in kind and from that the inference is irresistible that they must have been developed at a common location, such as in a training institution, and imparted to all who passed through that institution.

1.2.2.3 During officer-training, character assessment was expected to continue so as to eliminate unsuitable persons from receiving a commission. However, this appears not to have been done on a consistent basis, leading to the commissioning of persons who had a low appreciation of what it took to be an officer in the GAF.

1.3. ISSUES OF DISCIPLINE AND SERVICE CONDITIONS1.3.1 Discipline

1.3.1.1 The back-bone of every Army is discipline. Therefore the Ghana Armed Forces was established with a well-defined body of rules to govern the conduct of its personnel. In order to maintain a high standard of discipline in time of war and peace, it was given a structure as well as procedures for handling disciplinary cases. It also developed a well-defined system of grievance procedures. The provisions were expected to bind all officers and other ranks, as well as civilian personnel. Appropriate punishments that could be imposed by the disciplinary board, were laid out in the regulations. The regulations were also clear on who was the appropriate disciplinary authority.

1.3.1.2 Military take-overs of political power, being in themselves, acts contrary to service discipline, created an atmosphere of lack of respect for service rules and regulations. The involvement of military personnel in civilian administration during periods of military rule, affected morale and bred indiscipline within the ranks. The collapse of the Command Structure in 1979, and its spill-over effect in 1981, also had import for the integrity of the institution. Even recruitment procedures were overlooked, with severe consequences for the maintenance of discipline.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.3.1.3 Good Officer-man relationship can also be cited as a factor in maintaining discipline. The lack of respect for subordinates as human beings, rather than just fighting machines, became evident at particular points in time when the Officer-Corps was engaged in politics outside the barracks, and undermined the esprit de corps within GAF.

1.3.2 Promotions

1.3.2.1 The Armed Forces Regulations made pursuant to the Armed Forces Act, 1962 (Act 105) as amended, laid out elaborate procedures to be followed in the promotion of officers and Other Ranks of each arm of the Armed Forces. However, with Africanisation policy and the advent of coups d'état, the undue acceleration in promotion for some officers and coup plotters created an ambition in young officers for rapid promotions.⁵ This in turn bred some of the coup plots that took place during the mandate period.

1.3.3 Discharge And Release

1.3.3.1 The regulations also spelt out the rules governing discharges and releases from the Armed Forces. However, in some instances, these procedures were not followed.

1.3.4 Death And Injury In The Course Of Duty

1.3.4.1 The GAF have adequate provisions for death and injury that occurred on duty. However, the amounts payable have not been revalued for a long time thereby causing the sums payable to seem absurd. In addition, certain persons who were killed fighting to defend the Constitution were not treated as "loyal troops" deserving of the benefits, and these produced some of the complaints received by the Commission.

1.3.5 Resettlement And Rehabilitation

1.3.5.1 The nature of service in the Armed Forces requires strong and agile young people to fill the ranks. Consequently, the institution has to shed its personnel when they are no more able to fulfil the rigorous demands of life within the service. Infantry battalions constitute the major part of Ghana Armed Forces and embody the largest number of servicemen and women whose skills are mostly associated with weapons. The discharged or released personnel, therefore, tend to be in the prime of life and are consequently not marketable in civilian life. Such personnel have had to find jobs as security men, with the attendant loss in prestige and self-esteem. They have not been able to maintain their standard of living and have rapidly degenerated, ⁵ Simon Baynham, The Military and Politics in Nkrumah's Ghana Westview Press, Boulder & London, 1988, pp 245-247.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

sometimes lapsing into alcoholism. These persons have also been available for hiring as land-guards and have been active in the ethnic conflicts that have erupted in some parts of the country.

1.3.5.2 This situation poses a serious risk to the nation as reintegration becomes a problem for these servicemen and women. It thus becomes imperative that they be provided with skills, through resettlement programmes to make them employable in civilian life, following their release from active service.

1.4.0 GHANA POLICE SERVICE

1.4.1 Brief History

1.4.1.1 The Police Service of the Gold Coast was born in 1831 when Captain George MacLean, Governor of the Gold Coast, formed a body of 129 men to patrol the trade routes that linked Ashanti and the coastal states and also to protect the colonial merchants and officials in and around Castle.

1.4.1.2 In 1871, a training programme which was combat-oriented and based mainly on the use of firearms, conventional warfare and unarmed combat, was developed in response to the nature of their responsibilities on the trade-routes.

1.4.1.3 The police became a part of the colonial machinery used to suppress civil disorder, often resorting to the use of brute force. This earned them the local name “buga-buga” (literally, “beat, beat” in Hausa) and therefore they were never looked upon by the public as peace officers trained to protect them.

1.4.1.4 In 1873 an Ordinance⁶ was passed to formalise the operations of the force and to provide for “better” discipline and regulation of the police.

1.4.1.5 It is worthy of mention that the Commissioned Officers of the Police Force then were British, and the junior ranks were indigenes of the Gold Coast and other colonies in West Africa. The majority of the junior ranks were recruited from various parts of the Northern Territories, and from Northern Nigeria.

1.4.1.6 One of the most significant events involving the colonial Police was the confrontation with the demobilised servicemen. on 28th February 1948. Three ex-servicemen were shot and killed when the police under the command of Superintendent Imray opened fire on a peaceful march of ex-servicemen to present their petition to the Governor at the Christianborg Crossroads. In the aftermath of the shooting, the Gold Coast witnessed a spate of riots.

1.4.1.7 As the force grew and expanded, new units were formed. These included the Railways Unit, the Marine Police and the Criminal Investigation Department. In 1949 the Wireless Division was established due to the increasingly sensitive nature of materials being transmitted through the Post and Telecommunication (P & T) system especially after the 1948 disturbances. In 1952, a specialised squad of twelve policewomen was formed to deal with cases of juvenile delinquency and offences committed by women.

⁶ Police Force Ordinance, 1873.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

A new unit known as the Police Reserve Unit was formed after the 1948 disturbances.

1.4.1.8 In 1951, a Colonel A E Young of the British Police was commissioned by the Colonial Administration to research into the Police Force and make recommendations for reorganising the Force and preparing it for Independence. His recommendations were duly submitted, but never fully implemented.

1.4.1.9 In direct response to subversion elements that posed a threat to the stability of the nation, another specialised unit, the Armoured Car Squadron (ACS) was formed in 1959 and equipped with Ferret Armoured Scout cars.

1.4.1.10 In 1959, the Police College was established to train Officer Cadets locally; hitherto officers were trained in the United Kingdom. The Prime Minister addressed the first graduation Parade on 4th September, 1959. At that ceremony, he charged them to give a new face to the Police Force thus:

There are colonial police forces which exist to enforce authority of a foreign power on a colonial people. In such forces this will be demonstrated by the fact that the Police will be peremptory and even brutal in their dealings with the inhabitants of the colony while they will be ingratiating and subservient to those in authority. In a free and independent country, the conduct of the Police must be the exact reverse of this. They must demonstrate to the people at large that the country is free and independent by behaving towards the ordinary man in the street with exactly the same politeness as they would behave towards those in superior positions.⁷

The first Ghanaian head of the Police Service, (then known as Commissioner of Police) was Erasmus RT Madjitey.

1.4.1.11 In 1965, the Police Service Act, 1965, (Act 284) was passed to regulate the institution. The Service Act was re-enacted as the Police Service Act, 1970 (Act 350). The statutory functions of the Police Service under the Police Service Act, 1970 (Act 350), are as follows:

1. prevention and detection of crime;
2. maintenance of law and order;
3. apprehension and prosecution of offenders;
4. protection life and property; and
5. enforcement of all laws and regulations with which it is directly charged.

It is against the backdrop of the performance of these statutory functions, that various of human rights violations and abuses were committed by or against police personnel.

⁷ Kwame Nkrumah, I SPEAK OF FREEDOM Panaf Books Ltd., London, 1971, p 181.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1STRUCTURE, TRAINING, PROMOTION AND DISCHARGE*1.4.2 Structure

1.4.2.1 The structure of the service as spelt out in Act 350 is in the form of a pyramid with the Inspector-General of Police (IGP) at the top at the headquarters. At the base is the police post. The service is organised on a national basis with a unified command under the IGP who is responsible for the day-to-day supervision over the operations and administration of the Police Service, subject to the control of the Police Council.

1.4.2.2 The Police Service (Amendment) Regulations, 1974 (LI 880) provides for the posts and ranks in the service. They are divided into two main parts: the Superior Officers and the Subordinate Police Officers. The ranks from Assistant Superintendent to the Inspector-General of Police constitute the Superior Officers, while the ranks from Police Recruit to Chief Inspector constitute the subordinate ranks.

1.4.2.3 Structurally, the Police Service is also divided into:

- Uniform Branch
- Criminal Investigations Department (CID)

1.4.2.4 The CID is responsible for the conduct of all criminal investigations and the institution of criminal proceedings throughout the country.

1.4.3 Recruitment

1.4.3.1 A person was eligible to be recruited into the service, during the mandate period, if he or she was between 18 years and 25 years of age and not less than 5 feet 8 inches, and not less than 5 feet 4 inches in height for males and females respectively. The minimum academic qualification for the General Police was Middle School Leaving Certificate in the 1960s, and later raised to a minimum of five passes in the GCE 'O' Level Examination. There was also an Escort Class, made up largely of illiterate ex-servicemen.

1.4.3.2 The recruits are expected to be honest, and free of any criminal conviction. Although there was nominal vetting of the candidates at the recruitment stage, this was inadequate given the level of integrity required in the performance of the statutory functions of the police. Positive vetting is now employed to secure better information on the candidates.

1.4.3.3 Recruitment used to be carried out in Accra and Kumasi only, but this has now been extended to all regional capitals in Ghana.

1.4.4 Training

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.4.4.1 As earlier stated, prior to 1959, superior police officers were trained in the United Kingdom, but subordinate police officers were locally-trained. Subsequently, the Ghanaian officers who took over from the British officers, did little to review and update the structure of the training schools and programmes left by the British. They made no conscious effort to implement the recommendations of Col Young, nor did they fashion out any programme to suit the tenets of policing in a democracy. Consequently, the training content did not take into account the culture of the newly-independent Ghana. Indeed, the Police Standing Orders were developed during the colonial administration and the last known edition,(ie the 5th edition) was published in 1979.

1.4.4.2 The National Police Academy and Training Schools (NAPATS) have served as the main training institution for policemen in Ghana. The other institution is the Police College where officer-cadets are trained to be commissioned officers. Entry into the college is through competitive examinations involving chief Inspectors and Inspectors who have spent a minimum of four years in the inspectorate position. There are no facilities for local training into senior Command and Staff positions within the Police Service, and although some officers are trained at the GAFSC, this presents difficulties for institutional identity and a confusion of purpose and function.

1.4.4.3 The basic police recruit training curriculum, rules and regulations and procedures inherited from the British remained without any significant change in form or content when Ghanaian officers took over. There were few changes in the curriculum without any emphasis on human rights training. Police officers are first and foremost citizens who must equally enjoy rights/freedoms such as human dignity, freedom of speech, right to life, non-discrimination, etc with other citizens. But the training and orientation of police officers have not seriously taken into account the rights/freedoms of individual officers. At the training schools, male recruits have their heads shaven completely and wear dresses that expose them to environmental hazards. They are trained to obey instructions from their seniors even though the oath of office taken by the recruit on enlistment binds him or her to faithfully obey lawful commands only. Classrooms, hostels and barracks were constructed in such manner that there is little room for enough space and ventilation. These places are always crammed, especially the hostels, to such an extent that some recruits sleep outside during the night to enjoy fresh air. Under these circumstances, recruits were exposed to health hazards like malaria and other diseases.

1.4.4.4 The dehumanising conditions under which recruits are trained, with little regard for their rights/liberties often ended in developing in them a mindset which is anti-human rights. Thus, as they enter the field as fresh constables with enormous police powers and authority, they have little regard for citizen's rights and liberties. Bullying in training institutions that nurtures a culture of intimidation, unconsciously inculcates in recruits a culture of abuse of power that is carried along after graduation into active service.

1.4.4.5 The infrastructure including accommodation, facilities and general conditions at training schools, which were developed in the 1930s, have deteriorated considerably, and have not seen significant improvement.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1CONDITIONS OF SERVICE*1.4.5 Promotions

1.4.5.1 LI 880 of 1974, provided in regulation 7 for a Police Appointments and Promotions Advisory Board consisting of the Inspector-General, as the chairman, two commissioners of Police, three deputy commissioners of Police and one assistant commissioner. The Board has the function of advising on appointments and promotions of police officers from the ranks above police recruits up to and including the rank of assistant commissioner. The inclusion of the IGP on the Advisory Board creates a problem of over-concentration of power in one person's hands, as well as the incongruity of the IGP giving advice to himself on matters of promotion of junior ranks. The problem of the ninety Constables who were dismissed in 1987 for their refusal to write newly-re-instituted promotion examinations, may have been caused by difficulties inherent in the system of administering promotions within the service.

1.4.5.2 There are three main methods of promotion in the service namely: promotion by examination, promotion by seniority and special administrative promotion. Promotion under Act 350 shall be made according to merit and merit under the law is defined as "the quality of deserving praise, reward, etc." To qualify for promotion in respect of the first two methods, the candidate must be recommended by his region/ unit commander based upon proven integrity and good conduct, efficiency and hard work, and satisfying the required number of years in the present rank. In the case of the special administrative promotion, the candidates must be honest, loyal, skilful and efficient above average. They must also possess remarkable investigative and detective ability. Specific requirements are also given under the law for promotion into the various ranks. These rules were not always followed, with some consequences for depression of morale.

1.4.6 Discharge

1.4.6.1 A member of the police service is required to leave the service upon the attainment of the compulsory retiring age where the person holds a pensionable post. A person who is also in the Service on a limited engagement can also leave on the expiry of the period specified. However, contrary to these regulations, some police personnel were forcibly retired by the government, in complete disregard of the service regulations and without just cause. Such forcible retirements by the political authority undermined the ability of the police to be fair and impartial in the discharge of their official functions.

1.4.6.2 A person can also leave the service when he or she is transferred to serve in another public institution with his or her consent. Another instance of a discharge from the service is when one's post is abolished.

1.4.7 Death And Injury In The Course Of Duty

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.4.7.1 Police personnel are covered by the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Law, 1987 (PNDC L 187). However, it would appear that the nature of police duties and policing have changed since the service was established. Police Service now supply guns instead of mere batons, as crime-trends have undergone dramatic change on account of the proliferation of small arms. The service now owns armoured vehicles as well as other equipment that used to be the preserve of the Armed Forces, and also participates in international peace-keeping duties. These changes in operational trends have increased the risk of injury and death to personnel in the course of duty. Consequently, policies designed to ensure maximum commitment on the job should be aligned with those of the Armed Forces. The benefits to police personnel under the Workmen's Compensation Law must be reviewed to ensure that they reflect these changed trends in policing.

1.5 THE SPECIAL BRANCH AND THE RESERVE UNIT

1.5.1 The events of February, 1948, brought two issues to the fore: the lack of an effective intelligence system which could have anticipated the events, and the lack of a good rapid reaction capability in the Police Force. These institutional shortcomings, resulted in the taking of remedial action by the formation of two units: the Special Branch and the Reserve Unit.

1.5.2 The Special Branch was formed with the primary purpose of intelligence gathering and to effectively counter any moves to destabilise the colonial administration. The Reserve Unit was used to quell street protests and other demonstrations. However, in the early years of post-Independence Ghana, the Special Branch became a tool for fishing out persons who were perceived to be threats to the personal security of President Nkrumah. The Special Branch, together with the Presidential Detail Department (PDD) and the President's Own Guard Regiment (POGR), became the agencies responsible for the protection of the President.

1.5.3 The Special Branch existed as a part of the Police Service although it had quite a number of civilian employees. During the era of the Provisional National Defence Council (PNDC) it was re-named the Bureau of National Investigations (BNI).

1.5.4 Though initially set up to gather intelligence, the functions and roles of the Special Branch/BNI have been determined along the way by the various regimes, and they have used them for various security functions.

1.6 THE PRISONS SERVICE1.6.1 Brief History

1.6.1.1 The Prisons System started in about 1822 under Governor George Maclean. After the formation of the Gold Coast Constabulary in 1874, the need for a formalised system of prisons was felt and therefore it was carved out of the Gold Coast Constabulary as a separate department, though still attached to the police. The main infrastructure for incarceration were the forts and castles. As the prisons expanded the department was separated from the police in 1920. Later after Independence, the Ghana Prisons Department was renamed Ghana Prisons Service⁸ and handed over to its first Ghanaian head (then known as Director), CB Moses.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.6.1.2 As a result of the history of political detentions, the service has acquired an unsavoury image and reputation in matters of human rights.⁹

1.6.1.3 The Prisons Service Decree, 1972 (NRCD 46) states the functions and duties of the service to include the following:

1. (1) It shall be the duty of the Prisons Service to ensure the safe custody and welfare of prisoners and whenever practicable to undertake the reformation and rehabilitation of prisoners. (2) Every prison officer shall perform such functions as are by law conferred upon a prison officer and shall obey all lawful orders and directions in respect of the execution of his office which he may receive from his superiors in the Prisons Service.
2. In performance of its duty the prisons Service shall ensure that-
 - (a) no person shall be subjected to-
 - (i) torture or inhuman or degrading punishment; or
 - (ii) any other condition that detracts or is likely to detract from his dignity and worth as a human being;
 - (b) a person who has not been convicted of a criminal offence if kept or confined in a prison, shall not be treated as a convicted person, and shall be kept away from convicted persons.¹⁰

1.6.1.4 The disciplinary procedures provided for under NRCD 46 and the Standing Orders of the Service, provided rules that governed the conduct of prison officers. These stipulated various prohibited acts which would impugn the image of the service, lead to the neglect of the officer's duties, or which would infringe the basic rights of prisoners.

1.6.1.5 These statutory regulations in respect of the performance of the duties were consistently and persistently violated, particularly, in respect of political detainees throughout the mandate period.

STRUCTURE, TRAINING, PROMOTION AND DISCHARGE

1.6.2. Structure

1.6.2.1 At its birth, the personnel of the Prisons Department was made up officers who were British, and subordinate ranks who were indigenes and mostly illiterates, or

⁸ Prisons Service Act, 1963 (Act 221).

⁹ See Report of the Commission Appointed To Enquire Into The Conditions Prevailing In The Ghana Prisons Services by the NLC; and accounts of other political detainees within the mandate period.

¹⁰ Sections 1 and 2, NRCD 46.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

at best holders of Middle School Leaving Certificate (MSLC). They were known as “Warders” or “Gaolers”

1.6.2.2 With the enactment of the NRCD 46, a well-defined structure was prescribed. The service was made up of the Director of Prisons, two or more Deputy Directors of Prisons and Prison Officers holding posts or ranks created under the Decree. The director was the Head of the Prisons and he could delegate his responsibilities to any other members of the service, as he deemed fit.

1.6.2.3 During the 1980s the Directors of Prisons were drawn from the military, rather than using persons who had been trained as prison officers. This affected morale as it reinforced notions of institutional inferiority and impeded career progression within the Prisons Service. In addition, the Military Officers, coming from a tradition with different perspectives on human rights, could not be expected to appreciate the difference between an ordinary prisoner and a prisoner-of-war and their concomitant rights.

1.6.3 Recruitment

1.6.3.1 The recruitment age for new ranks is between 18 years and 35 years and the candidates must possess a minimum qualification of four passes at the General Certificate of Education, Ordinary Level (GCE ‘O’ Level) or in Senior Secondary Certificate of Examination (SSCE). The subjects passed must include English Language for General Duty officers. For tradesmen, a MSLC or Basic Education Certificate Examination (BECE) and National Vocational Training Institute (NVTI) 1 and 2 qualifications are required.

1.6.3.2 A person who wishes to be appointed to the prisons service has to submit a formal application to the director, attend a recruitment selection interview, and be vetted. The vetting includes the checking of previous criminal record and for this purpose, finger prints are taken and verified by the Criminal Investigations Department of the Police Service.

1.6.3.3 Candidates for appointment into the senior ranks are obtained by advertisement in the press. Applicants are then subjected to the same checks on health, character and previous criminal record.

1.6.3.4 It would appear that, as in all the Security Services, the same ills of nepotism and cronyism have influenced recruitment, particularly in the lower ranks. This has had implications for discipline in the Service.

1.6.4 Training

1.6.4.1 The training of Prison Officers seems to emphasise secure custody of prisoners, to the neglect of appropriate mechanisms for reform and rehabilitation. In view of changed penal philosophies in modern times, the institutional philosophy of the Prisons Service must be reviewed.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.6.4.2 Modern prison officers need exposure to professional counselling so that they can have a positive influence on their charges as they are in daily contact with them. Consequently, the counselling component of the training should be seen as an integral part of the basic skills of the prison officers.

1.6.4.3 There are no facilities for training officers for the senior ranks. Therefore the same facilities are used for both Superior Officers and subordinate officers. On occasion, arrangements are made to train superior officers at the MATS. This training has serious implications for the person's appreciation of the institutional identity of the service, and the relevant human rights perspectives.

1.6.4.4 There is no evidence of a sustained policy on in-service Human Resource Development, given the calibre of personnel available for recruitment. Continuing Education has not been a feature of the service both on account of its history and the state of its facilities.

1.6.5 Promotions

1.6.5.1 Promotions in the service depend on good conduct and efficiency and in this regard, one's experience based on the length of service is a contributory factor. Long service alone is not the only determining factor for promotion. Promotion of an officer is also due to his strict and careful attention to duty. A member of the service cannot be promoted on his own application.

1.6.6 Discharge

1.6.6.1 Upon the attainment of the compulsory retiring age, a member of the service on a pensionable engagement is required to retire. A person is however free to resign from the service at any time. Retirement on health grounds is to be recommended by a medical officer.

1.6.6.2 Upon retirement or resignation an officer may be issued with a certificate of service, provided that he has done not less than two years in the service.

1.6.7 Death And Injury in the Course of Duty

1.6.7.1 Personnel of the Prisons Service are covered by the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Law, 1987 (PNDC L 187). However, it would appear that in line with the changing nature of crime and criminals in Ghana, the performance of duties in prisons now entails more risk than used to be the case. The killing of a prison officer and injuring of another on duty at Nsawam Medium Security Prisons on 19th June, 1983, as well as the riot in the same prison in January, 1991, would seem to suggest that the nature of the duties has undergone some change. Although these particular events may have been attributable to the presence of a large number of ex-soldiers then in political detention, it is still true that the proliferation of small arms and the increase in armed robbery, and consequently armed robbery remandees and convicts, have implications for the safety of personnel. The benefits payable to prison officers under the Workmen's Compensation Law must be reviewed to ensure that they reflect these changed trends in the criminal population.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.7 THE BORDER GUARDS SERVICE¹¹1.7.1. Brief History

1.7.1.1 It originated as the Preventive Service of the Customs and Excise Department in about 1949. The Preventive Service was disbanded in 1962 and its functions were transferred to the Police Administration because of institutional corruption. In 1964, it was detached from the Police Force, and placed under the direct control of the President as Department V of the National Security apparatus. One of the primary functions of the new Service was to maintain border security as well as facilitate the movement and operations of "freedom fighters".¹² After the 1966 coup, the NLC disbanded Department V and merged with the Police Force.

1.7.1.2 After the 1972 coup d'état, the Border Guards Service was established as the Fourth Service of the Ghana Armed Forces and Col. John A Kabore was appointed its first Commander. It was formed by personnel from the Police Service and Ghana Army. This Service was disbanded in 1984, on account of institutional problems, and its functions transferred to the newly re-organised Customs Excise and Preventive Service (CEPS).

1.7.1.3 When the Border Guards Service was established, its main functions were: to control and protect the borders of Ghana by checking smuggling; the suppression of currency trafficking; and the checking and arresting of undesirable persons trying to enter or leave the country.

1.7.2 PROBLEMS OF THE SERVICE

1.7.2.1 The Border Guards (BGs) were not provided with adequate accommodation and they and their families lived under most unsuitable conditions in the border towns and villages.

1.7.2.2 There were no employment opportunities at the border areas for the spouses and other relations of BGs, thus leaving them no option than joining in trade activities that involved seeking supplies from smugglers. Some BGs and their relations engaged in smuggling themselves, because in the period of 1978-84, there was a scarcity of essential goods, and consequently a thriving market for goods from the neighbouring countries developed. The state of the national economy and the hardships under which they lived and worked, compromised the ability of the BGs to check smuggling and currency trafficking and put them under constant suspicion of collusion with smugglers and even "dissidents". These problems thus opened them up to corruption and therefore made them a target of any official clamp-down on illegal activities at the borders.

¹¹ See, Aboagye, supra, pp.221-223.

¹² Ibid., p 222.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.7.2.3 The BGs, in the execution of their duties, used brutal methods against persons they suspected to be smugglers, even when the goods they were carrying were in such quantities as to be only for personal use. On occasion, they even confiscated goods that were covered by proper documentation, causing a lot of pain and hardship to families who depended upon the cross-border trade for their livelihood.

1.8. PRESIDENTIAL DETAIL DEPARTMENT (PDD)

1.8.1 The Presidential Detail Department (PDD) was formed by President Kwame Nkrumah to provide security for his own person, as well as the security of his household.

1.8.2 Initially, the PDD had two main components namely: bodyguards' section and counter-intelligence section. These bodyguards were largely made up of hand-picked personnel, mostly from the President's own ethnic group, Nzima, recruited mainly by the Head of the Unit, Ambrose Yankey, (Snr). This fact was to have serious consequences for the people of the area after his overthrow since many were killed or detained and then banned from holding public offices for ten years.

1.8.3 The bodyguards were given basic military training, physical fitness and hand-to-hand combat by mostly foreign specialists. They were comfortably housed; some within the premises of the Flagstaff House, the majority in residential flats directly opposite the Flagstaff House, and others in Kanda Estates in Accra, for easy mobilisation in times of crisis. These personal bodyguards of Kwame Nkrumah accompanied him on trips, mingled with crowds and frisked suspicious-looking individuals for weapons.

1.8.4 The counter-intelligence sub-unit consisted of Soviet-trained men whose responsibility was to check on the loyalty of all PDD members and to prevent the organisation from being penetrated by elements that were hostile to President Nkrumah.

1.8.5 Members of the PDD were also responsible for spying and reporting on the citizenry, and this resulted in many detentions:-

1.8.6 The PDD was totally loyal and answerable only to the President. They were also very well remunerated and enjoyed numerous privileges that the regular Army did not have. This development was to sow the seeds of hatred and resentment in the regular Army against the PDD.

1.9 THE PRESIDENT'S OWN GUARD REGIMENT (POGR)

1.9.1 In 1960, President Nkrumah caused the formation of a Guard Company made up of troops soldiers who had become unfit for operational duty. This was to be a ceremonial guard, performing guard duties at the Flagstaff House, and for visiting dignitaries. Three months after its formation, the Guard Company, as it was known, was re-named the Presidential Guard Regiment, and trained by foreign military experts. It was under the command of Lt Col David Gbon Zanlerigu.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.9.2 Following the attempts on his life, President Nkrumah became convinced that he needed an even more powerful alternative security force. He therefore ordered the expansion, reinforcement and redesignation of the Presidential Guard Regiment as the President's Own Guard Regiment (POGR). Thus in 1963, the POGR came under the PDD. In 1965, the Regiment was officially severed from Command of the regular Armed Forces, thus making it a private army of the President. Lt Col Zanlerigu remained in command of the POGR. By 1966, the POGR could boast of 50 officers and 1,150 men, constituting two battalions. There were reports of further expansion of the POGR to between three and five battalions.

1.9.3 Consequently, the command structure and established norms of hierarchy of the regular Armed Forces were distorted. Lt Col Zanlerigu took orders directly from the Commander-in-Chief, President Nkrumah, and not from the Chief of Defence Staff (CDS).

1.9.4 The POGR was better equipped, better trained, better clothed and remunerated and consequently more motivated than the regular Armed Forces.¹³ This caused a lot of disaffection and deep hatred among the regular forces for the POGR. The fury and violence which was unleashed by the regular Army on the PDD, including the POGR, bore testimony to the resentment caused by years of neglect, deprivation and humiliation. The unit was re-integrated into the Army soon after the coup.

1.9.5 With such a force at his disposal, and the help of the traditional security institutions in some cases, Nkrumah was able to suppress his political opponents, and any person whom he perceived to be a threat. Even members of his own government and the party, who were perceived to be opposing him became victims of torture and abuse at the hands of his security network.

1.9.6 It is worth mentioning that the Security Services found their traditional role being usurped by the creation of these other security institutions. Consequently, officers and men of the traditional security services became peeved and dissatisfied hence, putting the security of the State at further risk. With suspicion, bitterness, rancour, the general economic decline and the dictatorial and authoritarian rule of the CPP Government, it came as little surprise when the first coup d'état was staged by the joint action of the Military and the Police on 24th February, 1966.

THE INVOLVEMENT OF THE SECURITY SERVICES IN POLITICS

1.10 Consequential Issues for all Security

¹³ A A Afrifa (Col) The Ghana Coup 24th February 1966 FRANK CASS Co Ltd, London, 1966, p.100.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.10.1 The Security Services perverted their primary roles and functions as set down in the 1960, 1969 and 1979 Republican Constitution as well as their governing Rules and Regulations, by becoming involved in the politics of this country. This involvement contravened the code of ethics and the very essence of the institutions, and has had the result of disorganising the structures and culture of these services, as well as undermining their image and functioning capabilities. In addition to these problems, the exercise of unbridled power enabled them to exploit the citizenry and to perpetrate acts that constituted gross human rights violations and abuses against the populace in general, and even against some of their own service personnel in particular in pursuance of their personal ambitions and political goals.

1.10.2 The governing councils of the institutions are made up of such officials as to make them a part of the government. The number of political office-holders represented on those councils ensured that whenever there was a disruption in governance, the councils ceased to exist and the institutions suffered from the discontinuation of leadership.

1.10.3 The practice of dismissing Heads of Security Services upon assumption of power also militated against the interests of the institutions. With the exception of JWK Harlley who was an active participant in the plot to overthrow the First Republic, Raphael Kugblenu stands as the only IGP who survived an abrupt change of government and remained in office. The fact that every administration appointed its own IGP, undermined the capacity of IGPs to withstand political interference in the administration of the service as they were beholden to the government.

1.10.4 There is abundant evidence to show that the forcible and unauthorised interruptions by the security services in government have adversely affected the development of the nation. Citizens were traumatised by the total disregard for their human rights when they were brutalised by members of the security services. By the end of the rule of the military governments, they stood accused of perpetrating the same kinds of malfeasance in governance, as the governments they had overthrown.

1.10.5 THE GHANA ARMED FORCES (GAF)

1.10.5.1 The GAF, in association with the police, staged their first direct appearance on the political scene, by removing the elected civilian government on 24th February, 1966. There have been four other successful interruptions in the nation's history and these have been discussed in greater detail later in this report. Some of these incursions into politics by the Security Services, under the cloak of liberating the country from bad and corrupt governments, have stemmed from personal desires, other than the noble declarations by them at the time of seizure of power. The breakdown of Command and Discipline in the Services, occasioned by structural weaknesses in the services themselves and the involvement of military personnel in "civilian" affairs, enhanced the opportunities for adventurers.

1.10.5.2 The inability of the top brass of the GAF to act decisively on intelligence received from appropriate quarters, especially concerning the events of 31st

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

December, 1981, is ample testimony of the contribution of poor leadership, indecisive command and professional incompetence, in undermining constitutional governments.

1.10.5.3 Whenever the adventurers struck the first blow, they were aided by commanders who showed disloyalty, indecision, incompetence, cowardice and compromise on those occasions.

1.10.5.4 The impact of the take-over on the institutional integrity of the GAF itself has been even more traumatic. As some military personnel were catapulted into positions of authority over the heads of their superiors in the institution, the Command Structure broke down. This contributed to undermine institutional integrity as the disciplinary ethics of the service were shattered. For example, in the wake of the 4th June mutiny, Senior Officers in Command positions were replaced with Junior officers, who lacked experience and command-expertise. In addition, Junior officers and other Ranks were placed in adjudicating positions, and in this capacity, presided over trials of their superior officers for supposed infractions of military and civilian rules. In other cases, though senior officers remained in Command, they were under the dictatorship of the other ranks, who threatened them with physical harm should their performance fall short of their demands. These developments were certainly contrary to Military Ethics and Discipline.

1.10.5.5 Military governments have also used the security institutions to further their various notions of what constitutes “state security.” These Governments politicised recruitment, career-development, promotions and retirements, of personnel in GAF.

1.10.5.6 Ethnocentrism And Nepotism In GAF

1.10.5.6.1 The policies of Military Governments also heightened issues of ethnocentrism in the GAF. For instance, morale and discipline in the Armed Forces was seriously affected by the arousal of inter-ethnic sensitivities when after the 1966 coup, several young men were conveyed by truckloads from a particular region, to the Armed Forces Recruit Training Centre in Kumasi and enlisted en masse.¹⁴ This was contrary to the laid down rules, regulations and procedures covering recruitments. Furthermore, this special intake of recruits was given only four (4) weeks of training instead of the mandatory twenty-six (26) weeks of training. Between 1982-84, following some coup attempts led by persons from Northern Ghana, soldiers from the North became the targets of harassment and even detention, by reason of the feeling that on account of their origins, their loyalty to the PNDC Regime had become suspect.

1.10.5.6.2 It is a fact that at some point in the history of the GAF, there was no regional balance within the institution. This has created some command and control problems as ethnic loyalties tended to interfere with work situations. Ethnocentrism has gained roots in the forces to the extent that at a point in time, one or two ethnic groups dominated the GAF, and this was unhealthy for the development of a sense of nationalism.

¹⁴ Memorandum to National Reconciliation Commission.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 11.10.5.6.3 “Adjutant Soldiers”

Various units of the Army were given authority to recruit a few soldiers to make up numerical deficiency in the unit. The Unit Adjutant was in charge of this recruitment, hence the name Adjutant Soldiers. They were trained for only four weeks instead of twenty-six weeks, and were absorbed into the units. The recruits for this “Adjutant Soldiers” category turned out to be relatives and dependants of serving officers and men, and the nepotism in recruitment caused problems of discipline. Seniors within the unit could not control these new “well-connected” enlisted personnel.

1.10.6 POLICE SERVICE

1.10.6.1 Policing and other law-enforcement activities in a democratic society are important functions. The executive branch of government has the police as its major instrument for law enforcement. However, the purposes for which the political authorities employ the police determine whether they perform their duties professionally in accordance with the law, or whether they become a weapon to protect personal and/or partisan political interests.

1.10.6.2 The Police Service requires that each officer swear an oath of allegiance to the State, and to obey only lawful orders of the legally-constituted authority. The officer also swears to discharge the duties of his office according to law and this presupposes that the law and the State are supreme considerations in every Policeman’s action. This should have been sufficient safeguard against abuse of power and a check on excessive government/political interference. However, the history of the Police Service and evidence before the Commission bear ample testimony of the inability of the Police Service to maintain its institutional integrity.

1.10.6.3 There have been instances where transfers, dismissals, interdictions and promotions have emanated from the seat of government without any explanation. This phenomenon has also encouraged subordinate police officers to invite direct intervention of the Head of State in matters pertaining to the service, thus undermining service discipline.

1.11 PARTNERSHIP BETWEEN THE POLICE AND MILITARY

1.11.1 The Military and the Police by their professional ethics and statutory guidelines are not to engage in partisan politics. A look at their role and functions, which have been discussed earlier on, shows that partisan politics should have no place in the life of these two institutions. The Military and the Police have been partners on all the occasions when there has been an unconstitutional seizure of power. Sometimes the Police were more prominent in the planning stage than at others, but on all occasions they joined the fray on the side of the usurpers. Indeed, Police collaboration ensured the success of coups d’état by the arrests and detention of functionaries, as well as the subduing of possible civil disorder. These acts stabilised the new regime as the Police were on hand to offer Police Stations and their personnel.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.11.2 The clearest indicator of the partnership between the Police and the Military in the history of Ghana was the coup d'état of the 24th February, 1966. Both the Police and the Military had suffered neglect and humiliation at the hands of the Nkrumah Administration. Both institutions had experienced dismissals in their top brass, with Madjitey, the former Head of the Police, in detention under the PDA. The existence of the President's Own Guard Regiment (POGR) put both institutions at a disadvantage and impelled the Police chiefs to team up with the Armed Forces, to overthrow the regime.

1.11.3 The team that hatched and executed the plan for the 24th February, 1966 coup comprised: John W K Harley, Commissioner of Police and Head of the Police Service, Anthony K. Deku, Commissioner of the Criminal Investigation Department, Col Emmanuel K. Kotoka, Commander 2 Brigade, Col Albert K Ocran, Commander 1 Brigade, Lt Col Alphonse Kattah, Lt Col David CK Amenu, Maj Victor C Coker-Appiah, Maj Lawrence Okai and Maj Akwasi A Afrifa, Capt Francis Kwashie.

1.11.4 The operation planned by this combined team was code-named Operation Cold Chop. Prior to his visit to Hanoi, President Nkrumah had ordered that troops should be battle-ready to move to Southern Rhodesia (now Zimbabwe) to dislodge the racist white regime. Col Kotoka therefore took advantage of this order and moved troops from Kumasi unchallenged because he stated that they were on a training mission to the Accra Plains. Police reports indicating unusually large movement of troops towards Accra were not acted upon by Harley and Deku because they were themselves part of the plot.

1.11.5 The operational headquarters of the coup was located at the Police Headquarters in Accra, and the resulting government, the National Liberation Council (NLC), was made up of Military and Police Officers.

1.11.6 The collaboration between the Police and the Military was again in evidence when in the wake of the 1972 coup, the police ensured the arrest and detention of functionaries of the overthrown government and party.

The relationship was raised to the level of partnership again, during the Supreme Military Council (SMC II) when the IGP was made a Member of the Council.

1.11.7 Evidence before the Commission indicates that the Limann Government's potential ability to mobilise resistance to the coup of 31st December, 1981, was thwarted by the failure of the IGP, Raphael Kugblenu, to make himself available at the critical time, to give command to the Police Armoured Vehicles then solely under his command, to respond to the emergency. The circumstances of his non-availability take on the colour of collaboration, when, contrary to the usual practice of Senior Commanders being relieved of their positions, he retained his post as the IGP when the coup succeeded and the PNDC came to power.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 11.12 MILITARY-CIVILIAN RELATIONS

1.12.1 The somewhat hostile relationship between the Military and the civilian population during the mandate period was not always the case. There used to be respectful distance between the two segments of society until the involvement of the military in civilian political occupations put them in authority over civilians and gave rise to a hierarchical relationship. The hostility was engendered by the heavy-handed treatment they meted out to civilians when their assumed policing duties brought them into contact with the civilian population.

1.12.2 It appeared that when people were enlisted into the Military, they tended to forget that they came from the civilian population, and would eventually return to that population. Consequently, they tended to acquire some airs and believed themselves entitled to bully civilians. The feeling that they had a right to bully was born of the culture of impunity that developed as a result of the intra-institutional solidarity of the military, and the political power that they acquired over the civilian population. Furthermore, the breakdown of Command and Control in the Armed Forces, compounded their sense of invincibility as superior officers were often helpless to check their subordinates. It was thus commonly believed by the civilian population that on account of institutional solidarity, superior officers to whom cases of misconduct were reported, ended up being part of the cover-up, by not doing enough about the complaints to give justice and redress. This has resulted in a deep suspicion of, and hostility towards, the military by civilians.

1.12.3 The media and some social commentators by their actions and inactions sometimes encouraged would-be coup leaders to defy lawfully established governments. The media sometimes painted such gloomy pictures about the state of the economy and created the impression that nothing good could happen under a constitutional government, since such governments had to respect constitutional norms. These ideas prepared the ground in the public mind to receive military intervention, and the would-be coup-makers took advantage of the situation. The litany of complaints that coup-leaders usually recite to justify a coup, always came from complaints put out by the journalists.

1.12.4 During civilian regimes, the relationship between the military and civilians was one of respectful distance. Civilians appreciated the role of soldiers in the provision of emergency services in times of disaster, and in the assistance given to the police in combating crime. However, this relationship changed whenever the military seized power, because they became overbearing and showed a lack of compassion to civilians in distress.

1.12.5 Evidence before the Commission showed that during military regimes when essential commodities and utilities were in short supply, soldiers often harassed and killed civilians to gain access to those goods and services. They entered markets, and under the guise of enforcing price control, seized and sold goods at ridiculously low prices and kept the proceeds, ostensibly to pay into government chest. They seized money, vehicles and other properties from many civilians.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.12.6 Some officers were no exception to the lack of knowledge in human rights. As a result, during military coups or “revolutions” civilians and to some extent soldiers and officers who were suspected to have committed crimes, were tortured, mishandled and beaten to the extent that some victims died, or became disabled for life. Under the PNDC regime, the spate of unlawful arrests, extortion, torture, brutality, swoops, arrests, round-ups of people, irresponsible use of firearms and deadly force and other strong-arm tactics used by the military, increased. These acts occurred, ostensibly, in “defence of the revolution”, and have culminated in the negative image the GAF has in the eyes of civilians.

1.12.7. The result of all these events, has been that civilians have been so traumatised by the military that they tremble at the thought of having to visit a military camp, or deal with a soldier in uniform. All these account for the level of animosity in military-civilian relations.

1.13 POLICE – CIVILIAN RELATIONS

1.13.1 The history of the Police Service, shows that primarily, the Ghana Police Service was expected to be modelled on the British system, which encouraged, the principles of good policing, public co-operation and abhorred excessive use of physical force, and providing service in the interest of community welfare and existence. It is for this reason that the subordinate ranks were trained only in the use of truncheons, rifles and riot control equipment. Rifles were used mainly for special escorts, and for guarding sensitive installations, but even when on guard duty, the guard commander held the ammunition. Only the senior officers were trained in the use of side arms. In fact, Service Instruction No 97 spelt out in detail the circumstances under which a policeman could use firearms, as well as the procedure to be followed should such a situation arise.

1.13.2 None of the civilian and military regimes during the mandate period, made any serious attempt to provide mechanisms that would enable the service to exercise its functions in the society efficiently and honestly, while respecting individual dignity, rights and liberties. The basic police recruit training curriculum, rules and regulations and procedures inherited from the British remained without any significant change in form or content, especially as regards human rights education.

1.13.3 Despite the good model on which the service was based, it was originally not formed for the protection of citizens, but rather for the protection of the colonial administration and its economic and political interests. The heavy-handed reaction of the police to civil disorder, such as the 1948 riots, demonstrated the nature of the hostile relationship between the public and the police. Thus, rather than being trusted, the police was feared by the citizenry.

1.13.4 Under the civilian and military regimes from 1957-1992, the mode of arrest and detention by the police was considered the most common form of abuse of civil liberties. Arrests and detentions were used as a technique of intimidation. The police was also accused of taking bribes and misusing their powers to suppress the civilian population.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.13.5 The kinds of abuses, however, changed in nature during the Acheampong Regime, when the Police Service was turned into a “Force” once again, and provided with arms and ammunition, as well as armoured personnel carriers, for crowd control. The special rules about the use of firearms were not respected, with the result that the phrase “killed by a stray bullet” which hitherto was unknown, crept into police vocabulary.

1.13.6 Under the PNDC Regime, the police, like the military were involved in unlawful arrests, extortion, torture, brutality, round-ups of people and irresponsible and unnecessary use of firearms. All these factors have culminated in the negative image the Police Service has in the eyes of the civilian population.

HUMAN RIGHTS VIOLATIONS AND ABUSES AND THE SECURITY SERVICES DURING THE VARIOUS REGIMES

1.14 6TH MARCH, 1957 – 23RD FEBRUARY, 1966: CPP GOVERNMENT

1.14.1 A little over a year after Ghana attained Independence, the Prime Minister, Dr Nkrumah, introduced the Preventive Detention Bill in Parliament, and it was passed into law. The PDA gave power to the Prime Minister to detain anyone up to a period of five years, without trial. The Special Branch of Police Service was used to arrest and detain Dr Nkrumah’s political opponents, ostensibly, for security reasons. It was reported that the executive gave instructions to prison officers on the ill-treatment of specific detainees.

1.14.2 The Preventive Detention Act (PDA)

1.14.2.1 The PDA became law in July, 1958, and in November, 1958, the government announced the detention of forty-three persons, all members of the opposition United Party (UP). Towards the end of the year, other high-profile persons, R R Amponsah, (UP) Member of Parliament for Sekyere West, M K Apaloo, Member of Parliament for Anlo South and Ex-Capt. Benjamin Awhaitey, a military officer, all of whom had been implicated in a conspiracy to subvert the government, were detained. From 1959, many more persons became victims of the PDA, including Dr Joseph Boakye Danquah and Obetsebi Lampitey (both of whom died in detention later).

1.14.2.2 According to one of the officials of the security and intelligence services of the time:

during the emergency period much information was received by the police, but it was found out that undue delay would be caused if investigation into all that was completed before arrests were made, hence mass arrest and detention took place without detention orders being issued, and I believe, many of those taken in were forgotten by the police.¹⁵

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

Thus individual rights were sacrificed in the name of “state security.” The PDA not only caught opposition members in its snare, but also some members of the CPP Government. Prominent among whom was PKK Quaidoo, Member of Parliament for Aowin Amenfi.¹⁶

1.14.2.3 The conduct of the officers and men of the Ghana Prisons Service was called into question in the circumstances surrounding the deaths of Dr Danquah and Obetsebi Lamptey. The Nsawam Prison where Dr Danquah was incarcerated gave the cause of his death as a heart attack. Dr. Danquah’s health had rather deteriorated rapidly during his detention. He was kept in a small cell in the condemned block (then known as the Special Block) – a place meant for prisoners on death row – contrary to the regulations of the Prison Service. On the orders of President Nkrumah, he was to be fed on gari, salt and water.¹⁷ Dr. Danquah was in urgent need of medical attention and the Medical Officer had recommended that he should be moved to the Prison Hospital but he was kept in very deplorable conditions till he succumbed to death. When he protested on one occasion against his incarceration, he was cited for being rude to a prison officer and for that matter was chained as a punishment. It is significant to note that when on the death of Dr JB Danquah, a student of University of Ghana, LO Cantey, at formal dinner in Commonwealth Hall, led students to observe a minute’s silence in his memory, Cantey was arrested and detained under the PDA.¹⁸

1.14.2.4 Obetsebi Lamptey suffered a similar fate. He was detained a very sick man almost at the point of death. He was given some medical attention at the Korle-Bu Teaching Hospital where he was chained to his bed. Later he was sent home. He was, however, re-arrested in his sick state and sent to the Nsawam Prison on a stretcher and placed in the Prison Hospital. He died in prison.

1.14.2.5 These developments led to the people of Ghana becoming disenchanted with the Nkrumah regime and they began to fight back at the oppression and suppression of the exercise and enjoyment of their fundamental rights and freedoms. The attempts to de-stabilise the government could be seen in the series of bomb explosions that either killed or maimed people. These explosions resulted in the further tightening of security and the arrests and detention of more and more people.

1.14.3 The Assassination Attempts On The President And Implications For National Security

¹⁵ Report of the Commission Appointed To Enquire Into The Conditions Prevailing In The Ghana Prisons Services, supra, para 112, p.20.

¹⁶ Political Parties and Democracy in Ghana’s Fourth Republic, K A Ninsin and F. K. Drah, (eds) 1993, Woeli Publishing Services, Accra p79.

¹⁷ Report of Commission, supra, para 63, p12.

¹⁸ Mike Oquaye, “Youth, Politics and Society in Ghana” in Civil Society in Ghana F.K. Drah and M. Oquaye (eds) Accra, Friedrich Ebert Foundation, 1996; chapter 10, p163 at p181.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.14.3.1 Two incidents that constituted grave breaches of security are worthy of mention as they were attempts actually made on the life of President Nkrumah. The first was in August, 1962, at Kulungugu. The President had gone to meet with President Yameogo of Upper Volta (now Burkina Faso) to finalise a Customs Agreement between the two countries at Tenkudugu, a small frontier town, a few miles from Bawku. On his return journey, the President stopped at the village of Kulungugu to inspect a Guard of Honour mounted by school children. A hand grenade was thrown at President Nkrumah, which caused some deaths and many casualties. The President escaped death narrowly, but sustained injuries.¹⁹

1.14.3.2 The people of Kulungugu were punished for this incident. Some days after the explosion, all houses in the village were burnt to ashes by the police at dawn. All foodstuffs in barns and living rooms as well as farm animals were also burnt. Many of the villagers were arrested and detained at Bawku.

1.14.3.3 The second attempt occurred in 1964, when a police constable, Ametewee, on guard duty at the President's residence, the Flagstaff House in Accra, fired at the President, missing him and killing one of his bodyguards, Salifu Dagarti, in the process.

1.14.3.4 In the wake of the Kulungugu bombing, President Kwame Nkrumah dismissed and detained the head of the Police Service, E R T Madjitey as well as one of his two deputies, S D Amaning. J H Owusu-Sekyere, Head of CID and other Senior Police Officers were dismissed.

1.14.3.5 Thus civilians and members of the Security Services alike became victims of gross human rights violations. Between November, 1958, and 23rd February, 1966, hundreds of Ghanaians across the length and breadth of the country, suffered detention under the PDA. This in turn created fear, suspicion and insecurity among the citizenry.

1.14.4 Politicisation Of The Security Services

1.14.4.1 During President Nkrumah's government, efforts were made to politicise the Security Services. The government required them to be CPP card-bearers and the Senior Officers to undergo ideological training at the Kwame Nkrumah Ideological Institute at Winneba. This was resisted by the High Command of the GAF.

1.14.4.2 The politicisation of the security services by the CPP Government was evident in the way their independence was undermined. The military for instance, strongly resented the unceremonious retirement of Generals S J A Otu and JA Ankrah, then Chief of Defence Staff and Deputy respectively, from the GAF, and the Military considered the action unwarranted and unduly heavy-handed. The basis of the strong resentment was that the act constituted an undermining of their institutional integrity. According to Col Afrifa, the dismissal of the Generals was one of the major factors that led to the coup d'état.²⁰ This abrupt termination of their careers was a violation of the human rights of the two military chiefs.

¹⁹ See Tawia Adamafio, By Nkrumah's Side: The Labour and the Wounds, West Coast Publishing House, Accra in Association with Rex Collings, London, 1982, pp. 124-127.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.14.5 Conclusion

1.14.5.1 President Nkrumah had the PDA passed in 1958, which gave him power to detain persons he and his party considered to be security risks. Under the PDA, hundreds of Ghanaians, mainly the political opponents of the CPP were detained under very inhuman conditions.

1.14.5.2 He was declared the Life President of the Republic of Ghana after the country had become a One-Party State. The suppression of the civil and political rights of the citizenry became a source of instability, and the deprivation of freedom of speech on account of the operation of the PDA, created unhappiness among the general populace.

1.14.5.3 President Nkrumah also initiated a policy of introducing partisan politics into every aspect of Ghanaian life, and required party-membership of every person employed by the Republic, including members of the Armed Forces. Heads of Security Services who appeared not to support these policies were retired or dismissed from their posts. As at 1965, it was impossible to remove the President from office by any constitutional means.

1.14.5.4 He established the PDD and POGR, who were primarily responsible for his security and protection. The existence of these two units, better resourced and therefore better motivated than their colleagues in the regular security services, created disaffection. This situation explained the extent of human rights violations and abuses to which they were subjected when the government was overthrown in February, 1966.

1.15.0 24TH FEBRUARY, 1966 – 30TH SEPTEMBER, 1969: NATIONAL LIBERATION COUNCIL (NLC) REGIME

1.15.1 The Coup D'état Of 1966

1.15.1.1 At dawn on 24th February, 1966, a group of officers from the Police and the Army led by Col Emmanuel Kwasi Kotoka, Col Albert Kwesi Ocran and Maj Akwasi Amankwa Afrifa, staged a coup d'état that removed President Nkrumah from office, while the latter was on his way to Hanoi, Vietnam, on a peace mission. Thereafter a new government, the National Liberation Council (NLC) was formed, comprising the three aforementioned army officers, and a retired deputy head of the Armed Forces, Lt-General Joseph A. Ankrah as Chairman. The Police Chief, John W K Harley, was the Deputy Chairman, and three other senior Police officers, Anthony K. Deku, JEO Nunoo and Bawa A. Yakubu, all of the status of Commissioner of Police, were also ²⁰ Afrifa, supra, p.102.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

members of the NLC. Thus for the first time, in the history of the country, the security services became directly involved in the governance of Ghana.²¹

1.15.1.2 The NLC appointed “Commissioners” to head the various Ministries. The members of the NLC together with the Commissioners constituted the Executive Council. Unlike the CPP Government, the NLC did not create any special or extra security unit(s); they preserved the traditional security institutions. The assumption was that once the military and the police were in power, the potential threat of a coup by officers of these institutions was greatly minimised.

1.15.1.3 The NLC suspended the 1960 Republican Constitution, the President and the Parliamentarians were dismissed from office, and the CPP, the only political party at the time, was banned and membership of it prohibited. The original colours of red, gold, green, with the Black Star in the middle of the gold band of the Ghana Flag, that had been changed to the CPP colours by substituting the gold band with the white-band of the CPP in 1964,²² were restored.²³

1.15.1.4 The NLC passed the Protective Custody Decree, 1966 (NLCD 2) under which all Ministers, Parliamentarians, Regional Commissioners, District Commissioners and senior functionaries of the CPP were detained without trial. Party and Ghana Young Pioneers’ paraphernalia were banned. Books and publications, related Dr Nkrumah and scientific socialism, as well as communist propaganda materials were burnt. Public exhibition of effigies of Dr Nkrumah, as well as symbols of the CPP, were also prohibited. Persons found with these objects were molested by the security forces.

1.15.1.5 The members of the PDD became the targets for human rights abuse by the regular security services in a move to avenge the neglect the latter had suffered at the expense of the former under President Nkrumah. It is reported that they mounted the strongest resistance to the attacking forces on 24th February, 1966. According to Afrifa,

Our leading companies, the Radio Station Company and Flagstaff House ones, came under heavy machine-gun fire from the entrance of the Flagstaff House. A Russian made armoured car had perched itself there and was firing long bursts. Three of our troop-carrying vehicles were set on fire and a signal vehicle was completely destroyed although the driver escaped. We suffered our first casualties here...²⁴

Another account of the resistance that day is as follows:

²¹ “The Effect of Military Involvement in Politics on the Armed Forces,” Memorandum presented to the National Reconciliation Commission. The causes and effects of indiscipline and unprofessionalism in the security services is discussed in greater detail elsewhere in this chapter.

²² Constitution (Amendment) Act, 1964 (Act 224), section 7, amending article 7 of the 1960 Constitution.

²³ National Liberation Council Proclamation, as amended by National Liberation Council Decree, 1966 (NLCD 1).

²⁴ Afrifa, supra, p 34.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

The principal clash occurred at Flagstaff House, Nkrumah's residence, where pro-Nkrumah army personnel and security guards put up strong resistance against rebel troops. The defenders were finally overcome, and more than 20 persons were killed [among them reportedly 11 Russians].²⁵

1.15.1.6 Some members of the PDD were lined up and executed, after they had surrendered to the attacking forces. Others were detained under a new Protective Custody Decree²⁶, and their personal effects were looted from their residential quarters. Those who had travelled with Ex-president Nkrumah to Asia went with him to Guinea, Conakry and decided to remain in exile with him, some on account of their loyalty to Dr. Nkrumah, and others on account of stories they heard about the ill-treatment of PDD members in Ghana.

1.15.1.7 The rule of the NLC also saw the freezing of assets and bank accounts of CPP functionaries and CPP-related organisations.²⁷ The Auditor-General was mandated to audit the accounts of the CPP and CPP-related organisations,²⁸ and following his findings, the assets were confiscated to the state.²⁹

1.15.1.8 Commissions of Enquiry were established to probe the assets of CPP functionaries, and assets found to have been acquired by unlawful means were confiscated.

1.15.1.9 The NLC banned most of the leading members of the defunct CPP from contesting the 1969 elections.³⁰ They were also banned from holding public office for ten years. This was applied to members of the PDD after their release from prison.

1.15.1.10 A former senior security officer under the Nkrumah regime, Boye Moses, who had returned to Ghana from Guinea, was paraded through the streets of Accra in a cage, on his way to detention at the Ussher Fort Prison. *Daily Graphic*³¹ carried the story and stated that the crowds that had lined the streets shouted for his death and jeered at him calling him a monkey. He was subsequently detained.

1.15.1.11 The NLC displayed its intolerance for dissenting views on several occasions. For instance, between 1966 and 1969, the Trade Unions, expressing dissatisfaction with the low level of wages and other conditions of service, launched a series of strikes to demand better conditions. One of the most serious of these strikes

²⁵ Thomas A Howell and Jeffrey P Rajasooria (eds) GHANA & NKUMAH, Facts on File Inc., NY, NY, 1972, p113.

²⁶ National Liberation Council Proclamation, as amended by National Liberation Council Decree, 1966 (NLCD 37).

²⁷ National Liberation Council (Assets and Bank Accounts) Decree 1966 (NLCD 7).

²⁸ National Liberation Council (Auditor-General's functions Decree 1966 (NLCD 12).

²⁹ National Liberation Council Forfeiture of Assets Decree, 1966 (NLCD 23).

³⁰ F.K. Buah, A History of Ghana of Ghana, 1998, (London and Oxford: Macmillan Education Ltd.) p 198.

³¹ Daily Graphic Vol 5075 Tuesday, 24th January 1967.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

involved the mineworkers of at Prestea. Three of the striking workers were shot dead by the police during a confrontation.³²

1.15.1.12 The Massacre at Yendi

1.15.1.12.1 In November, 1968, the NLC supervised the enskinment of the Mion Lana as Ya Na Andani III. This move of the NLC was approved and supported by the District and Regional Administration, and by local units of the Army and Police.³³ The Abudulai family, however, protested against this enskinment to the NLC Government, and a committee under the chairmanship of Nene Azu Mate Kole, with Isaac Amissah-Aidoo (now Nana Obiri Yeboah) and Jato Kaleo as members, was appointed to investigate Yendi Skin Affairs. The terms of reference for the committee was for it to ascertain the customary procedure for the selection and installation of a Ya Na, and also to determine if Ya Na Andani had been properly selected and installed or not.³⁴ The committee was also to determine whether or not, if the said installation was unduly influenced by the presence of armed soldiers and policemen as well as the District Administrative Officers in the area.³⁵ While the Committee was at its work, the NLC Government concurrently gave Ya Na Andani de facto recognition. As a follow up to this action, representatives of the government paid a courtesy call on the Ya Na in early December, 1968, and he also received the salary of a Ya Na.³⁶ This move clearly prejudiced the outcome of the committee's investigations and won for the NLC some influence with the Ya Na.

1.15.1.12.2 The Mate Kole Committee completed its assignment on 8th August, 1969, and made findings and recommendations to the effect that the enskinment of Na Andani was a nullity, and that Mahamadu Abdulai, the eldest son of Na Abdulai III be enskinned as Ya Na, instead. Nearly one month later, on 4th September, 1969, the NLC announced its acceptance of the findings of the Committee. In the mean time, Na Andani had died on 12th March, 1969, while the committee was still sitting.

1.15.1.12.3 The Andani Family refused to accept the outcome of the Mate Kole Committee and about six hundred (600) of them proceeded to occupy the Ya-Na's palace, ostensibly to perform the final funeral rites of the late Na Andani, as a Ya Na. Between 5th and 8th September, 1969, the government ordered the surrender of all arms in Yendi, and on 8th September, the Regional Administrative Committee headed by Col Laryea, ordered the occupation group of the Andani Family to leave the Ya Na's palace immediately. By 8th September, 44 shot guns and other offensive weapons had been surrendered to the police.³⁷

1.15.1.12.4 On the morning of 9th September, 1969, the police, under the Command of Superintendent Alhassan, surrounded the palace. A great tragedy unfolded as the police, armed with live ammunition, proceeded to storm the palace when the ³² Ninsin and Drah, 1993, op cit, supra, p 2.

³³ Paul Ladouceur, "The Yendi Chieftaincy Dispute and Ghanaian Politics", Canadian Journal of African Studies VII (1972), 97-115, University of Sussex, Brighton, England.

³⁴ Daily Graphic vol. 5663 Friday, 13th December, 1968, p.1.

³⁵ Local Government Bulletin No 55, December 14 1968.

³⁶ Ladouceur, supra.

³⁷ Petition of Baba Issifu, representative of Andani Family to the Commission.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

occupation group refused to leave. There were many deaths and injuries, including women and children. The numbers of casualties were put variously as 23 dead and 41 injured³⁸ and 36 dead and forty-one injured.³⁹ 21 others were arrested and detained in prison for up to 21 days.

1.15.1.12.5 Coming at the tail end of the NLC's rule, and in the transition period between it and the civilian administration, the incident was not investigated. The government accepted the police report that the police contingent to the palace was attacked with cutlasses and other offensive weapons, hence the shooting. However, an independent Judicial Inquiry into the incident should have been ordered as the circumstances surrounding the killing and injuring of so many civilians by the police, should have been the subject of a Judicial Inquiry, and appropriate remedial measures taken by the government. The Progress Party (PP) government did not find it necessary to inquire into the incident either, even though there were calls in Parliament by the Opposition, for the government to open up the matter in order to provide the public with an independent account of the incident.

1.15.1.13 Effect Of The Coup On The Armed Forces

1.15.1.13.1 The Armed Forces had its fair share of the negative effects of the coup d'état. When commanders got involved in national politics, the demands of the Military institution were pushed to the background, leaving only a few experienced officers to run the units. This resulted in a breakdown of discipline and lowering of standards of professionalism in the GAF. According to Lt-Gen Ocran:

The Officer who tries to serve two masters by combining politics and military duties becomes at once a bad soldier and a bad politician... military supremacy over civil authorities ruins both the nation and the military.⁴⁰

1.15.1.13.2 The taking up of appointments in government by senior military officers sowed the seeds for future coups d'état as the taste for political office and the associated perquisites had been introduced to those officers. This had other consequences for the Military Institution as the further disruption of military life by future engagement in civil political life had been guaranteed.

1.15.2 The Abortive Coup D'état Of 1967

1.15.2.1 On 17th April, 1967, Lt Samuel Arthur led a group of soldiers of the Recce Regiment based at Ho, to attempt to overthrow the Government of the NLC. Lt Moses Yeboah and 2nd Lt Emmanuel Osei-Poku were active participants in the attempt.

1.15.2.2 They divided their troops, into three groups to attack the Flagstaff House, Osu Castle and the Broadcasting House. At the Flagstaff House, Lt Yeboah met ³⁸ Evening Standard Vol I No 160, Wednesday, 10th September, 1969, p.1.

³⁹ Petition of Baba Issifu, representative of Andani Family to the National Reconciliation Commission.

⁴⁰ Albert Ocran (Lt-Gen), Politics of the Sword, as quoted in Mike Oquaye, Politics in Ghana 1972-1979, TORNADO PUBLICATIONS, 1980, p80.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

resistance from Lt Gen Kotoka and in the process Lt Gen Kotoka and his personal Orderly, Sgt Osei Grunshie, were killed. Two other officers, Capt Cephas Y. Borkloe and Capt A. Avevor were also killed by the putschists. All of them were buried with full Military Honours. L/Cpl Emmanuel Aborbor of the Ho Regiment who also lost his life in the attempt, was buried without Honours.

1.15.2.3 Lt Gen Kotoka's body was later found in the area of the Accra International Airport. The NLC named the International Airport after him, and also established a Trust Fund named the Kotoka Trust, to provide for the families of the fallen loyal troops.

1.15.2.4 A six-man Military Tribunal tried and sentenced Lt Arthur and Lt Yeboah to death by firing squad, while 2nd Lt Osei-Poku was sentenced to 30 years imprisonment. The two condemned men were executed in public at 9.00 a.m. on 26th May, 1967, before a large crowd of about 20,000.

1.15.2.5 Three other officers were sentenced to prison terms. Five officers and about 200 other ranks were placed in protective custody. In all, ten Protective Custody Decrees were passed, that committed hundreds of people to detention, including those who were accused of jubilating upon hearing news of the coup, before it was foiled.

1.15.2.6 It is worth noting at this time that during the trial of the officers and men involved, the issue of what constitutes a lawful order came up when it became clear that they did not know that in following orders to attack the Castle and other installations of national importance, they were obeying unlawful orders.

1.15.3 The NLC Government handed over power to a civilian government, headed by Dr Kofi Abrefa Busia after the elections of 29th August, 1969. However, the precedent had been set and the soldiers' desire to engage in civil political office had been created, as well as a messianic sense of mission: that it was the duty of the military to rescue the country from poor governance of civilian politicians. The citizenry also shared this sense of mission, and would, in the years ahead, appeal to, and expect, the military to take charge of the government as and when there was disenchantment with the government. These and other factors led to the overthrow of the Second Republic and its first government, the PP government, led by Dr Busia, by Col Ignatius Kutu Acheampong, on 13th January, 1972.

1.15 1ST OCTOBER, 1969 - 12TH JANUARY 1972:
SECOND REPUBLIC

1.16.1 Aliens Compliance Order

1.16.1.1 The Progressive Party Government under Dr. Busia, was inaugurated on 1st October, 1969. This period coincided with the Nigerian Civil War, and there was an influx of refugees from Eastern Nigeria (then Biafra). Not long after the new government took office, pressure began to mount for firm action to be taken against the influx of aliens into the country on account of increased crime time in the country. The matter was discussed in Parliament and the government announced that it was going to enforce the provisions of the Aliens Act, 1963 (Act 160) and its accompanying Regulations in L.I. 265 as amended by LI 553. On 19th November, 1969, the government issued the following statement:

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

All aliens both African and non-African without residence permits should leave the country within 14 days – not later than December 2, 1969.⁴¹

1.16.1.2 The implementation of the Order caused a lot of human suffering as families which had resided in Ghana for more than three generations, and persons who had lost touch with their original homelands, were given only fourteen days to regularize their stay or leave the country. After the expiration of the period, the police began to arrest those who had not then left, and they were kept in the open, living in insanitary conditions around police stations.

1.16.1.3 Many were trapped under inhuman living conditions as they waited for inadequate or non-existent transportation to carry them home. There were many reports of Ghanaians attacking and molesting aliens to the extent that the government had to issue a warning to the public to desist from such acts. It even became necessary for police protection to be given to some aliens in Kumasi. Many were the heart-rending tales of suffering that were told and the sad spectacles that were seen during the implementation of this Order.

13TH JANUARY 1972 – 3RD JUNE 1979 - NRC/SMC I & II

1.17.1 The Establishment Of The NRC

1.17.1.1 On 13th January, 1972, the nation received news of yet another coup d'état led by Col Ignatius Kutu Acheampong, Commander of the First Infantry Brigade. A government, the National Redemption Council (NRC), was formed with Col Acheampong as Chairman and Head of State. It should be noted here that Col Acheampong had tasted political power once, as the Chairman of Western Region Committee of Administration under the NLC regime.

1.17.1.2 Members of the overthrown Progress Party (PP) became targets of human rights abuse. In line with the practice established by the NLC, the NRC called its action “a revolution”, and consequently suspended the 1969 Constitution; proscribed all political parties; and caused the detention of government and PP functionaries,⁴² thereby forcing some functionaries to go into exile in the neighbouring countries.⁴³ In May, 1972, 323 persons out of the large number that had been detained after the coup were freed from custody for the reason that they were not threats to state security.⁴⁴

⁴¹ Daily Graphic, Vol. 5952 Wednesday, November 19, 1969. p1.

⁴² Ghanaian Times, Vol. 44o5 Friday, 28th January, 1972, back page “PP Activists Are Back In Custody.”

⁴³ See Daily Graphic, Vol 6712 Saturday, 6th May. 1972, p 1.

⁴⁴ See Daily Graphic, Vol.6621 Tuesday, 18th January 1972, p 1, Banner headline.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.17.1.3 Most of the functionaries, including Dr Busia, were required to appear before commissions of enquiry to defend the acquisition of their personal assets. Most of those assets, including those acquired before coming into political office, were confiscated to the State. The NRC Government called the members of the defunct PP Government as “nation wreckers” and thereby justified the decision to confiscate what the “nation wreckers” owned. Dr Busia, who was outside the country at the time, had adverse findings made against him by the commission of enquiry, and his properties, including those of his nuclear and extended families, were confiscated to the State.

1.17.1.4 The NRC government was made up of a number of senior officers in the security services. However, the norms of military hierarchy were subverted by the fact that the prime conspirators, consisting of the newly-promoted Colonel, Acheampong, who became the Chairman and hence Head of State, Majors Kwame B Agbo, Anthony H. Selormey and Kwame Baah, constituted the core of the ruling body. This phenomenon of relatively junior Officers constituting the core of a ruling government, was bound to cause problems of discipline in the Armed Forces, as the CDS, Napoleon Y R. Ashley-Lassen was a Brigadier.

1.17.1.5 The NRC made a conscious effort to involve the rank and file of the security services in its political programmes. Junior officers joined in the implementation of the “Operation Feed Yourself” Programme which was a programme of the NRC to ensure that the country achieved self-sufficiency in food production. The Head of State himself urged the security services to get involved in what the government stood for. As the Ghanaian Times wrote under its banner headline: “Get Involved in Revolution”:

Col. I. K. Acheampong, Head of State and Chairman of the National Redemption Council, yesterday reminded members of the Armed Forces of their involvement in the revolution and urged them to continue to support the efforts of the government as they have admirably done.⁴⁵

1.17.1.6 A culture of detaining civilians in guardroom began, and military norms were infused into civilian life. Civilians were subjected to military drills when found to have misconducted themselves according to rules prescribed by the military rulers. Thus, late-comers to work, loiterers, and even commercial sex-workers were subjected to military drills as a form of “discipline.”

1.17.2 Price Control

1.17.2.1 The NRC launched a campaign to reduce prices of essential consumables, tagged “essential commodities, (or “essenco,”). This action led to the creation of artificial shortages of goods, as those who had them hid them, often, in order to sell them at prices higher than those set down on the Price Control List. Consequently, a new crime of “hoarding” was created, as people perceived to be keeping goods away from the open market, were targeted.⁴⁶ Those believed to be selling goods above the stipulated prices were also covered by the new laws, and both groups were denoted as economic saboteurs. Economic sabotage became a serious crime against the State, and offenders were severely molested in swoops on markets by members of the security services, and their goods seized and sold off. Such swoops became “military exercises”, and the military expression “exercise” entered the Ghanaian civilian vocabulary. The Ghanaian Times reported on some of the early acts done during the campaign launched by the Acheampong Government: “The Army and the Police in a combined operation yesterday swooped on two Accra markets in an anti-profiteering and hoarding exercise.”⁴⁷

⁴⁵ Ghanaian Times, Vol. 4,402 Friday, 21st November, 1972, p1

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.17.2.2 The state of the economy and social life were so run down, that a chit system for release of commodities from the factories and warehouses was developed. This was a mechanism for ensuring that only people with valid chits could obtain the commodities, so as to protect the price control system. The chit-system, however, got so corrupted that only persons with connections to highly-placed officials and managers of Commercial Houses could obtain such chits. These persons then turned round and re-sold the goods, or even the chits themselves, at many times the control price. The system, therefore, bred untold corruption, influence-peddling and moral decadence, with consequent hardship to the eventual consumer. Kalabule, the term for corruption and profiteering from selling goods above official prices became the order of the day, as briefcase-toting young men, and black hand-bag wielding young women claiming to be “businessmen and women” with no fixed business addresses appeared on the scene. The term “middleman” became synonymous with a person who was cheating both the producer and the consumer by buying at low prices and selling at extremely high prices, thereby making inordinately high profits. Many of the nation’s top academics and professionals left the country as economic refugees.

1.18 SMC (I)1.18.1 Formation Of SMC

1.18.1.1 On 7th October, 1975, the NRC was converted to a new body, the Supreme Military Council (SMC), composed of the CDS, the Service Commanders and the IGP. Col Acheampong, now General Acheampong, became its chairman and so remained the Head of State. The Majors who were the core members of the NRC were dropped from the membership of the new body. The restructuring was aimed at restoring the Military Command Hierarchy of the Armed Forces. Thus, the SMC became the closest to a “Military Government”, than any of the other governments before, or since.

1.18.2 Union Government (Unigov).

⁴⁶ The Price Control Decree, 1974 (NRCD 305) and Price Control (Amendment) Decree, 1978 (SMCD 146).

⁴⁷ 28th January, 1972, supra.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.18.2.1 The national economy continued to deteriorate, and civil society began to mount pressure on the government to return the government to civilian constitutional administration. In a bid to save his ailing government, and anxious to hold on to power, General Acheampong announced a new political concept, which he claimed was more in accord with Ghanaian cultural traditions, while respecting the prominence of the security services in governance. The concept, propounded in 1977, was known as Union Government (UNIGOV), and it was to be a no-party government with representation from the military, police and civilian population. UNIGOV met with widespread disapproval and the government set up committees nationwide to oversee the education on the concept. “Education”, however, became a euphemism for propaganda on the concept as no ideas contrary to the government-proposed ones were tolerated, and any opponents of the idea were subjected to molestation.

1.18.2.2 An attempt to organise a seminar on UNIGOV at the Accra Community Centre by the Association of Recognised Professional Bodies (ARPB) was brutally suppressed, with the speakers and audience being attacked and chased out of the premises by hired thugs. Consequently, in defiance of the ban on partisan politics, a number of persons opposed to UNIGOV, organised themselves into groups and mounted a concerted opposition. The largest of such groupings, the People’s Movement for Freedom and Justice (PMFJ), was formed in January 1978, with one of its leaders being Lt Gen Afrifa of the former NLC.

1.18.2.3 To counteract the upsurge of opposition to UNIGOV, Gen Acheampong had other groups organised, and they, together with the security agencies attacked members of PMFJ at their functions. The opposition groups linked up with the National Union of Ghana Students (NUGS) and students, particularly of the tertiary institutions, organised activities to unseat the government. Students in some secondary schools were attacked by this combination of forces.

1.18.2.4 The concept was put to a referendum on 30th March, 1978, and it was clear that the concept had not won popular support. The official regulations for the referendum provided that the ballots should be counted at the polling stations, but the SMC gave a counter directive on radio that the ballots should be taken to regional centres for counting. The Electoral Commissioner, Mr. Justice Isaac K. Abban, who opposed these acts of interference with the electoral process, had to flee for his life when armed members of the security services surrounded his office, in order to arrest him. He was promptly dismissed and went into hiding after declaring the first two results just before midnight of that day. The next day when the state-owned media announced the results, UNIGOV had been accepted by 54% in favour and 46% against. These results were loudly contested by members of the general public, and the government responded with widespread arrests and banning of opposition groups.⁴⁸ Some of the prominent members of the banned groups fled into exile in the neighbouring countries. The government then set up a Constitutional Commission to draft a Constitution for UNIGOV.⁴⁹

⁴⁸ Voluntary Associations (Prohibition) Decree, 1978 (SMCD 161).

⁴⁹ Constitutional Commission Decree, 1978 (SMCD 164).

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 11.18.3 Government-Students Clashes

1.18.3.1 There were clashes between students and security services on account of the opposition that was mounted by the students to the government. In May, 1976, students of University of Ghana went on demonstration against the government. Thereafter, security agents were assigned to the campus, and there were many intelligence operations by Military Intelligence on the campus, leading to a radicalisation of student-government relations. In May, 1977, students of the University of Ghana again went on demonstration against the government, and were attacked by the police, even though they offered no resistance. Many students were injured. The unrest spread to the other universities and consequently, all of them were closed. Students were sent home, thus diffusing the opposition to government from the student-front, into the general population.

1.18.3.2 On 13th January, 1978, students of University of Ghana went on demonstration and organised a mock burial of Gen Acheampong and the SMC. A confrontation occurred between the students and the police and following that, the students kidnapped a policeman on guard duty at a bank on campus. Even though the policeman was later released by the students, his rifle was not released. Consequently, the police moved in, ostensibly to look for the missing rifle and with heavy gear, armoured vehicles and teargas, stormed the campus, beating up staff and students alike, and injuring more than twenty of them. The universities in the country were consequently closed down, and the whole country appeared to be degenerating into chaos as the spate of violent attacks increased.

1.19 SMC II

1.19.1 Civil unrest continued, and was rampant. By June, 1978, it was clear that the SMC was doomed. On 5th July, 1978, after a plot had been hatched among his colleagues on the SMC, a small group of officers managed to isolate General Acheampong from his bodyguards and forced him to sign his own resignation letter. Lt-Gen Frederick William Kwasi Akuffo took over the chairmanship of the SMC, which popularly became known as the SMC II. Lt-Gen Akuffo made attempts to win popular support by releasing all those who had been detained in the wake of the UNIGOV referendum and extended an invitation to all political exiles to return home.

1.19.2 The SMC II was expected to bring Gen Acheampong, who was then in custody, to trial for his misrule, and the poor economic management that had brought the country to its knees. This expectation, however, was not met, despite calls from civil society groups for the proper thing to be done. The government then passed the Armed Forces (Miscellaneous Provisions) Decree, 1979 (SMCD 235), releasing Gen Acheampong from custody and stripping him of his military rank and his entitlements. He was also confined to Trabuom, his hometown in the Ashanti Region. Fresh powers of arrest were conferred on policemen as well as soldiers, that should “Mr” Acheampong leave his hometown, any soldier or policeman could arrest him and detain him for the purpose of returning him to Trabuom.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.19.3 The SMC II government expanded the membership of the Constitutional Commission and changed its mandate. It was now asked to draft a Constitution for an Interim National Government. This new body was, however, to use as one of its source material, the findings of the Ad Hoc Committee on UNIGOV.⁵⁰ This attracted criticism that the Interim National Government was UNIGOV in disguise and further agitation caused the government to change its mind and establish a proper Constituent Assembly to draft a Constitution for a return to civilian rule.⁵¹ The Decree also fixed 1st July, 1979, as the date for handing over to an elected government.

1.19.3 Currency Exchange

1.19.3.1 In March, 1979, the government suddenly closed the borders and demonetized Ghana's currency. Simultaneous with the decision to demonetise the currency and thus mop up the excess liquidity, was a decision that money already in the banks would not lose its value.

1.19.3.2 Upon the taking of this policy decision, the information leaked out to those who had links within the political hierarchy, and consequently, those who were privileged to receive prior information, quickly began to flood the banks with their private holdings. This flurry of activity among of those who had been forewarned of the demonetisation plan soon came to the attention of the government, as it threatened to derail the very objective for which the policy had been adopted. The government therefore passed a Decree,⁵² which provided for the halving of the value of any money paid into the bank within a particular period. The result of this Decree was that persons, who in the ordinary course of business paid money into their bank accounts, lost half the value.

1.19.3.3 The entire country was given three weeks within which to turn in all their currency holdings for issuance of fresh currency. This policy caused a great stampede and suffering. Those who could not lay hands on any of the new notes could not buy food as market women refused to accept the old notes. As everyone rushed to exchange the old cedis for the new before the deadline, there was a great rush to the banks, and personnel of the Security Services detailed to keep order, used whips and even live ammunition, to keep order in those long queues at the banks. A number of persons were killed or wounded by such security personnel.

1.19.3.4 At the end of the period of ultimatum, many people, particularly rural dwellers, had become impoverished overnight as all their private wealth caches had become useless paper. This policy, as well as the manner of its implementation, caused great anger against the government and senior military personnel, as it was believed that they and their relations had foreknowledge of the demonetisation and so had not gone through the suffering that the general population had gone through, in those terrible three weeks.

⁵⁰ Constitutional Commission (Amendment) (No.2) Decree, 1978 (SMCD 173).

⁵¹ Constituent Assembly (Commencement of Proceedings) Decree, 1978 (SMCD 209); Constituent Assembly (Amendment) Decree, 1979 (SMCD 220).

⁵² The Cedi (New Notes) Decree, 1979 (SMCD 226).

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 11.20 Involvement Of The Armed Forces In Governance Under NRC/SMC /SMC I & II

1.20.1 By government policy, many senior military officers were seconded to civilian organisations to work. The seconded officers soon acquired wealth, and properties that appeared to be beyond their legitimate incomes. Many of them also acquired private businesses, in contravention of ethics of Armed Forces. This involvement in civilian enterprises affected their standards of discipline, and the morale of those in barracks.

1.20.2 The general economic conditions in the country affected ordinary soldiers as they did the ordinary citizens. As they could not make ends meet on their official incomes, they also tried to find ways and means of supplementing their incomes, much to the neglect of their military duties. The ordinary soldiers believed that their plight had been caused by their officers who appeared not to be experiencing the same types of hardships on account of their newly-acquired wealth.

1.20.3 A lot of officers in the GAF became disgruntled that they did not get the opportunity to be seconded to civilian institutions like the others and there was a lot of disaffection. The disaffection became so strong that some of the personnel began to demand the return of their colleagues who had been “privileged” to serve in civilian institutions. Incidents of disrespect between officers and men were so rampant that loyalty was visibly questionable. Military personnel therefore adopted a lukewarm attitude towards their profession, as disillusionment set in. This practice of seconding senior military officers to civilian organisations, was cited as a source of envy and jealousy between the seconded officers and the officers and men in barracks.

1.20.4 The Other Ranks were also witnesses to the sudden opulence that came to their superior officers as soon as they took up positions in civilian organisations. These developments caused resentment in the military and general populace and built up anger against Senior Military Officers. The Other Ranks looked on, as “prosperity to the military” passed them by. Discipline thus suffered.

1.20.5 The Committee On The Problems Of Indiscipline In The Armed Forces

1.20.5.1 The standard of discipline got to such a low point that a committee known as “Committee on the Problems of Indiscipline in the Armed Forces”, was established. The committee reported on the conditions affecting discipline in the Armed Forces on 7th May, 1979, and listed the factors that generated indiscipline in the Armed Forces, among other things, as follows:⁵³

⁵³ See the Report of the Committee on the Problems of Indiscipline in the Armed Forces, dated 7th May, 1979.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

- Bad turnout
- Failure of officers and men to pay compliments
- Lateness and lack of sense of time to work and master parades
- Non-enforcement of service regulations and orders (stemming from favouritism, inter-service/unit/sub-unit rivalries, non-enforcement of charges by Military Police, non-punishment for misuse of military property, uniforms and insignia.)
- Low esprit de corps
- Loss of military bearing due to lack of supervision and education by seniors
- Fraternisation of officers with other ranks, resulting in gossip, backbiting and use of junior ranks as spies on officers.
- General maladministration
- Absence of leadership and good example
- Misbehaviour of troops on operations
- AWOL
- Lack of accommodation and transportation
- Low pay and allowances
- Presence of civilians in military barracks (often friends and relations of military personnel.)
- Troops not being afforded an opportunity to see their confidential reports.
- Manpower shortage
- Military involvement in civil administration
- Abuse of channels of communication
- Generally poor “officer-man” relationship
- Poor quality of rations
- Recruitment influenced by nepotism and tribalism
- Suspicions about the credibility of officers among junior ranks.
- Inadequate logistics for operational training
- Poor career planning for officers.
- Irregularities in promotion and appointment of officers and other ranks
- Poor medical care

1.20.5.2 The Committee also made findings to the effect that Gen Acheampong as Head of State, had set the wrong moral tone as his personal morals came in for severe criticism. The evidence before the Committee was that Gen Acheampong and his cohorts had been openly displaying opulence and a lifestyle of moral decadence, including buying VW Golf vehicles for the young girls with whom they consorted.

1.20.5.3 Other Senior Officers and their wives were accused of misusing the other ranks and military resources to further their own personal business interests, to the detriment of Military Discipline and code of ethics. The Committee therefore noted the effects of these factors on the Armed Forces.

1.20.6 These complaints were not to be taken lightly. Indeed, at this time, women who possessed VW Golf cars were subjected to obscene catcalls as the impression gained ground, even in the civilian population, that those vehicles were the product of their immoral associations with Senior Military Officers. These complaints of the soldiers were also borne of the belief that the Head of State was wasting the country's resources on his "young women" who kept him too busy for him to concentrate on issues of governance. These feelings of deprivation as well as envy, fuelled disaffection within the Security Services, and it was not by accident, that "Mr" Acheampong was asked to explain his immoral lifestyle at a press conference, two days before he was executed by firing squad.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.21 The Police Service

1.21.1 The NRC and SMC I Regimes were the most favourable to the Police Service. However, the regimes' good treatment of the service was meant to prop it up as a countervailing force to any destabilisation elements. Indeed, but for the ineffective mobilisation of the Police Armoured Car Squadron, the history of events of 4th June, 1979 would have been different.

1.21.2 The government strengthened the Police Service. Almost all units within the service were re-equipped and an ambitious housing project was started countrywide for the service. The Armoured Car Squadron was re-equipped with state-of-the art MOWAG Armoured Cars fitted with remote controlled surface-to-air missiles, 20mm artillery guns as well as single and double-turret general purpose machine guns and tear-gas dispensers. The name was changed to "Force", and the aim was to make the whole service loyal to the regime in general, and Gen Acheampong in particular. Indeed the more the opposition to the Acheampong Regime grew, the more oppressive the service became in its relations with the public, and consequently hatred of the service also intensified.

1.21.3 The effect of these initiatives was that the whole service was further drawn into partisan politics and members felt obliged to protect the unpopular regime. The hand of the service was strengthened further by a criminal Procedure Code Amendment which gave the Attorney General authority to order the police to detain suspects for 28 days without bail.⁵⁴ As in colonial days, the service became an instrument of repression of the government.

1.22 The 15th May Attempted Coup D'état

1.22.1 On 15th May, 1979, a small group of soldiers under the leadership of one Flight Lieutenant Jerry John Rawlings, a young Air Force Officer, attempted to overthrow the SMC II government. The attempt was foiled, and the culprits were put before a Court-Martial for treason. when the trial opened, the prosecution opened its case by stating the motivation of the young Air Force Officer for what he attempted to do. In the prosecutor's address he stated:

Mr President, the first accused had for a long time felt disillusioned about the injustices in our society, more particularly under Acheampong Regime, and so when in July 1978 the SMC was reconstituted with the removal of Mr Acheampong as Head of State, Jerry John Rawlings thought things were going to be improved. When he realised that there were no improvements in the general conditions of life he was struck with dismay, and lamented over what he termed the tarnished image of the Armed Forces. He regretted that at a time when the military government was due to hand over to a civil Government the Military Government had done practically nothing to improve the image of the Armed Forces.⁵⁵

⁵⁴ NRCD 235, section 5.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

The DPP further stated that Rawlings had said that the situation could be corrected only if Ghana went the “Ethiopian way” because “there was the need for bloodshed to clean up the country, and this should start from within the Armed Forces”.⁵⁶ The grievances of Flt Lt Rawlings, as stated by the DPP, so coincided with those of both the military and civilian population, that the young officer immediately won admiration for what he had attempted to do. The manner the trial began, put the government, rather than the soldiers involved, on trial. Flt Lt Rawlings won further admiration for bravery, when in an era that had become notable for officer-indifference towards the other Ranks, he declared “Leave my men alone”. This insistence that he alone was to be held responsible for what his men had done under his leadership, persuaded the general public of his sincerity and caring attitude towards the ordinary person of low social standing. This was the beginning of the creation of the “Rawlings mystique” that was to bedevil Ghana politics for succeeding decades.

1.23 Conclusion

1.22.1 The Government of the NRC/SMC just confirmed the precedent set in 1966, that the professional training of the security services was not one that prepared them to assume the reigns of government. The regime cannot be spared the guilt of being one that violated the rights of the citizens and even members of the security services themselves.

1.22.2 The seizure of political power and the human rights violations committed were a total deviation from the lawful duties and functions of the security services. In the end, the leaders were consumed by the culture of violence that their involvement in politics had nurtured in the nation.

1.23.0 4th JUNE, 1979 – 23rd SEPTEMBER, 1979: AFRC1.23.1 The Establishment Of The AFRC

1.23.1.1 On 4th June 1979, a coup d’état was staged, mostly by other ranks, following failed attempt on 15th May. Beginning as a mutiny in the Army, it developed into a full-blown coup d’état, and then into an uprising. Flt Lt Rawlings, who was in custody at the offices of the Police Special Branch in Accra, was released by a group of junior ranks from custody and taken a short distance across the Ring Road to the Broadcasting House, where he announced the takeover of government. Although some amount of resistance was put up by forces loyal to the government, the mutineers could not be stopped.

⁵⁵ Oquaye, supra, p 133; also Barbara E Okeke, 4 June : A Revolution Betrayed Ikenga Publishers, Enugu, 1982, p.38.

⁵⁶ Kweku G Folson, “Ideology, Revolution and Development – The Years of Jerry John Rawlings” in GHANA Under PNDC Rule, E Gyimah-Boadi (ed) CODESRIA BOOK SERIES, 1993, p.74 at p.75.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.23.1.2 The new government that was formed, reputedly in a classroom, was named the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council (AFRC), with Flt Lt Rawlings as the Chairman. The initial membership was added unto, two weeks later, and the full membership of the AFRC was as follows:

- Flt Lt J J Rawlings - Chairman
- Capt K Boakye Gyan - Official Spokesman
- Maj Mensah-Poku
- Maj Mensah Gbedemah
- Lt Cdr HC Apaloo
- Capt Kwabena Baah Achamfuor
- WO II Harry K Obeng
- S/Sgt Alex Adjei
- Cpl Owusu Boateng
- LAC John N Gatsiko
- L/Cpl Peter Tasiri
- L/Cpl Ansah Atiemo
- L/Cpl Sarkodee-Addo
- Cpl Sheikh Tetteh
- Pte Owusu Adu

Lt Cdr HC Apaloo died in a motor accident before the end of AFRC rule.

1.23.1.3 These members of the council, none of whom was above the field rank of Major when they staged the coup d'état, stated, at the time, that they did not have any political ambitions. Their leader, Flt Lt Rawlings, stated that:

I wish to avail myself of the opportunity to emphasise once again our resolve not to entrench ourselves in office; we are professional soldiers, and we want to return to the line.⁵⁷

Later historical events that unfolded tested the veracity of this assertion.

1.23.3 Initially it was thought that the coup was to unseat the SMC II government, and to deal with the Senior Military Officers, but events took a different turn when civilians became the targets also. The coup d'état and its aftermath was very bloody. Officers above the rank of Major or its equivalent in the other services, became the targets as well, and the initial proposal was for all of them to be killed without any trial as they were arrested, beaten and detained in guardrooms. Their personal effects were looted from their homes in the various military quarters.

⁵⁷ Radio Broadcast, 17th June, 1979.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 11.23.3 The “House-Cleaning” Exercise*1.23.3.1 The Execution Of The Senior Military Officers

1.23.3.1.1 The AFRC dubbed its exercise “house-cleaning”. In the Military, they proceeded and to deal ruthlessly with the previous military rulers as well as those who had taken up civilian political appointments On Saturday, 16th June, 1979, “Mr” Acheampong and Maj-Gen E K Utuka, a former Commander of the Border Guards, were executed by firing squad. The execution in public of a former Head of State in this manner, was unprecedented and it was condemned in Ghana and abroad.

1.23.3.1.2 Again on Tuesday, 26th June 1979, two other former Heads of State Gen Akuffo and Lt Gen A A Afrifa, as well as three members of the SMC – Maj-Gen Robert E A Kotei, Air Vice-Marshal George Y Boakye, Rear Admiral Joy Amedume, and a former Commissioner for Foreign Affairs, Col Roger Felli, were executed by firing squad, at the Teshie Firing Range. As the Commission received evidence on these events, it became clear that these eight Senior Military Officers, were never tried. Consequently they were denied the opportunity to defend themselves before an impartial tribunal.

1.23.3.1.3 Protests against these executions and other blatant violations of human rights yielded positive results as the Chairman of the AFRC announced in a dawn broadcast that there would be no more executions.

1.23.3.2 III-Treatment of Senior Military Officers

1.23.3.2.1 The remaining Senior Officers, then still in guardrooms were put under the supervision of Other Ranks who shaved their heads, beat them and subjected them to many indignities. Those who had held political office were later put before the newly-established AFRC People’s Courts (dubbed “kangaroo courts”), and imprisoned after conviction.

1.23.3.4 The PIT

1.23.3.4.1 The trial processes at these “kangaroo courts” were preceded by appearance before the Pre-trial Interrogation Team (PIT) made up of Junior Officers - three Captains and a Flying Officer, Capt Sammy Michel as chairman, Capt Victor N Okai Koi , Capt Edmund Koda and Flying Officer Ebenezer Odoi. The PIT was supposed to compile information to serve as evidence for the prosecution, and the members did this, by unorthodox methods. Apart from the humiliation of appearing before Junior Officers, the Senior Officers were subjected to beatings, yelled at consistently, tortured with lighted cigarette-ends, had their ears used as ashtrays, received blinding and ear-splitting slaps from behind, and some were pricked with pins, and they were all subjected to sleep-deprivation. The panel subjected them to a barrage of questions that did not allow time, even for answers, and answers that were not considered truthful elicited further slapping from behind.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.23.3.4.2 The three Captains were later accused of corruption and put before their own body, the PIT, then under the chairmanship of Sqn Ldr Darko-Kumi. They were tried before the People's Court, convicted and sentenced to terms of imprisonment. Two of them, Capt Koda and Capt Okai-Koi later broke jail in November 1979, and escaped from Ghana.

1.23.3.5 The AFRC People's Courts

1.23.3.5.1 The AFRC People's Court was presided over by Sqn Ldr Evaristus K Dargbe and was made up of Junior Officers and Other Ranks. During the trials, the Senior Officers were subjected to beatings by Other Ranks, often their own former domestic assistants. They were subjected to various modes of torture and humiliation before panels that sat behind a screen. Conviction was swift, as some cases lasted only ten minutes, before ridiculously long prison sentences, were handed down. Their properties that had been seized, were then confiscated to the state.

1.23.3.5.2 The first three Senior Officers to be tried, were announced as having been given sentences of five years, eight years and fifteen years respectively. These sentences were later announced as being 50 years, 80 years and 95 years, allegedly because the original sentences announced had been misrepresented by typographical errors. Evidence before the Commission suggested that the changes were made by the Chairman of the AFRC, and not caused by typographical errors, because the sentences announced were considered infuriating by the other Ranks as they were too low. It was thus to assuage the anger of the Other Ranks who threatened to kill the remaining Senior Officers, that the sentences were reviewed upwards. This caused the sentences of those tried later to be hiked to levels as ridiculous as 105 years imprisonment for Col Amevero. The term "AFRC convict" was thus born.

1.23.3.6 The "House-cleaning" extended

1.23.3.6.1 The AFRC also extended the "house-cleaning" to other public civilian institutions. Many top officials were dismissed arbitrarily, and their assets confiscated to the state. These were persons who were believed to be corrupt, or who had been accused of abuse or misuse of their offices, and so they received the same treatment as the Senior Military Officers. Some of these were detained in military guardrooms and others in prisons, only to be told that they had been sentenced to various terms of imprisonment by the AFRC People's Courts.

1.23.3.6.2 In the general civilian population, businessmen and women suspected to be cronies of the earlier military regimes and consequently civilian collaborators of the Senior Military Officers, or just persons who appeared to be affluent or well-heeled, were attacked as being the cause of the nation's economic woes. Some of these were hauled off to prison, or put before the People's Courts that had been set up all over the country, and subjected to questioning which turned out to be a trial that ended them in prison. Many of these were subjected to such brutalities that they did not survive the ordeal, or could never recover their good health thereafter. At this time, being wealthy became a serious offence, for all wealth was criminalised and all wealthy or successful people became targets of military aggression and victimisation.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.23.3.7 The Destruction Of Locations For Hoarding

1.23.3.7.1 The AFRC gave orders that premises on which hoarded goods had been found were to be demolished.⁵⁸ They adopted this policy, in order to compel people with hoarded goods, and landlords of traders to compel them to bring out their goods for sale. Many stores as well as private dwelling houses were consequently demolished in various parts of the country.

1.23.3.7.2 The AFRC ordered the destruction of Makola No1 Market in Accra., On 9th June, goods in the markets in Accra Central were seized and sold to the public at controlled prices. Later, in an effort to mount a major assault on “Kalabule” the Makola No 1 Market was demolished on 20th August, 1979. Goods worth millions of cedis at that time were destroyed and hundreds of traders lost all their stock and capital, and had nowhere else to trade. Evidence before the Commission, indicated that the soldiers looted the market, first on 4th June of some of its goods, then on 20th August, before bull-doing the structures. Civilians who attempted to enter the market or were found looting, were shot and killed.

1.23.4 The AFRC Loses Control

1.23.4.1 Discipline broke down completely as the Chain of Command was disrupted. Armed soldiers took the law into their own hands and ransacked shops and business premises. Shops containing expensive imported luxury items were looted and the goods seized or sold far below their value. Businessmen of Asian origin, particularly Lebanese, Syrians and Indians, were singled out for assault and harassment.

1.23.4.2 Impromptu road blocks were set up throughout Accra and other parts of the country. Civilians who were stopped at these roadblocks, and with rifles pushed into their faces, were asked: “Are you part of the problem or part of the solution?” Crude, humiliating, degrading, inhuman treatment and arbitrary torture were meted out to people believed to have committed various kinds of offences. These included, caning of people, especially traders (often after having been stripped virtually naked), detentions and dismissals from workplaces. The newspapers reported these incidents rather gleefully during this era. In short, the social class that was perceived to have wrecked the nation, ie those above 40 years of age, traders, Senior Military Officers, businessmen and women, were to be eliminated. Indeed, it was reported, and the Commission received evidence, that there was a list of 207 Senior Military Officers to be executed.⁵⁹

⁵⁸ Ghanaian Times vol. 6,692 Friday, 15th June, 1979, p.1. “All Hoarders’ houses go down...Firing Squad to Follow”.

⁵⁹ Testimony of Osahene Boakye Djan to the Commission; also Kevin Shillington, Ghana and the Rawlings Factor, MACMILLAN, London and Basingstoke, 1992, p.51.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.23.4.3 The military as an institution also suffered a great deal. This was an uprising that had been carried out by Junior Ranks. Most of the Senior Officers were removed from their positions and humiliated. They were replaced with junior officers. In this exercise, the Command Structure was severely damaged. This also heightened the state of indiscipline and insubordination among Junior Officers and Other Ranks. There was a total breakdown of law and order. Such chaotic situation created the platform for the violation of human rights. Arbitrary arrests, tortures, beatings, killings, abductions, detentions, threats, seizure of money and personal property and other forms of violence, became frequent events, as armed soldiers left barracks and roamed the streets

1.23.5 The Police

1.23.5.1 On 26th June, 1979, policemen, taking a cue from the military, arrested their superior officers, and chased some out of their stations. This mutiny was quickly brought under control, as the AFRC stepped in to arrest the situation. A committee of inquiry was set up under the chairmanship of Captain Karl Huppenbauer of the Ghana Army, with the following membership: DSP Kwabena Addo Attuah, Dr Kofi Ankomah, Kwamena Ahwoi, WO II Adjei Boadi and Cpl AM Sumaila.⁶⁰

1.23.5.2 This committee was tasked to investigate the disturbances, and it made recommendations which resulted in the dismissal of several police officers, including many senior officers. Many of these dismissed officers, complained that they had not even been invited to appear before the committee, and others, that the committee's findings were completely at variance with the evidence that was provided to it.

1.23.6 The Prisons Service

1.23.6.1 The junior ranks within the Prisons Service also mutinied, following on the heels of their colleagues in the Armed Forces and in the Police Service. The government set up a Committee of Enquiry under the chairmanship of Dr Kwame Frimpong of the Faculty of Law, University of Ghana. This committee presented its report in 1980, and a Government White Paper accepting the recommendations was published in August, 1980. This committee examined the grievances of the junior officers and made recommendations leading to the abolition of the Escort Class, ie the illiterate prison officers. The issue of delayed promotions was also tackled, to ensure that issues of career-progression would receive appropriate attention.

1.23.6.2 Prison conditions were also tackled, with the committee recommending that the pan-latrine system ought to be phased out and water closets provided. Only a few of the recommendations were implemented before the government was overthrown the following year.

1.23.7 The 1979 Elections

⁶⁰ Oquaye, supra, p.151.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.23.7.1 The electoral time-table had already been set, and political campaigns were in full swing when the 4th June mutiny occurred. The leaders of the political parties sought audience with the Chairman of the AFRC, who assured them that elections would be permitted to proceed as planned.

1.23.7.2 Parliamentary and Presidential elections took place on 18th June, but no clear winner emerged, and as the new Constitution provided for an Executive President, there had to be run-off elections. These elections were fixed for 9th July, 1979 between Dr Hilla Limann of the People's National Party (PNP) and Victor Owusu of the Popular Front Party (PFP). Dr. Limann emerged the winner, and arrangements were made for the handing over ceremony fixed for 24th September, 1979.

1.23.8 Split Within The AFRC

1.23.8.1 Soon after its establishment, the AFRC began to experience a power struggle between the Chairman, Flt Lt Rawling, and the Spokesman, Capt Kojo Boakye Djan. This power-struggle took on an ethnic dimension that came close to splitting the ruling body into two parts, even before the handing over date. It would seem that the AFRC, as an entity, would not have lasted had it clung to power for a further month. .

1.23.8.2 Evidence before the Commission indicates that the differences between the two leading personalities of the AFRC were also exacerbated by their adoption of opposing views to the issue of handing over power to the elected civilian government. These differences boiled over into a near shoot-out between the factions the day before the handing over ceremony, and bloodshed was averted, only by divine intervention.

1.23.9 In their avowed effort to do a “house-cleaning” exercise, the AFRC rather promoted indiscipline and violence in the Armed Forces. The result was the breakdown of command and control leading to national insecurity and instability. Their price control activities pushed the economy into chaos and our foreign trade partners placed embargos on our trading activities. Since that fateful period, the nation has been struggling to deal with the problems of national security that were unleashed by the event. Gross human rights violations were perpetrated by the regime and subsequently the members of the Armed Forces have used their weapons to terrorize civilians.

1.24 24TH SEPTEMBER, 1979 -- 30TH DECEMBER, 1981:THIRD REPUBLIC*1.24.1 The Transition

1.24.1.1 The Third Republic was then ushered in with the formal inauguration at the Parliament House in Accra, on the 24th September, 1979. At the handing over, Flt Lt Rawlings told President Limann that his government was on probation. President Limann was faced with the problem of what to do with the AFRC members because they were all in active service. A decision was taken to resettle them by sending them abroad to undertake academic studies and further training. The PNP Government therefore secured a loan of one million dollars (US $ 1,000,000) from an Italian, Chiavelli, ostensibly to resettle the members of the AFRC and their associates. Evidence before the Commission showed that some AFRC members took their share, whilst others did not. In the event, some went abroad, and some remained in Ghana.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.24.1.2 Flt Lt Rawlings opted to go back into the Air Force. This decision had serious implications for Command and Control. For instance, soldiers still looked upon him as “Chairman”, and the “Office of Chairman of AFRC” continued to operate, with the former Chairman continuing to take on the resolution of welfare problems of soldiers. This was clearly an untenable state of affairs and injurious to national security, and something had to be done.

1.24.2 The Limann Government And National Security

1.24.2.1 On 27th November, 1979, Flt Lt Rawlings was retired from the Armed Forces by the government. This caused a lot of ill-feeling in him towards the Limann Government.

1.24.2.2 The leadership of the Security Services at the time, had been appointed by, and worked with, the AFRC, and so this presented difficulties for the new administration as their loyalty to the new government could not be guaranteed. To make matters worse, the CDS, Brig Joseph Nunoo-Mensah and the Army Commander, Brig Arnold Quainoo were not on cordial terms, and this presented further problems for national security.⁶¹ At the end of November, 1979, the heads of the Security Services were retired by the government. These were: Brig Nunoo-Mensah, Brig Arnold Quainoo, CO Lamptey, the IGP and Kofi B Quantson, Director of Special Branch. Other military personnel who had participated actively in the AFRC were also retired.

1.24.2.3 The Director of Military Intelligence, Col Prince Twumasi-Ankrah left Ghana to become a Defence Attaché in India and the Army Commander, Brig. Israel K Amuah, went abroad on course, and did not return. All these incidents affected the stability of the government and security of the State.

1.24.2.4 The government was accused of harassing Flt Lt Rawlings (Rtd) and Capt Kojo Tsikata (Rtd), as the latter had by 1981, been put under overt surveillance, by Military Intelligence. Indeed Capt Tsikata took action in court, and won against the Military Intelligence when they crashed his car.

1.24.2.5 There were many security reports on the apparently subversive activities of Flt Lt Rawlings (Rtd), but the government could not authorise firmer action against him despite the obvious threat that he posed to the security of the State. On at least one occasion, he was interrogated on a report, but he was released, contrary to the expectations of members of the security forces.

⁶¹ Eboe Hutchful, “Reconstructing Civil-Military Relations And The Collapse Of Democracy In Ghana”, 1979-81 African Affairs (1997) Vol 96, pp 535-560 at p. 539.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.24.2.6 There were many other coup plots then brewing, and it seemed as if there was a new one every month. Clearly the Military, particularly the Junior Officers and Ranks, had got restive, since they had tasted the spoils of office, but for too brief a period.

1.24.3 Factors Facilitating The Coup D'état Of 31st December, 1981

1.24.3.1 Certain factors facilitated the success of the coup d'état. The working relationship between the Minister of Defence, Honourable Riley Poku and the CDS, Air Vice-Marshal Odaatey Barnor was poor, and it was a major factor for gross inaction on the part of both the government and the military commanders to prevent the 31st December, 1981 coup d'état. The following graphic account of the poor working relations between the government and security chiefs is given by one author in these words:

In April 1981, Lt. Col. Odjidja, the Director of the Military Intelligence (DMI), addressed a report⁴⁹ to the Minister of Presidential Affairs, the Coordinator of National Security, warning of danger posed by the escalating conflicts between the Minister and his military chief. In this report the DMI blamed the Minister for these conflicts, citing his 'School masterish' attitude, a reference to Riley Poku's profession as school master, and poor human relations with both his senior commanders and the Deputy Minister. The DMI made a long list of charges against the Minister, including undue interference in the day-to-day administration of the armed forces, disregard for the chain of command, disrespect for the CDS, and senior commanders, and interference with command appointments and alleged that service commanders and senior military and civilian officers in the Ministry were unhappy with the Minister... In an interview on 24th July 1995 with John Nabila the then National Security Coordinator, he expressed the view that 'such disagreements at the core of power were progressively to turn a conflict between the officers and ranks into a conflict between the Minister and the CDS. In turn, this compromised the ability of both the government and the military high command to respond to the looming threat from below.'⁶²

1.24.3.2 Evidence before the Commission indicates that Command and Control Structures had completely broken down, and part of the vacuum created had been filled with armed factions and groups, each wielding considerable power. This situation created an environment of distrust, even within the High Command echelon, to the extent that the CDS could not entrust his senior Commanders and Staff Officers with tasks that in normal times would be handled by them.

1.24.3.3 The Officer Corps had also been gripped with the fear of Other Ranks to the extent that officers could not exercise their normal leadership roles over their men and women for fear of incurring their displeasure and subsequent retribution which was always violent and humiliating. This aspect of fear was one of the tangible spill-over effects from the 4th June, 1979 mutiny.

⁶² Hutchful, supra, p. 550

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.24.3.4 It is on record that the coup d'état began with just ten men with the number swelling to about thirty-three by the end of the operation.⁶³ It is, however, noteworthy that the only unit to react in defence of the government was 2nd Infantry Battalion stationed in Takoradi. The Commanding Officer, Lt Col Samuel K. Ofosu-Appiah had earlier on been keeping his Brigade Commander, Col Michael Abana regularly briefed about the involvement of some of his men in this plot to overthrow the government. On 23rd December, 1981, he had these thirteen men arrested and with the help of the Air Force Station Commander in Takoradi, Wing Commander Albert Nkansah, flew them to Accra from where they were sent to the Nsawam Medium Prisons for detention.

1.24.3.5 On Thursday, 31st December, at about 8.30 a.m. when Lt Col Ofosu-Appiah received instructions in a radio conference with the 1 Brigade Commander, Col Michael Abana, to despatch two Calgustav anti-tank weapons to him, he immediately sensed that there was a serious trouble in Accra and instead of complying with the Commander's instructions, he decided to move his unit down to Accra.

1.24.3.6 Unfortunately, he had transportation capacity to move only a little over half a company strong of four officers and sixty seven men. With limited manpower, firepower and Fighting vehicles, the defence offered by Lt Col Ofosu-Appiah and his troops from 2Bn could only be minimal. Some of the 2Bn soldiers were ambushed near the Military hospital and many casualties were sustained. Lt Col Ofosu-Appiah, having failed in his mission fled into exile, as did those soldiers who had betrayed the plot to the authorities at 2BN. Lt Col Ofosu-Appiah, must be commended for his initiative, courage and leadership, and the Officers and men of 2Bn for their bravery, loyalty and their effort to defend the Constitution.

1.24.4 Conclusion

President Limann assumed office at a very difficult time, and his efforts to return security and stability to the country, were undermined by his own party, and the effect of differences between his Minister of Defence and his CDS. Rampant coup plots stretched the resources of the Security Services, and the inability of the Intelligence institutions to react effectively to Intelligence Reports about imminent coups, especially the 31st December coup d'état, made the overthrow of the government inevitable.

1.25 31ST DECEMBER, 1981-6TH JANUARY, 1993:
PROVISIONAL NATIONAL DEFENCE COUNCIL (PNDC)

1.25.1 The PNDC

⁶³ Matthew Adabuga's public hearing before the Commission.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.25.1.1 The “constitutional peace” of the 3rd Republic was shattered when a group of ten serving and ex-military personnel, all junior ranks, led by Flt Lt Rawlings (Rtd) seized power again on the 31st December, 1981, 27 months into the term of the Limann Administration.

1.25.1.2 The Commanding Officer of Recce Regiment, Maj Patrick Omane Collison, was shot and killed when attempting to reach an armoured vehicle in order to respond to the emergency. Two Military Intelligence (MI) NCOs, S/Sgt Seidu Azaah and S/Sgt Awudu were also shot and killed, although they were unarmed. Maj Dasana Nantogmah was also picked up from his office, a few days into the new regime and murdered in his uniform in the guardroom at the Air Force Base.

1.25.1.3 So many were the killings in the guardroom of Air Force Base, Accra, that it quickly gained the nickname of “Slaughter House”.

1.25.1.4 In the usual manner of seizures of power, the 1979 Third Republic Constitution was suspended, the members of the government were dismissed; Parliament was dissolved; and all political parties were banned. Members of Parliament of the PNP, the party leadership and other functionaries were ordered to report to the nearest Police station. For the first time, Members of Parliament of the minority parties were also ordered to report themselves, and they were all subsequently detained. The President and his Ministers were also arrested and detained for being criminals and running a government that was “the most disgraceful government in the history of the country”. Some of these persons were thereby forced to go into exile in the neighbouring countries.

1.25.2 The Military Intelligence

1.25.2.1 The MI Directorate became a target for punishment on account of the unit’s surveillance and other intelligence activities against the coup plotters. MI personnel were arrested, brutalised and detained in prisons, some for upwards of five years. Even those who were on UNIFIL duties in Lebanon at the time, were arrested at the Airport on their return from operations; those on retirement before the coup d’état occurred, were also arrested and subjected to severe torture and detention. Some went into hiding in the country, and others fled into exile in the neighbouring countries. The directorate was eventually disbanded, and most of the members were either dismissed or released from service with retrospective effect from 31st December, 1981.

1.25.3 The PNDC Begins To Rule

1.25.3.1 The Provisional National Defence Council (PNDC) was formed with Flt Lt Jerry John Rawlings as the Chairman. Flt Lt Rawlings did not rely on the military alone for the administration of the country but also on civilians. This is evident from the composition of the PNDC established on 2nd January, 1982, which consisted of four soldiers and three civilians:

- Brig Nunoo-Mensah (retired CDS of AFRC era),
- WO I Joseph Adjei Boadi (Co-ordinator of GAF Defence Committees),

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

- Sgt Daniel Alolga Akata-Pore (then a student of University of Cape Coast and a member of MONAS)
- Chris B Atim (former NUGS Leader and General Secretary of June Fourth Movement),
- Joachim Amartey-Kwei, (dismissed worker and former divisional secretary of ICU at GIHOC)
- Rev Fr Dr Vincent K Damoah (a Catholic Priest, who had been suspended from the priestly ministry by the Catholic Church). The Ministry of Defence was placed under the PNDC Secretariat, and civilians were appointed for the other Ministries, and designated “Secretaries”.

The names of the first Secretaries were:

- B B D Asamoah, Secretary to the PNDC
- Dr Obed Yao Asamoah, Secretary for Foreign Affairs
- John Agyekum Kufuor, Secretary for Local Government
- Miss Ama Atta Aidoo, Secretary for Education
- KB Asante, Secretary for Trade
- Appiah Korang, Secretary for Fuel and Power
- Johnny Hansen, Secretary for the Interior;
- G E K Aikins, Secretary for Justice and Attorney-General
- Professor Bortei-Doku, Secretary for Agriculture
- Ato Austin, Secretary for Information
- Alhaji Iddrisu Mahama, Secretary for Transport and Communication;
- Asiedu Yirenkyi, Secretary for Culture and Tourism;
- Zaya Yeebo, Secretary for Youth and Sports
- Kwaku Ankomah, Secretary for Rural Development and Cooperatives
- Professor Mawuse Dake, Secretary for Works and Housing;
- Dr Kaku Kyiamah, Secretary for Industries, Science and Technology.⁶⁴

They were appointed on Thursday, 21st January, 1982 and assumed duty on Tuesday, 25th January, 1982.

1.25.3.2 There was no Secretary for Finance and Economic Planning but an Economic Review committee was established. Two prominent members of the Committee were: Dr Joseph LS Abbey, a former Economic Advisor to the NRC, SMC I & Commissioner for Finance in SMCII and advisor to AFRC governments; and Dr Kwesi Botchwey, a Senior Lecturer in Law at the Faculty of Law, University of Ghana, and of leftist ideological inclination.

1.25.3.3 Apart from the PNDC and the Secretaries there were other organisations that assisted the government, all of which called themselves “progressive left wing organisations”. These were: the June Fourth Movement (JFM), the People’s Revolutionary League of Ghana (PRLG), the New Democratic Movement (NDM), the Africa Youth Command (AYC), the Movement for Peace and Democracy (MOPAD), and the Kwame Nkrumah Revolutionary Guards (KNRG).

⁶⁴ Daily Graphic Vol 9711, Friday, 22nd January 1982.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.25.3.4 Others who were mobilised to support the PNDC were: the students of the universities, the rank and file of the Armed Forces, the workers, the rural wage labourers and the urban unemployed, and radical intellectuals, especially of the University of Ghana and University Cape Coast. The urban elite, the bourgeoisie, the professional elite, the technocrats and the traditional rulers on the whole stood aloof.⁶⁵ They would not associate themselves with Flt Lt Rawlings and his colleagues, because the rhetoric of the “Holy War” and later the “revolution” had a class bias, which favoured the “masses” and intimidated and alienated the “bourgeoisie”.

1.25.3.5 There is credible evidence that there was an attempt to introduce ideological indoctrination into the barracks. A leaflet titled the “Revolutionary Catechism” made the rounds of military installations. This leaflet contained some dangerous ideas based probably upon Nihilist doctrines favoured by Vladimir Lenin of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, and is reproduced in extenso at the end of this chapter.

1.25.4. Targeting The Well-to-do

1.25.4.1 The PNDC polarised the Ghanaian society into “Citizens” and “People”. The “Citizens” were those who were relatively well-off, and the “People”, those were in the working classes, the very junior officers and the unemployed. Many “Citizens”, presumed to be corrupt, were put before National Investigations Committee (NIC) and Citizens Vetting Committee (CVC) to explain their wealth or to explain how they came by the more than 50,000 cedis in their bank accounts. Soldiers were positioned behind such persons undergoing interrogation, and administered slaps, beatings and military drills, often under orders from civilian panellists.

1.25.4.2 The “People” on the other hand, were organised into Workers’ or People’s Defence Committees (PDCs/WDCs) at the work-place and residential communities respectively. These organisations with manifestly political functions, were formed in the Security Services as well. The Armed Forces Defence Committees, Police Defence Committees and Prisons Defence Committees were formed in contravention of service regulations on participation in such organisations by serving personnel. At one point the AFDC insisted that promotions of Senior Officers were to be brought to them for approval. The operations of these organisations were bound to undermine discipline within the Security Services.

1.25.4.3 The WDCs/PDCs operated the “People’s Shops” in residential areas, and at the work-places, they collected essential commodities from distribution centres for allocation to their co-workers. Many who received goods at control prices turned round and sold some of their allocation at Kalabule prices to market women. However, on the swoops at the markets for price control checks, some of the women traders, who may have obtained their supplies from allocations to members of Security Services, were among those who fell victim to the molestation, flogging and other acts of humiliation and degrading treatment that were meted out to such traders.

⁶⁵ See, Shillington, supra, p.89; also, A A Boahen, The Ghanaian Sphinx: Reflections on the Contemporary History of Ghana, 1972-1987 Ghana Academy of Arts and Sciences, Accra, 1989, p43.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.25.4.4 NCOs were seconded to public institutions and designated PNDC Liaison Officers. These persons were accused of high-handed behaviour in the institutions to which they were attached, as they appeared to have more authority over the retention of jobs in the organisation, than the chief executives.

1.25.4.5 Some of the soldiers ill-treated and harassed civilians, seizing goods at the markets and shops and even at road barriers, and impounding travellers' goods at the airports, harbours and other points of entry. Some of them, on their own initiative, seized private cars, ostensibly for "operations", and crashed them or returned them in an unserviceable state only fit to be disposed of as scrap. Some entered homes, especially those of Lebanese and Syrians to extort monies from them, or to search and seize personal goods of persons they had targeted.⁶⁶ Killings were rampant and mostly carried out by trigger-happy men, sometimes in uniform. All these acts were carried out in the name of the revolution.⁶⁷

1.25.4.6 The February, 1982 Incident In Kumasi

1.25.4.6.1 In early February, 1982, the city of Kumasi witnessed the vicious attacks on, and burning of homes of members of "The Lord is My Shepherd Church", led by Odiyifo Asare. The members of this Church had beaten up and caused the death of an Army Medical officer, Maj Joe Darko who had attacked them while they were at worship on Sunday, 7th February, 1982. A policewoman, Cpl Joanna Essien, a member of the Church, who was alleged to have disarmed the Officer and whose jaw had been grazed by a bullet when the gun went off, became a target. The soldiers chased her to the Okomfo-Anokye Teaching Hospital where she had undergone surgery and was receiving blood transfusion. She was shot dead in her bed, and the doctor who performed the surgery on her had to escape from the hospital and out of Kumasi in his theatre-gown. He later left the country. Other patients on the ward, frightened by what had taken place, fled from the hospital.

1.25.4.6.2 Kumasi was put under siege as soldiers set up road blocks on all exit points out of Kumasi and put down all passengers of vehicles leaving the city. Members of the church who had been arrested, were positioned at the barriers to identify their church members who were attempting to escape from Kumasi. Those so identified were arrested, taken to the office of 2 Brigade and 4Bn, detained and subjected to torture. At 4Bn, S/Sgt Nyamekye, a serving soldier and member of the church, was executed under a tree, and his blood spattered all over the ground. Later, seven male members of the church who had been arrested, were made to sit in the blood, subjected to horrendous torture and threatened with execution if the Odiyifo were not found by a certain day. They were rescued by WO I Adjei Boadi, member of the PNDC, who sent them to Kumasi Central Prisons to be detained for their own safety, and in order that they might be given medical attention. They were released three weeks later, when the fury of the soldiers had abated.

1.25.4.6.3 Odiyifo Asare, who had gone into hiding, surrendered to the police on 9th February to stop the terror that had been unleashed on his church members. He was handed over to the soldiers, who paraded him through the streets of Kumasi, killed him at Kejetia and burnt his body. All his property, including his cars, were burnt, and so were houses whose tenants were members of the church. People in the central business district of Kumasi had to walk with their hands raised high up as a sign of surrender, for a number of days.

⁶⁶ Boahen, supra, p. 44.

⁶⁷ Shillington, supra, p.89.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.25.5 The ARPB Publishes List Of Dead

1.25.5.1 At the end of July, 1982, the Association of Recognised Professional Bodies (ARPB) published a list of over 200 names of persons who had been murdered by soldiers since 31st December, 1981, and in which no prosecution had taken place or seemed likely to take place.⁶⁸ This list did not include those murdered by soldiers and pushed into a disused shaft, Mfantse Mine shaft, at the “ABA Mines” at Aboso, near Tarkwa, nor did it include many others in other parts in the country. There is no indication that apart from a few instances, any action was ever taken to punish the perpetrators.

1.25.6 Burning Of Tamale Market

1.25.6.1 On the afternoon of Friday, 5th February, 1982, an Information Service Department van made an official announcement at the Tamale Central Market, that all traders were to leave the market by 6 p.m., and not return until Monday morning. Those who delayed leaving the market were molested and chased out. At dawn on Monday, 8th February, 1982, the market was set on fire by soldiers. Soldiers positioned themselves at the gates, firing indiscriminately, and thereby preventing the traders from entering the market to salvage their goods. A few traders whose stalls had not yet been reached by the flames requested the soldiers to permit them to retrieve some of their goods. In response to these requests, the soldiers poured petrol on, and fired into the sections not yet touched by the fire, thereby setting them ablaze. A mad man who attempted to pick up a piece of yam that had been roasted by the fire was shot dead, as was also a little school boy who was caught by a stray bullet as he watched the event from a distance. There was evidence before the Commission that some of the stalls had been looted before the burning. The market took a couple of days to burn to ashes, whilst the traders lamented their loss. Everything in the market, money, goods, sewing machines, bicycles, etc were all completely burnt.

1.25.6.2 Traders and businessmen and women lost their capital, and many families became impoverished overnight. It was a great loss for Tamale in particular, and the Northern Region in general.

1.25.6.3 Evidence before the Commission clearly showed that the Fire Service Department did not make any effort to put out the fire while the market was burning. Later, they held a Departmental Inquiry into the incident and concluded, in the face of overwhelming evidence, that the cause of the fire was unknown.

1.25.7 Commandos

⁶⁸ Ibid. p 90.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.25.7.1 The PNDC established two Commando Units, the Military and Police Commandos. In order to form the Military Commando Unit, some of the young men who had been recruited, originally to join the regular Armed Forces in 1983, were selected and given special training and appointed into the Public Service by the Public Services Commission. They were sent to Cuba for their initial training, which covered many military disciplines such as sniping and counter-insurgency tactics. On their return from Cuba, they were given further training at Asutsuare. Maj Courage Quashigah, Capt George Pattington and Capt Larry Gbevlo-Lartey were some of the officers from the regular Army who helped to establish the 64 Infantry Regiment, also called the Commando Unit. Some of the Commandos were stationed at the Castle, others at Cantonments, and also at Asutsuare. These were formed into three Companies namely: Alpha, Bravo and Charlie.

1.25.7.2 By virtue of their training, ideological orientation and better motivation, they considered themselves superior to soldiers in the regular Army. They were very well equipped and very well paid, and operated under the office of the Co-ordinator of National Security.

1.25.7.3 The Police Commandos were under the Command of one RSM Jack Bebli, a policeman who had left the Police Force before 31st December, 1981. On the official level, he reported to the Police Headquarters' Schedule Officer in charge of Operations through the Commander of the Armoured Car Squadron (ACS). Operationally, he could also report directly to the Commanding Officer of the 64 Infantry Regt. However, unofficially he reported directly to the Castle. All the personnel undertook regular training and were trained in the use of weapons such as, AK-47 assault rifles, rocket launchers, machine guns, hand grenades and other sophisticated equipment. The instructors were drawn from the Cuban Military, supported by Maj Quashigah, and Capt Pattington, and food ration was supplied by the regular Armed Forces. The Unit operated from a refurbished garage in the Cantonments Police Barracks in Accra. They worked in close collaboration with the Military Commandos as both units were formed primarily to provide personal security and protection for Flt Lt Rawlings.

1.25.7.4 There was a very uneasy and uncomfortable relationship between the Commandos and the other servicemen. The Commandos were, however, generally dreaded by the civilian population. There were complaints of killings, torture, intimidation, harassment and meddling in civil matters such as land disputes made against them.

1.25.7.5 The BNI cells were places of detention and interrogation of a host of persons who were detained on suspicion of plotting to overthrow the government. The Commando Units were allowed access to BNI cells from where, masked, they removed detainees at midnight, blindfolded them and subjected them to gross methods of torture at various locations in Accra and Asutsuare. Some detainees died as a result of the torture. However, no accurate records of these persons were kept by the BNI, thus contributing to the number of persons now unaccounted for, and therefore listed as "disappeareds".

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.25.7.6 The Commandos were untouchable as they seemed to have had complete protection from the government, to do whatever they did. The following account given by one Kyereme Djan, a former student of the then University of Science and Technology, at his trial for attempting to overthrow the PNDC illustrates the power that these extra security services wielded:

I was arrested in the early hours of 30th October, 1985 at Community 11, Tema in our house. When I was arrested, I was taken to Police Headquarters on the Ring Road in Accra. I was kept in cells at the Police Headquarters. I was called to the counter around 8:00pm or thereabout and one Jack Bebli asked the counter man to release me to him and four other soldiers all holding guns. When the counter policeman refused on the grounds that I was detained on the instructions of the IGP and that I could only be released on his instructions, Jack got angry and said, “fuck the IGP! If you don’t want what will happen to this chap to happen to you then just release the chap.” The counter policeman then released me to them.⁶⁹

1.25.7.7 The Deputy Director of BNI at the time, Peter Nanfuri, complained to the Public Tribunal trying Kyereme Djan and others for subversion that the Commandos were so powerful that he was powerless to restrain them from torturing suspects in the custody of the BNI.⁷⁰

1.25.7.8 The presence of the Police Commando Unit heightened indiscipline in the Service. Control over weapons was difficult as the group was also armed. As service logistics and other resources continued to diminish, the Commando Unit appeared not to be under any resource-constraints.

1.25.8 The Murder Of The Judges And Retired Army Officer

1.25.8.1 Perhaps one of the biggest human rights tragedies ever to have hit Ghana, was the kidnapping and murder of three High Court Judges, and a retired Army Officer, Mrs Justice Cecilia Koranteng-Addow, Mr. Justice Kwadwo Agyei Agyepong, Mr Justice Fred Poku Sarkodee and Maj Sam Acquah, the Group Personnel Manager of the Ghana Industrial Holding Corporation (GIHOC). They were abducted during curfew hours of 30th June, 1982 from their homes, driven to the military range at Bundase in the eastern Accra Plains, about fifty kilometres from Accra. They were found to have been murdered by L/Cpl S K Amedeka, L/Cpl Michael Senyah, Johnny Dzandu and “Tonny” Tekpor, who also attempted to burn the bodies to conceal the crime. They would have been successful, but for the timely intervention of a rain storm, that prevented the bodies from being burnt beyond recognition.

1.25.8.2 The nation stood silent in shock and grief, and the world was stunned by what had happened in Ghana. The PNDC denied complicity even though one of the persons implicated in the abduction and murder, Amartey-Kwei, was a member of the

⁶⁹ See George Agyekum The Treason Trial of 1986. Justice Trust Publications, Cantonments, 2001, Accra, p.162.

⁷⁰ Ibid.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

PNDC. In addition, Capt Kojo Tsikata, the Head of National Security and Security Advisor to the PNDC, four soldiers and two ex-soldiers were also found to have been involved in the conspiracy to kidnap and kill the victims. The Special Investigation Board (SIB) under the chairmanship of a former Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Samuel Azu Crabbe enquired into the incident.

1.25.8.3 The SIB's work was supported by the investigations of the Police Investigating Team, originally headed by Deputy Commissioner of Police (CID) Daniel K Nzeh, but later taken over by his deputy, Chief Superintendent Jacob Jabuni Yidana, who did a splendid piece of investigation to unearth the culprits. The other members of the original team were:

Tetteh Ahinakwa	Assistant Commissioner of Police
P Agboba	Deputy Superintendent of Police
Edmund Ohene-Asah	Deputy Superintendent of Police
Kwabena Gyamfi	Assistant Superintendent of Police
William Oduro	Assistant Superintendent of Police
JF Tordimah,	Detective Chief Inspector
Samuel Adu-Darko	Detective Inspector
Akoto Bamfo	Detective Corporal; and
MA Musah	Detective Corporal.

1.25.8.4 Some of these officers left the team before it began its work, or before the investigation had travelled any distance. Of those left, Yidana, as well as almost all the members of the team, paid a price for their efficient conduct of the investigations and display of professionalism. Some wound up in prison, and others in exile. As the then Head of BNI, Kofi B. Quantson has stated in confirmation of the claims of threats and harassment meted out to the members of the Police Investigations team, the police officers were in danger, not because they were traitors. They were in danger because in the performance of their professional duties they had become targets for persecution and probably elimination... I recall the pathetic case of Mr. Dan Nzeh, then head of CID... He had to flee the country to the UK... Dan died in exile... And I was certainly sorry for the way my friend Yidana was persecuted.⁷¹

1.25.8.5 Chief Superintendent Yidana was actually arrested, prosecuted and convicted for harbouring a fugitive from justice, Lt Ken Korah, even before the Final Report of the SIB was issued. Although there was evidence before the Public Tribunal that Yidana had not been staying in the house, and none that he even knew of the man's presence in his house for one night, he was still convicted. He, his wife, Victoria, two of his friends Yahaya Seidu and Alhaji Mumuni Baba, who just chanced by the house and gave a lift to Lt Korah upon request, were tried for the offence and convicted. Fortunately for Mrs Yidana, she had by then fled into exile. Yidana was sentenced to eight years' imprisonment, but contrary to prison regulations, he served eight calendar years, thereby being deprived of the automatic one-third remission of sentence enjoyed by every prisoner in Ghana. ASP William Oduro, fled from prison during the jail break of 19th June, 1983 while in detention for alleged subversive activities. Both these officers insist that the charges against them were false. Others, such as Nzeh and Ohene-Asah, fled into exile after being dismissed for no stated cause, and Detective Corporal Musah was briefly detained, handed a Letter of Transfer to Kumasi, and made to leave Accra the same day.

⁷¹ KB Quantson, Ghana: NATIONAL SECURITY...The Dilemma, NAPASVILLE VENTURES, A 2003, p.183.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.25.8.6 On the available evidence, these police officers suffered a great deal for the competent manner in which they performed the work assigned to them. They deserve the nation's commendation and recognition for not retreating when it became obvious that they would be confronting persons within the highest echelons of power, and in the face of massive official intimidation and harassment. As Quantson has again stated:

To be asked to investigate murders of the nature committed under circumstances that suggested high-level political involvement in near chaotic revolutionary conditions, is to be asked to sign and execute your own death warrant... All those involved in those dangerous investigations deserve national honours.⁷²

1.25.8.7 A question that requires reflection is this: If Joachim Amartey-Kwei was the only high-ranking member of the PNDC involved in the murders, then who was behind all the harassment that members of the team suffered after he was detained, and even many years after he was executed?

1.25.9 Destabilisation Attempts.

1.25.9.1 There was considerable opposition to the PNDC Regime, as evidenced by the large number of coup plots and coup attempts. There were as many as seven of them between March, 1982, and June, 1983. The PNDC dealt ruthlessly with persons accused of involvement in these incidents. Almost all persons alleged to be involved were executed after being tried, sometimes in camera, at the Public Tribunals. These incidents cost Ghana a great deal in men, equipment and materials. In addition, a lot of arms and ammunition found their way into unauthorised hands. For instance, in March, 1982, one of those coups attempts resulted in the shelling of Gondar Barracks, and the resultant exposure of a large cache of arms and ammunition newly-imported into the country. This created a free-for-all scramble for the guns.

1.25.9.2 On one of those coup-attempt situations, a Calgustav bomb landed in a private house at Teshie, causing many deaths and severe injuries to the occupants of the house. The military stopped the police from investigating the matter, but there is no evidence that there was ever a formal investigation into the event after collecting the pots and pans of one of the victims for further examinations.

1.25.9.3 The 19th June, 1983 Coup Attempt And Its Aftermath.

⁷² Quantson, supra, p 180.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.25.9.3.1 On 19th June, 1983, there was a major attempt to topple the PNDC Government. This was perhaps the most daring and most serious attempt to overthrow the PNDC. This began with a jail-break at Ussher Fort, James Fort and, eventually, Nsawam Prisons. Most of the soldiers in detention were released, and many fled the country. Those who were re-arrested because they were returning to custody at James Fort Prison, were executed right in front of the prison gates. At Nsawam Prison, a prison officer was killed and one was injured, whilst one MI soldier was shot by the intruders.

1.25.9.3.2 In the course of the foiling of the attempt, the PNDC caused an announcement to be made that anyone found in track suit was to be shot on sight. This created a serious panic because it was a Sunday morning, when many young men were out jogging, or playing various sports, and some, in track suits. There were a number of killings that day in consequence of these instructions.

1.25.9.3.3 Following the suppression of the attempt, the government announced the commencement of an operation to flush out the dissidents, code-named ‘Operation Search and Destroy’. A number of people were killed as a result of the activities of the Operation Squad. Indeed, one was executed in broad daylight near the Adabraka Traffic lights at Farrar Avenue. On another occasion, two MI detainees who had escaped from prison on 19th June, and three or four civilians who had been arrested with them at the border with Cote D’Ivoire, were taken to the Border Guard Headquarters in Accra, and detained in the guardroom. While in detention several days later, and without the authority of the Commander of the Border Guards, Brig Albert Tehn-Addy, they were visited by WO I Adjei Boadi, who, in the name of ‘Operation Search and Destroy’, executed the unarmed men who had just finished their meal.

1.25.9.3.4 There were trials in absentia of the 19th June coup plotters at the Public Tribunals, and some of them were sentenced to death in absentia.

1.25.10 The February, 1985 Assassination Attempt In Kumasi

In February, 1985, the Asantehene, Otumfuo Opoku Ware II, celebrated the Golden Jubilee of the restoration of the Asante Confederacy, in Kumasi. The main event was a durbar at the Kumasi Sports Stadium, which was to be addressed by the Head of State, Flt Lt Rawlings. Later, it transpired that a plot had been hatched to assassinate the Head of State at that function. The Military authorities received information on the plot and moved swiftly to arrest the culprits. A private house in which one of the dissidents was suspected to be hiding was ransacked and then dynamited. Many young soldiers were allegedly involved in the plot and it led to the subsequent arrest and torture of the suspects, one of whom, Cpl Anthony Yeboah, is still listed as having disappeared while in custody. Those who survived the excruciating tortures administered to extract information, remained in detention in prison until 1992.

1.25.11 Killings at Air Force Station, Accra

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.25.11.1 On 23rd March, 1984, dissidents led by L/Cpl Alidu Giwa entered Ghana from La Cote D'Ivoire to overthrow the government. They were arrested and sent to the 3Bn at Sunyani. The process of arrest involved a shoot-out, and so some of them had been wounded. A team of Commandos were sent from Accra to airlift them from Sunyani to Accra. From Togo, another group that had infiltrated the country by boat in order to link up with the Côte D'Ivoire group, was discovered in the Ningo area, and arrested by the local PDCs. The two groups were taken to the Air Force Station on Saturday, 24th March, 1984. Some had been wounded, and one was on a stretcher, but they were all in chains. After a brief interrogation, they were executed one after the other, by firing squad.

1.25.11.2 The interrogations and executions were video-taped by Riad Hozaifeh at the instance of the Chairman of the PNDC. The following Monday, it was reported in the newspapers that three 'dissidents', who had already been sentenced to death in absentia by the Public Tribunals, had been executed, and that some others had been killed in a shoot-out with the security services. It would seem, however, that about seven persons were executed at the Air Force Station that day, and not all of them had had death sentences imposed on them in absentia.

1.25.12 Premature Releases From GAF

1.25.12.1 There were several instances of retirement of officers and discharge of men and women from service which did not follow the approved procedures for release. Officers were not served with the notification for "Intended Release" which gave them the right to respond to, and accept the reasons for their release, and other ranks were summarily discharged without having the opportunity of being interviewed by their Commanding Officers, who would have informed them of the reasons for their discharge.

1.25.13 Abuse Of Service Regulations

1.25.13.1 Soon after the PNDC came to power, an announcement went out that all dismissed personnel of the security services should report to their old units for re-engagement. Many of those who responded to the call were persons who had been dismissed for gross misconduct or serious offences. For instance, L/Cpl Samuel Amedeka, the leader of the gang that murdered the Judges, had previously been dismissed from the Army for rape. These unsavoury characters went back into the Armed Forces, got back their military uniforms, and were provided with arms and ammunition. Some of them immediately proceeded to settle scores with those they held responsible for their original dismissals. These "returnee soldiers" were also not restored to the pay rolls immediately, leaving them with a great temptation to use their new-found power to secure a means of livelihood – and many used their weapons to commit crimes against the general populace. It took some time before they were screened, and then formally re-engaged.

1.25.13.2 Various security and para-military agencies set up their own detention centres and created their own adjudicating systems. These institutions operated as if they were a law unto themselves, and for all practical purposes, were above the law.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.25.13.3 Service personnel suffered some of the worst forms of abuse. For the military, provision was made for the establishment of Military Tribunals with power to sentence to death, without legal assistance, without legal presence on the panel and without right of appeal.⁷³ The jurisdiction of these tribunals covered civilians, serving and retired personnel, as well as deserters from the GAF. Any soldier who fell foul of the law ran the risk of receiving a less than equal measure of justice from his own institution.

1.25.13.4 There was rampant use of detentions for service personnel. Whenever allegations of coup plotting were made, service personnel implicated were immediately arrested, tortured and detained. Sometimes they were not even allowed to inform any one of their mishap, with the result that for some of them, no one knew why or where they had been detained, and on their release, they discovered that the Armed Forces Records Office had not even been made aware of their absence from their units. Some of those arrested were not even interrogated, before being sent to prison, for as long eight years, in some cases. Many of such service personnel were informed that within a few days of their detention, all their personal belongings had been stolen. Contrary to Armed Forces Regulations, there was no publication covering such detention. For some of them, it took about two years before an Executive Instrument was made, to give retrospective effect to the detention.

1.25.14 Dismissals In The Police Service

1.25.14.1 The invitation that went out that all dismissed personnel of the security services should report to their old units for re-engagement, also affected the police. Many of those who responded to the call were persons who had been dismissed for gross misconduct, or serious offences. For instance, RSM Jack Bebli, the leader of the Police Commandos, had left the Police Service years earlier, but returned when the PNDC came to power. These unsavoury characters got back into uniform, and acquired political power, as well as arms and ammunition. Some of them immediately proceeded to settle scores with those they held responsible for their original dismissals. These “returnees” posed a disciplinary problem as many could not be controlled by the Service Hierarchy because their source of power and their loyalties, lay outside the service.

1.25.14.1 In the Police Service, some of the worst forms of victimisation and arbitrary dismissals occurred during this time. In 1988, the Police Service (Amendment) Law, 1988 (PNDCL 194A) was enacted. Made on 18th March, 1988, and gazetted on 29th December, 1989, this Law, composed of two sections only, provided that the PNDC had power to dismiss and remove officers from the Service, and ousted the jurisdiction of the courts in case of such action against any officer. A number of senior and junior officers were victimised by this law since they were unable to challenge the bases of their removal or dismissal from office.

1.25.15 Prison Service

⁷³ Special Military Tribunal (Amendment) Law, 1984 (PNDCL 77); Special Military Tribunal (Amendment) (No.2) Law, 1984 (PNDCL 100).

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.25.15.1 Most of the abuses suffered by prisoners and detainees in prison were perpetrated by Prison Officers. Contrary to Prisons Service Regulations and Standing Orders, Prison Officers maltreated the detainees physically, or subjected them to very poor diet, very bright lighting and insanitary facilities in the cells. The use of leg-irons and “monkey-chains”, on prisoners, often without just cause violated the rights of the prisoners.

1.25.15.2 Prisons Regulations have always had clear orders regarding death by hanging. Therefore, in the wake of the amendment to the Criminal Procedure Code which made it possible for persons sentenced to death to be hanged or to be executed by firing squad, and which made it unnecessary for the location of the execution to be stated by the sentencing judge, the ground rules for executions were completely changed. Death by firing squad was not part of the training of prison officers, and so they were undertaken by the police or the military. Without prior knowledge of where the execution would take place, the Prison Officers could not make the necessary preparations for proper burial, leaving them with unclear orders as to how to dispose of the remains of those so executed. It was therefore inevitable that those executed by firing squad, could not be accorded the decorous burial forms and rites prescribed under the regulations.

1.25.15.3 Evidence the Commission found, upon conducting exhumations, was that several bodies were placed in unmarked graves, or lumped together, wrapped only in woollen blankets and wearing everyday apparel, including footwear, wristwatches, etc without any coffins. This constituted a violation of the executed persons’ right to dignity in death.

1.25.16 The People’s Militia

1.25.16.1 The organization of People’s Militias was one of the concepts pushed by the revolutionaries in order to serve as a counterpoint to the dominance of the military over weapons of violence. They were thus a manifestation of the PNDC leadership’s concept of the “democratization of violence” – a notion that when everyone was able to wield arms then the military’s monopoly over the use of violence would be broken, and their capacity to bully civilians undermined. These militias were recruited from the ranks of ordinary people who wished to volunteer for such activities.

1.25.16.2 Persons from various parts of the country underwent training in shooting at Military installations⁷⁴ and then were assigned various tasks. Those at the borders helped to check smuggling, whilst those at the harbour checked Port Security and non-payment of appropriate customs dues. Military personnel in active service were assigned to take charge of the Militias. For instance, S/Sgt Tornyeviadzi and WO I Kwabena N Nkwantabisa were in charge of the Volta Region People’s Militia and the Tema Harbour Militia respectively. In 1984, Pond and Sea Fishermen were given military training to counter any invasion by sea, and to combat smuggling by sea. The training, carried out by soldiers of Field Engineers led by Maj A.A. Donkor and WO I Andreas Tetteh, was code-named “Operation Shoot To Kill”.⁷⁵

⁷⁴ Ghanaian Times, vol 8089 Tuesday, 3rd January, 1984, back page.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.25.16.3 On account of the nature of their tasks and the fact that it was a volunteer organization, it attracted mainly persons who were not otherwise gainfully employed. They wielded great power and were fully armed, although they were not paid a salary. The result of such combination of factors was a group of persons trained in the handling of weapons, provided with weapons and with responsibility, but receiving no official income.

1.25.16.4 Many of the abuses and fatal shooting incidents perpetrated by the militiamen stemmed from these operational factors. Indeed, in October, 1988, Militias attacked a village, Agortime-Afegame, in the Volta Region, ostensibly to check smuggling, and caused over 200 hundred of the villagers to take refuge in Togo. These refugees had to be hosted by the Togolese Government in a Refugee Camp in Togo.

1.25.16.5 The Militias were later reorganised and put under proper Command under Col Alex Antwi and then Brig Tehn-Addy, and re-named The Civil Defence Organisation (CDO).

1.25.17 Abuse Of Custodial Facilities

1.25.17.1 The rules regarding the use of custodial facilities at police stations were completely disregarded, leading to the many illegal detentions by service personnel that occurred. Soldiers had unrestricted use of police cells and were not required by anyone to indicate the reason for which a suspect had been arrested. They also expected the police to hold whoever had been taken into the cells until they themselves returned for them. This led to detentions in police cells, often for no just cause, for an indeterminate length of time

1.25.17.2 In the various prison establishments, prison officials, in flagrant disregard of service regulations, accepted persons into their custody without any warrants. Such conduct resulted in persons remaining in the prisons, only because the soldiers who took them there had forgotten to go back to secure their release.

1.26 Events Of 1992

1.26.1 After considerable pressure from international and national quarters, the PNDC decided to return the country to constitutional rule. The Constitution was drawn up and promulgated in 1992. Presidential and Parliamentary elections were slated for November and December, 1992, respectively.

1.26.2 Many of the detained service personnel were released from detention in April, 1992. Some had been in detention for so long that they had lost all family and become destitute. Many left Ghana to go into exile in the neighbouring countries.

⁷⁵ Ghanaian Times, vol 8104 Friday, 20th January, 1984, p.1.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

1.26.3 During the electioneering campaign, there was great tension. Soldiers were deployed in Kumasi to keep order, but it was generally felt that they had been deployed to intimidate the electorate. After the end of the Presidential Elections, the Chairman of the PNDC, who had retired from the GAF in obedience to the dictates of the Constitution, and had been nominated as the Presidential Candidate of three political parties which had formed an alliance – the Progressive Alliance - was declared the winner. Some of the opposing parties decided to boycott the Parliamentary Elections, citing electoral irregularities. Some activists of opposing parties in Kumasi, in particular, were arrested to be sent to Accra. One of them, Nana Yaw Boakye, an ex-serviceman refused to permit his arrest and held the military to a two-day gun battle. He later surrendered, but not before a number of people had been injured by stray bullets and one had been killed. All the arrested persons were transported to Accra by helicopter, and detained for two weeks in BNI cells. They were later released without charge.

1.26.4 On 6th January, 1993, a number of senior Police Officers were dismissed or retired prematurely. Some of these persons insist that their vigilance during the electioneering campaign caused the abrupt termination of their careers.

1.26 INTELLIGENCE FABRICATION IN GHANA'S SECURITY SYSTEM

1.27.1 Information received and acted upon by intelligence-gathering organisations of the Security Services in the country was sometimes defective, or even fabricated. Such fabricated information led to the arrest, detention and maltreatment of people on whom such false reports had been made. The maltreatment of these people was sometimes brutal, resulting in serious injuries and, in some cases, deaths. As expressed by a former Head of Intelligence Services:

Over the years so much incalculable harm has been done to so many people because of false reports that have been made against them. Some of the victims suffered unduly long periods of detention. Some suffered physical and mental brutalities. Some lost their lives. Some had disrupted marriages. Some completely lost their means of livelihood because of the processes they had to endure in the security system. Worse still some got devastated by the stigma that they had come to security notice. The stigma stuck to some of them stubbornly and unshakeably forever... Really of all the people who have created problems for security over the years, the most dastardly are those who come peddling damaging fabricated reports. Without exception fabricators and peddlers spring into action the moment any government assumes office.⁷⁶

1.27.2 It would thus seem that some members of the civilian population were the ones who, knowing the inadequate investigative resources of the Security agencies and consequently what suffering would be unleashed on their victims, used the Agencies

⁷⁶ K B Quantson, GHANA: PEACE AND STABILITY Chapters From The Intelligence Sector. NAPASCOM LTD Accra, 2000 pp.107-108.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

for their own purposes, thereby bearing moral responsibility for the abuses perpetrated against others.

1.28 CONCLUSION

1.28.1 The PNDC came to power after announcing what they called a “Holy War”, it proceeded to re-organise and re-order Ghanaian society. The PNDC preached left-wing philosophies and established bodies, called “revolutionary organs”. These organs polarized society, and created enmity between the unemployed, and working class persons on the one part, and middle-class and the well-to-do citizens, on the other.

1.28.2 The Junior Ranks of the military were again in power, and without effective disciplinary control, they took the law into their own hands, harassed and brutalised the populace. They subjected the citizenry to gross human rights abuses that had a damaging impact on life in the country. The revolutionary organs existed within the Security Services too, and this affected Command and Control, as well as loyalty to the Republic

1.28.3 The PNDC established new security units: the Military Commando Unit, the Police Commando Unit and People’s Militia or Civil Defence Organisation. The two former units were primarily for the security and protection of the Chairman of the PNDC, and the latter was a para-military organisation. These Commandos and Militiamen were also very brutal in their dealings with civilians. The Militias were responsible for some of the major upheavals that occurred, particularly in the Border areas as they were charged with the responsibility of checking smuggling and dissident activity.

1.28.4 The atrocities unleashed on the Ghanaian population in the early part of the PNDC era, were matched only by what took place in the 112 days of the AFRC. Evidence before the Commission indicated that a document circulated in the barracks, especially among Junior Officers and Other Ranks, called “Revolutionary Catechism” that extolled Nihilist ideas. These ideas could very well have spurred soldiers on to persecute and eliminate where necessary, “enemies of the revolution”. The impact that these ideas might have had on the attitudes and behaviour of some of the soldiers during the hey-day of the “revolution”, makes it necessary for sections of it to be quoted in full:

“THE REVOLUTIONARY CATECHISM*The Duties of a Revolutionary towards Himself.*

1. The revolutionary is a doomed man. He has no personal interests, no business affairs, no emotions, no attachments, no property and no name. Everything in him is wholly absorbed in the single thought and the single passion for revolution.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

2. The revolutionary knows that in the very depths of his being, not only in words but also in deeds, he has broken all the bonds which tie him to the social order and the civilized world with all its laws, moralities, and customs and with all its generally accepted conventions. He is their implacable enemy and if he continues to live with them it is only in order to destroy them more speedily.
3. The revolutionary despises all doctrines and refuses to accept the mundane sciences, leaving them for future generations. He knows only one science: the science of destruction. For this reason, but only for this reason, he will study mechanics, physics, chemistry and perhaps medicine. But all day and all night he studies the vital science of human beings, their characteristics and circumstances and all the phenomena of the present social order. The object is perpetually the same: the surest and quickest way of destroying the whole filthy order.
4. The revolutionary despises public opinion. He despises and hates the existing social morality in all its manifestations. For him, morality is everything which contributes to the triumph of the revolution. Immoral and criminal is everything that stands in its way.
5. The revolutionary is a dedicated man, merciless towards the State and towards the educated classes; and he can expect no mercy from them. Between him and them there exists, declared or concealed, a relentless and irreconcilable war to the death. He must accustom himself to torture.
6. Tyrannical towards himself, he must be tyrannical towards others. All the gentle and enervating sentiments of kinship, love, friendship, gratitude and even honour must be suppressed in him and give place to the cold and single-minded passion for revolution. For him there exists only one pleasure, one consolation, one reward, one satisfaction - the success of the revolution. Night and day he must have but one thought, one aim - merciless destruction. Striving cold-bloodedly and indefatigably towards this end, he must be prepared to destroy himself and to destroy with his own hands everything that stands in the path of the revolution...

The Relations of the Revolutionary towards his Comrades

7. The revolutionary can have no friendship or attachment except for those who have proved by their actions that they, like him, are dedicated to revolution. The degree of friendship, devotion and obligation towards such a comrade is determined solely by the degree of his usefulness to the cause of total revolutionary destruction...

The relations of the Revolutionary towards Society.

8. ... The revolutionary enters the world of the state, of the privileged classes, of the so- called civilization, and he lives in this world only for the purpose of bringing about its speedy and total destruction. He is not a revolutionary if he has any sympathy for this world. He should not hesitate to destroy any position, any place, or any man in this world. He must hate everyone and everything in it with an equal hatred. All the worse for him if he has any relations with parents, friends or lovers, he is no longer a revolutionary if he is swayed by these relationships.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

(The italics in original.)

9. Aiming at implacable revolution, the revolutionary may and frequently must live within society while pretending to be completely different from what he really is, for he must penetrate everywhere, into all the higher and middle classes, into the houses of commerce, the churches, and the palaces of the aristocracy, and into the worlds of the bureaucracy and literature and the military, and also into the Third Division and the Winter Palace of the Tsar.
10. This filthy social order can be split up into several categories. The first category comprises those who must be condemned to death without delay. Comrades should compile a list of those to be condemned according to the relative gravity of their crimes; and the executions should be carried out according to the prepared order.
11. When a list of those who are condemned is made and the order of execution is prepared, no private sense of outrage should be considered, nor is it necessary to pay attention to the hatred provoked by these people among the comrades or the people. Hatred and a sense of outrage may even be useful in so far as they incite the masses to revolt. It is necessary to be guided only by the relative usefulness of these executions for the sake of the revolution. Above all, those who are especially inimical to the revolutionary organization must be destroyed; their violent and sudden deaths will produce the utmost panic in the government, depriving it of its will to action by removing its cleverest and most energetic supporters.
12. The second group comprises those who will be spared for the time being in order that, by a series of monstrous acts, they may drive the people into inevitable revolt.
13. The third category consists of a great many brutes in high positions distinguished neither by their cleverness nor their energy, while enjoying riches, influence, power and high positions by virtue of their rank. These must be exploited in every possible way. They must be implicated and embroiled in our affairs. Their duty secrets must be ferreted out and they must be transformed into slaves. Their power, influence and connections, their wealth and their energy will form an inexhaustible treasure and a precious help in all our undertakings.
14. The fourth category comprises ambitious officeholders and liberals of various shades of opinion. The revolutionary must pretend to collaborate with them, blindly following them while at the same time prying out their secrets until they're completely in his power. They must be so compromised that there is no way out for them, and then they can be used to create disorder in the state.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

15. The fifth category consists of those doctrinaires, conspirators and revolutionists who cut a great figure on paper or in their cliques. They must be constantly driven on to make compromising declarations; as a result, the majority of them will be destroyed, while a minority will become genuine revolutionaries.
16. The sixth category is especially important women. They can be divided into three main groups. First those frivolous, thoughtless, vapid women whom we shall ... to use the third and fourth categories of men. Second women who are ardent, capable, devoted but who do not belong to ... because they have not yet achieved a passionless and austere revolutionary understanding: these must be used like the men of the fifth category. Finally there are women who are completely on our side- i.e. those who are wholly dedicated and who have accepted our programme in its entirety. We should regard these women as the most valuable of our treasure; without their help we would never succeed.

The Attitude of Society towards the People

17. The society has no aim other than the complete liberation and happiness of the masses - i.e. of the people who live by manual labour. Convinced that their emancipation and the achievement of this happiness can only come about as a result of an all-destroying popular revolt, the Society will use all its resources and energy towards increasing and intensifying the evils, and miseries of the people until at last their patience is exhausted and they are driven to a general uprising.
18. By a revolution the Society does not mean an orderly revolt according to the classic western model - a revolt which always stops short of attacking the rights of property and the traditional social systems of so-called civilization and morality. Until now such a revolution has always limited itself to the overthrow of one political form in order to replace it with another, thereby attempting to bring about a so-called revolutionary state. The only form of revolution beneficial to the people is one which destroys the entire state to the roots and exterminates all the state traditions, institutions and classes in Russia.
19. With this end in view, the Society therefore refuses to impose any new organization from above. Any future organization will doubtless work its way through the movement and life of the people. but this is a matter for future generations to decide. Our task is terrible, total, universal and merciless destruction.
20. Therefore drawing closer to the people, we must above all make common cause with those elements of the masses which, since the foundation of the state of Muscovy, have never ceased to protest not only in words but in deeds, against everything directly or indirectly connected with the state: against the nobility, the bureaucracy, the clergy, the traders and the parasitic kulaks. We must unite with the adventurous tribes of brigands, who are the only genuine revolutionaries of Russia.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 1

21. To weld the people into one single unconquerable and all destructive force - this is our aim, our conspiracy and our task.

Such is the Revolutionary Catechism which was to have important consequences for the world, since it was read by Lenin and profoundly influenced him. Like Nechayev, Lenin was concerned more with destruction - terrible, total, universal and merciless destruction - than with the creation of a new world; and like Nechayev, too, he was determined that all the powers of the state should fall to the industrial workers led by a handful of dedicated revolutionaries, and that all the other classes should be abolished. The Revolutionary Catechism would be restated in the arid terms of Marxist philosophy, but in all its essentials it would remain the guiding principle of Lenin's political activity. One of the characters of Dostoyevsky's novel The Possessed is made to say "To level the hills is a good idea." Nechayev showed succinctly, clearly and almost without emotion how the levelling process could be carried out. Lenin carried it out..."

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2CHAPTER TWO*THE LEGAL PROFESSION (INCLUDING THE JUDICIARY)*2.0 INTRODUCTION

2.0.1 Lawyers in the Gold Coast were in the forefront of the struggle for Independence, and dominated the first political party that initiated the movement for Independence. Consequently, members of the profession, either as Judges, or Lawyers, continued to play significant roles in national development after Independence was attained. Did these roles have a positive impact on the development of a culture of respect for human rights, or did they make a negative contribution? Did individual members of the Bench and Bar suffer any personal consequences for playing their part in national development? Could they have done more with the opportunities they were presented with during the mandate period? It was to respond to these pertinent issues that the Commission, in fulfilment of its mandate, investigated the role the Bench and the Bar may have played, either in the perpetration of human rights violations, the development of a culture of lack of respect for human rights, or in the development of a culture of resistance to violations of human rights.

2.0.2 This Chapter also documents the contribution that the introduction of a new system of adjudication, as well as new investigative bodies made to the enjoyment or otherwise of human rights by the citizenry. Since these bodies operated outside the generally-accepted norms of judicial and quasi-judicial inquiry, the issue of whether these well-established norms serve a purpose, is brought into focus. This Chapter also recounts some violations and abuses that members of the two groups of the Legal Profession suffered, either individually or collectively, in the course of pursuing their profession. It also sheds some light on Bench-Bar relations and what impact this has made on the nation's post-Independence history.

2.0.3 The events discussed herein, are set down in chronological order and under the political periods during which they took place. Part I is on the Judiciary, and Part II on the Legal Profession as represented by lawyers in general, and the Ghana Bar Association (GBA) in particular.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2PART I: THE JUDICIARY*6TH MARCH, 1957 -- 23RD FEBRUARY, 1966:
CONVENTION PEOPLE'S PARTY
(CPP) GOVERNMENT*2.0 THE PREVENTIVE DETENTION ACT (PDA) OF 1958

2.1 On Monday 14th July, 1958, the Prime Minister, Dr. Kwame Nkrumah, moved the motion for the Second Reading of the Preventive Detention Bill whose First Reading had taken place that same morning. This Bill sought to empower the Government to detain any person for five years, without a right of appeal to the courts, for conduct prejudicial to the defence and security of Ghana and its foreign relations.

2.2 The need for the Bill was presented to Parliament as follows:

1. Ghana had acquired the reputation of being in the forefront of the movement for the independence of the African continent, and there were many forces in the world who would like to see her fail, and could resort to subversion to re-colonise the country;¹
2. Ghana could not afford to ignore events around her, as there were real security threats in a newly-independent country, which threats were beginning to materialise in Ghana;² and
3. The concern of the government about the gangsterism, brigandage, and hooliganism that had become rampant in the country.

2.3 The Bill

2.3.1 The Bill made provision for detention up to five years. In addition, the detainee was to be given the grounds of detention in detail within five days of detention. Opportunity was given to the detainee to appeal against the Detention Order, however, the forum for such appeal was the Cabinet, and not the Courts.

¹ Parliamentary Debates, Vol. II No. 10 14th July National Assembly Official Report, Government Printing Department, Accra p 409.

² There was an allegation of a coup plot in 1958 involving two members of Parliament, RR Amponsah and Modesto Apaloo and Major Awhaitey, an Army Officer. Subsequently Major Awhaitey was court-martialled for his role in the affair, and dismissed from the Army. All three of them were detained until February, 1966.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

2.3.2 Essentially, the PDA gave the Prime Minister the power to order the detention of any citizen of Ghana, if satisfied that the order is necessary to prevent him or her from acting in a manner prejudicial to the defence of Ghana or the relations of Ghana with other countries or the security of the state.³ It provided that within five days of a person's detention, he or she must be informed of the grounds on which he or she is being detained and given an opportunity of making representation in writing to the President.⁴

2.3.3 The provisions dealing with the period of detention may be summarised as follows:

- a. the order may specify a period of detention not exceeding five years,
- b. if the person in question evades arrest and fails to comply with a notice requiring him to report to the Police, his period of detention would be doubled,
- c. the prisoner may be released before his period of detention has expired, subject to recall if he does not obey stipulated conditions as to the notification of his movements,
- d. the Prime Minister may at any time revoke the order or vary the specified period of detention, and
- e. except as provided for in (b) above, the prisoner cannot be detained for more than five years, and for this purpose released, subject to recall. After final release no further preventive detention order can be made against the same person except on grounds of activities carried on after the previous order was made.⁵

2.3.4 It is worth noting that the Act expressly provided for its expiration after five years that is 18th July, 1963. Provision was however made for it to be extended for a further three years by a resolution of the National Assembly. All existing detentions however lapsed with all persons so detained entitled to their immediate release when the Act expired.⁶

2.3.5 Therefore, PDA was legislation that:

- a. deprived all its victims of their freedom for up to five years in the first instance;
- b. gave the government wide discretionary and arbitrary powers;
- c. deprived its victims of their rights to seek the protection of the courts against arbitrary Executive action;
- d. gave the government the power to target political opponents (as previously noted);
- e. created the opportunity for officials of all categories to cause the imprisonment of their personal adversaries;

³ F.A.R.Bennion, The Constitutional Law of Ghana, Bulterworth, London ,1962 p 221.

⁴ Preventive Detention Act, 1958 (No. 17), Sec.2.

⁵ Ibid, Sections. 3, 4 and Bennion, supra, p. 221.

⁶ Preventive Detention Act, 1958 (No 17), Sec. 5.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

- f. thus, the Cabinet became, at one and the same time, judge and accuser and usurped the judicial power.

Originally, the Bill was aimed at political crimes only.⁷

2.4 Reaction To The Bill In Parliament

2.4.1 The Opposition put up a gallant fight in Parliament against the passage of the Bill. The United Party (UP) Member for Gonja East, J. A. Braimah, argued that while he was in no way against punishing a person for committing a crime, the Bill was unnecessary, because there was already adequate provision made for the situations envisaged by the Bill in the existing Criminal Code. Besides, the Bill departed from the normal practice in English Law, in that under the Preventive Detention Bill “it will no longer be the obligation of the prosecution to prove that crime has actually been committed by the person accused.”⁸ Further, the Bill would give full rein to the malicious persons who loved to fabricate stories in order to get their enemies into trouble, whilst denying every citizen the freedom of expression. In prophetic tones, he stated that members of the government were ... suffering from a fear-mania and it is this malady that has caused them to come to this House to ask for such arbitrary, powers. .. The Bill is going to make slaves of all of us in the land of our birth. It is a threat to the liberties of all citizens of this country, including even the ministers and party members of the Convention People’s Party.... With these powers in the hands of the Prime Minister, he holds everyone in this country to ransom. The Bill denies to every citizen, I repeat every citizen, of Ghana the freedom of expression. It seeks to deny the people of Ghana the right to criticize the Government; it will deny the people of this country the freedom to meet even at street corners to discuss the events of the day; it will deny the people the right to complain when they are hurt; we are being denied the right to remonstrate publicly against the abuses of power in the strongest terms. And above all, it seeks to deny to this country the freedom of the press.⁹

2.4.2 The UP Member for Sekyere West, R. R. Amponsah, in his contribution to the debate warned that the government was “misusing parliamentary institutions in order to set up a one-party dictatorship in this country.”¹⁰

2.4.3 On his part the CPP Member for Sefwi Wiawso, W.K. Aduhene, spoke in favour of the Bill. He was effusive in his support of the Bill and no one was left in doubt that the

⁷ Geoffrey Bing, Reap The Whirlwind An Account of Kwame Nkrumah’s Ghana from 1950-1966 MACGIBBON & KEE, London, 1968, pp.244-248.

⁸ Parliamentary Debates, vol. 11, No. 10, National Assembly Official Report, Government Printing Department, Accra, pp.415.

⁹ Ibid. p 417-423.

¹⁰ Ibid. p.425.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

Majority believed that the Bill was being enacted to deal with the Opposition. He uttered the following ominous words:

If I were the Prime Minister, I would order people who plan violence to be lined up for the Government Police to shoot them. The Prime Minister is very lenient and the Opposition must be grateful to such a man. If I were the Prime Minister, I would order that such people be killed. The Opposition Members who are wicked but come here and pretend to be innocent men ... This Bill ... is not enough for the Opposition Members. What I would have the Minister do is to train special warders to handle these wicked prisoners. They must not be treated as political prisoners. They are wicked men and they should be treated as such. I am therefore appealing to the Minister to train special warders to keep such prisoners. These people should not be given special diet. ... I want to appeal to the Minister not to deal leniently with those who will be arrested. I have been warned by the people of my constituency that I should not come back to Sefwi Wiawso if I did not support this Bill.¹¹

2.4.4 Despite the gallant fight and wise counsel of the Members of Opposition who urged the Majority to look beyond their enemies and to see the threat that the Bill posed to the liberty of every Ghanaian, the Bill successfully went through Parliament and received the assent of the Governor-General on 18th July, 1958. Thus it was that one of the most momentous pieces of legislation affecting the human rights of the citizenry took four days from its First Reading to its receipt of the Governor-General's assent. Its enactment began a long tale of sad events.

2.5 Implementation

2.5.1 In November, 1958, 43 persons, most of whom were members of the UP and originally of the Ga Shifimo Kpee, were arrested and detained.¹² In December of the same year, R. R. Amponsah and M. K. Apaloo, the UP Member of Parliament for Anlo South, were detained on grounds of complicity in the alleged "army plot" to overthrow the Government. The arrest and detention of opposition elements continued, and by the middle of 1960, the ranks of the Opposition Members had been decimated. Of the 32 Members, 3 were in detention, 1 had gone into exile, 12 had crossed over to the Government side and only 16 were left.¹³

2.5.2 1960 saw a large number of detentions. It is said that between July and December, 1960 alone, 174 persons were detained.¹⁴ Other estimates put the figure as 255 persons¹⁵.

¹¹ Parliamentary Debates, vol. 11 National Assembly Official Report, Government Printing Department, Accra pp448-450,

¹² The Ga Shifimo Kpee was a movement which protested against the poor housing conditions in Accra and the influx of non-Gas into Accra.

¹³ Albert Adu Boahen, Ghana: Evolution and Change in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries, Sankofa Educational Publishers, Accra, 2000 p.195

¹⁴ Ibid., p.212.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

2.5.3 On 3rd October, 1961, some 50 persons, mostly of the Railway Workers' Union and their supporters as well as leading opponents of Nkrumah, such as Joe Appiah, Deputy

Leader of the Opposition, and Dr J. B. Danquah, the doyen of Ghana politics, were detained. The number included the market women who had provided food free of charge to the striking workers.

2.5.4 On 23rd December, 1961, 118 persons were detained.

2.5.5 The prediction made by the Opposition during the passage of the PDA Bill began to come true when in August, 1962, two Cabinet Ministers, Ebenezer Ako Adjei, one-time confidant of Nkrumah and Minister of Foreign Affairs, and Tawiah Adamafio, the second most powerful person in the country at the time, were arrested and detained in connection with the assassination attempt on the President at Kulungungu.

2.5.6 It is said that the official records of those actually admitted into prisons up to 1963, indicate that about 318 persons were detained between 1958 and 1960;¹⁶ 311 in 1961; 254 in 1962; and 586 in 1963.¹⁷ These figures do not include those held in police cells, detention camps and other places. Some people estimate that at the time of the coup d'état of 1966, there were some 3000 detainees.¹⁸ Supporters of the CPP dispute these figures and Geoffrey Bing, one-time Attorney-General and Nkrumah's special advisor, claims that there were 788 at the time of the coup d'état in 1966.¹⁹ Indeed Bing maintained that the government of National Liberation Council (NLC) added some detained criminals to the numbers in order to swell them for purposes of political mischief. Although there is no possibility of independent confirmation of the figures, all these persons were citizens who had been detained without trial. Indeed, the absence of accurate records is itself indicative of the haphazard manner in which the detentions were done.

2.6 Application Of The Law

2.6.1 The manner of application of the law was definitely arbitrary. Several people were detained without any proper documentation on them, so that at the time of the coup of 1966, it was not even known precisely who was in detention. There are cases of families having to draw the attention of the Government of the NLC by petition to the fact that a citizen was in detention. A case in point is Ebow Fynn of Cape Coast, who was held in preventive detention for some time without any documentation, and was released only because Mrs. Margaret Pobee, his sister, took a chance and petitioned the Government.

¹⁵ Bing, op. cit. supra, p. 271.

¹⁶ Bing, supra, pp.271-272.

¹⁷ Boahen, op. cit supra, p.212.

¹⁸ John S Pobee, Kwame Nkrumah and the Church in Ghana 1949-1966, Asempa Publishers, Accra, 1988.

¹⁹ Bing, pp. 271-272; Annual Report on the Treatment of Offenders 1962 Accra (1965) p.15.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

2.6.2 Although the Act was aimed at political crimes, it was soon extended to cover gangsterism, brigandage and hooliganism, and both groups (political opponents and people engaged in acts of social vices) were in equal danger of detention under the Act. In a late rationalisation, Dr. Nkrumah broadcast to the nation on 15th September, 1960, on the subject in these words:

Gangsterism, brigandage, and hooliganism are now becoming quite commonplace among some of our young people. Although our courts of justice are quite capable of dealing with all manner of criminals, I consider that this new crime wave is of such gravity that it calls for some very stern measures to be taken to crush and stamp it out.²⁰

In consequence of its wide reach, the PDA made it possible to detain an assortment of strange bedfellows: common criminals (brigands and hooligans); avowed opposition party members like Dr J B Danquah, E Obetsebi-Lampsey, S G Antor (MP for Kpando North), Joe Appiah (MP for Atwima Amansie), Victor Owusu (MP for Agona-Kwabere), J Kwesi Lampsey, a teacher at Fijai Secondary School and a part-time politician; P K K Quaidoo, himself a member of CPP, who had earned the displeasure of the Government by his bold stand against the shrine of President Nkrumah;²¹ as well as the pro-CPP ringleaders of the 1961 strike at Sekondi-Takoradi.

2.6.3 Clearly, a law which was so extensive and placed arbitrary and autocratic powers in the hands of state officials without the opportunity for judicial review was a dangerous piece of legislation. No wonder it was eventually misused and abused.. “Power corrupts; but absolute power corrupts absolutely,” and so the operation of this law also silenced the opposition. As Members of Parliament representing the opposition were detained, multiparty democracy died in the country as no one dared espouse views other than those approved of by the CPP.

2.6.4 Dr Danquah represented many of those detainees as legal counsel and made applications for habeas corpus at the Courts. However these efforts came to nothing. It was said the court had no right to hear the cases. There was a definite feeling that the detentions were carried out as a show of strength and in a spirit of vindictiveness, rather than with intent to preserve law and order. In the end, Dr Danquah himself suffered the same fate as those whose rights he sought to defend.

²⁰ See Evening News, 16th September, 1960. p.1.

²¹ In a move to deify Dr. Kwame Nkrumah his birthplace was turned into a shrine. This was done with State funds, and after a debate in Parliament on a Private Member’s Motion on 24th May, 1961, by J.A. Kinnah, the CPP Member of Parliament for Eastern Nzimah. There were some protests from within the CPP. A classical example was from the CPP Member of Parliament for Amenfi Aowin, P.K.K Quaidoo. He advised caution during the debate, insisting that such an honour should be left till after the death of President Nkrumah. “Why do we not give posterity the chance to give him greater honour than we are doing today?” he queried. In fact, as a result of his opposition to various issues, he acknowledged that he had already been labelled by some CPP members as a “Catholic slave and hypocrite”. See Debate of 24th May, 1961, in Parliamentary Debates, First Series, 18th May - 23rd June, 1961 (vol. 23) National Assembly Official Report, Government Printing Department, Accra, 1961 pp.877-891.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

2.6.5 In the prisons, political detainees were subjected to severe ill-treatment and torture. Though the prisoners blamed their ill-treatment on the Government, as it seemed as if the warders (prison officers) had been given special instructions to ill-treat them, some of the mistreatment was from the zeal and initiative of prison officers themselves. Some detainees were not sent to prisons, but were in police cells, where they went for months without a bath. As a result of these hardships, many died in prison and many came out of prison in poor health, and never recovered their good health. For instance, E Obetsebi-Lampsey died in prison on 29th January, 1963, and Dr. J B Danquah died on 4th February 1965, in prison, after thirteen months of a second term of preventive detention, whilst Prof. J. C. de Graft Johnson, upon release, was weak and infirm.²²

2.7 PDA Re-enacted

2.7.1 In June, 1962, and November, 1963, the Act of 1958 was amended to empower the continued detention for a further five years.²³ For many of the detainees, it was traumatic for them to be informed, a few days before their expected date of release, that their detention had been renewed for a further period of five years. Many were heart-broken, and the feeling that they would never leave the prison alive contributed to their giving up hope, and going to an early grave. The Preventive Detention Act, as amended, was later re-enacted in 1964.²⁴ The International Commission of Jurists commented on the law thus,

It is impossible to see respect for human rights and the rule of law when a man may be detained for ten years without ever being accused of any crime, let alone being tried and convicted.²⁵

3.0 Conclusion Drawn From Decisions Involving The PDA

3.1 The implementation of the PDA resulted in a number of habeas corpus applications before the courts. One discernible thread that run through the position that the judiciary adopted in considering the habeas corpus applications of the time was the unwillingness of the Courts to hold the Executive accountable. It appeared that the judges were unwilling to question the propriety or otherwise of the decision by the Prime Minister to detain a person. According to the courts, the power of the Head of State to detain a person “if satisfied that he or she is acting in a manner prejudicial to the defence of Ghana or the relations of Ghana with other countries or the security of the state” was

²² Report of the Commission Appointed To Enquire Into The Conditions Prevailing In The Ghana Prisons Services “J.B Danquah : Detention and Death in Nsawam Prisons”, Extract from Evidence of witnesses at the Commission of Enquiry, Government of Ghana, Accra (1967); E. Obetsebi-Lampsey: Detention and Death in Nsawam Prisons, Extract from Evidence of witnesses at the Commission of Enquiry into Ghana Prisons, Accra (1967).

²³ Preventive Detention (Amendment) Act, 1962 (Act 132); Preventive Detention (Amendment) Act, 1963 (Act 199).

²⁴ Preventive Detention Act, 1964 (Act 240).

²⁵ See Bulletin of ICJ No. 18, March, 1964, p.10; See Pobee, supra, p.158.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

one they could not scrutinise. In the words of the court in *Re Akoto*²⁶, the court could only question the legality of the Order, not the truth of the facts therein contained. It thus meant that, in the eyes of the court, if the statutory requirements were adhered to, then the court was not interested in whether the facts alleged by the Prime Minister were true or not.

3.2 The courts appeared to have come out with conflicting views on specific issues. For instance, on whether the Habeas Corpus Act of 1816 was a statute of general application, the court had divergent views. While the court in Re Akoto held that it was, the court in *Re Dumoga*²⁷ held that it was not. This difference of opinion had significant importance for the applicants as it determined whether or not the court could enquire into the truth of the allegations upon which a particular detention order was based. Whilst the Court in Re Akoto held that, under the Habeas Corpus Act of 1816, the court was required to inquire into the truth of the grounds stated upon which the Governor-General had become satisfied that the order was necessary to prevent the appellants from acting in a manner that was prejudicial to the security of the state, the court in Re Dumoga held a contrary view. It stated that the Habeas Corpus Act, 1816 did not apply in Ghana and therefore the applicants were not entitled to the truth about the charges or grounds of their arrest and detention as stated in the detention order. Further, that it was not the duty of the Court to question the exercise of a discretionary power vested in an executive officer to arrest and detain persons, provided the officer had acted in good faith. The point therefore was that the right to a formal trial before imprisonment, which was a right derived from the Magna Carta and applicable to all former British subjects, as well as the Universal Declaration of Human Rights of 1948, were held not to be available to accused persons in independent Ghana.

3.3 The view of the judges in these habeas corpus cases that they had no power to examine executive actions diminished the role of the judiciary in the protection of the rights of the individual. The courts are expected to be the bastion of the individual's rights and liberties. It must be the place where a citizen who alleges his rights have been violated would run to, to have them restored, if what he alleges is true. The judiciary appeared to have been intimidated into giving up their role.

3.4 There is clear evidence that judges such as Chief Justice Arku Korsah, Justices Akiwumi, Simpson and van Lare, did little to discourage the Executive from violating the human rights of the citizens.

3.5 The detainees had this to say in a letter to the Prime Minister of Great Britain

...The Supreme Court of Ghana has bound us hand and foot and gagged us and then delivered us and the people of Ghana to the tender mercies of Kwame Nkrumah and his associates... This is so, because the Ghana Preventive Detention Act empowers the President solely in his discretion, to deprive any subject of his or [her] liberty virtually for life;

²⁶ [1961] GLR (Part II) 523.

²⁷ [1961] 1 GLR 44.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

the Ghana Courts have held that the discretion is absolute; the President in the exercise of this discretion is not answerable to Parliament, or any court or tribunal; the person detained is denied the elementary, natural justice of facing his accusers or putting his case; there is no provision or protection whatsoever against the indiscriminate abuse of the powers conferred by the Act.²⁸

3.6 In a Report by the International Commission of Jurist (ICJ), the ICJ made the following observations:

If the Akoto and Vanderpuye [two of the detainees] cases are typically illustrative, the specific details filed on the ground of detention appear inadequate. Because of the narrow subjective interpretation of the words “if satisfied”, the courts have precluded themselves from investigating the ground of the President’s satisfaction. Judicial review, therefore, does not seem to have provided in Ghana a strong safeguard for the liberty of the subject.²⁹

4.0 Executive Domination Of The Judiciary4.1 The Chief Justice As Acting Governor-General

4.1.1. Sir Arku Korsah, the first Ghanaian to occupy the position of Chief Justice of Ghana, was appointed in 1950. Between May and November, 1957,³⁰ while he was Chief Justice, he acted as Governor-General of Ghana. In this capacity he signed the Preventive Detention Act (PDA). As Acting Governor-General, it lay in his power theoretically, to refuse to assent to the Bill, however, how practical this option was, is open to question. He could have refused “in Her Majesty’s name”.³¹ In fact, as it was rumoured that the Governor-General, Lord Listowell himself had timed his absence from the country to avoid having to sign the Bill into law.³²

4.1.2 The above illustration was not the only act of inconsistency that he committed as Governor-General. As Governor-General, he also signed the Instrument that made Krobo Edusei a Minister, even though he had chaired a Commission of Inquiry that had made findings to the effect that Krobo Edusei was unworthy of public office.³³ These acts of inconsistency fuelled a wide public perception that he was a supporter of the ruling CPP, ²⁸ Letter to Rt Hon Harold Wilson, 20th February, 1965.

²⁹ ICJ Report cited in Pobee, supra.

³⁰ T.O. Elias, The British Commonwealth The development of its laws and Constitution. Ghana and Sierra Leone, George W. Keeton, (ed) Stevens and Sons, London, 1962, p.49.

³¹ Bennion, supra.

³² T. Peter Omari, KWAME NKRUMAH The Anatomy of an African Dictatorship Sankofa Educational Publishers, Accra, 2000, p.73.

³³ Bennion, supra, p.28.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

contrary to the dictates of the high office of Governor-General and as representative of Her Majesty the Queen of England. This, no doubt, created the impression that the Judiciary was “in league” with the Executive, since he was the head of the Judiciary as Chief Justice, and also Head of State whenever he acted as Governor-General.

4.2 The President’s Power To Dismiss Judges

4.2.1 An amendment to the original Republican Constitution of 1960, bestowed the power to dismiss the Chief Justice on the President. This was a major step on the road to uncontrolled use of executive power as it gave the Executive the power and opportunity to interfere in, and even control, the work of the judiciary.

4.2.2 After his fall from power, President Nkrumah was criticised for the high-handed manner in which, and the reason for which the power was exercised in 1963. However, the real problem was not so much the use of the power, as the granting of that power in the first place. The President must take some of the blame for this unfortunate provision, as it is clear that he desired, and worked for that amendment. Indeed, as far back as 1960 when the Republican Constitution was being drafted, the wide powers granted to the would-be President became a subject for concern, but criticism of the over-concentration of power in the hands of one person was swiftly squashed. Tawia Adamafio, then an insider, maintains that the ideas captured in the Republican Constitution, and even the wording of some of its provisions, were those of Dr. Nkrumah, as he went over each draft provision meticulously.³⁴

4.2.3 These facts notwithstanding, Parliament must also take its share of the blame for providing the opportunity for high-handed executive behaviour towards the Judiciary. It is true that a CPP Member of Parliament had been detained under the PDA for opposing a Motion in Parliament, but it is also certain that the President could not have detained the entire Parliament if they had been more mindful of their responsibility to the public and to the State, and not approved such an amendment that made the Chief Justice susceptible to executive manipulation.

4.3 Judges’ Privileges Attacked

4.3.1 On or about the 1st of July, 1960, when some judges were taking their oath of office under the new Constitution, they were instructed by the Executive to do this without their wigs. This had always been part of the attire of judges in Commonwealth countries, and the fact that the judges had to comply already indicated the power of an overbearing executive.

³⁴ Tawia Adamafio, *By Nkrumah’s Side. The Labour and the Wounds*_ West Coast Publishing House, Accra, in association with Rex Collings, London, 1982 p.47.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

4.3.2 The traditional title of “Honourable” accorded to judges was also dropped. The title was felt to be the preserve of Members of Parliament and therefore its use by the judiciary was perceived to be an encroachment on the territory of politicians. Indeed Mr. Justice Sarkodee Adoo is on record as saying, “we have been dishonoured”, as the judges felt that the taking away of the title by the Executive, was a symbolic shearing away of their honour.³⁵

4.3.3 The domination by the Executive was further demonstrated by the use of financial controls to whittle down the privileges that members of the Bench enjoyed. The judiciary became a “tolerated poor relation” of the Executive.³⁶

5.0 Executive Interference In The Work Of The Judiciary

The Executive interfered in the work of the Judiciary by various means. From using executive power to subvert the implementation of courts’ decisions, through using the power to annul decisions, to dismissing and retiring judges.

5.1 Use Of Executive Power To Thwart Court Decisions

5.1.1 Soon after Independence, the government began to issue deportation orders against persons alleged to be aliens on grounds that their presence was “not conducive to public good”. The deportees challenged the deportation orders in an action against the then Prime Minister, the Commissioner of Police, and the Attorney-General (Geoffrey Bing). The High Court presided over by Mr. Justice Smith, granted an interim injunction to restrain the Government from carrying out the deportations, pending the establishment of their dual nationality as alleged by them. The two deportees were represented by Christopher Shawcross, of Nottingham. Shawcross had been brought into the country in connection with contempt proceedings brought against Ian Colvin, then correspondent for the Daily Telegraph of London.³⁷

5.1.2 During an adjournment of the deportation case, Shawcross took a holiday outside Ghana. While he was away, the then Minister of the Interior, Krobo Edusei, denied him a re-entry permit. The reason he gave was that Shawcross was meddling in the political affairs of Ghana because of statements he had made in court. The Minister of the Interior also questioned the propriety of a foreign lawyer who had been given permission to appear before a Ghanaian court for a particular case, making himself available to be consulted in another case altogether.

5.1.3 Not only was Shawcross prevented from coming into the country to do the deportation case, but even before the case was concluded, they forcibly deported the subject of the proceedings from the country on 20th October, 1957, a day before notice of ³⁵ Memorandum to the National Reconciliation Commission.

³⁶ Supra.

³⁷ This account is based essentially on Pobee, Kwame Nkrumah and the Church in Ghana 1949-1966. supra.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

the proceedings was to be served on them. The reason given by Bing for the pre-emptory act of deportation was the need to avoid more violence.³⁸

5.1.4 Consequent upon this pre-emptory deportation, the Minister of the Interior and the Commissioner of Police were found to be in contempt of the Court. However, the government, in a bid to free the two officials from the legal consequences of their actions, caused to be placed before Parliament, a Bill of Indemnity. The Parliament, dominated by the CPP, also convened in an emergency session and passed into law, the Act of Indemnity covering the conduct of the two officials on 24th December, 1957. Thus, when the Court resumed the hearing after an adjournment, Mr. Justice Smith of the Supreme Court commented thus:

Whatever excuse they may have had for their action, they were found in law, to be in contempt. The Courts derive their powers from the Constitution and we are under oath to administer these powers according to law. Parliament in this country has not passed any law providing that the Minister or a civil servant cannot be in contempt for any act done. No one stands above the law.³⁹

5.1.5 These acts, not only demonstrated the government's lack of respect, and Parliament's contempt, for the courts, but also undermined the authority of the courts. They also demonstrated the inability of the courts to offer protection to the citizenry in the face of executive high-handedness.

5.1.6 There were a number of other cases on deportations that went before the courts.⁴⁰ The courts appeared to have interpreted the law to the letter without taking into consideration the spirit of the laws. The results of such interpretation were unfortunate, since the content of the legislation left a lot to be desired in the light of human rights principles. For instance, under the provisions of the Deportation Act, it was possible for an alien to be deported with his dependents. This was obviously unfair, especially when these dependents were above the age of majority. This power to deport was so wide as to be open to abuse. Such strict interpretation therefore enabled the Government to deport people who were its political opponents on grounds that they were aliens, although they insisted that they were Ghanaians.⁴¹ Indeed Bennion states that some of the deportees

³⁸ Pobe , supra, p.162.

³⁹ The Times, 24th December 1957.

⁴⁰ See cases such as Balogun & Ors v. Minister of Interior [1959] GLR 452; Ogunwumi v. The State [1965] GLR 400.

⁴¹ Almost all the governments that pre-date the Fourth Republican Constitution, engaged in a number of deportations. Most of the deportations were carried out under The Aliens Act, 1963 (Act 160). Other statutes were: Aliens Ordinance, No. 20 as amended, Cap 49, 2 Laws of the Gold Coast 223 (1951), Immigrant British Subjects Deportation Ordinance, No. 26 of 1945, as amended, Cap 50, 2 Laws of the Gold Coast 227 (1951); The Deportation Act, 1957, No. 14 of 1957; The Deportation (Indemnity) Act, 1958, No. 47 of 1958; Aliens Act, 1963 (Act 160); Ghana Nationality Decree, 1967 (NLCD 191); Ghana Nationality Act, 1971 (Act 361); Ghana Nationality (Amendment) Decree, 1972 (NRCD 134); were, in fact, Ghanaian.⁴² The courts were also consistent in the views they held about their powerlessness in the face of executive high-handedness.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

5.2 The Dismissal And Subsequent Retirement Of Chief Justice Sir Arku Korsah And His Panel

5.2.1 In 1963, there was a treason trial involving Robert B. Otchere Tawia Adamafio, Ako Adjei and Horatius H. Cofie-Crabbe and others for plotting to assassinate the President, thereby overthrowing the government. The Supreme Court, presided over by Sir Arku Korsah, acquitted the accused persons.

5.2.2 The reactions to the verdict caused some alarm. On the political front, the Attorney-General, Batholomew Kwaw Swanzy, exhibited the displeasure of the Executive by holding a press conference at which he attacked the Judges for the decision. This was an unusual step to take as by this act, the Attorney-General, the titular head of the Bar, had moved the case from the courts to the bar of public opinion. Not surprisingly, there was a protest march to the Supreme Court Buildings by members of the public made up largely of “members of Workers Brigade, Market Women’s Organizations, Young Pioneers, Cooperative[sic] Societies, the Trades Union Congress and high-ranking CPP officials.”⁴³

5.2.3 Newspapers also took the matter up, and launched a blistering attack on the panel of judges that tried the case, accusing them of bias because they had links with the opposition, and further ridiculing the Chief Justice for having sold his honour for “foreign tributes and knighthoods”.⁴⁴

5.2.4 Two days after the decision was handed down, i.e. on 11th December, 1963, President Nkrumah dismissed Sir Arku Korsah as Chief Justice and declared the decision of the Supreme Court null and void. As the procedure for the removal of a Supreme Court Judge from office was much more complex,⁴⁵ he was technically still a Supreme Court Judge, but his position had become untenable, and he left the Bench.⁴⁶

5.2.5 The President issued an Executive Instrument, the Special Criminal Division Instrument, 1963 (E.I. 161) to declare the decision of the court null and void.

P.N.D.C.(Establishment) Proclamation (Supplementary and Consequential Provisions) Law, 1982 (PNDCL 42).

⁴² Bennion supra, p. 203.

⁴³ Omari, supra, p.98.

⁴⁴ Ibid., p. 99.

⁴⁵ Bennion, The Constitutional Law of Ghana, supra, p.174.

⁴⁶ supra p. 27.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

5.2.6 Mr Justice van Lare who was about to be seconded to the East African Common Services as President of the Court of Appeal for East Africa, had his secondment withdrawn by the government, and he was refused permission to leave the country and take up his appointment. Mr. Justice Akufo-Addo also “retired” from the Bench.⁴⁷

5.2.7 It must be emphasised that the act of dismissing the Chief Justice by the President was not in any way illegal, as the President had power under the Constitution, to dismiss the Chief Justice.⁴⁸ However, it was also disappointing that the judge who was appointed as Chief Justice in place of the dismissed, Mr. Justice Julius Sarkodee Adoo, found nothing wrong with accepting the appointment under those circumstances.

5.2.8 Sir Arku Korsah’s own forced retirement also amounted to a violation of his human rights. The rights of the Judiciary as an institution were also violated, as this act attacked the integrity of the institution and also undermined the sense of security of tenure that judges should have in order to discharge their duties without fear or favour.

5.3 The Special Criminal Court

5.3.1 The reaction to the verdict did not end with the dismissal of the Chief Justice and the nullification of the decision. The Criminal Procedure Code was amended and provision made for the establishment of a Special Criminal Court that re-tried the case.⁴⁹ This Special Criminal Court was to be composed of the Chief Justice or a Judge of the Superior Court appointed by the Chief Justice in consultation with the President, and a twelve-member jury.⁵⁰

5.3.2 This reaction violated not only the rule against ‘Double Jeopardy’, but also constituted ‘forum-shopping’ of the worst kind. The result of these moves by the Executive was to prejudice the rights of the accused persons to a fair trial. As could be expected, the Special Criminal Court found the accused persons guilty of treason on 8th February, 1965.

5.4 Conclusion

This chain of events demonstrated the point that the Judiciary either was unwilling or unable to protect itself. The criticism has often been made of Mr. Justice Sarkodee Adoo that being fully aware of the reason why his predecessor was dismissed he should have declined to accept this appointment, since it would be impossible to be faithful to the judicial oath to administer justice “without fear or favour”. Such a public stand would also have affirmed the principle that the Judiciary was unwilling to entertain any interference by the Executive in its work.

⁴⁷ Omari, supra, p.98.

⁴⁸ See Article 44 (3) of the Constitution of Ghana, 1960.

⁴⁹ Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, 1964 (Act 238).

⁵⁰ Act 238, section 1(2).

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 224TH FEBRUARY, 1966 – 30TH SEPTEMBER, 1969:
NATIONAL LIBERATION COUNCIL (NLC)*6.0 Judgment Nullified By Decree

6.1 The NLC promptly passed a decree declaring the decision of the Special Criminal Court in the Otchere case null and void.⁵¹

6.2 Judges And Commissions Of Enquiry

6.2.1 Upon the overthrow of the CPP government, judicial Commissions of Enquiry were established to probe the functionaries of that administration. The findings of these Commissions led to the confiscation of properties of functionaries against whom adverse findings had been made. Although these Commissions were judicial Enquiries, the political atmosphere in which they were held accounted for the severity of some of the recommendations pertaining to confiscations.

7.0 Dismissal Of Judges

7.1 After the 1966 coup d' état, a number of High Court and Circuit Court Judges as well as Magistrates who were regarded by the NLC as political appointees of the CPP, or who were perceived to be corrupt, were dismissed without recourse to due process.⁵² This was done with the full support of the Bar.

8.0 Attempts To Restore Dignity Of The Judiciary

8.1 A new Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Edward Akufo-Addo, was appointed by the NLC. At the time of his appointment, there was an urgent need to restore the morale of the Judiciary, restore respect for judges and improve public confidence in the administration of justice. He succeeded in a large measure in doing this by jealously protecting the independence of the Judiciary. Chief Justice Akufo-Addo would boldly confront the government whenever the independence of the Judiciary was in issue, and prevail.

8.2 The Chief Justice sought to enforce discipline in the legal profession and gave directives to Judges to enforce the rules regarding legal practice. He was sued by members of the Bar, but he stood firm and won the day.⁵³ Although the directive was never really enforced, his ability to remain steadfast in this confrontation with the Bar over the judges' authority in the courtroom, improved the morale of judges and the prestige of the Bench.

⁵¹ Criminal Procedure (Special Criminal Division) (Abolition) Decree, 1966 (NLCD 43).

⁵² Kenneth Agyemang Attafuah, Public Tribunals in Rawlings Ghana (1982-1992): A Study in the Political Economy of Revolutionary Ghana (unpublished) Ph.D. Thesis.

⁵³ Akufo-Addo v. Quashie Idun [1968] GLR 667.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 21ST OCTOBER, 1969 – 12TH JANUARY, 1972:
THE SECOND REPUBLIC PROGRESS PARTY
(PP) GOVERNMENT*9.0 The Sallah Case And Executive Reaction

9.1 In 1970, 568 senior public servants were dismissed by the government of the Progress Party (PP) led by Dr. Kofi Abrefa Busia. This was done based upon the government's interpretation of the Transitional Provisions to the 1969 Constitution. The

PP government accused the affected persons of lacking foresight, being corrupt and inefficient, but no systems were put in place to establish their guilt or otherwise before effecting the dismissals.

9.2 E.K. Sallah, one of the affected senior public servants, challenged his dismissal in the High Court, ⁵⁴claiming that on the true interpretation of section 9(1) of the Transitional Provisions, his office was not included in those prescribed by the said provisions. He won the case against the government.

9.3 Disappointed by this decision, the Prime Minister, Dr. Busia, addressed the nation that evening after the judgment. Essentially his speech sought to re-argue parts of the case, which had been argued in court without success. Thus, whilst in one breath he affirmed his government's and Party's commitment to an independent judiciary, he appeared to be unwilling to see the Judiciary's stand in the light of an independent and bold judiciary, but rather as evidence of the Judiciary "playing politics" and declared himself ready to take them on. The Prime Minister stated expressly that he did not have any problem with a citizen aggrieved by its decisions not to re-appoint him or her seeking redress before the courts, but that they would achieve nothing by such recourse to the courts because,

No court can enforce any decision that seeks to compel the government to employ or re-employ anyone. That would be a futile exercise. I wish to make that perfectly clear.... I cannot be tempted to dismiss any judge. I shall neither honour nor deify anyone with martyrdom, but I will say this, that the judiciary is not going to hold or exercise any supervisory powers not given to it by the Constitution.

9.4 The angry response of the government evoked images of the past when the CPP government exhibited intolerance towards the courts. The government's aggressive posture surprised many who regarded the PP government as one that respected the independence of the judiciary and the rule of law, and the arrogance inherent in this “No court” pronouncement severely dented the image of the government.

⁵⁴ S.O. Gyandoh & P. Griffiths, A Sourcebook of Constitutional Law, vol. 2 Mimeograph, Faculty of Law, University of Ghana, Legon p. 487.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

13TH JANUARY, 1972 – 3RD JUNE, 1979:
NATIONAL REDEMPTION COUNCIL (NRC)/
SUPREME MILITARY COUNCIL (SMC) I & II

10.0 Dismissal Of Judges

10.1 With the overthrow of the PP government, a new military government, National Redemption Council (NRC) was established under the chairmanship of then Colonel

Ignatius K. Acheampong. the Supreme Court was abolished. Three judges, Chief Justice Edmund Lanquaye Bannerman, Justices Koi Larbi and J.B. Siriboe were dismissed and deprived of all their terminal employment benefits. The case of Justice Siriboe was pathetic, as he had been on the Bench for a considerable number of years.

10.2 A new Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Samuel Azu Crabbe, was appointed. However, he was removed by the Supreme Military Council government by the Judicial Service (Amendment) Decree, 1977 (SMCD 101), following agitation by the Bar and the passing of a vote of ‘No Confidence’ in his administration. The next most senior Superior Court Judge, Mr. Justice Fred K. Apaloo, was appointed to the office of Chief Justice.

10.3 The abrogation of the 1969 Constitution affected the operation of the Human Rights provisions enshrined in Article 15. In 1975, the SMC enacted an amendment to the Criminal Procedure Code, 1960, which had the effect of rendering admissible in a trial, a statement which had been obtained in breach of the right of an accused person to consult a lawyer of his choice.⁵⁵ This curtailment of the rights of an accused person was challenged in *Tinieye v. Republic*⁵⁶ at the High Court, Bolgatanga. Of the courts’ role in the protection of human rights, Mr. Justice J.N.K. Taylor, echoing views reminiscent of the Re Akoto days of the First Republic, stated the following:

If a legislative body is engaged in oppressive legislation it is of no concern of the courts. Any judge who finds it abhorrent to give effect to legislation which he considers obnoxious had his remedy by resigning. The remedy of the people is to change the legislative body; but as long as the body is the institution in which the legislative powers of the state have come to rest, then its Decrees Acts or enactments are entitled to be given full legal force by the courts.⁵⁷

⁵⁵ Criminal Procedure Code (Amendment) Decree, 1975 (SMCD 3).

⁵⁶ [1980] G.L.R. 565.

⁵⁷ Ibid, p.583.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

10.4 These views had the effect of shifting the forum for the protection of human rights from the courts to the people themselves, as a basis for the exercise of their powers of sovereignty. This was somewhat disingenuous, since judges knew fully well that in theory and practice, a coup d'état has the effect of suspending the power of the people to control their rulers. In thus pushing these matters from the judicial arena to the political arena, the judges showed clearly that they did not see their institution as the bastion for the protection of the rights of the citizenry, as the tradition of the common law prescribed. Instead, they merely stood aside when called upon to intervene between the citizen and the state because it was "no concern of the courts". This attitude had ramifications for the citizenry at large, and eventually the judiciary itself, as those who stood up for the rights of the citizenry cut the image of opponents of the government, with serious consequences a few years later.

11.0 The Military Tribunal

11.1 The NRC passed a decree that established Military Tribunals to try certain offences denoted as 'Subversion'. Under the Subversion Decree, 1972 (NRCD 90), the specified offences were triable by the Military Tribunal. This Military Tribunal had power not only to try civilians, but also to impose death sentences. There was no right of appeal. However, the Military Tribunal was subject to the supervisory jurisdiction of the High Court. Consequently, when some nine persons were convicted by the Military Tribunal, for conspiring to commit subversion, two of them challenged the jurisdiction of the Military Tribunal and invoked the supervisory jurisdiction of the courts. The High Court ruled against the applicants, and so they filed an appeal against the decision on 23rd July, 1973. On 24th July, 1973, the NRC passed the Subversion (Amendment) (No.2) Decree, 1973 (NRCD 191), amending the original Decree. This amendment ousted the jurisdiction of the courts to exercise supervision over the Military Tribunal.⁵⁸

4TH JUNE, 1979 – 23RD SEPTEMBER, 1979:
ARMED FORCES REVOLUTIONARY COUNCIL (AFRC)

12.0 The People's Courts

12.1 During the AFRC regime, tribunals named People's Courts were established to deal with crimes such as hoarding, profiteering, trade malpractices and economic sabotage. These People's Courts sat in secret with "judges" behind screens. There was no legal right of representation and no right of appeal. There were no formal procedures and they had authority to sentence an accused person to any form of penalty or any length of imprisonment. The trials were conducted under torture, and often lasted a few minutes only.

⁵⁸ Republic v. Military Tribunal Ex parte Ofosu-Amaah [1976] 2 GLR 5, CA.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

12.2 Some persons were not tried at all, or were given what was described as “a purported trial” and yet they were sentenced to long terms of imprisonment without the possibility of judicial review.

24TH SEPTEMBER, 1979 – 1981: THIRD REPUBLIC PEOPLE’S NATIONAL PARTY (PNP) GOVERNMENT⁵⁹

13.1 Under the Third Republican Constitution of 1979, the Supreme Court was restored.

13.2 The government of Dr. Hilla Limann of the People’s National Party (PNP), sought to remove the sitting Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Fred K. Apaloo, from the office of Chief Justice. This was not surprising as it had become the pattern for every government since 1963 to appoint its own preferred candidate to that office. A constitutional challenge was successfully mounted by a citizen, Tuffour, against the government. The Supreme Court ruled that the government had no power to remove the sitting Chief Justice, and the government accepted the decision.

13.2 Establishment Of The AFRC Special Court

13.2.1 Before the AFRC handed over power to the Limann administration, arrangements were made to continue the work of delivering “revolutionary justice”. The Special Tribunal (also referred to as the AFRC Special Court) under the chairmanship of Mr. Justice Isaac K Abban a High Court Judge, was established to review the decisions of the People’s Courts and to enforce those that had not been enforced.

13.2.2 This Special Tribunal sat at the State House in Accra, and received petitions from affected persons. It was composed of a three-member panel made up of Justice Abban, William Adumoah-Bossman, former President of the Ghana Bar Association and Sqn Ldr Frank Darko-Kumi of the Ghana Air Force.

13.2.3 Cases before it were presented by a Special Prosecutor, J E K Appiah, of the Attorney-General’s Department. Subsequently he was accused of accepting bribes for the purpose of influencing the panel and affecting the outcome of petitions before the Special Tribunal. He was convicted and sentenced to a term of imprisonment.

13.2.4 This scandal rocked the Special Tribunal, and undermined its moral authority. Not long thereafter, it its activities, and ceased to exist.

13.3 AFRC Convicts And The Courts

⁵⁹ “Government” is used for consistency in this Report. However, the Third Republic was an Executive Presidency on the American model, and so the technically accurate expression is “Limann Administration”.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

13.3.1 Soon after the return to Constitutional rule, many of those convicted by the ‘People’s Courts’ petitioned the High Court and challenged the bases of their conviction. In October, 1979, three of these persons alleged that they were arrested and detained by soldiers and later transferred to the Nsawam Medium Security Prison and were never tried. They further alleged that it was on the radio that they first heard that they had been sentenced to various terms of imprisonment. During the hearing of these cases the State raised an objection that the Court (by virtue of AFRC D 23) had no jurisdiction to hear the matter since AFRC D 23 had ousted the jurisdiction of the courts. The Judge, Mr Justice K.E Amua-Sekyi, citing the fact that there was no evidence that the applicants had ever been tried, overruled this objection and granted the applicants bail.

13.3.2 News that an Accra High Court had granted bail to some of those who were convicted by the People’s Court of the AFRC, received mixed reaction. While those who had some reservations about the legality of the decisions arrived at by the People’s courts hailed the development, those who supported the decisions of the People’s Courts expressed some reservations, and even considered the effort to review wrong in law, in the light of the Transitional Provisions of the 1979 Constitution. This was the first time the regular courts had been called upon to examine the decisions or purported decisions, of the People’s Courts.

13.3.3 Some leftist organisations that had sprung up just before the return to constitutional rule to “protect the gains of the revolution”, organised a demonstration to the Castle to protest the re-opening of the AFRC cases by the regular courts.

13.3.4 The Attorney-General, Joe Reindorf, held a press conference condemning the decision of the High Court. The state filed an appeal against the decision and within a short space of time, the Court of Appeal had been convened and the appeals heard.⁶⁰ On 21st November, 1979, the Court of Appeal made up of Mrs Justice Annie Jiagge, Mr. Justice E.N.P Sowah and Mr. Justice P.E.N.K. Archer upheld the appeal and revoked the bail on the grounds that the matters pertaining to the AFRC courts involved the interpretation of the 1979 Constitution, and therefore should have been remitted to the Supreme Court for interpretation. In an unusual manner, the Court of Appeal stated that the order to revoke bail applied to two other appeals (No. 169 and No. 170) then pending before it, as well. The applicants were therefore remanded in custody, but by this time, they had fled the country.

13.3.5 Applications for habeas corpus continued to be filed by the ‘AFRC Convicts’ and the courts continued to handle them even though the State continued to re-state its objection. The judges were in a dilemma as the cases involved the gross violation of the human rights of the applicants. For instance, in the case of The Republic v. Director of ⁶⁰ The Republic v. Director of Prisons, Ex parte Nti [1980] GLR 527.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

*Prisons and Another; Ex parte Shackleford*⁶¹, Mrs. Justice Cecilia Koranteng-Addow granted another habeas corpus application involving a conviction by the “AFRC Special Court”.

13.3.6 The Republic v. Director of Prisons and Another; Ex parte Shackleford was one of the cases that best exemplified the dilemma of the judges. The facts were as follows: on 8th June, 1979, (four days after the 4th June coup d'état) the applicant, a businessman, heard on the radio that he was to report to the Air Force Station, Burma Camp, Accra. He was detained for about two months. During the hearing of a habeas corpus application, the State sought to justify the detention on the grounds that the applicant had been received into prison custody by virtue of a warrant of commitment, numbered AFRC 83 and dated 8th June, 1979, issued by the dissolved Special Courts; further, that the applicant had been tried, convicted and sentenced to a three-year term of imprisonment for the offence of selling above control price. By an affidavit deposed on behalf of the applicant, the applicant alleged that he had never been tried, and that the warrant of commitment dated the 8th of June was forged because the Special Court was not in existence before the 8th of June. The applicant further deposed that it was on the 23rd of October, 1979, that he was informed by the record officer at the Ussher Fort prison that he had been convicted to a three-year term of imprisonment.

13.3.7 During the proceedings, the evidence disclosed that the warrant of commitment was signed by a person whose real name could not be identified. However, the State raised objections to the effect that not only could the court not look beyond the warrant of commitment to determine its genuineness, but that it had no jurisdiction to even entertain the application. The court overruled the objection, stating that the Constitution had been promulgated for the good governance of the State and for the assurance of the fundamental human rights of the citizens. Consequently, this same Constitution, could not rob the citizens of those very rights. Mrs Justice Koranteng-Addow stated that, “the matter in debate is a question involving the liberty of a subject of this country, the right to personal freedom of a citizen of this country”.⁶² The court also ruled that the genuineness of the warrant of commitment was important in determining whether the writ of habeas corpus would issue, as the court could not question the rightness or wrongness of the conviction by virtue of AFRC 3 and section 15(2) of the Transitional Provisions of the Constitution. However where there was a dispute about the authenticity of the warrant and the applicant gave credible evidence that it was practically impossible for him to have been tried, there was no justification for a detention and the writ could issue.

13.3.8 It is clear that the Judge was actually seeking to enforce the letter and spirit of the Transitional Provisions, but in the view of some, the doors of the courts were not to be opened at all, when AFRC convicts came knocking. This was untenable in a democracy, and the burden of resolving the contradiction that came to rest on the Judiciary became ⁶¹ The Republic v. Director of Prisons and Another; Ex parte Shackleford [1980] GLR 554.

⁶² Ibid, at p.565.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

the reason for the enmity, which the judges who sought to properly examine the issues involved, incurred.

31ST DECEMBER, 1982 – 6TH JANUARY, 1993
PROVISIONAL NATIONAL DEFENCE COUNCIL (PNDC)

14.0 Attacks On The Judiciary

14.1 The Third Republic was overthrown in a coup d'état on 31st December, 1981, and the PNDC was established as the government of the country. One of the first institutions to be attacked by the government-controlled press was the Judicial System.

14.2 At various public fora, the courts were accused of being corrupt, lazy and biased in favour of the rich. Slogans such as “One law for the rich and one law for the poor”, “Justice delayed is Justice denied”, became the common catch-phrases. The courts were perceived as the enemy of the common man as they perverted justice by being hard on poor people and being soft on the rich. The slow processes of the courts also came in for criticism as being the cause of delays in doing justice to the poor. The courts were further criticised as being “reactionary” and addicted to foreign forms of procedure.

14.3 An atmosphere of hostility to the courts was engendered with the tacit approval of the government and government functionaries, by the persistent negative publicity in the public media.

15.0 The Murder Of The Three High Court Judges And Retired Military Officer

15.1 One event that shook the foundations of the judiciary was the murder of the three High Court Judges and Retired Military Officer. On 1st July, 1982, Ghanaians received the news that three sitting High Court judges and a retired Army Officer, Mr. Justice Fred Poku Sarkodie; Mrs. Justice Cecilia Koranteng-Addow; Mr. Justice Kwadwo Agyei Agyepong and Major Sam Acquah (Rtd.), had been abducted from their homes on the night of 30th June, 1982. This was in an official statement issued by the PNDC government. The statement further warned the kidnappers to free their victims immediately or face the full rigours of the law. The whole nation waited in anxiety to know what had befallen these eminent citizens.

15.2 On Saturday, 3rd July, 1982, Chief Justice Apaloo led a delegation to the Chairman of the PNDC to request that action be taken to locate the missing judges. The Chairman promised to do his best in this regard. The Judiciary was worried because this was an unexpected development even though the institution had been subjected to a great deal of verbal attacks since the new regime seized power. It represented a novel challenge to the Judiciary as judges had never been attacked in their person for unpopular decisions.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

15.3 On Sunday, the 4th July, 1982, the Chairman of the PNDC, Flt Lt Rawlings, in a special nation-wide broadcast on radio and television, announced that he had been informed only the previous day, that four corpses had been discovered on the ‘Accra Plains’, and that investigations had revealed that these were the bodies of the missing persons. The Chairman declared, “We condemn these acts from the depths of our hearts”. He gave the assurance that every effort was being made by a special high-powered investigation team to trace the criminals, whoever they were, and whatever their motives. The Chairman went on further to describe those who did the abduction as “enemies of the Revolution.”⁶³

15.4 The news of the murder of the four eminent citizens was received with shock. Unfolding events showed later that the bodies of the Judges and Army Officer, were, in fact, found at the Bundase Military Range, and not anywhere else on the Accra Plains.⁶⁴ Suspicion immediately fell on the government.

15.5 There was widespread condemnation of the crime. The government came under pressure from both local and international sources, for an independent judicial inquiry into the murders. On 5th July, 1982, Staff of the Judicial Service held a peaceful demonstration in protest against the killings,⁶⁵ and the Law Students Union (LSU) of the University of Ghana also demanded an independent judicial inquiry into the murders. The African Bar Association (ABA) on 16th July, 1982, sent a delegation led by its Secretary-General, the Hon. Debo Akande, to meet with the Head of State on the issue. The Association requested the Government to institute an independent public judicial inquiry to track down the culprits and pay compensation to the families of the murdered judges and military officer.⁶⁶

15.6 The Establishment Of The Special Investigation Board (SIB)

15.6.1 Consequent upon the pressure mounted on the government, the government set up a Committee, chaired by the Secretary for the Interior, Johnny Hansen, to investigate the killings. This committee was promptly rejected by the public since the government itself was under suspicion. Eventually the government set up the Special Investigation Board (SIB) to investigate the kidnapping and killing of the four eminent persons⁶⁷.

15.6.2 The SIB was under the chairmanship of Mr. Justice Samuel Azu Crabbe, a former Chief Justice, and had the following members:

⁶³ Jacob Jabuni Yidana, Who killed the Judges? Bismi Enterprise (Printing and Publishing) Accra, 2002, p. 231.

⁶⁴ See post-mortem reports of SIB Report exhibits D, E, F and G. pp. 74-77.

⁶⁵ Yidana, supra p.232.

⁶⁶ Yidana, p.233.

⁶⁷ Special Investigation Board (Kidnapping and Killing of Specified Persons) Law, 1982 (PNDCL 15), section 3(1).

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

- Rt. Rev. Prof. N K Dzobo - representative of Christian Council and Catholic Secretariat;
- C E Quist - representative of Ghana Bar Association;
- J O Amui - representative of Attorney-General's Office and Secretary to the Board;
- T O Lindsay - PNDC nominee.

15.6.3 The Board produced, first an interim report, which was published at a press conference by the Attorney-General. The Final Report was presented to the Attorney-General on 30th March, 1983. After waiting for a while without any sign that the Final Report was going to be published, civil society groups began to complain and accuse the Attorney-General of a cover-up. The Ghana Bar Association insisted that the public was “entitled to know the whole of the findings of the Special Investigations Board as contained in both parts of the report in order to form a correct judgment, and not restricted by the Attorney-General to just a part as published in the Interim Report.”⁶⁸

15.7.0 Findings And Recommendations Of The SIB

15.7.1 The Final Report was a detailed report on the facts surrounding the murders. The team of police investigators did thorough detective work, thus leading to a successful investigation by the SIB. At the end of the investigations, the SIB recommended that the following persons be prosecuted for conspiracy to commit murder and murder.⁶⁹

- Joachim Amartey Kwei – Member of the PNDC.
- L/Cpl S.K. Amedeka – Military Guard at Broadcasting House and the Liaison Officer between Military Personnel at Broadcasting House and Gondar Barracks, the Headquarters of the PNDC.
- L/Cpl Michael Komla Senyah - Field Engineers Regiment and Military Guard at Broadcasting House.
- Ransford Johnny Dzandu - ex-soldier of the Medium Mortar Regiment, Ho.
- Evans Hekli “Tonny” Tekpor - ex-soldier of 1BN of Infantry, Tema, and 2 Brigade, Kumasi.
- L/Cpl Mamah Nsurowuo – a soldier of the PNDC Information Centre.
- L/Cpl Victor Gomeleshio – a soldier of the PNDC Secretariat (Operations).
- L/Cpl Gordon Kwowu – a soldier at the PNDC Information Centre.
- Sgt Alolga Akata-Pore - Member of the PNDC.
- Capt Kojo Tsikata (Rtd) – PNDC Special Advisor and Head of National Security.

15.7.2 On the motive for killing these judges, the SIB had this to say,

... one fact which is common in the case of the judges is that each of them, after the AFRC had handed over, had adjudicated in a case involving AFRC convicts. Notwithstanding the provisions of Article

⁶⁸ Ghana Bar Association, Statement on SIB Report, Accra, 22nd April, 1983.

⁶⁹ Comments on the Special Investigation Board Report issued by the Attorney- General G.E.K. Aikins (PNDC Secretary for Justice and Attorney-General), 17th May, 1983, para 17.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

15(2) and (3) of the 1979 Constitution..., each judge after considering the legal issues raised on an application for an order of Habeas Corpus, had ordered the release of the applicant from custody.⁷⁰...it ought to be mentioned that the kidnapping and murder took place a little over six months after the Court cases, and it had been argued that the release of the AFRC convicts had nothing to do with the murders.⁷¹... but the fact still remains that only the judges in Accra who had ordered the release of “AFRC convicts” were specially picked on and killed on 30th June, 1982. That the release of the AFRC convicts was the prime motive for the Judges murder is plainly confirmed by Amartey Kwei’s statement of the 23rd November 1982, which he repeated on oath before the Board⁷²... even the way in which their houses were searched for by the kidnappers is evidence that that these were specifically selected to be executed...⁷³

The SIB concluded that the

...perpetration of these crimes must have been motivated by the dissatisfaction felt by some people at their judgments in which they freed persons convicted and sentenced to long terms of imprisonment by a tribunal specifically established by the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council (AFRC). The atrocities could have been committed only by fanatical supporters of the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council.⁷⁴

16.0 Attorney-General’s Comments on SIB Report

16.1 The Attorney-General, G. E. K. Aikins, published his Comments on the Report. He, in the exercise of his discretion to initiate prosecutions as Attorney-General decided that there was sufficient evidence to prosecute only the following:

- Joachim Amartey Kwei
- L/Cpl Michael Komla Senyah
- L/Cpl Samuel Kwaku Amedeka
- Ransford Johnny Dzandu
- Evans Hekli “Tonny” Tekpor.

He declined to initiate criminal prosecutions, citing insufficient evidence, against the following:

- L/Cpl Gordon Kwowu
- L/Cpl Nsurowuo
- L/Cpl. Gomeleshio
- Sgt Alolga Akata-Pore and

⁷⁰ Final Report of the Special Investigation Board (Kidnapping and Killing of Specified Persons) para. 313.

⁷¹ Ibid, para. 314.

⁷² Ibid para. 315.

⁷³ Ibid para. 316.

⁷⁴ Ibid para. 318.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

- Capt Kojo Tsikata (Rtd)⁷⁵

16.2 The Attorney-General further decided that the forum for the trial should be the Public Tribunal instead of the High Court. Consequently, the case was referred to the Public Tribunal by the PNDC.

16.3 The import of the decision to try the suspects at the Public Tribunal was three-fold:

- (1) they were denied a trial by jury;
- (2) they were denied a right of appeal since there was no right of appeal at the Public Tribunals under the Public Tribunals Law, 1982 (PNDCL 24); and
- (3) they could not obtain legal counsel for their defence since the Ghana Bar Association had announced a boycott of the Public Tribunals on account of its opposition to the lack of procedural fairness of the rules of the Public Tribunals.

Thus the accused persons were tried and convicted on a capital charge, without benefit of legal counsel and without a right of appeal.

17.0 Press Attacks On SIB During Sitting17.1 Attacks On The Integrity Of SIB

17.1.1 During and after the sitting of the SIB, the Chairman, Mr. Justice Azu Crabbe, came under a sustained attack in the media – particularly in the Ghanaian Times. In a series of editorials titled The Drag of Vested Interests, published between 4th January, 1983 and 29th March, 1983, the newspaper mounted a vicious campaign against the SIB in general and its Chairman in particular. It alleged that selected materials from the SIB were circulating widely in the circles of Ghanaians in political exile and that enemies of the revolution in Togo, Britain and Holland were openly saying they would “use the Board by hook or by crook to topple the Government of the PNDC.”⁷⁶ For these alleged activities of the émigrés community, the SIB was held blameable.

17.1.2 The SIB was also accused by the Ghanaian Times of setting up its own Technical Investigative Team, made up of persons who were active in persecuting Flt Lt Rawlings and his associates during the Limann regime, and that this new team was different from the one announced by the government under the chairmanship of the Secretary for the Interior, Johnny Hansen. This information to the public was incorrect, as the investigative team which worked with the SIB, was set up by the Criminal Investigations Department of the Police before the SIB itself began its work. It was also untrue that there were two teams investigating the event, since the one under the chairmanship of Johnny Hansen though announced, was never, in fact, set up.⁷⁷

⁷⁵ supra

⁷⁶ Ghanaian Times, vol. 7784 Friday 4th February, 1983, p.2

⁷⁷ SIB Report, paras 34-38.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

17.1.3 The newspaper further alleged that the in camera proceedings of the SIB were circulating among the ranks of enemies of the revolution abroad, and therefore demanded that the proceedings be made available for publication in the local press to enable Ghanaians at home to read them too. The newspaper also expressed the belief “that an inquiry will reveal all the machinations, plots and manoeuvres that have taken place behind the scenes – that is, behind the public image of the Board.”⁷⁸ By these allegations, the newspaper sought to cast doubt on the integrity of the members of the SIB whilst fixing on them a political agenda to assist the enemies of the government to unseat it.

17.1.4 The editorial also repeated an allegation made to the SIB by Capt Tsikata that at a meeting of the PNDC, Sgt Alolga Akata-Pore had complained that an unnamed judge had told him that attempts were being made to frame him up at the SIB, thus pitching him against his colleagues on the PNDC. Not only did such an allegation suggest that some judges were in league with the SIB, but that through those persons, information to potential witnesses was being leaked, for malicious purposes. Why any member of the judiciary would have an interest in causing disaffection within the PNDC was not indicated, but it was clearly an attempt to create a perception that the judiciary was in league with the enemies of the government to cause mischief.

17.1.5 In another editorial in the series, the newspaper accused the SIB, first of changing its procedures midstream to allow for public confrontations between witnesses, and then of adopting a legally-indefensible procedure when it allowed L/Cpl Amedeka to be present during the time Capt Kojo Tsikata appeared before it to cross-examine Amartey-Kwei.⁷⁹

17.1.6 In a further editorial in the series, the newspaper appeared to have joined the defence team of Capt Tsikata when it accused the SIB of arbitrariness in the “manner in which the board decided to bring out the allegations against the Special Adviser to the PNDC in public contrary to the procedure which it had followed up to that point”.⁸⁰ It also raised issues pertaining to some evidence before the SIB that it did not consider credible. The newspaper also alleged that, unknown to some of the members of the SIB, copies of a document purporting to be the Draft Report were circulating among some Western Embassies and that the Political Officer of the Embassy of the United States of America had told some journalists that the report would soon be released. This editorial thus sought, not only to sow disaffection within the membership of the SIB but also to suggest that some members were in league with the Americans to discredit the government. As the newspaper put it, the

Special Investigation Board must carefully, critically, and seriously look at its own processes and connections and consider how the selective

⁷⁸ Editorial of 4th January, 1983, supra.

⁷⁹ Ghanaian Times vol. 7,790, Wednesday, 12th January, 1983.

⁸⁰ Ghanaian Times, vol. 7,855 Tuesday, 29th March, 1983 p.2.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

leaks from it have occurred, especially when the interests of foreign powers are also brought in.⁸¹

17.1.7 Even more disturbing was a reproduction of a handwritten letter purporting to have emanated from one of the suspects in the murder investigations, Johnny Dzandu, in which he alleged that he and others had been offered safe sanctuary if he and others could escape from prison and make it to the American Embassy.⁸² This letter was supposed to expose the agenda of “vested interests” in the work of the SIB and consequently why the SIB would become their willing tool. Coming on the same day as an announcement that the report had been presented to the Attorney-General,⁸³ it was difficult to resist the inference of mischief-making that underlay the persistent and consistent newspaper attacks.

17.1.8 The Ghanaian Times also reported the proceedings in a manner calculated to cast doubt on the eventual conclusions of the SIB. These hostile media reports as well as other acts of official harassment, led to an attempt by the Chairman of the SIB to resign on 4th

January, 1983. Although he was prevailed upon to rescind the decision, it was clear that the Chairman was unhappy about the war waged on him by the national media, then all state-owned.

17.1.9 The Ghanaian Times published the comments of the Attorney-General on the SIB Report before announcing its intention to publish the Report itself the next day, thereby giving primacy to the Comments rather than the Report.⁸⁴

17.1.10 Indeed, soon after the Final Report was presented, Capt Tsikata and Mr. Justice Azu Crabbe engaged in exchanges in the media over his supposed connection with the American CIA. This constituted a big assault on the image of the Chairman as a former Chief Justice as well as his reputation, since his accuser was the chief of National Security himself.

17.2 Effect Of The Murders On The Entire Judiciary

17.3.1 The traumatic effects of the coordinated attacks and the singular tragedy of the murders on the judiciary will take a long time to be overcome. Many members of the Bench and Bar during interviews by this Commission were emphatic that:

- (1) some judges who felt threatened as rumours persisted of the existence of a list of persons to be assassinated fled the country, and some of those already outside the country did not return;
- (2) some cases were never heard because the judges feared for their lives;

⁸¹ Ibid.

⁸² Ibid., p.3.

⁸³ Ibid., p.1.

⁸⁴ Ghanaian Times vol. 7,909 Thursday, 2nd June 1983.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

- (3) cases pending before the murdered judges suffered delay as they had to be heard afresh;
- (4) it generated fear among members of the Bench who remained;
- (5) most judges were unwilling to make such far-reaching decisions as might endanger their lives; and
- (6) the event is still a source of fear among members of the judiciary, even to those who were not then on the Bench.

17.3 The GBA's commemorative events of the murder were studiously avoided by most members of the judiciary, including the Chief Justices of the time, for fear of incurring the wrath of the government. On those commemoration days, courts sat as usual and lawyers who wished to attend the event assumed the risk of incurring costs for their absence in court.

18.0 Other Attacks On The Judiciary18.1 Press Attacks On The Judiciary

18.1.1 The attacks on the judiciary did not end with the murders. On 14th March, 1983, the Chief Justice, Mr Justice F.K. Apaloo and Mr Justice J.N.K. Taylor of the Supreme Court attended the Law Week of the Law Students' Union at the Faculty of Law, and gave presentations at which they expressed views that were critical of the PNDC. Mr Justice F.K. Apaloo, delivering the Keynote Address, expressed the view that the assumption of judicial powers by the PNDC was "dangerous and unprecedented" in the annals of Ghana's legal history. During a subsequent symposium, Mr. Justice Taylor criticised the human rights record of the AFRC and the victimisation of so-called kalabule people for the woes of the time. These views of the two Judges, were reported from the angle of comments made by Tsatsu Tsikata in his own presentation at the same symposium, which were critical of the judiciary in general, and the judges in question in particular. Under the headline "Self-contradictions of Judiciary Exposed", the newspaper presented their judicial history in an unflattering light, thereby presenting the Judges' criticisms as hypocritical and anti-PNDC.⁸⁵

18.1.2 The views of Tsatsu Tsikata were re-echoed as the basis for another vitriolic editorial from the Ghanaian Times the next day titled "Judicial Politics". The editorial criticised the Keynote Address of the Chief Justice, for lacking appropriate criticisms of the judiciary and the "colonial" legal system, whilst failing to appreciate the need for a new judicial system which would be better understood by the ordinary citizen. Mr Justice Taylor's presentation elicited condemnation of judges as the ones who abused the rights of citizens by sitting as Judge-Advocates on Military Tribunals from which there was no right of appeal; who sat on Commissions of Enquiry that made adverse findings confiscating properties; and who adopted such a narrow view of law that they gave interpretations that were contrary to the aspirations of the people. Reference was made to ⁸⁵ Ghanaian Times, 7.845 Thursday, 17th March, 1983 pp.1 &3.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

views expressed by those same judges during the NLC and SMC periods respectively, which admitted the supremacy of military rulers over the judiciary and complained about their motives for their seemingly different views during the era of the PNDC. The newspaper concluded with the view that pronouncements of distinguished judges only show that they are out of step with the objectives of the people's revolution... that the PNDC should have power to set them right if they should be adopting such attitudes of opposition to the revolution in their judgments.⁸⁶

If ever anything was calculated to dampen judicial criticism of developments on the legal scene, then this was a good example.

18.2.0 Attack On The Supreme Court Buildings

18.2.1 The attacks did not remain only verbal. On Tuesday, 21st June, 1983, a mob attacked the Supreme Court buildings after a workers' demonstration. The courtrooms and chambers of judges were locked up and the keys taken away by the Central WDC.⁸⁷ Judges had to flee for their lives and courts situated in the Supreme Court Buildings did not function for a few days. The WDCs also declared the Chief Justice, who had expressed views critical of the Public Tribunals, dismissed from office.

18.2.2 There was no criticism of the workers' action from any official, except an announcement in the newspapers that the Chief Justice was still in office.⁸⁸

19.0 Threats To Judicial Independence19.1 Summary Dismissal Of Judges By PNDC

19.1.1 The PNDC Establishment Proclamation (Amendment) Law, 1982 (PNDCCL 42) provided for the removal of judges as follows:

any judge or judicial officer who was unable to perform the functions of his or her office by reason of infirmity of body or mind or who hampers the effective and efficient discharge of the functions of the Judiciary by his or her conduct, or who in any other way abuses his or her office, misbehaves or brings the judiciary function into disrepute shall be removed from office by the Council (PNDC)”,⁸⁹

⁸⁶ Ghanaian Times, 7.846 Friday, 18th March, 1983 p.2.

⁸⁷ Ghanaian Times vol. 7,927 Thursday, 23rd June, 1983.

⁸⁸ See, Mike Oquaye, “Law, Justice and the Revolution” in Ghana Under PNDC Rule (E.Gyimah-Boadi, ed) CODESRIA BOOK SERIES, 1993 p.158; also Paul Nugent, Big Men, Small Boys and Politics in Ghana. Power, Ideology and the Burden of History, 1982-1984 Asempa Publishers, Christian Council of Ghana, Accra, 1996, p.120.

⁸⁹ PNDCCL 42 section 22(1).

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

However, section 22(2) of PNDCL 42 stated expressly that

No such removal from office shall be effected unless upon becoming aware of the judge, the Chief Justice has in consultation with the Judicial Council and the approval of the Council, instituted an inquiry composed of such persons not exceeding five, as are likely to arrive at an independent and objective conclusion, to investigate the matter and make appropriate recommendations to the Council.

Section 22 (3) further stated that “no removal of a judge from office may be effective without the person being given a fair hearing.”

19.1.2 However, when in 1986, the PNDC sought to remove judges without respecting these procedures, the PNDC repealed these provisions⁹⁰ and summarily dismissed seventeen Judges and one Magistrate. At the same time it promoted other judges to the Superior Courts, thereby disabling the judiciary from complaining of victimisation and criticising the modalities adopted for the dismissals.

19.1.3 On Friday, 4th April, 1986, the People’s Daily Graphic in its lead story, captioned, “Review in Judicial Service” stated that the PNDC in consultation with the Chief Justice had undertaken a review of judicial appointments. Some judges had been promoted, new judges appointed and a significant number of serving judges had been dismissed.

19.1.4 It is also interesting to note that the People’s Daily Graphic of 4th April, 1986, stated expressly that the PNDC took this decision in consultation with the Chief Justice. If indeed there was proper consultation, then the implication was that the Chief Justice, the highest judicial officer of the land, took part in perpetrating gross human rights violations against some of his own colleagues. Whatever the circumstance, there is no doubt that what took place was an attack on the judiciary by the Executive.

19.1.5 These 18 persons had their careers terminated without recourse to the laid down procedure as set out by the PNDC in its Establishment Proclamation as amended by PNDCL 42, for the removal of judges. The PNDC, in its decision, failed to honour the time-honoured principle of Natural Justice as these judges were denied a hearing. The government of the day took a unilateral decision and deprived these judges of their right to work and to earn income. In addition to this, the allegations of misconduct was so serious, that they should not have been removed from office without being given a chance to clear their names. They thus lost their careers as well as their reputations.

19.1.6 Some time after these dismissals had been effected, the old procedures were restored by a re-enactment of a new section 22 to replace the repealed provisions under ⁹⁰ Provisional National Defence Council (Establishment) Proclamation (Supplementary and Consequential Provisions) (Amendment) Law, 1986 (PNDC L. 145).

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

PNDCL 42.⁹¹ This showed the Executive's lack of respect for law as well as the rule of law. Since laws are supposed to guarantee a measure of certainty and predictability as well as orderliness in the conduct of national affairs, shuffling law on the chessboard whenever it becomes inconvenient is wrong. Thus, where a government desiring a particular outcome that the existing law would not permit, could achieve it merely by removing the particular law, doing whatever it considered necessary to do and then re-enacting the law, the essence of law would have been undermined.

19.1.7 Effect Of The Dismissals On The Judiciary

As a result of these dismissals by the Executive, judges lost confidence in their security of tenure since the Judicial Council had been abolished. Things did not improve with the restoration of the Judicial Council, for the new provision provided that the PNDC could dismiss or remove from office, any Judge, or judicial officer, if it was satisfied that it was in the public interest so to do.⁹² The import of the new provisions was regrettable, since it made the retention of a judicial appointment, subject to the whims and caprices of the Executive. In thus undermining the security of tenure of judges and magistrates, a necessary condition for the proper discharge of the judicial function, was undermined.

19.2.0 Inducement To The Judiciary

⁹¹ Provisional National Defence Council (Establishment) Proclamation (Supplementary and Consequential Provisions) (Amendment) Law, 1988 (PNDC L. 228).

⁹² Section 22(3) of PNDCL42 as amended by PNDCL228.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

19.2.1 In 1986, the Chief Justice, Mr. Justice E.N.P. Sowah, reached the compulsory retiring age. In accordance with the traditions of the Judiciary, he should have retired and been replaced by the next most senior Judge. However, this did not happen. Instead, a Law was passed⁹³ giving members of the Judiciary who had reached the compulsory retiring age the opportunity to continue in service, with the written approval of the PNDC. The length of time one could continue in service was however to be determined by the PNDC. The making of this Law, obviously for the benefit of those of whom the PNDC approved, saw the PNDC extending the appointment of Mr. Justice Sowah and retaining him as Chief Justice. This move was severely criticised by both the Bench and Bar as it created the likelihood that other judges, who wished to be permitted to continue in service upon reaching the retiring age, would lose their ability to be independent.⁹⁴ The fears of the GBA were also shared by the African Bar Association and the International Commission of Jurists at an International Seminar on “The Independence of the Judiciary and Legal Profession.”⁹⁵

19.2.2 Another act that was seen as an attack on judicial independence was the recall of Mr. Justice Archer from retirement to become Chief Justice in 1991. This move was seen as an attempt to control the judiciary, as the new Chief Justice was unlikely to be able to perform his duties without recourse to the interests of the Executive that had done him the favour of recalling him from retirement to the high office of Chief Justice. The Bar protested against this and there were many in the legal profession who viewed these developments with great misgivings.

20.0 The Establishment Of New Judicial And Quasi-Judicial Investigative Bodies.

20.1.0 Among the first legislative acts of the PNDC were the promulgation of two laws: the Citizens Vetting Committee Law, 1982 (PNDCL 1), and the National Investigations Committee Law, 1982 (PNDCL 2). In addition, it established the Public Tribunals by enacting the Public Tribunals Law, 1982 (PNDCL 24), and later replacing it with the Public Tribunals Law, 1984 (PNDCL 78). These new bodies were supposed to clean up the corruption in public office, as well as other acts of malfeasance within the nation, which the existing judicial and investigative agencies had been unable to deal with on account of their own corruption and inefficiency.

20.1.1 The stated functions of the two investigative bodies indicated that their targets would be the well-to-do in society, and they made every effort to ensure that anyone who ⁹³ Judiciary (Retiring Ages) Law, 1986 (PNDCL. 161).

⁹⁴ Address of President of GBA, Peter Ala Adjetey to the Annual General Conference, Accra, 28th September, 1987.

⁹⁵ The Conference took place in Banjul, The Gambia, 6th-10th April, 1987.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

appeared to be affluent would be called upon to account for the wealth, and also to prove that the appropriate taxes had been paid on the declared incomes. There were many complaints about their procedures and decisions as they imposed on persons who appeared before them, huge fines and tax penalties that were to be paid within very short periods of time. These bodies were therefore the main agencies responsible for many of the confiscations of property that occurred, and they helped in no small measure to make “citizens” feel harassed and hunted in their own country.

20.1.2 The essence of the Public Tribunals was captured by the Ghanaian Times on the first anniversary of their operations as follows:

The old legal system ... has been structured to protect corrupt politicians against being exposed and punished for taking advantage of their political positions to amass illegal wealth, oppress the mass of the people, or sell their nation to foreign exploiters and their local accomplices. The system has made it impossible for the mass of the people to have any real power to check bad government.

But the revolution brought the Public Tribunal and this has made it possible to mete out judgment [sic] to even the class of people who before the normal courts would have been too powerful or too superior to be punished. Moreover, the tribunal has made it possible for the common people, too, to sit in judgment against high-placed crooks and criminals.⁹⁶

20.2.0 The Citizens Vetting Committee (CVC)

20.2.1 The Citizens Vetting Committee Law, 1982 (PNDC Law 1), as amended by the Citizens Vetting Committee (Amendment) Law, 1982 (PNDC Law 18), set up a body to investigate persons whose “lifestyle and expenditures substantially exceed[ed] their known and declared incomes”⁹⁷, and who possessed credit balances in excess of certain specified sums at the banks.⁹⁸ This body could apply to the PNDC to order the detention of anyone it was investigating, or interrogating.⁹⁹ After investigations, it could order the confiscation of any property it was not satisfied had been acquired by the person’s lawful income.

20.2.2 The CVC was not subject to the courts or to any other body, except the PNDC, in the performance of its duties. By an ouster clause, the PNDC ousted the jurisdiction of the courts as follows:

⁹⁶ Ghanaian Times, vol 8,048 Thursday, 11th November, 1983, editorial, p.2.

⁹⁷ Section 4(i) PNDC Law 1.

⁹⁸ Section 4(ii) PNDC Law 1.

⁹⁹ Section 6(1), PNDC Law 1.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

It shall not be lawful for any court to entertain any action or proceedings whatsoever for the purpose of questioning any decision, finding, order, or proceeding of the Committee...and for the removal of doubt it shall not be lawful for any court to entertain any application for an order or writ in the nature of habeas corpus, mandamus, prohibition or quo warranto and declaration in respect of any decision, finding, order or proceedings of the Committee.¹⁰⁰

With such wide-ranging powers and no oversight of any other body, the CVCs were accountable to none but those who established them.

20.2.3 In 1982, the CVC began to investigate all owners of bank accounts that were in excess of fifty thousand cedis (c50,000.00). For this purpose the CVC was given access to all bank accounts in the country. Those persons who were summoned to appear before the CVC to explain the source of their wealth, found that the body had all the information on their private financial transactions already supplied by their respective banks. Those who appeared to owe on taxes, either because they had failed to pay their taxes at all, or had under-declared their incomes to the Department of Income Tax, were asked to pay whatever was assessed to be due, as well as penalties thereon, into PNDC Account No.48. In some instances, the persons were re-assessed and asked to pay the new tax-rate, even though they had already paid what was due. Such persons risked having their properties being confiscated if they defaulted in payment. The snag, however, was that the sums of money imposed were often huge, and the usual time-limit within which payment was to be made was forty-eight hours. The combination of size of the amount, as well as the unreasonable time schedules for payment, made it almost impossible for the persons concerned to honour the terms of the payment. For instance, evidence before the Commission, indicated that some persons were required to raise the equivalent of $2 million (two million dollars) within forty-eight hours, or risk having their properties confiscated. It was largely on account of these unreasonable conditions that many persons had their properties confiscated to the State.

20.2.4 In addition to the pecuniary penalties the CVC could impose, it could make other orders as well. It could

(d) recommend to the appropriate authority for the dismissal, removal or retirement from the Public Service of a public officer investigated by it for any misconduct or negligence in the performance of his official functions;

(e) recommend to the appropriate professional body to take disciplinary proceedings against any member of that professional body for any professional misconduct or negligence;¹⁰¹

¹⁰⁰ Section 11 PNDC Law 1.

¹⁰¹ Citizens Vetting Committee (Amendment) Law, 1982 (PNDCL 18), amending Para 7 of Citizens Vetting Committee Law, 1982 (PNDCL 1).

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

With such wide powers and no possibility of review by any institution, except the PNDC, the CVC was a law unto itself, and in a position to end the professional career or source of livelihood of anyone against whom it believed such action was justified.

20.2.5 The CVC could also “vet in absentia” in specified circumstances, such as where a person was outside Ghana or had been given reasonable notice to appear before the Committee to be vetted, but had failed to respond, or had failed to return to continue vetting that had begun¹⁰².

20.2.6 Some persons who appeared before the CVC in places outside Accra, complained of ill-treatment whilst undergoing interrogation. Evidence before the Commission, also established that even when these persons were found not to owe on taxes, they were forced to give up some of their money because they were “too rich” and the “government needed money”. They were escorted at gun-point to their banks and made to withdraw cash for making such payments. However, no receipts issued in these cases.

20.3 National Investigations Committee (NIC)

20.3.1 The NIC was established under National Investigations Committee Law, 1982 (PNDCL 2), to conduct investigations into the following:

- (a) Allegations of corruption, dishonesty, or abuse of office for private profit against any person or group of persons who held high office of State or any public office in Ghana, or may be shown to have acted in collaboration with any such person holding high office of State or any public office in respect of any of the foregoing acts;
- (b) Allegations of breaches by any group of persons of mandatory provisions of any of Ghana’s Constitutions;
- (c) allegations of breaches of statutes or laws whereby damage was caused to the national interest;
- (d) Any person who may have willfully and corruptly acted in such a manner as to cause financial loss or damage to the State or who may have directly or indirectly acquired financial or material gain fraudulently or improperly or illegally to the detriment of the State;
- (e) Any other acts or omissions which may be shown to be detrimental to the economy of Ghana or to the welfare of the sovereign people of Ghana or in any other way to the national interest.¹⁰³

For the purpose of doing its work, the NIC could apply to the PNDC to order the detention of any person, or the freezing of the bank accounts of any person it considered ¹⁰² Citizens Vetting Committee (Amendment) Law, 1982 (PNDCL 18), enacting a new para 9A of Citizens Vetting Committee Law, 1982 (PNDCL 1).

¹⁰³ Section 3 of PNDC Law 2.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

necessary and the PNDC could act as it thought fit.¹⁰⁴ The NIC could refer a person it had interrogated to stand trial at the Public Tribunals.

20.3.2 The NIC had Regional branches which had interesting acronyms, such as ASHRIC (Ashanti) ERIC (Eastern) URIC (Upper Region), etc. It was usually chaired by a lawyer. As with the CVC, the NIC enjoyed wide powers as it was not subject to any control or supervision by the courts whose jurisdiction had been ousted, or by any other body, except the PNDC.

21.0 The Public Tribunals

21.1 The intention to establish public tribunals in Ghana by the PNDC was first publicly articulated by Flt. Lt. Rawlings in a national Television and Radio Broadcast on 5th January, 1982.¹⁰⁵ In his address, the Chairman of the PNDC declared that public tribunals would be established to try those who had committed crimes against the people, in a manner different from the regular courts. He explained that the Tribunals would conduct investigations and trials, and that the trials would be held in public, and would “not be fettered in their procedures by technical rules, which in the past have perverted the course of justice and enabled criminals to go free.”¹⁰⁶ The Tribunals would co-exist with the regular courts, though they would remain parallel systems. He also gave the following caution:

Let each respect the boundaries of the other, and there will be peaceful co-existence. But even though each will be acting within its own confines, we believe that ultimately it is for the people to decide the correctness or otherwise of the judgments of the two systems. This is one way in which the dispensation of justice itself will be democratized.¹⁰⁷

21.3 The official justification for establishing the Public Tribunals system was that the regular courts were corrupt, and their work was characterized by undue delays. They were also accused of being prejudiced against the poor, because they sentenced the poor to prison for small infractions, while rich criminals escaped punishment because they could hire the best legal services available. In those days, “One law for the rich” and “One law for the poor” and “Justice delayed, is justice denied” were some of the most popular catch-phrases for the “revolutionaries”. Its inaugural sitting was on 15th September, 1982, and initially it sat only in Accra.

¹⁰⁴ Section 4(1) of PNDC Law 2.

¹⁰⁵ Attafuah, supra.

¹⁰⁶ Daily Graphic vol. 9695 Wednesday 6th January, 1982 p.1

¹⁰⁷ Ibid.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

21.4 The jurisdiction of the Public Tribunals was limited to criminal matters only, and they were not obliged to observe the regular rules of Evidence and Criminal Procedure. The Tribunals were also discouraged from using “technical rules of procedure (or what was referred to pejoratively as “technicalities”).¹⁰⁸ This caused the GBA to express the view that it is disturbingly prejudicial for Public Tribunals to decide in advance without any attempt at definition that technicalities will not be tolerated... an accused person is entitled to avail himself of any rule of law or procedure which operates to his benefit.¹⁰⁹

21.5 The minimum sentence of imprisonment was three years, and they could be given jurisdiction over any matter that the PNDC determined. Their sentences were subject to approval by the PNDC. Soon after it began sitting in Accra, the PNDC exercised its power of review of sentences in fourteen cases. Although there were no particulars published of the cases involved, the sentences were either confirmed, reduced or increased, according to the pleasure of the PNDC.¹¹⁰

21.6 In the early days of the Public Tribunals, cases were swiftly dealt with, and the sentences severe in the extreme. The speed with which prominent persons were tried and imprisoned also gave the public the assurance that the law was, indeed no respecter of persons. This approach to criminal justice seemed to satisfy the public that no longer would criminals escape just punishment, and the system was hailed as a panacea to the deficiencies of the regular courts.

21.7 During the first two years of the life of the Public Tribunals, the Public Tribunals Law, 1982 (PNDC 24), there was no right of appeal because there was no appellate body provided to perform that function. The absence of an appellate system constituted a gross violation of the rights of those who were tried and sentenced.

21.8 In the early years of the Public Tribunals there were strange practices that had implications for justice. In October, 1982, the public was informed that those who attended Tribunal sittings “can give suggestions, advice and any form of assistance they may have to help its proceedings”.¹¹¹ This was given practical application when in December, 1982, members of the public present at the trial of a person convicted of gold smuggling were invited to prescribe a sentence which in their opinion would serve as a deterrent to other gold smugglers. Sixteen persons voted:

¹⁰⁸ H.J.A.N. Mensa-Bonsu, “The Public Tribunal System And the Human Rights Regime” in The Judicial System And The Protection Of Human Rights In Ghana E.K.Quashigah, (ed) Human Rights Study Centre, Faculty of Law, University of Ghana, Legon and Konrad-Adenauer Foundation Of Germany, Accra, 1994.

¹⁰⁹ GBA Annual General Conference, Statement on Public Tribunals, 13th January, 1984.

¹¹⁰ Ghanaian Times vol. 7712 Saturday, 9th October, 1982, p.1.

¹¹¹ Ghanaian Times vol. 7,721 Wednesday, 20th October, 1982.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

five suggested he be given 10-15 years imprisonment; six suggested that he be fined heavily and his two cars confiscated; and five suggested he be fined and freed. Significantly, the Tribunal did not act on any of these suggestions when it sentenced him to 17 years imprisonment.¹¹²

21.9 The Ghana Bar Association refused to appear before the Tribunals. Even though a group of lawyers decided to defy the ban of the GBA and practise law before the Tribunals, most accused persons could not secure the services of legal counsel for their defence.

21.10 The International Commission of Jurists (ICJ) sent a delegation to discuss the deficiencies in the system.¹¹³ In 1984, a new law to govern the operations of the Public Tribunals, the Public Tribunals Law, 1984 (PNDCL78), was promulgated. This Law made provision for the setting up of an Appeals Board.

21.11 Originally, a petition appeal had to be lodged within thirty days of the making of the Order,¹¹⁴ but as the case loads increased and the Public Tribunals were afflicted by delays, the law was amended to make the time limit “7 days from the date of receipt of a copy of the decision or order...”¹¹⁵ This change notwithstanding, some persons never had the opportunity to file their appeals as the written judgment or order was either never produced, or could not be traced, by the Tribunal.

21.12 The Public Tribunals were allowed to try persons in absentia, provided they had tried to contact the accused person by putting information about the charges in the public domain through the media.¹¹⁶ Evidence before the Commission suggested that occasions did arise when Prosecutors secured convictions, by misrepresenting facts about accused persons who were available to stand trial, but who had not been informed of charges pending against them. The result of such wrongdoing on the part of prosecutors, was that some persons were sent to prison on the strength of sentences imposed in absentia, without an opportunity to defend themselves.

21.13 One of the abiding difficulties of the Public Tribunals System was the fact that it operated as a parallel system of justice for the trial of crimes. It thus had concurrent

¹¹² Daily Graphic vol 9977, Saturday, 4th December, 1982. The accused in the case, J. K Ampah collapsed and died when his pace-maker failed, in the course of testifying on this event in his petition before the Commission on 5th June 2003.

¹¹³ C. Flinterman, “Human Rights in Ghana” S.I.M.Special No.4 International Commission of Jurists and Netherlands Commission on Human Rights, 1985

¹¹⁴ PNDCL78, para 19(4).

¹¹⁵ Public Tribunals (Amendment) Law, 1985 (PNDCL 108) re-enacting para 3 of PNDCL78.

¹¹⁶ PNDCL 24, para10(1); PNDCL 78, para 14.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

jurisdiction with the regular courts to try certain offences, but no regulations were developed to prescribe when a particular case could be put before the Tribunal, rather than before the courts. As it became clear that the quality of justice available at the Public Tribunals was not as fair to the accused as in the regular courts, potential accused persons began to desire prosecution before the regular courts. This gap in the law soon became the source of corruption, as those who fell foul of the law had every incentive to attempt to influence the decision-making process so that they would be put before the regular courts, rather than the Public Tribunals for trial. The GBA called upon the government to bring the problem to an end as soon as possible.¹¹⁷

22.0 Political Interference In The Work Of The Public Tribunals

22.1 The Public Tribunals were subject to the control of the PNDC by the simple expedient of requiring their judgments to be subject to confirmation by the PNDC.¹¹⁸ In addition to this, the PNDC could refer any matter not already specified to be tried by it. It was also a fact that the penalty for certain offences were to be prescribed by the PNDC, but since this would happen only after someone was to be tried for one of those particular offences, a fundamental principle of the rule of law in respect of justice in criminal trials was violated.

22.2 There were also credible allegations that pressure was sometimes brought to bear upon the Tribunals to produce convictions of particular persons, since panel members could be removed on grounds of “counter-revolutionary activity”.¹¹⁹ Executive manipulation was certainly prejudicial to the right of an accused to a fair trial.

22.3 In 1984, the independence of the Public Tribunals was put to the test when a young man, Nii Amu Addy, said to be the cousin of the Chairman of the PNDC, shot and killed a man. He was tried for murder at the Public Tribunals and was subsequently acquitted and discharged on the spurious ground that the shooting was accidental.¹²⁰ The Chairman of the PNDC, believed that the basis of his acquittal was absurd and so ordered his re-arrest.¹²¹ The State subsequently appealed against the acquittal and Nii Amu Addy was consequently put before another panel and re-tried, in complete disregard of the rule against double jeopardy. Predictably a verdict of ‘guilty of murder’ was handed down and a sentence of ‘death by firing squad’ imposed on him. When passing sentence, the Chairman of the Tribunal stated that in view of the mitigating factors the PNDC could, when the verdict came before the Council for confirmation, commute the death sentence to life imprisonment.¹²² The young man was later reported to have been executed by firing squad on, or about, 29th September, 1984.¹²³ One wonders why the “mitigating ¹¹⁷ Address of President of GBA (1987) supra.

¹¹⁸ PNDCL 24, para 7(22).

¹¹⁹ PNDC Law 78, Para. 10(5).

¹²⁰ Ghanaian Times, vol. 8,278 Saturday, 11th August, 1984, p.2.

¹²¹ Ghanaian Times, vol. 8,279 Monday, 13th August, 1984, p.3.

¹²² Ghanaian Times, Vol. 8,308 Friday, 14th September, 1984, pp.1&.3.

¹²³ Ghanaian Times, vol. 8,322 Monday, 1st October, 1984, p.1.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

factors” were considered sufficient for mitigation of sentence by the Chairman, when it was not sufficient for reducing the offence from murder to manslaughter.

22.4 There was also another occasion involving reckless driving that caused a road accident and injury to a student, and was dealt with much too leniently in the opinion of the Chairman of the PNDC. The case was also ordered to be re-tried, and this was done. Although the outcome was not as serious for the driver involved as in the Addy case, both occasions constituted a gross violation of the rights of the accused persons, and did nothing but harm to the image of the Public Tribunals.¹²⁴

23.0 End of Public Tribunals

23.1 In 1991, the Committee of Experts who made proposals for the drafting of the 1992 Constitution recommended that the Public Tribunals ought not to be retained because their very existence as a separate and parallel system of justice meant that citizens similarly placed were being subjected to different standards of justice.¹²⁵

23.2 The 1992 Constitution abolished the Public Tribunals as they existed, and gave them six months within which to complete their part-heard cases. Appeals pending before them were transferred to the Court of Appeal.

24.0 Special Military Tribunal

24.1 In 1982, the PNDC passed a law establishing Special Military Tribunals to try service personnel who were molesting members of the public.¹²⁶ The Special Military Tribunal as provided for under the Law, was to be presided over by a panel of five or seven persons, made up of Officers and Other Ranks, and they could impose fines of up to two thousand cedis (the equivalent of about $800 at the time). However, in 1984, the law was amended to give it jurisdiction to try civilians and persons who had retired or deserted from the Armed Forces, as if they were service personnel or in active service respectively.¹²⁷ The offences triable by the Tribunal were also amended to cover any act that

- (a) incites or assists or procures any person to invade Ghana with armed force or unlawfully subjects any part of Ghana to attack by land, sea or air or assist in the preparation of any such invasion or attack;
- (b) prepares or endeavours in any manner to overthrow the Government or to usurp any powers of the Government;

¹²⁴ See “Damning Indictment” West Africa magazine, 30th March – 5th April, 1992.

¹²⁵ Report of Committee of Experts on Proposals for a Draft Constitution of Ghana Ghana Publishing Corporation, Tema, 1991, p.124, para. 266-267.

¹²⁶ Special Military Tribunals Law, 1982 (PNDCL.19).

¹²⁷ para 1(1) and para. 2.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

- (c) knows of the commission of any of the above acts but does not report it to the Provisional National Defence Council...”

The Special Military Tribunal could also conduct trials in absentia and in respect of the offences listed above, the trials could be held in camera.¹²⁸ There was no right of appeal.

24.2 The panel that could preside was also amended to make it possible for the Commander-in-Chief to prescribe a panel of three: the Unit Commander, one Officer and one Other Rank.¹²⁹ The penalties that could be awarded were also dramatically enhanced. From a tribunal whose highest penalty was dismissal with disgrace from the Armed Forces, the Special Military Tribunal was given power to impose death by firing squad.¹³⁰

24.3 All these changes were to take retrospective effect from 21st July, 1982. These amendments to the original Law were obviously intended to legitimise acts that had been done prior to their enactment. This raises issues of justice when a law attempts to regularise acts done by a judicial body, after it has unlawfully imposed a sentence, extending even to the death penalty that has been carried out.

25.0 The Price Control Tribunal

25.1 The Price Control Tribunal was established to deal with traders who had been caught selling goods above control price. Task Forces were formed to enforce control prices. This body also sent some people to prison, and supervised the brutalisation of some traders. Its functions became redundant when the government’s economic policies changed and price controls were abandoned.

¹²⁸ Para. 3A and para 4(7) of Special Military Tribunals Law, 1982 (PNDCL 19), as amended by Special Military Tribunal (Amendment) Law, 1984 (PNDC L. 77).

¹²⁹ Para. 3(3) of Special Military Tribunals Law, 1982 (PNDCL 19), as amended by Special Military Tribunal (Amendment) (No.2) Law, 1984 (PNDC L. 100).

¹³⁰ Para. 2(1) of Special Military Tribunals Law, 1982 (PNDCL 19), as amended by Special Military Tribunal (Amendment) Law, 1984 (PNDC L. 77).

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2PART II: THE LEGAL PROFESSION*26.0 Introduction

26.1 The Legal Profession, has during its existence, found itself called upon to protect the fundamental human rights of the citizens, or, at least, to prevent state-sponsored human rights violations. This has been the norm, particularly during periods of non-constitutional governments, because:

- (1) often it was lawyers who understood new legislation and the threats they posed to the enjoyment of fundamental human rights; and
- (2) lawyers represented an influential group of persons who did not depend on the government for a living. They were therefore able to confront the government on pertinent issues without risk to their economic survival.

Through the medium of Press Statements and Resolutions adopted at the Annual Conferences of the GBA, lawyers brought their influence to bear upon issues of national governance, including the human rights of the citizenry.

26.2 The role lawyers were called upon to play was not without cost to the individual lawyers concerned. Many such lawyers bore the brunt of the displeasure of the Executive as they suffered detention for their activism.

26.3 Lawyers have also suffered ill-treatment whenever they have been associated with the causes that they defended.

26.4 Individual members of the legal profession have also been at the forefront in designing and implementing repressive measures against the citizenry. Consequently, they have also been responsible for some of the human rights violations that were perpetrated during the mandate period.

6TH MARCH, 1957 – 23RD FEBRUARY, 1966:
CPP GOVERNMENT

27.0 The Bar On The Preventive Detention Act, 1958 (PDA)

27.1 In January, 1959, the GBA criticised the high-handed behaviour of the executive after subjecting certain events in the country to critical examination after the Minister for Information, Kofi Baako, was reported to have threatened that he would lock up any lawyer who misbehaved. The GBA issued a statement criticising the government for doing acts that had brought the Judiciary into conflict with the Executive. The statement said,

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

The Association solemnly and humbly declares that neither this threat nor any other threats will deter it from pursuing as a body, or encouraging its members to pursue as individuals, the duty to uphold law and defend the interest of any citizen insofar as those interests are not illegal.¹³¹

The statement went further to affirm that the courts of law exist as much to implement the acts of the Executive as to uphold the rights of the individual. The statement therefore concluded that “the upholding of rights cannot be subordinate to political expediency, for therein lies the rule of tyranny and not the rule of law.”¹³² By this statement, the GBA was, in fact, blaming the government acting in such a manner as to be brought into conflict with the Judiciary.

27.2 Soon after the first detentions under the PDA were effected, Dr. Joseph Boakye Danquah, a prominent lawyer and later, President of the GBA, began to fight through the courts for the PDA to be repealed because of its repressive nature. He took various habeas corpus applications to the courts, culminating in the decision in Re Akoto when the courts ruled that it was not the proper forum for the enforcement of the Declarations on Human Rights that the President of Ghana had been required to make before the National Assembly, under the Republican Constitution.

27.3 Eventually, Dr. Danquah had to make the supreme sacrifice in the course of his fight against oppression, dictatorship and the denial of fundamental human rights when he and Koi Larbi, another lawyer, most associated with the defence of detainees and deportees, were themselves detained. Their detention made it impossible for detainees to secure legal counsel.

27.4 During Dr. Danquah’s spirited campaign against the PDA, other members of the Ghana Bar Association were ominously silent on these matters, although they put up a ferocious resistance to Nkrumah’s attempt to divest lawyers of their wigs and gowns as relics of a colonial anachronism. Indeed, some members of the Legal Profession considered his persistent civil rights campaigns as quixotic and divorced from reality. Some thought that he was more of a philosopher than a lawyer.¹³³

¹³¹ Omari, supra, p.57.

¹³² Ibid.

¹³³ S.K.B. Asante,., Reflections on the Constitution, Law and Development, The J. B. Danquah Memorial Lectures, March 2002 Series 35, Ghana Academy of Arts and Sciences, Accra. 2002.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

27.5 Between 1963 and 1966, the government made efforts to get the GBA to elect officers more favourable to its cause. The response of the lawyers was to cease to hold formal meetings.¹³⁴

24TH FEBRUARY, 1966 – 30TH SEPTEMBER, 1969: NLC28.1 NLC Laws Against CPP Functionaries

28.1.1 Immediately after the overthrow of the CPP government, the NLC began to enact Decrees that were aimed solely at CPP government officials, CPP functionaries and activists on account of the widely held belief that they had amassed wealth at the expense of the state. These Decrees ranged from the re-institution of detention for CPP functionaries and members ostensibly for their own protection – “Protective Custody”, through the banning of the CPP and its wings, such as the Ghana Young Pioneers (GYP) and the vesting of their properties in the State, to the institution of Commissions of Inquiry to investigate the assets of leading members of government and other office-holders of the CPP. The GBA, having itself faced near-extinction under the CPP government, did not protest these laws. Indeed the President of the GBA at the time, Victor Owusu, became the Attorney-General and had direct responsibility for the drafting of these laws.

28.2 In January, 1967, certain persons were accused of plotting to overthrow the NLC. They were made up of one young Army Officer, and three civilians. They were all tried by Military Tribunal and sentenced to various terms of imprisonment. This marked the first occasion when civilians were tried by a Military Tribunal. No one protested this fact, and it subsequently paved the way for the trial of other civilians by Military Tribunals later on.

28.3 There was an abortive coup on 17th April, 1967, in which Lt-Gen E.K. Kotoka was killed. Many persons from all over the country, numbering about 1,000, were arrested under ten Protective Custody Decrees enacted within a period of one month. They were detained for periods up to 18 months, for “jubilating” over the coup attempt.¹³⁵ The coup attempt was widely condemned, though no one condemned the detention of the hapless citizens, mostly former members of the banned CPP, whose offence was to have shown ¹³⁴ Robin Luckham, “Imperialism, Law and Structural Dependence The Ghana Legal Profession” in Lawyers in the Third World: Comparative and Developmental Perspectives Studies of Law in Social Change and Development 3, C.J. Dias, R. Luckham D.O. Lynch, J.C.N. Paul (eds) Scandinavian Institute of African Studies, Uppsala and International Center for Law in Development, New York, 1981 pp. 90 - 122, at p.115.

¹³⁵ National Liberation Council (Protective Custody) (Consolidated) (Amendment (No.7) Decree, 1967 (NLCD164); National Liberation Council (Protective Custody) (Consolidated) (Amendment (No.8) Decree, 1967 (NLCD167); National Liberation Council (Protective Custody) (Consolidated) (Amendment (No.9) Decree, 1967 (NLCD172); and National Liberation Council (Protective Custody) (Consolidated) (Amendment (No.10) Decree, 1967 (NLCD179).

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

feelings of approval when the event occurred, or who were merely suspected to harbour sympathies for the coup-makers, on account of their attachment to the CPP.

28.4 The 1969 Constitution, whose drafting was influenced largely by lawyers, carried the disqualification of CPP functionaries that had been legislated by the NLC, into the Constitution as its article 71. The Constitution also carried Transitional Provisions which gave the government power to appoint persons into the Public Services or offices established by the NLC. It was these provisions that eventually produced the dismissal of 568 Civil and Public Servants by the PP Government, known as “Apollo 568”.

1ST OCTOBER, 1969 – 12TH JANUARY, 1972:
P P GOVERNMENT

29.0 Lawyers In the Second Republic

29.1 Lawyers were very prominent in the Progress Party, and supported the acts of the government. Their voices were not heard on the mode of implementation of the Aliens Compliance Order, nor on the “Apollo 568” case.

13TH JANUARY, 1972 – 3RD JUNE, 1979:
NRC/SMC I & II

30.0 Resistance To Military Rule

30.1 The GBA also resisted the phenomenon of military rule in Ghana and insisted at all times that the military had no role to play in politics and consequently, that the overthrow of democratically-elected governments is illegitimate. It was inexcusable (in the opinion of the GBA), where there was a democratic Constitution which gave the citizens a right to change their government.

30.2 The GBA resisted attempts to introduce pseudo-democratic regimes in this country such as was attempted by Gen Acheampong in his proposals for a Union Government. It is said of members of the GBA that,

They became strong critics of military rule and military justice, including the redefinition of several existing offences and designation of several new ones as ‘subversion’, the establishment of military tribunals to try them and the conferral of powers of arrest and search on military personnel. They were...virtually the only body of organized public opinion that was able to voice such criticisms in public.¹³⁶

¹³⁶ Luckham, supra, p.98.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

30.3 During 1977 to 1978, the GBA played a pivotal role in bringing into being the Association of Recognised Professional Bodies (ARPB) that did a lot to bring down the government of Gen Acheampong. For the resistance of the GBA to the political adventurism of Acheampong, many of its members were detained by the government.

4TH JUNE, 1979 – 23RD SEPTEMBER, 1979: AFRC31.0 GBA And AFRC

31.1 The GBA was generally not in evidence, as many of its members were part of the class of citizen targeted by AFRC policies. This regime also saw the active participation of many lawyers in the AFRC and the drafting of draconian legislation. Indeed, W Adumoah-Bossman, then President of the GBA joined the AFRC and became associated with the abuses perpetrated by or under it. He also became a member of a panel of the AFRC Special Tribunal that was established to continue the “revolutionary justice” begun under the regime. It was largely on account of his participation in the AFRC, that he was voted out of office later that year.

24TH SEPTEMBER, 1979 – 30TH DECEMBER, 1981:
THIRD REPUBLIC*32.0 The GBA

32.1 At its Annual Conference at Cape Coast in 1981, the GBA criticized the government for harassing certain personalities by putting them under “aggressive surveillance” and urged the government to desist from such acts.¹³⁷

31ST DECEMBER, 1981 – 6TH JANUARY, 1993: PNDC33.0 The Relationship Between The PNDC And The GBA

33.1 The relationship between the government and the GBA was one of bitter contest. Beginning from January, 1982, when the GBA called upon the newly-established PNDC government to hand over power to a National Government,¹³⁸ the relationship remained ¹³⁷ Resolution of the GBA on the Liberty of Citizens of Ghana, 13th January, 1984. The Resolution of 1984 recalled the 1981 resolution and regretted that the persons who were the subject of that protest had themselves become a part of a state machinery that was perpetrating worse forms of the abuses and violations that they suffered.

¹³⁸ Daily Graphic, vol. 9707 Monday, 18th January, 1982, p.4.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

adversarial right to the end of the PNDC rule. Every year, the GBA adopted resolutions at the Annual Conferences, which called upon the PNDC to make arrangements to hand over power to a democratically-elected government so that the citizenry could enjoy their civil and political rights.¹³⁹ The resolution also called upon the PNDC to either bring all political detainees to trial or release them, and end all arbitrary arrests and detentions. This period was notable for the massive pressure that was brought to bear upon lawyers in general, and the GBA in particular. The 1985 resolution also saw the GBA reaffirming its attachment to the wig and gown, and insisting that lawyers should appear in court fully robed in order to recover their loss of self-esteem.

33.2 The General Resolutions of the Annual General Conference of the GBA in January, 1984, criticized the PNDC for its

“continued official control of the press and other news media ... which effectively prevents the free dissemination of information, views and opinion different from those of the Government should be removed forthwith to facilitate free expression of opinion, exchange of views and information between the citizens and the Government.”¹⁴⁰

The resolution also called upon the PNDC Government to lift the curfew that had been in place since 31st December, 1981.

33.3 In March, 1985, the GBA protested the starving of the judicial system of funds and material resources, and the consequent deterioration of facilities and services in the regular courts; the “abject squalor, degradation and dehumanizing conditions in most prisons, police cells and other places of confinement”; and the “inadequate clothing of many indigent prisoners and others in detention.”¹⁴¹ The resolution also announced the establishment of a Human Rights Fund to support the families of persons detained without trial.

34.0 The GBA And The Public Tribunals

34.1.1 The GBA announced its opposition to the setting up of the Public Tribunals by the Government of the PNDC. At its Annual Conference in September, 1982, members of the GBA adopted a resolution to boycott the Public Tribunals. The objection to the Tribunals was on account of both the form and substance of the new system. The tenor of the objections were as follows:

¹³⁹ Resolutions passed at the 1984/85 Annual General Conference, 6th December, 1985.

¹⁴⁰ Resolution dated 13th January, 1984.

¹⁴¹ Resolutions passed at the Continuation Meeting of the 1983/84 Annual General Conference, 15th March, 1985.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

- (1) As regards the form of the Tribunals, the GBA was of the view that the prescription of a panel made up of one lawyer and two or more lay persons with unrestricted powers had many pitfalls judging by the difficulties with the existing jury system.
- (2) The GBA thought it inappropriate, that the votes of the lay and professionally-trained panel-members should have equal weight when decisions were to be taken on the fate of an accused. (This was because it was possible for the two or more lay members to reach a decision that was wrong in law, but that would be the determinant of the fate of the accused persons).
- (3) In addition to this, the lawyers on the panels were mostly very junior, and it was unlikely that they had the requisite experience to handle the responsibility of running the system effectively.
- (4) The Tribunals were not subject to the supervisory or appellate jurisdiction of the Superior Court
- (5) There was no right of appeal.¹⁴² The GBA thus declared itself unwilling to support this wrong procedure in law and was not prepared to condone such illegality by appearing before the Tribunals.

34.1.2 As a result of these objections, the members of the GBA refused to put their services at the disposal of people accused and charged before these tribunals. Defending the decision, J.K. Agyemang, then President of the GBA, stated to the Commission, that the grounds for the boycott were, and are still sound.¹⁴³

34.2 The Effect Of The Boycott

34.2.1 The decision to boycott the Tribunals resulted in many accused persons being charged and tried without legal counsel. For instance, the accused persons in the case of the murder of the three High Court Judges and retired Army Officer were put before the Public Tribunal per a decision of the PNDC Government instead of the High Court. Under the Public Tribunals Law, 1982 (PNDC L 24), murder was not one of the offences triable by the Public Tribunal, and so a special authorisation was required to confer jurisdiction on it, to try the offence of murder. This special authorisation was duly obtained. According to the then Attorney-General, this special authorisation was signed by the Chairman of the PNDC on 8th June, 1983.

34.2.2 This decision made it impossible for the accused persons to secure the services of legal counsel, even though the accused persons appealed to the tribunal to assist them in contacting counsel of their choice. Eventually the Tribunal proceeded to try the accused persons without the benefit of legal counsel as the Tribunal maintained that it would not keep adjourning simply because the accused claimed they could not engage the services of a lawyer.

¹⁴² Resolution of GBA Annual Conference, Statement on Public Tribunals, 13th January, 1984

¹⁴³ Memorandum to the National Reconciliation Commission.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

34.2.3 The trial for a capital offence without the benefit of counsel constituted a serious violation of the time-honoured principle that an accused person has a right to legal representation of his or her choice.¹⁴⁴ Arguably, the decision of the GBA to boycott the proceedings at the Tribunals contributed to the violation of the rights of these accused persons.

35.0 The Gepi-Atee Commission

35.1 The Government set up a Commission of Inquiry into Insurance Malpractices, under the chairmanship of Gepi-Atee.¹⁴⁵ This Gepi-Atee Commission found many malpractices in the Insurance industry, and a number of lawyers were consequently prosecuted convicted and imprisoned for insurance fraud.

36.0 Attacks On Lawyers And The Legal Profession

36.1 Following the announcement of the GBA's decision to boycott the Public Tribunals, placard-bearing demonstrators, some of whom were supposed to be secondary school students, protested the boycott as "anti-revolutionary". The Law Chambers of prominent lawyers were vandalised by these demonstrators, and the documents in them torn up or taken away.

36.2 Government functionaries criticized the GBA, and the press described lawyers with very unflattering epithets. Despite these attacks, the President of the GBA, Enoch D. Kom, defiantly declared "No one can shut us up."¹⁴⁶ Senior lawyers were put before the CVC and ridiculed in the newspapers for not having paid their taxes.

36.3 In 1983, the GBA called upon the government to hand over power to a civilian government. Lawyers were subjected to press attacks and their integrity called into question. They were even called "tax-dodgers" by the Force Commander of the Ghana Armed Forces. Soon after the Annual Conference of the GBA in 1985, lawyers were accused of not paying their taxes, and described as "the worst tax dodgers". Twenty-six Kumasi-based legal practitioners were invited to appear before the Office of Revenue Commissioners, to account for taxes they had paid for the preceding five years. Newspaper publications of the details of lawyers and their indebtedness to tax authorities appeared in the government-controlled press.¹⁴⁷

¹⁴⁴ George Agyekum, The Judges' Murder Trial of 1983, Justice Trust Publications, Accra, 1999, p.23.

¹⁴⁵ Ghanaian Times vol. 7,701 Monday, 27th September, 1982 p.1.

¹⁴⁶ Ghanaian Times vol. 7,698 Thursday, 23rd September, 1982 p.4.

¹⁴⁷ Ghanaian Times vol. 8,634 Monday 7th October, 1985, pp.1&3.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

36.4 Some lawyers, who had appeared as counsel for AFRC convicts before the courts, fled the country in 1982. Those already outside, did not return. Still others fled the country, when a systematic campaign of harassment was begun against lawyers. Some of those who remained were arrested, brutalized and detained in military guardrooms to be investigated. It was a very difficult period for lawyers.

34.5 Lawyers were attacked in the media for charging excessive fees, and at least one lawyer was prosecuted for dishonestly acquiring property, after an investigation by the

NIC, because he charged professional fees that were deemed to be “inordinately high.” Even though the General Legal Council brought to the attention of the NIC, that such matters involved issues of professional discipline which was its statutory remit, the case was still treated as a criminal case for which he was imprisoned.

36.6 The GBA consistently criticized the detention law, Protective Custody Law, 1982 (PNDCL 4), and Habeas Corpus (Amendment) Law, 1985 (PNDCL 91), until they ceased to exist upon the operation of the 1992 Constitution. These two laws were described as pernicious because PNDCL4 gave the government power to detain any person whenever the PNDC was satisfied that it was in the interest of national security so to do, and PNDCL91 prohibited the court from enquiring into the grounds for the detention respectively. At every opportunity, the GBA repeated its call for a repeal of those laws.

36.7 An attempt was made to dismember the GBA by attacking the monopoly that it had enjoyed as the sole body for the organization of lawyers in Ghana. Thomas Nuako Ward-Brew, a lawyer with leftist ideological political leanings and pro-government sympathies, successfully challenged, by legal action, the monopoly enjoyed by the GBA over the organization of lawyers into an association. He subsequently announced the formation of a rival association, the Bar Association of Ghana (BAG). It is uncertain whether the BAG actually took off, or whether it had any other members apart from the founder.

36.8 Another Association was formed, known as Ghana Association of Democratic Lawyers (GADL) with George Agyekum and Kwaku Gyan as Chairman and General Secretary respectively. These gentlemen were, incidentally, also officials of the Public Tribunals system. Although named as an association of lawyers, it also had a number of non-lawyers as members, and one of its objects was to dedicate itself to the promotion of human rights. Under the auspices of the GADL, a British Lawyer, Lord Guildford, came into the country to give a series of lectures, urging Ghanaian lawyers to free their minds from slavery, and accept the Public Tribunals because that system was better than what the country had inherited from Britain.¹⁴⁸

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

36.9 As a number of lawyers continued to defy the boycott resolution, the GBA sought to institute disciplinary action against them. It wrote to those lawyers threatening them with disciplinary action. The lawyers involved, challenged the standing of the GBA, to attempt to impose disciplinary action on its members who were merely obeying the laws of the land. This action generated great controversy within the GBA, and it came to be at its most vulnerable at this time, as some of its own members were in open revolt, and were fighting the association through the newspapers.¹⁴⁹

37.0 Murder Of The Three High Court Judges And Retired Military Officers

37.1. In 1982, the GBA was instrumental in the organisation of the burial arrangements of the murdered Judges and the Army Officer, as well as piling pressure on the government to institute a Judicial Inquiry into the event. Thereafter, the GBA Secretary, Robert Kocuvie Tay, complained of being threatened with arrest and detention from some highly-placed officials.

37.2 In 1986, the GBA decided to honour the memory of the three High Court Judges murdered in the line of duty. It decided to institute the 'Martyrs' Day' programme that was to consist of a memorial service and lectures.¹⁵⁰ In 1988, the first service was held in Accra, during which the events of 30th June, 1982, were recounted under the title, "Lest We Forget". This determination of the GBA not to let the event be forgotten, brought it into conflict with the government on a number of occasions.

37.3 In 1989, Peter Ala-Adjetey, Nutifafa Kuenyehia and Eugene Akoto-Bamfo, the President, Secretary and Treasurer respectively of the GBA, were arrested and detained a few days to the Martyrs' Day Lectures that were to be held under the theme, "Rule of Law". The Lectures had to be called off. The officers were detained for about two weeks, during which they were subjected to ill-treatment and then released without charge. There was also a public demonstration organised against the GBA.¹⁵¹

37.4 In the same year of 1989, the GBA suffered great embarrassment when the 6th Biennial Conference of the African Bar Association (ABA), of which it was the host, was banned by the PNDC, two days before the opening of the function. Under the theme, "Human Rights In Africa", the Conference was expecting delegates from all over Africa. By the time of the ban, some of the delegates had already arrived in Ghana. Despite the best efforts of the GBA, the government would not relent and the GBA incurred a lot of ¹⁴⁸ Ghanaian Times vol. 7,975 Thursday, 18th August, 1983 p.1.

¹⁴⁹ Daily Graphic vol. 10668 Saturday, 2nd March, 1985 pp1&3.

¹⁵⁰ Address of Acting President F.K. Mensah to Annual General Conference of the GBA, in Kumasi on 9th January, 1990.

¹⁵¹ Oquaye, supra, p.171.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

cost in making arrangements to cancel the international meeting, two days before it was due to open.¹⁵²

37.5 The GBA was subjected to heavy criticism in the media, with the accusation that it wanted to use the ABA Conference to destabilise the PNDC. Official denials to the media from the President, Peter Ala Adjetey, were never published. Perhaps, a discussion on human rights by the ABA, to whom an unfulfilled promise had been given in 1982 that the families of the murdered Judges would be compensated, made the government uneasy.

38.0 Lawyers' Protests Continue

38.1 In 1984, the GBA adopted a resolution calling upon the PNDC to lift the curfew, which had then been in place for two years, contending that it was an unjustified restriction on freedom of movement of persons in Ghana.¹⁵³

38.2 The PNDC responded to the criticisms spear-headed by the GBA and amended the Public Tribunals' Law to provide for an appellate system, but this did not soften the stance of the GBA, as many of the problems it complained about earlier still persisted.

38.3 Some individual lawyers, such as Ray Kakrabah-Quarshie, offered free legal services to detainees and other persons suffering human rights abuses under the PNDC.

38.4 In 1987, the GBA initiated discussions on various human rights issues with the Attorney-General and Secretary for Justice on issues of the administration of Justice. It also held discussions with the Acting Secretary for the Interior and the Acting Director of Ghana Prisons Service. At these discussions, the GBA complained about the number of police checkpoints and barriers in the country, that affected the citizens' right to freely move about; the illegal activities of members of the Civil Defence Organisation (CDO) and the need to contain their revolutionary zeal; the appalling state of facilities in the country's prisons; and the need to set up a Parole Board.¹⁵⁴

39.0 The GBA And The Return To Civilian Rule

39.1 In 1991, the GBA announced its decision to boycott the proceedings of the Consultative Assembly that had been established to debate proposals for a new Constitution in preparation for a return to constitutional rule. The GBA disapproved the proposed membership of the Assembly, because it was given only one representation on the body, whilst groups that could not be expected to know much about constitution-making, had an equal number, or even more representation. There was also an over-

¹⁵² Address of Ag. President (1990), supra.

¹⁵³ Resolution of GBA adopted on 13th January, 1984, at Annual General Conference in Accra.

¹⁵⁴ Address of President of GBA, P.A.Adjetey, to the Annual Conference of GBA, Takoradi, 4th October, 1988.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

representation of appointees of the government, and this, the GBA found to be unacceptable. The membership of 260, as announced, included representation from identifiable bodies, a sample of which is the following:

Ghana Association of Writers 1; Butchers Association 1; Ghana Bar Association 1; Drinking Bar Operators Association 1; Inland Canoe Fishermen 1; Canoe Fishermen Association 1; Co-operative Distillers 1; Civil Servants Association 2; National House of Chiefs 10; Ghana Registered Nurses Association 1; Market Women 3; Committees for the Defence of the Revolution 10; Ghana Chamber of Commerce 1; National Council on Women and Development 10.

39.2 The GBA's position was represented as evidence of its scorn of the working classes, and it was denounced for its elitism. The Consultative Assembly, therefore, proceeded without the official participation of GBA, although many lawyers found their way to the Assembly as representatives of organisations that had representation.

39.3 In 1992, the GBA organised a Press Conference, addressed by its President, Anthony K. Mmieh, to protest the insertion of Immunity Provisions in the Transitional Provisions to the 1992 Constitution. According to the GBA, the PNDC regime was seeking to escape the standards of accountability which it purported to lay down for others. The GBA believed that the Provisions were tantamount to legislating impunity.

40.0 THE LEGAL PROFESSION AND MILITARY REGIMES

40.1 Military regimes have also benefited from the support of the GBA, especially, when they were believed to have ended a rule of tyranny. This support ended up making the Association and the particular lawyers complicit in the human rights violations that were perpetrated under that regime. For instance, in 1966, Victor Owusu, then President of the GBA was drafted into its fold by the NLC, and he became its Attorney-General. He thus became complicit in the human rights violations such as the enactment and implementation of the Protective Custody law; the banning of the CPP; the banning of CPP activists and functionaries from offices in the Public Service, the detention of those accused of jubiling upon the killing of Lt Gen E.K. Kotoka in 1967, etc. In 1972, E.N.Moore, then President of the GBA joined in with the NRC and became its Attorney-General and in 1979, W. Adumoah-Bossman, then President of the GBA joined the AFRC, as a legal advisor.

40.2 During military regimes, lawyers who shared the philosophy of the coup-makers, were always on hand to help draft legal instruments to legitimise the seizure of power. They also played a very major role in the formulation of "revolutionary" legislation. They analysed laws and advised the military governments on laws that could be enacted ex post facto to "legitimise" their otherwise illegal actions. It was lawyers who drafted the Proclamations and Decrees of the military regimes; the tightly-worded ouster clauses; the incapacitation of the courts from doing justice; as well as the indemnity clauses in the Constitutions of the Second, Third, and Fourth Republics.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

40.3 Some lawyers helped to install dictatorships by the powers that were conferred on the leader of the ruling body. For instance, provisions PNDC Proclamation such as the following, open the gate to the exercise of untrammelled power by one person:

23(1) The exercise of any function vested in the Council by any enactment may if not signified by all the members of the Council, be signified under the hand of the Chairman or any other member of the Council authorized in that behalf by the Council.

23(3) Any document purporting to be signed by all the members of the Council or by the Chairman of the Council in the exercise of any functions conferred on the Council by any enactment or purporting to be signed by a person in pursuance of any function conferred on him by virtue of this proclamation or under any enactment shall be prima-facie evidence of the due making thereof.¹⁵⁵

To make matters worse, the following provision was made:

Any document purporting to have been printed or published by the Government Printer and purporting to be a Law of the Council (including this Proclamation) duly made in accordance with the provisions of this Proclamation shall be prima facie evidence of the due making thereof.¹⁵⁶

40.4 The net effect of these provisions was to create a situation in which action could be taken by the Chairman by himself in the name of the PNDC, and all the members would be deemed to have approved of it. It could also cover a situation in which a Law would emanate from the Government Printer and it would be deemed to have emanated from the PNDC, even if it did not. Clearly, the provision was not meant to benefit any unauthorized action by the Government Printer, but to eliminate the possibility of anyone, members of the PNDC inclusive, challenging the legitimacy of any Law published by the Government Printer, as a Law made by the PNDC. Being “prima facie evidence of the due making thereof”, anyone challenging the legitimacy of the pedigree of the Law would then have the burden of leading evidence to establish that the Law was not made in accordance with the Proclamation. This was a recipe for the unilateral exercise of power, that could be designed only by persons who had a good appreciation of legal technicalities.

40.5 Others helped the military governments to perpetuate their rule, by designing legislation that criminalized criticism and deprived the citizenry of the possibility of redress in the courts.¹⁵⁷ Lawyers were responsible for drafting the draconian Decrees of the military governments, as none of those leaders had any training in law.

¹⁵⁵ Provisional National Defence Council, (Establishment) Proclamation Law, 1981.

¹⁵⁶ Provisional National Defence Council, (Establishment) Proclamation Law, 1981, as amended by Provisional National Defence Council, (Establishment) (Amendment) Proclamation Law, 1984, para. 8. This amendment was made on 3rd April, 1984.

¹⁵⁷ The various decrees on Prohibition of rumours passed by the NLC, NRC and SMC are typical examples.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

40.6 As a result of the strategic position that the Legal Profession occupied, attempts were made by the various governments to influence the Legal Profession through the GBA by sponsoring candidates whom it (government) believed would support its cause. However, as Peter Ala Adjetey, one time President of the GBA,¹⁵⁸ stated

The Ghana Bar Association has fought fiercely to maintain its independence from party political control whether it be from the left, right, or centre. Whenever the members have felt that any attempt was being made by any government of this country to control the leadership of the Ghana Bar Association by sponsoring candidates for the national presidency of the Association, the members have risen to the challenge and successfully resisted any such attempt.

40.6 There are instances where some military regimes established quasi-judicial or other bodies that could exercise judicial power, without a right of appeal. The legislative purpose or intent of these bodies was to perpetrate human rights violations against perceived political opponents. Members of these bodies were in most cases, lawyers of considerable experience at the Bar. In spite of the knowledge that the members of the Legal Profession had about human rights principles and the need to uphold them at all times, they accepted these positions in the name of “service to the nation,” thereby selling their conscience and services in order to help some self-seeking politicians and military adventurists to perpetuate human rights violations.¹⁵⁹

41.0 CONCLUSION

41.1 The Bench in its decisions played a significant role in the development of a culture of human rights violations in the history of this country. Individual members of the Judiciary had their rights abused, and the Judiciary was unable to protect itself from Executive interference with its work. This was seen in the instances in which when some judges were dismissed for no tangible reason and without adherence to due process, other judges accepted new appointments with no hesitation, to replace the dismissed judges. In the case of the interpretation of human rights-related legislation such as the Preventive Detention Act, judges have consistently adopted a narrow positivist approach that supported the position of the Executive and deprived the citizenry of their human rights. This failure to hold the balance between the individual and the State, and undue deference to the Executive for reasons of self-preservation, resulted in widespread and unchecked violations of human rights of the citizenry, and produced some of the most terrible instances of the impact of an unrestrained use of Executive power, on the lives of ordinary people.

¹⁵⁸ Adjetey Peter Ala, “The Role of the Ghana Bar Association in Ghana’s Democratic Process” Speech delivered at the Annual General Conference of the GBA (1989).

¹⁵⁹ see NRCD 231.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 2

41.2 Some judges were also bold in their decisions thus upholding the principles of human rights. There was also overwhelming evidence that the Executive did interfere in the work of the Judiciary and this appears to have influenced the role played by the Judiciary in their inability to uphold the rights of the individual.

41.3 The GBA also played a significant role in upholding the human rights of the citizenry by speaking against violations. At the same time, individual members of the Bar accepted appointments by military regimes and assisted them to draft Decrees to support the usurpation of power. Some of these Decrees clearly violated the human rights of the citizenry, and others became the means by which human rights were denied to some citizens. Lawyers were the ones who ensured that the courts would be deprived of power to review the actions of military rulers that violated the rights of the citizenry.

41.4 Some lawyers were also martyred for the cause of the protection of the human rights of the citizenry. At great cost to themselves, some took on unpopular causes for indigent clients pro bono, and their contribution must be appropriately acknowledged.

41.5 The establishment of an alternative judicial system, the Public Tribunals and other investigative bodies, contributed significantly to the violations and abuses perpetrated in the name of the legal system.

CHAPTER THREE

THE MEDIA AND HUMAN RIGHTS IN GHANA

3.0 INTRODUCTION

3.0.1 It is commonly said in reference to media performance that a country gets the type of media it deserves. With particular reference to the media in Ghana, one often hears it said that they notoriously change with the times. In other words, the Ghanaian media have the tendency to respond as quickly to the political and ideological coloration of different governments, as the political environment changes.¹

3.0.2 The propensity to adapt and bend to the will of governments underpins media complicity in some of the human rights violations and abuses that have taken place under various regimes in Ghana. Experience shows that the first action of most military juntas is to take over media organisations, because they see the media as perfect tools to propagate the political and ideological objectives of their new regime. Thus as an institution, the media have played a legitimacy role in helping various Ghanaian administrations perpetuate their rule, however unpopular.² George Agyekum, who chaired the National Public Tribunals from 1984-1993, underscores this point when he notes:

Even though the avowed aim of the adventurer is to stifle media and free speech generally, incidentally the media is exploited to hype popular support either knowingly or unknowingly. It is used to create fertile conditions to justify the action. Media sensationalism or excessive publicity to coup prone characters or events has always been a contributory factor. Media practitioners have argued defending excessive publicity or sensationalism that to do otherwise would not safeguard the reporting of uncensored information from the public. But the real factor is the commercial objectives of private media in the face of competition and the rising cost of media production, a survival instinct. In all this it should be borne in mind that the coup maker does not tolerate free speech or democratic instincts. In fact the facts and figures have shown that coup makers have managed to use free speech and democratic culture and environment to strike and replace with fear, terror and intimidation of the populace...³

¹ See J.C. Merrill, Global Journalism: A Survey of the World's Mass Media New York, NY, Longman, 1983, W. Hachten, Muffled Drums: The News Media in Africa. Ames, IA, Iowa State University Press, 1971. J. Smith, "The Press and Elite Values in Ghana, 1962-1970," Journalism Quarterly, (Winter), no. 49, 1972, pp.670-683; O Stokke, (ed.), Reporting Africa, New York: Africana 1971; Y. Twumasi, "The Newspaper Press and Political Leadership in Developing Nations: The Case of Ghana, 1964 to 1978," Gazette, (26) No.1, 1980, p.7; K. Boafo, "Ghana Press Under the PNDC: Performance under Confinement," Gazette, (35), No.2, 1985, pp.73-82; C. Asante, The Press in Ghana: Problems and Prospects. Lanham, New York, London: University Press of America, 1996.

² Asante, supra.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

This assertion is quite clearly supported in the contents of the Ghanaian press during periods of unconstitutional rule, as well as from anecdotal evidence from media practitioners.

3.0.3 The sources of information for this report were: newspapers of the mandate period, memoranda from media practitioners, focus group discussions with journalists, published literature and other secondary sources. These have been helpful in illuminating the various ways in which media were complicit in, or resisted human rights abuses and repression throughout much of Ghana's post independence history.

3.0.4 It is important to note that generally, during the periods of unconstitutional rule in Ghana, there was little room or tolerance for private media, particularly when newspaper licensing laws were promulgated and enforced. Even during periods of constitutional rule, the Press did not operate as independent entities. State-owned dailies, the Daily Graphic, which was acquired by the State under the CPP government in 1964, and the Ghanaian Times, established by Dr. Kwame Nkrumah in 1958, as well as the state-owned Ghana Broadcasting Corporation (GBC) were the principal vehicles through which successive governments prosecuted their agenda, propagated their messages and coalesced public support for their regimes.

3.0.5 The history of radio and television as state-owned monopolies provides a critical background to understanding the peculiar role every government of Ghana exacted from GBC employees. Indeed, until the Ghana Broadcasting Corporation Decree, 1968 (NLCD 226), was passed to turn the Ghana Broadcasting Service into a public corporation in 1968, the Civil Service Act governed the GBC. Accordingly, the men and women who worked at the GBC as journalists perceived themselves as civil servants, serving the government of the day. It was not until 1996, three years after the restoration of democratic governance under the Fourth Republic, that the airwaves were liberalized, allowing for private participation in radio and television broadcast in Ghana. This state of affairs meant that it was largely, but not exclusively, government-controlled GBC and their press counterparts which were complicit and/or resistant to the illegitimate actions of unconstitutional governments.

3.0.6 This report examines print and broadcast media from 6th March, 1957 to 6th January, 1993. It is arranged in chronological order under sub-headings denoting the various governments: the CPP administration, the National Liberation Council (NLC), the Second Republic, the National Redemption Council (NRC) and its related regimes of the Supreme Military Councils (SMC) I and II, the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council (AFRC), the Third Republic and the Provisional National Defence Council (PNDC).

³ George Agyekum, The Treason Trial of 1986: Torture and Revolutionary Justice. Accra: Justice Trust Publication, 2001, p.17.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

3.0.7 The discussion of the media under the post-independence government of Dr. Nkrumah and the CPP is significant, particularly for a proper understanding and appreciation of the pattern of coercion, co-optation and resistance to government that has characterized the entire history of the media during the mandate period. As noted by a former employee of GBC, there were “stressful conditions imposed on the people who worked at the GBC from the First Republic to the end of the PNDC regime.”⁴ According to him, harassment, intimidation and interference in the work of professional broadcasters have been common violations of human rights by both military and civilian governments in Ghana.

3.1 16TH MARCH, 1957 -- 23RD FEBRUARY, 1966: THE CONVENTION PEOPLE’S PARTY (CPP) GOVERNMENT

3.1.1 The history of media repression, co-optation and resistance began with the colonial authorities. This precedent was crystallized during the regime of the CPP and became an established pattern by successive regimes throughout the country’s history. The first press laws to be introduced in the country were by the British colonial government. The Book and Newspaper Registration Ordinance was passed in 1887, requiring newspaper editors to send returns of their circulation as well as the title of their newspapers, the location of their offices, printers, and publishers to the Colonial Secretary. Printers were expected to print their names and addresses on the first and last pages of the newspaper. In 1893 the Newspaper Registration Ordinance established a register of newspaper proprietors in order to help the authorities identify offending publishers.⁵ The British also passed the Criminal Code (Amendment) Ordinance in 1934, to curb the “unruly” behaviour and attitude of the Ghanaian nationalist press toward the colonial government. The Criminal Libel law and other draconian press laws from the colonial period, remained on the books and were used against errant journalists from time to time.

3.1.2 The CPP Government turned Ghana into a one-party state, and the state-owned media into its mouthpiece. The government pursued an unfriendly media policy, where the media in Ghana were made to see themselves as an arm of government, even to the extent of taking direct instructions from ministers of state and the presidency. Ainslie observed that during the CPP regime “the official conception of the role of the press was a ‘revolutionary’ one with journalists on the Guinea Press papers seeing themselves as political activists committed to the building of a new society.”⁶ Dr. Nkrumah himself sums up his media policy as follows:

Just as in the capitalist countries the press represents and carries out the purpose of capitalism, so in revolutionary Africa, our revolutionary Press must present and carry forward our revolutionary purpose.⁷

⁴ Memorandum to the National Reconciliation Commission.

⁵ Fred Omu, Press and Politics in Nigeria 1880-1937, Longman, London, 1978.

⁶ R. Ainsley The Press in Africa: Communications Past and Present. Victor Gollancz Ltd., London, 1966, p. 61.

⁷ K. Nkrumah, The African Journalist Dar-es-Salem, Tanzania, 1965.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

3.1.3 In that vein, on the inauguration of television broadcasting in Ghana, Nkrumah urged the new service to “reflect and promote the highest national and social ideals of our ideology and society.”⁸ Asante aptly sums up Nkrumah’s media policy as “developmental dictatorship.”⁹ Nkrumah enforced tough censorship on the media and enacted several repressive laws in addition to what he had inherited, including the infamous Preventive Detention Act (PDA) of 1958, to stifle dissent and crash political opponents. Among other things, the PDA was designed to suppress and discourage open criticism of government policies and decisions. The privately-owned Ashanti Pioneer had several run-ins with the government until it was ultimately banned under new powers granted the government by a pre-publication censorship law of August, 1960. Before it was banned, a government-appointed censor was installed at the offices of the newspaper to vet any material before its publication.

3.1.4 In 1962, individual dispatches of foreign correspondents were subjected to prior censorship under the Press Correspondents’ Instrument.¹⁰ Additionally, in June, 1963, Nkrumah passed the Newspaper Licensing Act, which required “newspaper editors and publishers to obtain license, renewable annually, from the government of the day before they could begin publication.”¹¹ The new law gave President Nkrumah additional powers to control and muzzle the press, particularly the private ones.

3.1.5 Nkrumah supervised a constitutional government under which the media was completely state-controlled, where a culture of fanaticism reigned, and where the imprisonment of Ghanaian journalists or deportation of foreign journalists were not uncommon. As an example of interference and control in the editorial work of journalists at the GBC during the First Republic, the Ministry of Information or the Office of the President also sometimes exercised direct editorial control at the GBC. For example, it would often give written instructions, determining the use of the titles of the President, as well as the type of prominence to be accorded it during newscasts. Thus, shortly after 1st July, 1960, the Ministry of Information ordered the GBC newsroom to use the title, “Osagyefo Dr. Kwame Nkrumah, President of the Republic of Ghana”, in all subsequent news bulletins. It further directed that the one o’clock and the six o’clock news bulletins be submitted for vetting at the President’s office.

3.1.6 News was censored, and to this end, certain people, sometimes with no knowledge of news production, were employed to censor news. An instance of this practice was the posting to the GBC, of Kodwo Addison (later to be appointed Director of the Kwame Nkrumah Ideological Institute), as a censor in 1961, under the guise of a “news consultant.”

3.1.7 News censoring sometimes involved falsification of facts, such as the reported massacre of 11 Belgian civilians by Congolese civilians during the Congo crisis in the ⁸ Kwame Nkrumah, as quoted in the Daily Graphic, vol. 4616 Monday, 2nd August, 1965, p.5.

⁹ Asante supra.

¹⁰ See William B. Harvey Law and Social Change in Ghana Princeton University Press, New Jersey, 1966, p. 319.

¹¹ See Twumasi, supra, p. 17.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

1960s.¹² Publication of such false news had implications for the credibility of the media organisations.

3.1.8 A more insidious form of control was the planting of spies among GBC workers. The example is given of one Sgt Sedziafa, an official driver assigned to the newsroom of the GBC, who also doubled as an informant between 1960 and 1963.

3.1.9 During the CPP administration, it was not uncommon for the GBC to engage in personal vendetta, often against perceived political opponents. In the period following the failed Kulungugu bomb attempt on the life of Nkrumah, a former broadcaster, Alex “Chappie” Hutton-Mills, was engaged to write and present news commentaries that attacked Tawia Adamafio, who had been accused of complicity.¹³

3.1.10 Occasionally, broadcasters were victimised for their perceived political beliefs through arbitrary transfers. Such was the case of Eric Adjorlolo, then Head of News and Current Affairs, who, in 1963, was removed to the newly created position of “Head of Common Services.”

3.1.11 So hostile was government to dissenting voices that few private newspapers survived. Those that did, such as the Pioneer, came under severe government censorship and harassment.

3.2 24TH FEBRUARY, 1966 - 30TH SEPTEMBER, THE NATIONAL LIBERATION COUNCIL (NLC)

3.2.1 The first coup d’état in Ghana occurred on 24th February, 1966, and was prosecuted by a police cum military junta, who constituted themselves into the National Liberation Council (NLC). The media legacy of the NLC, which overthrew Nkrumah and ruled Ghana until 30th September, 1969, is best described as mixed.

3.2.2 One of the first acts of the NLC regime was to imprison (place under “protective custody”) editors of the state-owned newspapers and CPP publications. The Guinea Press, set up by Nkrumah shortly after Independence, published the Ghanaian Times, the Evening News, as well as the Daily Gazette, the Sunday Punch and the Spark, which were ideological journals of the CPP. The arrests sent a powerful message to journalists across the country and set the stage for compliance.

3.2.3 Media Support

3.2.3.1 Until 24th February, 1966, there was what has been referred to as a “cipipification” of newspapers. Immediately following the coup, however, not only were all CPP journals discontinued, overnight newspapers were “published as supporters of the ¹² Memorandum to National Reconciliation Commission.

¹³ Memorandum to the National Reconciliation Commission.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

new Government”.¹⁴ The Evening News, President Nkrumah’s own newspaper joined the chorus of supporters of the new regime. Thus, on 25th February, 1966, a day after the coup, banner headlines began to confer legitimacy on the new government, to delegitimise the old, and to garner public support for the NLC.

3.2.3.2 “Army Takes Over Government In Ghana,” proclaimed the *Daily Graphic*¹⁵, “Kwame’s myth is broken.” The editorial for that day was titled “the voice of the people” and noted:

Yesterday, the armed forces and the police took over the government of Ghana and dismissed Kwame Nkrumah as the President and dissolved Parliament...in putting into effect this bold decision, the members of the NLC have said that ‘this act has been necessitated by the political and economic situation in the country. The concentration of power in the hands of one man, has led to the abuse of individual rights and liberties. Power has been exercised by the former president capriciously.’¹⁶

3.2.3.3 Under the sub-heading “Full support,” the editorial went on to pledge its support for the new regime and urged all Ghanaians to do the same:

A commentator of Radio Ghana has said that one had only to walk in the streets of Accra yesterday to see clearly by the expression on people’s faces that this bold revolutionary act has the full support of the man in the street...We of the Daily Graphic therefore heartily enjoin all Ghanaians to support the new leaders in their difficult but courageous task of leading the nation to the bright future that it so dearly deserves ...
17

Subsequent issues of the paper dealt with the release of those detained during Kwame Nkrumah’s term of office, probes into the activities of former ministers of government and the goodwill shown by all Ghanaians to the regime and their “glorious revolution.”

3.2.3.4 Pre-empting any moves by the military/police junta, national newspapers appointed new editors. The appointments of new editors for the Daily Graphic and the Ghanaian Times, according to Asante,¹⁸ made it possible for the NLC to use the national newspapers as the “champions of the government cause.” Without much prompting editors and journalists began to practice self-censorship to avoid government reprisals. A mid-level journalist at the time recalls that after the coup soldiers continued to visit newsrooms from time to time. For instance, the journalist, Festus Addae, who had been commissioned into the military as a Major to head the Public Relations Department of the NLC, was a frequent visitor to the studios.¹⁹ These visits were read as being intended to ensure cooperation from journalists.

¹⁴ R. Ainslie, op. cit. supra.

¹⁵ Daily Graphic, vol. 4993 Friday, 25th February, 1966, p.1.

¹⁶ Ibid

¹⁷ Ibid.

¹⁸ Asante, op. cit. supra, p.39.

¹⁹ Memorandum to the National Reconciliation Commission.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

3.2.3.5 Government officials, former CPP officials and other authority were often quoted on the rationale behind the coup. “Our Coup Was The World’s Finest” was the headline in the Wednesday, 4th May, 1966, issue of the Ghanaian Times, in which it was noted:

The glorious February 24 coup in Ghana was necessitated by the political and economic misadministration of the old regime, Mr. M. A. Ribeiro, Ghana [sic] ambassador in the US, has said in Washington.

The Ambassador, who was addressing the Washington Branch of the Ghana Students Association, was quoted as saying, “there had been no finer coup anywhere in the world than the one that toppled Kwame Nkrumah”.

3.2.3.6 An opinion piece by Cobbina Kessie, a lawyer and former Ambassador to the Republic of Liberia, To the People’s Republic of China and to the United Arab Emirates under the CPP administration, had this to say about the NLC regime:

No sane Ghanaian can condemn the coup d’état of February 24, 1966, not at least from the political point of view...the members of the NLC need not be apologetic for what they have done, they did it in the interest of the country.²⁰

3.2.3.7 One front-page lead article in the Daily Graphic, with the headline “Coups: A Good Lesson For Future Politicians”,²¹ quoted Brig Akwasi A. Afrifa as saying, “Ghana’s timely coup on February 24 1966 will serve as a good lesson to future political leaders in the country...” The front-page lead article in the same issue of the paper told of the seizure of the property of eleven ex-ministers of state. The paper’s editorial supported the seizure and said:

This operation should be an eye opener for all Ghanaians that henceforth, those charged with the trusteeship of public funds must exercise extreme caution as to how they use such funds ...today, these misguided gapping sycophants know that they must be accountable for their gapping sycophancy. Today, they know that they cannot steal public funds with impunity. Others should learn from the costly lesson.²²

The “architects” of the coup were referred to as heroes and “gallant men” in the article and the writer proposed that the NLC should continue in office for the time being, performing the duties of executive head while civilian ministers must be appointed to work under the council.

3.2.3.8 The Ghanaian Times was equally effusive in its support. “The Press Will Now Be Free-NLC,”²³ screamed the headline of an article in the paper, which had previously been ²⁰ Daily Graphic, vol. 5119 Thursday, 13th April, 1967.

²¹ Ibid.

²² Ibid.

²³ Ghanaian Times, vol. 4,807, Monday, 14th March, 1966.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

the chief mouthpiece of the Nkrumah Government. In that article, Lt-Gen Joseph A. Ankrah, Chairman of the NLC, was reported as saying “the press would be expected to express any political opinion, to criticize freely, provided they did it constructively and responsibly.” The Chairman also said that it was the intention of the Council to help the press of Ghana, to help raise standards of journalism in the country.

3.2.3.9 Like the Daily Graphic, the Ghanaian Times was at pains to portray the regime as having massive support from the public. In an article with the headline: “Support For The NLC Is Real”, the paper reported that A. B. B. Kofi, Ghana’s new Ambassador to the US, addressed a crowded press conference to explain the regimes’ press policies to the American people. According to the Ambassador, the tremendous support for the regime was “a genuine expression of joy by the people who have been freed from bondage and ushered into a new world of freedom.”²⁴ “Nkrumah Regime Toppled By Public Opinion” was the headline of another article in which it was reported that J. M. Kporvie, Chairman of the Northern Regional Committee of Administration, said that public opinion toppled Nkrumah. He was speaking to the chiefs and people of East Gonja and appealed to them to stand by the NLC to build a better Ghana.²⁵

3.2.3.10 Some articles were particularly damning of the former regime. One such article carried in the Ghanaian Times, and written by Mabel Dove, a former CPP Parliamentarian, described the coup as a healing tonic. Dove, who had once edited Nkrumah’s Evening News, sought to vilify, demystify and de-legitimise the CPP government by chronicling a list of wrongdoing:

The coup of February 24, 1966 has destroyed tyranny in Ghana but it cannot change the mental attitude of Ghanaians over night. Let Ghanaians examine themselves critically and find out the reason for the sufferings inflicted on them before deliverance came.

If we are true to ourselves, we can say frankly that we failed to stem the downward march of the deposed tyrant (Kwame Nkrumah) and his henchmen because we, too wanted to enjoy some of the fruits of their rascality. Many bowed the knee to corrupt politicians because they wanted promotions, position of special responsibility or to be included on delegations or scholarships awarded to their friends and relatives.

Others became touts for certain Ministers and some gave presents of hard cash to see the “big men,” thus men and women threw away “righteousness which exalted a nation” and became the slaves of evil men.

Ghanaians bowed the knee and fawned on men and women who had political power, and even government departments feared to ask those political aristocrats to pay their bills.

²⁴ Ghanaian Times, vol 2,629 Thursday, 25th August, 1966, p.5.

²⁵ Ghanaian Times, vol 2,614 Monday, 8th August, 1966, p.3.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

Naturally, those of no influence, the hardworking men and women had to carry the burden of the politicians and their accomplices on their shoulders; and so the smiles and laughter of Ghanaians fled and workers went about their daily work with unsmiling faces.

Kwame Nkrumah, his gang, and his followers, taught people that the best type of citizen in the community was the man who lives in luxurious surroundings, owned long expensive cars, whose palaces or flats so furnished that the visitor feared to walk on the soft carpet or sit on the comfortable chair.

Those were the Nkrumaist socialists, the consciencists [Nkrumah advocated the idea of consciencism. With its socialist underpinnings the consciencism philosophy promoted an end of exploitation, end of class divisions, and a planned egalitarian development and social justice.] Whose consciences were safely kept by their master, the despot, in the tunnel under Flagstaff House.

Today, awakening Ghanaians know that the tyrant and his followers are not the best type of people in the community. Their greed, cruelty, cowardice and callous indifference to pain and suffering show them to be what they really are – ignoble despicable contemptible, men and women totally unfit for public service. Their sole motive in pushing themselves into political power was gain and profit.

Now stripped of their masks of office and reduced to their own natural size what a poor specimen of manhood and womanhood, they are a disgrace to Ghana, no wonder they connived with their master the arch-criminal to kill the man who, through his research, named them Ghanaians [J.B. Danquah conducted lengthy research to establish that the main Gold Coast ethnic groups were descendants of ancient Ghana, the medieval empire which flourished between the 9th and 13th centuries. Though inaccurate it influenced the change of the name to Ghana]. Ingratitude, thy name is disbanded C.P.P.

A coup had to take place. Everyone felt it coming only the criminals were in complete darkness, but the signs were everywhere.

Now that this coup is here no Ghanaians should allow himself to be corrupted by relatives or friends so that he deliberately deceives members of the National Liberation Council and afterwards confess that he was afraid of his life.

VIGILANCE

The normal adult who is matured enough to live in an independent sovereign state, knows that he has to live with danger. Those who wish to stand in the hall of Freedom and Justice have to be ever vigilant, for in Ghana today we are at WAR against the moral diseases of the deposed Nkrumah and his evil gang and the exhilarating tonic of courage,

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

patriotism dedication and self-sacrifice which we have imbibed from the glorious revolution of February 24, 1966.²⁶

3.2.3.11 Like the state press, private newspapers were equally supportive of the coup and the personalities involved. An editorial in the February 1967 issue of The Standard, a publication of the Catholic Church, described the coup as an act of God:

Indeed, we cannot let slip this glorious opportunity without singing praise to the armed forces and the police...who displayed extraordinary gallantry during the coup. To them, we say 'blessed are the peacemakers for they shall be called the sons of God. Matt. 5:7.

Similarly The Standard noted that:

The declaration of the NLC that it does not seek political power, is proof of its undiluted honesty to put the nation back on the right track of restoration. God has heard our prayers, he has liberated us."²⁷

In a June 1968 article, the paper termed the era under the NLC as a "new era", the "rebirth of Ghana"²⁸

3.2.3.12 Like The Standard, the Christian Messenger also described the coup-makers as "gallant men who led the revolution".²⁹ Generally, however, The Standard was more reticent than the Christian Messenger was. While the Christian Messenger was consistent in heaping praise upon the regime, The Standard sometimes offered criticisms.

3.2.4 The Abortive Coup Of 1967

3.2.4.1 The press was particularly supportive of the government immediately after the unsuccessful coup attempt on 17th April, 1967, during which Lt-Gen Kotoka, a member of the NLC had been killed. The Daily Graphic was very condemnatory of the coup attempt, noting:

Those who felt that the glorious revolution of February 24 1966 had taken their bread out of their mouths would do anything to come back into positions of power where they could continue to lord it over humble Ghanaians... The failure of the attempted coup also teaches some lessons. The jubilation with which Ghanaians not only in Accra, but also throughout the country greeted the failure of the coup is clear testimony, if any is still needed, of the country wide support which the NLC enjoys³⁰.

²⁶ The Ghanaian Times vol. 2,516 Friday, 15th April, 1966, p.5.

²⁷ The Standard, March 6, 1966.

²⁸ The Standard, June, 1968.

²⁹ The Standard, March, 1968.

³⁰ Daily Graphic, vol. 5146 Tuesday, 18th April, 1967.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

3.2.4.2 From 19th April, 1967, the Daily Graphic gave elaborate coverage to the late Lt-Gen Kotoka. There were pictures and articles, poetry and tributes of his valour. Pictures also featured various bodies, throughout the country mourning him. The Graphic covered in great detail donations to the Kotoka Fund, which had been set up, and the trial of nine soldiers who had led the abortive coup d'état.

3.2.4.3 The Ghanaian Times went overboard. For example, it reported on its front-page that two army officers Lt Samuel B. Arthur and Lt Moses Yeboah, had been sentenced to death by firing squad for attempting to subvert the regime, and were to be executed by firing squad “IN PUBLIC” at the Teshie Firing Range. With the banner headline “THE END OF THE TRAITORS” the paper pictorially and graphically showed where the executions took place, how the executions took place and the masses that waited patiently and climbed electric poles to see the executions of the two Army Officers.³¹

The Ghanaian Times editorial titled “Death Without Glory” noted:

There has been country wide demand that those who were responsible for the treasonable act should be made to suffer the same fate which they had schemed for the violent and speedy liquidation of our leaders...”
“We have had numerous correspondence from all sections of the society, imploring the NLC to stop acting like a doctor who, having diagnosed a desperate disease which can only be cured by applying equally desperate remedies, perfunctorily put the patient to bed with one consoling tablet”³²

3.2.4.4 The newspaper called for a thorough investigation to fish out those who prompted and promised the three conspirators and assassins. The country is of the opinion that there were vested political interests behind the insurrection. The country therefore demands that the NLC should go all out and ferret out from their conspiratorial liars those members and bring them out into the open and make them dance to the music, which they have themselves chosen.³³

3.2.4.5 The NLC government started an investigation into the circumstances surrounding the 17th April 1967 insurrection and all those connected with it were to be brought to trial and punished severely. The Ghanaian Times’ insistent editorials spurred on the regime, commending it for initiating the investigations and urged it to “go the whole hog and do a lot of purges and pruning.”³⁴

3.2.4.6 The government subsequently placed about 500 persons, including journalists, in protective custody,³⁵ under the ten Protective Custody Decrees, the NLC enacted in 1967 alone. The paper duly published the names of all the people affected in the same issue

³¹ Ghanaian Times, vol. 2,846, Tuesday, 9th May, 1967; Ghanaian Times, vol.2,847, Wednesday, 10th May, 1967.

³² Ghanaian Times, 10th May, 1967, supra.

³³ Ibid.

³⁴ Ghanaian Times, vol. 2,850, Saturday, 13th May, 1967.

³⁵ Ghanaian Times, vol 2,856, Saturday, 20th May, 1967.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

and in subsequent ones.³⁶ The reason for putting all the 489 into protective custody was explained in a front-page banner article with the headline “Attempt To Overthrow The Government: NCOs Will Be Tried Soon...”³⁷ The paper reported Lt-Gen Ankrah as saying”

The people concerned have shown by their conduct that true freedom meant very little to them, when, on hearing the news of the so-called dismissal of members of the NLC they started jubilating...their provocative attitude incensed and angered thousands of individuals in the communities in which these people lived and plans were hatched by the freedom loving citizens...to attack these individuals and kill them if necessary...the government therefore had to act quickly to foil these plans and therefore place them into protective custody”³⁸

While Lt-Gen J.A. Ankrah, Chairman of the NLC, emphasised that the press “could serve as an effective watchdog of a newly regained liberty” when questioned on why some journalists had been detained, the General said that their arrest had nothing to do with their work as journalists and that investigations were going on in their case. This appeared to have satisfied journalists and nothing more was said on the arrest of their colleagues.

3.2.4.7 The editorial commenting on that issue reiterated the same points, in previous editorials. The regime was once again commended for bringing to book collaborators of the 17th April insurrection:

There has been persistent clamour from all parts of the country that the accomplices of the murderers should be brought to trial. The chairman’s announcement, should therefore not only reassure the nation, that the culprits will be brought to book, but also that action will be swift and thorough³⁹

3.2.4.8 The Tuesday, 30th May, 1967 issue of the paper reported that three persons, an Army Officer and two civilians, Lt Augustus Owusu-Gyimah, Sampson Sasu Baffour-Awuah and John Osei Poku had been sentenced to death by firing squad for an earlier plot to overthrow the regime between November, 1966 and January, 1967. A fourth person, who was a student of Konongo Odumasi Secondary School, Kofi Owusu, was sentenced to 25years imprisonment. They had been charged with six counts of conspiracy to commit subversion and subversion. No one asked any questions as to why their arrest and trial had not been made public earlier, nor why civilians were being tried by a Military Tribunal

³⁶ Ghanaian Times, vol. 2,857, Monday, 22nd May, 1967.

³⁷ Ghanaian Times, vol 2,862 Saturday, 27th May, 1967.

³⁸ Ibid.

³⁹ Ibid.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

3.2.4.9 The regime continued to “ferret out” collaborators in the 17th April abortive coup, and the state press continued in its unquestioned support for the regime’s actions. By the National Liberation Council (Protective Custody) (Consolidated) (Amendment) (No 9) Decree, 1967(NLCD 172), Army Officers were placed in protective custody. The press reported that no reasons had been given, yet typically they did not press for any either.⁴⁰ Far from condemning the detentions without trial, the Ghanaian Times maintained in its editorial in the same issue that the Army in its view had to be “purged and purged drastically.”

3.2.5 Discussions On Return To Constitutional Rule

3.2.5.1 The year 1968 was a year of intense political discussions on the form of governance appropriate for the country. The tone appeared to have been set at the end of the previous year, when the Daily Graphic reported that at the launch of the press week at the Ghana Institute of Journalism, Brig Afrifa, member of the NLC responsible for Finance, had said that the country had reached a stage where the press and the people of Ghana must start thinking seriously about a return to civilian rule. “Our revolution has lost its momentum. This I believe as a soldier is an indication that our military regime must come to an end. I do not suppose that we can bluff our way through,” Brig Afrifa was quoted to have said.⁴¹ The article stated that Brig Afrifa claimed he did not share the view of some Ghanaians that the military regime should remain in power for as long as possible because Ghanaians could not tolerate a parliamentary government.

3.2.5.2 In a move that was undoubtedly aimed at pleasing government, however, the Ghanaian Times urged the NLC in an editorial to “avoid rushing”⁴² into civilian rule. In a sequel to this editorial, the paper wrote a six part editorial captioned “Return to Civil Rule.”⁴³ that purported to discuss the pros and cons of the return to civilian rule. The paper, however, was only seeking to push the idea that whilst the NLC was anxious to return the country to civilian rule, it was rather the citizenry that wanted the military government to remain in power. Among other arguments, the paper was of the view that the regime had the wishes of the people for a return to civilian rule at heart, and that the delay in giving a firm date was not because the regime wanted to perpetuate itself, for “after all...if they collectively refused to approve a return to civil rule, they would be within their legal and constitutional right to do so.” The paper added that coups d’état or revolutions establish in a country a new order of things entirely dependent on the “whims and caprices” of the regime, thus Ghanaians were fortunate to have a regime, which, although having limitless power and authority, exercises it, judiciously and prudently. According to the editorial, a return to civilian rule was no magic panacea for curing all the problems of the country. The Ghanaian Times therefore suggested a delay in the return to civil rule, proposing that April, 1970, or even later, would be a feasible date for the regime to handover power

⁴⁰ Ghanaian Times, vol 2,866 Thursday, 1st June, 1967.

⁴¹ Daily Graphic, vol 5308 Tuesday 24th October, 1967, p.1.

⁴² Ghanaian Times vol. 2,950 Thursday, 7th September, 1967, p.6.

⁴³ See Ghanaian Times, vol. 2,291 Wednesday, 25th October, 1967; Ghanaian Times, vol. 2,292 Thursday, 26th October, 1967, Ghanaian Times, vol. 2,293 Friday, 27th October, 1967, Ghanaian Times, vol. 2,294 Saturday, 28th October, 1967, Ghanaian Times, vol. 2,295 Monday, 30th October, 1967, and Ghanaian Times, vol. 2,296 Tuesday, 31st October, 1967.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

because “it would not be fair for the NLC to start a revolution and not carry it to its logical conclusion” and that the regime’s restoration programme for the country was not complete for it to hand over power. Another interesting point made by the paper was that the trial of former members of the Nkrumah Government could be continued after the installation of a another government, but it was better for a national non-political party government like the NLC, which had done much of the work, to bring it to its conclusion.

3.2.5.3 The Ghanaian Times also put forward a strong suggestion that the “post coup civilian government in its first constitutional act must legislate to grant appropriate pensions to the military regime for its ‘historic services’ to the nation in its hour of need.” In all the six editorials there was a play on the word “civil,” with the focus being that the most essential thing was a “civil government” not necessarily a civilian government, and not an “uncivil civilian government.”⁴⁴

3.2.5.4 To buttress its view that Ghanaians preferred to live under the NLC for a longer period of time, the newspaper published a letter with the caption “Times Praised” that extolled the paper for its editorials on “Return To Civil Rule”. The writer stated that he had changed the name of the Ghanaian Times to the “Ghanaian Hope” since it had always been the hope of Ghanaians to have a truly free paper, such as the Times to educate them on national issues.⁴⁵ It is unlikely that the paper did not receive any letters expressing opposition to the views put forth in the editorials. In other editorials the paper captured and magnified what most government officials seemed to be hammering on.⁴⁶ For the regime, a return to civilian rule was only possible when “an acceptable constitution, drawn up which will be approved by the people through a referendum” was complete. In the words of the Ghanaian Times, “until and unless there is cumulative evidence to the effect, it would be rash and foolhardy for the country to be catapulted into civilian government per se.”⁴⁷

3.2.5.5 Even during the elections that were eventually held in August, 1969, the Ghanaian Times half-heartedly joined in the public education, but insistently cautioned Ghanaians to use their votes well.⁴⁸

3.2.5.6 Similarly supportive of the “delay the return to civilian rule” view point was the Christian Messenger which urged Ghanaians to go slowly and be wary of the proposed return to civilian rule:

From that morning of the glorious revolution in February 1966, people of this nation have lived in freedom and have known what freedom means... And now that the ban on political activities is lifted, what are ⁴⁴ Ibid.

⁴⁵ Ghanaian Times vol. 2,304 Thursday, 9th November, 1967.

⁴⁶ “Before a return to civil rule” Ghanaian Times Vol. 3,024 Saturday, 2nd December, 1967, p 6; “Civil rule must come gradually- Editor, “ Vol. 3,025 Monday, 4th December, 1967, p.3.

⁴⁷ Ghanaian Times Vol. 2,307 Monday, 13th November, 1967.

⁴⁸ Ghanaian Times, Vol 3,663 Friday, 29th August, 1969.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

politicians going to do? What have they to offer us? Countrymen, fellow Ghanaians, let's go slowly this time. Once bitten, twice shy.

3.2.5.7 Such articles raised the question of the commitment of the press to democratic ideals. While civil society was calling for the return to civilian rule,⁴⁹ the Ghanaian Times, was echoing on its pages the reservations of the government of the day. Clearly, as demonstrated in the cited examples, the media lent legitimacy to the regime of the NLC and to its human rights violations through their reportage. In their editorial columns, they rationalised the actions of the government, no matter how questionable, and offered very little criticism of, and resistance to, the regime.

3.2.6 Government Support For The Media

3.2.6.1 Some researchers have characterised the media as governed largely by libertarian principles during the NLC period, even if expected to be faithful watchdogs, guarding the newly instituted status quo jealously.⁵⁰ Lt-Gen. Ankrah, was quoted as saying that “the Ghanaian Press will now be free to express any political opinion and make criticisms – provided they do it constructively and responsibly.”⁵¹ It was a position that was endorsed by the press. An editorial on the speech in the Christian Messenger noted:

After so many years of ideological parroting, when journalist had to look over their shoulders before they dared to suggest something original, this announcement by Lt. Gen. Ankrah ushers in a new spring of professional journalism in Ghana. It is certain that the NLC by this democratic move has ensured the co-operation and gratitude of all those for whom responsible and constructive journalism has become a way of life.

3.2.6.2 The Ghanaian Times expressed its views on what it believed to be the role of the Ghanaian press when, writing under the caption “Role of the Press”, it proclaimed the press as a “vital adjunct of the public service”, and so encouraged the regime to “take the Press into their confidence”. It also affirmed the press’ role as a watchdog, but its understanding of this was to portray both the press and the government as being on the same side, in the task of national reconstruction. It therefore pleaded with all Ghanaians for co-operation “in this great task of nation-building to come together in the spirit of understanding, tolerance and co-operation to enable the press to get the news without the suspicion and hedging, and sometimes open antagonism which has hitherto characterized relations between those organisations (i.e. the public service) and the press.”⁵²

3.2.6.3 On its part, the Daily Graphic quoted Brig Afrifa as saying that the NLC had endeavoured to restore in the country the high ideals of press freedom because it knew that “a free press is a pre-requisite for building of a truly democratic society” to which ⁴⁹ See for example Ghanaian Times, vol. 2,303 Wednesday, 8th November, 1967.

⁵⁰ Asante, supra, p. 42.

⁵¹ The Standard, 13th March, 1966.

⁵² Ghanaian Times, vol. 2,896 Thursday, 6th July, 1967, p.1.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

Ghanaians were entitled.⁵³ The newspaper failed to point out that respect for press freedom was not limited to tolerating views that accorded with one's own. Certainly the banning of the CPP and its symbols was a clear indication that no one could have extolled the virtues of the CPP without incurring the wrath of the political establishment.

3.2.6.4 The government sought to offer support to the media, ironically, by curtailing the rights of citizens who believed their reputations had been unjustly soiled by the media. In May, 1966, a law was promulgated, effectively protecting the regime, the State Publishing Corporation and eight newspapers.⁵⁴ The newspapers were: the Daily Graphic, the Ghanaian Times, the Evening News, the Weekly Spectator, the Sunday Punch, the Daily Gazette, the Spark, and L'Etincelle. The Decree further stipulated that no one could sue the owners, publishers, or editors of the government-owned newspapers for defamation without the authorization of the Attorney-General, an appointee of the NLC government.⁵⁵ This particular legislation paradoxically was the government's direct response to a lawsuit brought by Nkrumah's former Minister of Finance, Komla A. Gbedemah during the NLC rule. He was demanding an apology from the state-owned press for libellous publications at the time of his removal as Finance Minister by Nkrumah. The Decree revoked any action pending in court against the national media, and consequently, all actions for defamation pending against the owners, publishers, or editors of the newspapers ceased.

3.2.6.5 On the positive side, the NLC can be credited for revoking the ban on several foreign correspondents and individuals, and lifting Nkrumah's censorship on outgoing press messages. On Monday, 15th August, 1966, the Ghanaian Times carried a front-page story that the NLC had lifted a ban imposed by the CPP government on twelve (12) foreign journalists against their re-entry into Ghana. These included Ian Colvin of the Daily Telegraph of London, who challenged the ban and was deported while the case was pending in court. Some of the others were: Richard Beeston and John Bulluck, also of the London Daily Telegraph, Gunter F. Crabbe, Collin Legum, Dr. George F. Weber, Joseph Wilson, Terrence Spencer, Arthur Helliwell and R. S. Burns. The NLC had earlier, in April, 1966, revoked Nkrumah's ban and allowed Christopher Shawcross, a British lawyer to re-enter Ghana. Shawcross successfully defended Sam Arthur, a former editor of the Ashanti Pioneer on contempt charges. On 1st September, 1966, the NLC outlawed a censorship order placed on outgoing press messages, as well as the ban against foreign correspondents from operating in the country. This move allowed for the re-publication of banned papers or the establishment of new ones, for example, the Ashanti Pioneer, banned under Nkrumah, resumed publication. The Echo, the Legon Observer and the Western Tribune, started as new publications under the NLC.

⁵³ Daily Graphic, 24th October, 1967, supra.

⁵⁴ National Liberation Council (Defamation by CPP Newspapers) Decree, 1966 (NLCD 50) as amended by the National Liberation Council (Defamation by CPP Newspapers) (Amendment) Decree, 1966 (NLCD 51).

⁵⁵ Newspaper Decree, 1966 (NLCD 107); K. Anokwa and O. Aborampah, "The Mass Media, Political Attitudes and Behaviour in Ghana," Gazette, (37) No.3, pp.39-154 at p. 148.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

3.2.6.6 To the credit again of the NLC, the military regime on 11th January, 1968, established the Ghana Press Council, a professional body of peers designed to protect the public against the media, as well as to protect press freedom. The Press Council was supposed to be an independent body that would champion the cause of a free press in the country. Commenting on the setting up of the Press Council, the first in Ghana, the Ghanaian Times noted that it marked an effort on a national scale to regulate judiciously and properly the relations between the press and other mass media on the one hand, and the people and the government on the other. According to the editorial, the government and the Commissioner for Information, K. G. Osei Bonsu, deserve the nation's thanks for their foresight and liberalism, which helped to bring the Press Council into existence.⁵⁶ The Commissioner's speech delivered at the inauguration and carried in both the Daily Graphic and Ghanaian Times stressed that the Press Council was free from governmental direction and control.⁵⁷

3.2.6.7 In 1968, the government passed the Ghana Broadcasting Corporation Decree, 1968, which defined the mandate of the electronic media.⁵⁸

3.2.6.8 In 1968, a Constituent Assembly was set up to frame an appropriate Constitution for the country. At the same time Ghanaian journalists started to demand better conditions of service. At a function organised by the Ghana Institute of Journalism (GIJ), a panel of journalists called on the regime to look into the service conditions of journalists⁵⁹ before a return to civilian rule. The Ghanaian Times reported that a delegation of journalists was to meet Lt-Gen Afrifa to discuss the rejection by the Assembly of a motion seeking to establish a Press Trust. There was also a call by one O. B. Amankwah for a clause guaranteeing the inviolability of press freedom to be inserted in the Constitution.⁶⁰ Lt-Gen Afrifa on his part called for a draft instrument to be prepared jointly by the Press Council and the Ghana Journalists Association (GJA) on the Press Trust. According to him, the government was seriously considering the Press Trust to take over the running of the government-owned press.

3.2.7 Media Intimidation

3.2.7.1 The accommodating attitude sometimes displayed to the press was, contradicted by actions that undermined the liberal credential the regime had been credited with. It has already been noted that editors of state media and CPP journals were arrested immediately following the coup. The intimidating nature of the arrests was recalled by one of the journalists of the time.⁶¹ According to this source, soldiers besieged the premises of the Graphic Corporation for days on end in an attempt to arrest the editors of the Sunday Mirror and the Daily Graphic, withdrawing only after the editors reported themselves to the police and were placed in protective custody.

⁵⁶ Ghanaian Times, vol. 3,056 Thursday, 11th January, 1968, p.6.

⁵⁷ Ibid.

⁵⁸ NLCD 226.

⁵⁹ Ghanaian Times, vol 5664 Saturday, 14th December, 1968, p1.

⁶⁰ Ghanaian Times, vol. 3,613, Wednesday, 2nd July, 1969.

⁶¹ Memorandum to the National Reconciliation Commission.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

3.2.7.2 Nowhere was the NLC regime's self-proclaimed liberal policy more severely contradicted than when in October, 1966, the regime passed the Prohibition of Rumours Decree, 1966 (NLC D 92), aimed at checking freedom of expression and preventing the media from being critical of the government. This legislation made it a crime to air any statement, even if true, that might cause "disaffection" against the NLC, the Police or the Armed Forces. In yet another move to control freedom of expression, the government passed the National Liberation Council (Proclamation) (Amendment) (No.2) Decree, 1966 (NLCD 104), that made it punishable if anyone:

with intent to bring the National Liberation Council into hatred, ridicule or contempt publishes any defamatory or insulting matter whether by writing, print, word of mouth or in any other manner whatsoever concerning the National Liberation Council.

3.2.7.3 The NLC insisted that these Decrees were not really aimed at the media but at preventing the dissemination of defamatory pamphlets in the country. In the same year, the regime passed also the Criminal Code (Amendment) Decree, which stated that a person taken into custody without a warrant could be held in custody for a period of not more than 28 days without bail, with the consent of the Attorney-General.⁶² This law evoked sharp criticism from the Ghana Bar Association, as it created the possibility of one month's detention for any offence, including the publication of information that turned out to be false.

3.2.7.4 In spite of the passage of these hostile press decrees, the NLC regime still enjoyed the goodwill of both the state-owned and private press such as the Christian Messenger and the The Standard. An editorial on the passage of the Prohibition of Rumours Decree in the Standard, for example, noted:

We sense the reluctance which the NLC must have felt in publishing this decree. With recent statements about freedom of the press, and the value of sound criticism fresh in our minds, we can hardly believe this measure is meant to hamper freedom of thought or expression.

The paper urged the government to be less mysterious and more efficient in communicating its purposes to the governed.

3.2.7.5 By the middle of 1967, friction was developing between the regime and media. The Chairman of the NLC was not only critical of the media but also warned the media on their anti-government critical posture. The Daily Graphic of 27th May, 1967, reported Lt-Gen Ankrah as having "criticised the Ghanaian press and warned that if the press did not refrain from cheap sensationalism and over-dramatising trivial events, then "one who pays the piper will have to call the tune." True to the prediction of the Chairman of the NLC, journalists began to be victimised. For instance, in May, 1967, Rans Vigah of the ⁶² Ghanaian Times, vol. 2,664 Wednesday, 5th October, 1966, p.6.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

Evening News was indicted for breaking the law against rumour mongering, when he reported an alleged arms theft involving soldiers in Ghana Army uniform. Another journalist, Atto-Mensah, received a three-year prison sentence for defaming the Chairman of the NLC when he prepared two articles for typing, in which he referred to the Chairman as “a military cum political renegade”.⁶³

3.2.7.6 Many instances of harassment of journalists recounted by journalists of the time, also served to undermine claims by the NLC that its policies towards the press were liberal, and that it was committed to press independence and press freedom. According to one account, Journalist Ponsford Peregrino-Peters, a journalist found himself in trouble with the regime after reporting a story that the United States of America had delivered food and arms to the government. Peregrino-Peters, along with his editor, Oscar Tsetse, was arrested and put into a military guardroom for several weeks. Another example of media intolerance and intimidation, along with heroism and resistance, is well documented in press histories. On 14th December, 1967, the NLC caused the dismissal of four editors, three of whom worked for the state-owned press: John Dumoga (Daily Graphic), Moses Danquah (Ghanaian Times), Henry Thompson (Evening News) and an editor of the Ashanti Pioneer. Their crime was criticising the Abbot Laboratory (a U.S. pharmaceutical company) Agreement with the NLC regime. A new editor for the Daily Graphic, Cameron Duodu, was appointed to replace the dismissed editor, by the NLC. He was also later to be dismissed, ironically, by the civilian Progress Party Government, for criticising Dr. Busia’s policy of “dialogue with South Africa”.

3.2.7.7 The dismissal of the four editors prompted a rare, heroic act of resistance to the NLC military regime from the Commissioner of Information, K. G. Osei-Bonsu. On 13th January, 1968 Osei-Bonsu resigned his ministerial position, protesting that the NLC’s decision “was irregular and impolitic...it jeopardizes the freedom of the press to which the NLC had irrevocably committed itself.”⁶⁴

3.2.7.8 In another unfortunate incident, on 8th January, 1968, the editor of the Legon Observer, Yaw Twumasi, and 28 university lecturers were charged with contempt before an Accra High Court for publishing an article in the 8th December, 1967 issue headlined “Justice Delayed is Justice Denied.” The article criticised the court for delays in hearing cases.⁶⁵ In reporting on the case on its front pages, the Ghanaian Times explained that according to Victor Owusu, the Attorney-General, the offending article was prejudicial to a case in which Henry Kojo Djaba, Chairman of the Ghana Agricultural Machinery Company during the Nkrumah regime and two others, had appealed against their conviction and sentence pending before the Appeals Court.⁶⁶ Twumasi and his colleagues pleaded guilty and apologised to the court for publishing the article, but were still given hefty fines. The court also asked them to publish their apology in the Legon Observer and in all the local dailies.

⁶³ Atto-Mensah v. The Republic [1967] GLR 562.

⁶⁴ W. A. Hachten, Muffled Drums: The News Media in Africa, Ames, IA: Iowa State University Press, 1971. As quoted in Asante, supra, p. 47.

⁶⁵ Republic v. Liberty Press Ltd and Others [1968] GLR 123.

⁶⁶ Ghanaian Times vol. 3,054, Tuesday, 9th January, 1968.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

3.2.7.9 The Ghanaian Times again reported a case in which a columnist of the Pioneer was likely to face charges for contempt of a commission. According to the article, the Attorney-General was contemplating taking legal action against the columnist for a series of articles in the paper under the caption “Ahafo Lands Commission- Is It Necessary?” According to the report, the articles in the Pioneer were prejudicial to the Commission and the issue it was dealing with.⁶⁷

3.2.7.10 Another peculiar media victimisation occurred on 2nd May, 1969, and involved the deportation of a controversial character, Francis Nzeribe (of London-based Jeafan Limited).⁶⁸ He it was, who in 1968, had published a self-conducted study that accused Ghanaian journalists of receiving “drinks” (bribery) as a condition for publishing newsworthy items in the press, a report he later disclaimed.⁶⁹ The same Nzeribe in 1969, had solicited money from foreign companies in Ghana for the purpose of conducting research on Lt-Gen Ankrah’s chances of becoming a civilian president. Nzeribe’s deportation by the NLC was related to his complicity in the scandal that forced the resignation of Lt-Gen Ankrah on 3rd April, 1969.

3.2.7.11 The NLC’s hostility was not only against the Ghanaian media but extended to the foreign media as well. In November, 1966, for example, despite having just revoked Nkrumah’s ban on certain foreign journalists, the correspondent of the Democratic Republic of Germany News Agency (AND), Karl Heinz, was deported by the NLC for engaging in acts inimical to the security of Ghana. In June, 1967, the regime also deported three Eastern Bloc correspondents “for committing slanderous propaganda activity against the government and people of Ghana...”. They were Alexei Kazansev (of the Novosti news agency), Valintin Korovikov (of the Pravda newspaper) and Jiri Pravda (of CETEKA, Czechoslovak News Agency). These incidents, no doubt contributed to the docility of the press

3.2.7.12 On 29th February, 1968, The Pioneer published an article by Attakora Mensah Gyima entitled “Topics Of The Moment: Border Guards Scandal”, in which the author levelled charges of corruption, as well as collusion with smugglers, against the Border Guards, then a branch of the Police. He was prosecuted for intentional libel and seditious libel, and convicted. His appeal against his conviction was upheld in respect of the charge of seditious libel, though the one for intentional libel was dismissed.⁷⁰ Ironically, the Unit was reorganised a few years later, for reasons that were substantially the same as the allegations of corruption made by the journalist. It appeared that by their involvement in the coup d’état, the Police had acquired protection from being subjected to scrutiny and criticism.

3.2.7.13 The press was also not exempt from the probes of the various Commissions of Inquiry that were established by the NLC. The Guinea Press, then owned by Dr.

⁶⁷ Ghanaian Times, Thursday, 11th January, 1968, supra.

⁶⁸ Ghanaian Times, vol. 3,562 Saturday, 3rd May, 1969, p.1.

⁶⁹ The Pioneer, Editorial, 4th November, 1968.

⁷⁰ Mensah Gyima v. The Republic [1971] 2 GLR 147.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

Nkrumah, was probed. T D Baffoe, the former editor of the Ghanaian Times, and a CPP functionary, was summoned to appear before the Sowah Assets Commission to declare his assets. Testifying before the Commission, Baffoe claimed that under the previous regime, editorials castigating some Ghanaian professionals had emanated from the Flagstaff House,⁷¹ the seat of government, an assertion that would continue to be made about editorials of state-owned papers during other periods of unconstitutional rule, notably the regime of the PNDC.

3.2.8 Media Resistance

3.2.8.1 There were instances where the media were able to assert their independence and to write articles that were considered critical of the regime. For instance, on 1st August, 1967, the Daily Graphic carried an editorial with the heading “Clear Confusion” in which the paper criticised the office of the Director of Public Relations of the Ghana Armed Forces on the role the office was to play vis-à-vis the Ghana press in matters relating to the publication of news items. The editorial described how after being invited by the Public Relations Directorate to cover the trial of the non-commissioned officers (in the 17th April abortive coup) and after publishing their reports, the Directorate complained that the story should not have been published without previous clearance from the Armed Forces. According to the paper, the press were invited again to cover the proceedings but were told not to take notes and only a brief summary of the proceedings was given to be published. The Daily Graphic argued, “it should be pointed out to the office of the directorate of the Public Relations of the Ghana Armed Forces that such confusion and disguised attempt to muzzle the press will not be tolerated.”⁷²

3.2.8.2 The President of the Military Tribunal, felt compelled to comment on the paper’s editorial, explaining that the press was not prevented from taking notes but to submit notes to the Public Relations Directorate before publishing it. An article with the headline “Press Opinions Not Government Views” also quoted a statement from the Ministry of External Affairs which said that editorial opinions appearing in local daily papers were not necessarily the views of the Ghana Government. The statement rejected any suggestions that the press was subject editorially to government control. According to the statement, the attention of the government had been drawn to an editorial of the 24th July, 1967, issue of the Daily Graphic, concerning the extradition case of Moise Tshombe (former Congolese Premier), which had been interpreted in certain quarters as representing the official position of the government, on the assumption that the Daily Graphic is a government controlled newspaper. The statement said that the government wished to correct any such impression insisting.⁷³

The government of Ghana has declared repeatedly by its commitment to uphold the independence and freedom of the press

⁷¹ See Ghanaian Times, vol. 2,897 Friday, 7th July, 1967, p.1; “Editorials on Judges came from the Flagstaff House.”

⁷² Daily Graphic, vol. 5236 Thursday, 1st August, 1967, p.6.

⁷³ Daily Graphic, vol. 5238 Thursday, 3rd August, 1967, p.1.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

in Ghana as one of the essential articles of faith upon which it will strive to reconstruct the free society of the new Ghana. In consonance with this policy, the government rejects any suggestions that the press is subject editorially to its official control. It will be appreciated that the climate of liberation, which prevails, now in Ghana provides room for the unimpeded public expression of various kinds of views to which the government of Ghana may not necessarily subscribe.⁷⁴

3.2.8.3 Subsequently the Daily Graphic was again moved to protest what it considered attempts at curbing press freedoms during press week. In an editorial titled “We Will Not Be Gagged,” the paper noted:

We sincerely sympathise with the views expressed by Mr. K. S. Essah, Chairman for the Committee appointed by the NLC to enquire into the supply and distribution of free text books to schools by the State Publishing Corporation and his pleas that news items should not be published on the text book supply situation until February when his Committee shall have submitted its reports to the government. We are however sorry that we cannot oblige him because what Mr. Essah is demanding is censorship of the press, pure and simple. This request cannot be granted because we do not think any body has a right to censor the press without due process of law.⁷⁵

3.2.8.4 The Daily Graphic was also able to criticise the regime in some editorials, articles and opinion pieces, particularly on the agreement with Abbot Laboratory of USA. In an article in the 11th November, 1968, issue, the government stated that it had no apologies to make for the agreements it negotiated with Abbot Laboratory. The Daily Graphic’s pressure on the regime for giving the company a monopoly and other concessions in the pharmaceutical industry, however, whipped up public interest and debate, leading to the decision of the National Finance Board headed by Mr. Justice Samuel E. Azu Crabbe to examine the agreement.

3.2.8.5 Similar non-government papers such as The Standard, voiced mild protest on some occasions. In October, 1966, when the regime passed the Prohibition of Rumours Decree, for example, The Standard termed it a “sad necessity”, and said the government had to be less mysterious and more efficient in its communication policy.⁷⁶ On 25th November, 1966, when the NLC passed another decree indemnifying the state-owned media against lawsuits, again the editorial in The Standard was quite critical:

We would like to know more about this decree. Consequently, we feel this decree needs reconsideration. Freedom of the press must certainly be safeguarded. Newspapers thrive best in a society that allows access and free publicity to all news and opinions...⁷⁷

⁷⁴ Ibid.

⁷⁵ Daily Graphic, vol. 5322 Thursday, 9th November, 1967, p.1.

⁷⁶ The Standard, 16th October, 1966.

⁷⁷ The Standard, 4th December, 1966.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

3.2.8.6 In 1969, as the nation prepared for a return to civilian rule, and as the ban on party politics was lifted, The Standard devoted its editorials to issues relating to party politics and activities of the Constituent Assembly, assessing in an editorial that the NLC regime had shown some lapses in foreign relations, and in how it handled certain riots at Yendi and the Obuasi Goldfields.⁷⁸

3.3 1ST OCTOBER, 1969 -- 12TH JANUARY, 1972: THE SECOND REPUBLIC THE PROGRESS PARTY (PP) GOVERNMENT

3.3.1 Government – Media Relationship

3.3.1.1 The PP Administration under Dr Kofi Abrefa Busia was tolerant of the press. For some observers, the press in Ghana was freest under this administration, than at any time in the history of the media since Independence. Even so, there were occasional run-ins with the government.

3.3.1.2 In 1970, Dr Busia's Administration repealed the Newspaper-Licensing Act, promulgated under President Nkrumah's administration. The act required publishers to obtain licences renewable every year from the Nkrumah Government.

3.3.1.3 The repeal of the law, enabled the establishment of several new newspapers, such as the Spokesman, which was an opposition paper to the Busia administration, the Palava Tribune and the Voice of the People.

3.3.2 Media Support

3.3.2.1 Asante notes that the Busia Administration was least concerned with controlling the media. The Administration pursued a libertarian press policy where anybody could publicly vent their opinions save for obscenities, etc.

3.3.3 Media Intimidation

3.3.3.1 Even with his liberal attitude, Dr. Busia along the way got frustrated with the media. In the latter part of 1970, he dismissed Cameron Duodu, the Editor of the Daily Graphic, who opposed his foreign policy of dialoguing rather than confrontation with racist South Africa. Cameron Doudu, in a front-page comment⁷⁹ subjected the policy to harsh criticism. He paid for that by his dismissal.

3.3.3.2 Another event of media intimidation was sparked off by the case involving the dismissal of 568 senior public service and civil service officers (dubbed "Apollo 568"). On 22nd February, 1970, the government dismissed E.K. Sallah a former manager of the Ghana National Trading Corporation (GNTC) and 567 other public servants. A court ruling in favour of the dismissed public servants, prompted the Prime Minister to say publicly that no one could compel his government to employ anyone it did not wish to employ. The press took sides in the issue compelling the then Chief Justice, Azu Crabbe to say publicly that the Judiciary would not share its authority with anyone. In a scathing editorial in response to this in the *Daily Graphic*⁸⁰ the paper said:

⁷⁸ The Standard, 28th September, 1969.

⁷⁹ Daily Graphic vol. 6279 Thursday, 10th December, 1970, p.2.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

It is the duty of the press, the fourth estate of the realm, to subject to search and relentless criticism the way and manner in which other organs of the state exercise the powers conferred upon them by the constitution of the land. The press will not share its power with anyone.

3.3.3.3 In 1970, the Editor of the Spokesman, Kofi Badu, was charged with an offence for communicating a false statement likely to injure the reputation of the Head of State. He had written an article titled “Krobo Rehabilitation – Is It Really Self-help?” questioning some development projects taking place in the hometown of Lt-Gen Afrifa, then Chairman of the Presidential Commission. He was arrested without warrant and was not permitted a counsel of his choice. The government later withdrew the charges, saying that it did not wish to destroy the seed of democracy it had sown in the country.⁸¹

3.3.3.4 In 1971, the editor, Kofi Badu and the printer, Floent Press Ltd, of the Spokesman were tried for intentional libel of a High Court Judge who had been the Interim Electoral Commissioner during the 1969 Elections. Under the caption “C.J. SPEAK NOW”, the paper’s editorial sought to suggest that the judge had been appointed to the Supreme Court as his reward for the assistance he gave to the winning party during the elections. During the prosecution, the defence called two members of the Presidential Commission, Lt-Gen Albert Ocran and J.W.K. Harlley, but they were not permitted to answer any questions that were likely to disclose the mode of selection of judges for appointment to the Supreme Court. Consequently, the editor was convicted, though the publisher was discharged upon a submission of no case. An appeal against the decision resulted in a quashing of the conviction in 1974.⁸² Such prosecutions were likely to create a chilling effect, particularly on printing houses that did not wish to be in dispute with the government, and to affect the ability of “anti-government” newspapers to secure printers, where they did not have printing facilities of their own.

3.4 13TH JANUARY, 1972 – 3RD JUNE, 1979: THE NATIONAL REDEMPTION COUNCIL (NRC)/ SUPREME MILITARY COUNCIL (SMC I & SMC II)

3.4.1 Government – Media Relationship

3.4.1.1 From 13th January, 1972 to 3rd June, 1979, three different military regimes ruled Ghana successively. These were: the National Redemption Council (13th January, 1972-8th October, 1975; the Supreme Military Council I (9th October, 1975 – 5th July, 1978)

⁸⁰ Daily Graphic vol. 6103 Monday, 8th May, 1970, p.1.

⁸¹ Daily Graphic vol. 6338 Friday, 19th February, 1971.

⁸² Badu v. The Republic [1974] 2 GLR 361, per Abban J.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

and the Supreme Military Council II (6th July, 1978-3rd June, 1979). The overall media policy of these related military regimes tended to favour more the state-owned than the private press.

3.4.1.2 A love-hate relationship marked the NRC and SMC regimes under Col (later Gen) Ignatius Kutu Acheampong and Gen Frederick William Kwasi Akuffo. Early in the life of the regime, the “Operation Feed Yourself” and “Self Reliance” policies adopted by the government to improve food sufficiency and to encourage reliance on home-made produce, endeared the government to the media. However, later on, the attempt by the government to perpetuate military rule, disguised as a new concept called “Union Government, (UNIGOV)” alienated the government from a section of the same media, particularly the privately-owned press.

3.4.2 Media Support

3.4.2.1 A Ghanaian Times editorial immediately following Ghana’s second coup d’état of 13th January, 1972, repeated the pattern of media legitimisation of unconstitutional governments that has been noted during the regime of the NLC. A day after the NRC led by Col Acheampong, seized power from the PP Government of the Second Republic, the Ghanaian Times switched allegiance, cataloguing a tall list of misdeeds by the Busia Government as justification for the coup.⁸³ The paper was of the view that the Busia Government had failed economically, socially, politically and in its foreign relations policy. Headlines in that issue gleefully pronounced, “Armed Forces take over Government,” “Busia Dismissed,” “Parliament Dissolved,” “President Dismissed,” “All Parties Disbanded;” “All Is Calm After Coup.”

3.4.2.2 Another editorial in praise of the coup makers noted “the calm with which the whole country has welcomed the military coup d’état ...is to be expected of a people long exasperated and disappointed by a civilian government.”⁸⁴

3.4.2.3 The paper congratulated Col Acheampong and “his band of gallant soldiers for conducting a takeover in a peaceful and bloodless military operation” and reported that ex-ministers and top ranking officials of the PP had been “rounded up” and sent into protective custody at the Ussher Fort Prison.⁸⁵

3.4.2.4 Significantly, as had happened before, editors of the state-owned media were picked up from their offices by plainclothes policemen and sent to the Ussher Fort prison in Accra. Imprisonment of editors had the desired cowering effect on the media. As happened during the previous coup, the state-owned papers for several months covered the declarations of goodwill the coup-makers were receiving from Ghanaians from all walks of life. Headlines in the Daily Graphic within the first few days after the coup

⁸³ See Ghanaian Times, vol. 4,396 Friday,14th January ,1972, “Army to the Rescue” and Ghanaian Times vol. 4,397 Saturday,15th January ,1972 – “There’s Peace and Calm”.

⁸⁴ Ghanaian Times, 15th January , 1972, supra.

⁸⁵ Ibid.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

included: “Coups: Army Takes Over, Busia Removed, Madjitey Dismissed”,⁸⁶ “Big Support For The Coup”.⁸⁷ An editorial likened this coup to the 1966 coup, when soldiers risked their lives to save the country from collapse. The Graphic noted:

Certainly it is a supreme sacrifice and there is no better tribute Ghanaians can pay to them than to give them our unstinted support in their Herculean task of resuscitating the economy.⁸⁸

The Daily Graphic not only reported, but also portrayed in pictures, popular support for the regime. The paper elaborately covered a victory parade through the principal streets of Accra by members of the Ghana Armed Forces and some members of the NRC in words and pictures.⁸⁹

3.4.2.5 Characteristically, the Ghanaian Times especially played the tune of its new sponsors with issues of the paper reporting the massive support of the people for the takeover: “Nation Expresses Support – as Troops March Past”;⁹⁰ “Workers Back Coup”;⁹¹ “Organisations Support Fall of Busia”;⁹² “Guinea Hails Coup”;⁹³ “Workers Support NRC”; “Demonstrations In The Regions; “More Support For The NRC”;⁹⁴ “Market Women Back NRC”; “More Declare Support For NRC”;⁹⁵ and “Hoteliers Support NRC”.⁹⁶

3.4.2.6 The press also showed ordinary civilians being “disciplined” by the military and drilled by members of the government, such as Col Bernasko. In this sense they appeared to be overtly supporting the abuse of the human rights of citizens.

3.4.2.7 When there was an alleged coup plot against the NRC later in the year, the Ghanaian Times was quick to defend the government. With a banner headline that read, “Coups To Restore Busia Foiled,” Ghanaian Times reported that certain disgruntled men and officials of the disbanded PP, acting on the instructions of Dr. Busia, had tried to subvert and overthrow the NRC on the 14th July, 1972.⁹⁷ In its editorial, in the same issue captioned “Treacherous Act,” the paper condemned the coup calling supporters of the disbanded PP ‘fanatics.’ The paper pointed out that the NRC had:

shown unparalleled magnanimity to these fanatics, as the regime had already released a 1000 of the Progress Party functionaries, with only a few still remaining behind bars...Quite out of character with military ⁸⁶ Daily Graphic, vol 6617 Wednesday, 14th January, 1972.

⁸⁷ Daily Graphic, vol. 6618 Thursday, 15th January, 1972.

⁸⁸ Daily Graphic, 14th January, 1972, supra.

⁸⁹ Daily Graphic, vol 6619 Monday, 17th January, 1972.

⁹⁰ Ghanaian Times vol. 4395 Thursday, 13th January 1972.

⁹¹ Ghanaian Times vol. 4400 Wednesday, 19th January, 1972.

⁹² Ghanaian Times vol. 4399 Tuesday, 18th January, 1972.

⁹³ Ibid

⁹⁴ Ghanaian Times, 19th January, 1972, supra.

⁹⁵ Ghanaian Times vol. 4402 Friday, 21st January, 1972.

⁹⁶ Ghanaian Times vol. 4405 Tuesday, 25th January, 1972.

⁹⁷ Ghanaian Times, vol. 4,551 Monday, 17th July, 1972.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

regimes, the NRC has bent over backwards to preserve fundamental human rights. Sometimes they have been accused of being over cautious; but they themselves have taken the view that it is better to let nine guilty men escape than to incarcerate one innocent man unjustifiably.⁹⁸

3.4.2.8 The paper urged the regime to be harder on those they thought were against them. According to the paper, “since the NRC assumed the reins of government of this country, a lot of people have been wandering why the Council had adopted a humanitarian attitude towards those they had just overthrown.”⁹⁹

3.4.2.9 Subsequent to an alleged coup plot of 14th July, 1972 the NRC passed the Subversion Decree, 1972 (NRCD 90), making it an offence for anyone to overthrow the NRC by unlawful means. Any person attempting to do this would be triable by a Military Tribunal and upon conviction, would be liable to suffer death penalty by firing squad.¹⁰⁰

3.4.2.10 The Ghanaian Times backed the passage of the Subversion Decree, saying that the Decree would end the phenomenon of exploitation and corruption by the elite.¹⁰¹ Under the caption “The Die is Cast” the paper noted in an editorial that:

The cumulative effect of these measures will undoubtedly help to eliminate from the body-social all forms of robbery, embezzlement, damaging government property, smuggling the county’s wealth and other anti-social acts incompatible with the tenets of stability and progress...we entirely agree with the government on these measures aimed at bringing the offenders to book so that the country could be saved from their wicked machinations.¹⁰²

3.4.2.11 More than any other newspaper, the Ghanaian Times gave wide coverage to the trial of the nine persons accused of involvement in the coup plot of 14th July, 1972. At the end of the trial, all the nine persons were found guilty of subversion. The first eight accused were sentenced to death by firing squad while the ninth accused was sentenced to 25 years’ imprisonment. The Council however commuted to life imprisonment the death sentences passed by the Military Tribunal.¹⁰³ The editorial of the same issue was captioned “Justice Tempered With Mercy” lauded the NRC, noting that, “in taking this magnanimous step, the NRC was animated by the fact that the unity and happiness of the people of Ghana transcend all other considerations.”¹⁰⁴

3.4.2.12 On the first anniversary of the regime, Col Acheampong, the Chairman of the NRC, broadcast to the nation on radio and television, reiterating the mission of his ⁹⁸ Ibid.

⁹⁹ Ibid

¹⁰⁰ Ghanaian Times, vol. 4553 Wednesday, 19th July, 1972 “Death penalty for subversion” .

¹⁰¹ Ibid

¹⁰² Ghanaian Times, vol. 4554 Thursday, 20th July, 1972.

¹⁰³ Ghanaian Times, vol 4,687 Thursday, 21st December, 1972 “NRC’s act of clemency – Eight now serve life jail”.

¹⁰⁴ Ibid

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

government. The entire front page of the Ghanaian Times was devoted to the Chairman's comment. Captioned "The Years Ahead", the paper observed that "now a year old, it is evident that the NRC has demonstrated a remarkable and courageous capability in attacking the root cause of our troubles with commendable success."¹⁰⁵

3.4.2.13 The Ghanaian Times highlighted the statements and comments of individuals and government officials that pointed out the advantages of the regime's continued stay in power. An article with the headline "Joe Appiah tells seminar - NRC must remain in power," noted:

Any Ghanaian who advocates an early return to civil rule is an enemy of the revolution, Mr. Joe Appiah Ghana's roving ambassador, declared in Accra yesterday." According to him, "military rule for a period is the only way to eliminate the tribalistic phenomenon bequeathed to Ghanaians by the ousted Busia regime."¹⁰⁶

Another article with the headline "Gyeke Darko declares at symposium – Liberties can exist with army rule" said,

Mr. Gyeke Darko, Director of Public Prosecutions said here last night that civil liberties can coexist with military regimes. Speaking at a symposium on 'Civil Liberties under military regimes' Mr. Gyeke Darko said the exercise of one's civil liberties did not depend in the type of regime in power. It depended on the people constituting the government and the determination of the people to ensure that their liberties were not trampled upon.¹⁰⁷

3.4.2.14 Efforts made by Acheampong to mobilise the national media to reinforce national consciousness and to rally public support for his campaigns have been well chronicled in secondary sources. The national press played a major role in propagating, especially the controversial idea of a Union Government (Unigov) which was mooted in 1976. The Unigov concept was an untried and ill-defined political formula to allow for the inclusion of soldiers and police in a future post-NRC government. The military government vigorously promoted it in an attempt to sell the concept to Ghanaians. The campaign ended up dividing the ranks of journalists between those who supported it and those who opposed it, as it did the general population as well.

3.4.2.15 The private press, notably the Christian Messenger, was much more restrained in their support for the new government. Although they did not actually praise the coup or the actors of the coup, they still did not offer any condemnation. The Christian Messenger, for example called on Ghanaians to ask for God's guidance and wisdom.¹⁰⁸ Editorials in the 1972 to 1975 editions of the paper stayed away from politics, and were

¹⁰⁵ Ghanaian Times, vol. 4,705 Saturday, 13th January, 1973, p.1.

¹⁰⁶ Ghanaian Times, vol. 4,714 Wednesday, 24th January, 1973, p.1.

¹⁰⁷ Ghanaian Times, vol. 4,723 Saturday, 3rd February, 1973,p.1.

¹⁰⁸ Christian Messenger, February, 1972.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

devoted mainly to social and economic problems facing the nation, such as, hoarding, shortage of drugs, corruption, etc.

3.4.3 The Media As Intimidators

3.4.3.1 The Ghanaian Times Editor, Kwame Gyewu-Kyem, whose one-sided editorials in support of the new political concept Unigov triggered the wrath of the country's professionals, spearheaded the government's media campaign. From the inception of the Unigov idea, the regime invited views from the general public "to ensure that the government implements the type of government that would be the brainchild of the generality of the people".¹⁰⁹ The Ghanaian Times showed, very early on, that it was totally in support of the concept. Writing under the caption "Let's Be Original" the paper in its editorial said that the guideline for participating in the debate of the Unigov was that the "exercise is for a government divorced from party politics."¹¹⁰ With this initial partisan stance, the paper castigated any person or group of people that did not support the Unigov idea. In 1977, at the height of the Unigov debate, while the media were encouraged to feel free to publish anything against the issue,¹¹¹ the press carried only arguments for the concept and downplayed arguments against it. The state-owned papers during the referendum on the proposal, conveniently placed the 'Yes' symbol on the front page and the 'No' symbol on the back page.

3.4.3.2 Kabral Blay-Amihere notes in his autobiography in reference to the Unigov period the following:

The Ghanaian Press which for a greater part of our history has been state-owned and government-controlled lived up to its image as sycophantic and oblivious to anything negative for the government. The period of UNIGOV confirmed for me the role of the state-owned media in managing the news in favour of governments.¹¹²

3.4.3.3 Blay-Amihere also notes that Gyewu-Kyem, whom Acheampong had "rescued from difficult times," used his editorial columns effectively to defend Acheampong and assail his opponents. According to Blay-Amihere:

All the nasty incidents which occurred during the campaign [UNIGOV] were never reported. Neither were activities of the opposition. It was the pro UNIGOV campaign that received the widest coverage and most of the harshest attacks on intellectuals were written in the editorial pages of the Ghanaian Times. Few journalists dared to show their true feelings about the campaign for fear that this position would be reported to the editor.¹¹³

¹⁰⁹ Ghanaian Times, vol. 5,938 Friday, 7th January, 1977.

¹¹⁰ Ghanaian Times, vol. 5,940 Tuesday, 11th January, 1977.

¹¹¹ Daily Graphic, vol. 8457 Wednesday, 28th December, 1977, p.1.

¹¹² Blay-Amihere, Fighting For Freedom (The Autobiography of an African Journalist), Trans Afrika News Ltd., Accra, 2001, p. 102.

¹¹³ Ibid.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

3.4.3.4 The doctors were the first to taste the scathing editorials of the Ghanaian Times with a report of the closure of the eight main surgery facilities at the Korle-Bu Hospital, because of the deplorable situation in the hospital. The editorial laid the blame for the closure squarely on the administrators of the hospital and did not mention government's responsibility at all.¹¹⁴ In another editorial captioned: "The politics At Korle-Bu", the Ghanaian Times said that the problem faced by Korle-Bu was due to the feuding among the Head of the Surgery Department and the other surgeons.¹¹⁵ Two letters from two doctors, however, debunked the editor's reasons for the closure of the hospital, citing "perennial shortages" at the hospital as the main cause of the problem. A rejoinder from the surgeons at Korle-Bu on the issue was carried on page 10 and given little prominence.¹¹⁶ The paper denigrated the facts outlined in the rejoinder by the surgeons, arguing instead that the "learned professors" still had a case to answer for the closure of the surgery facilities, in their capacities as professors and as individuals connected with the "Korle-Bu affair".¹¹⁷ In one issue, the paper had this short editorial on the doctors: "Good heavens! Has our medical services gone to the dogs? Whatever happened to the Hippocratic oath that doctors take?"¹¹⁸

3.4.3.5 The next group of professionals that faced the wrath of the editor was the lawyers, who as a group, did not agree with the UNIGOV concept and called for a return to civilian rule. In its editorial "Lessons for the Barristers" the paper said:

In almost every age lawyers as a class have created confusion in society which has often exasperated the public. In the first century [sic], Jeremy Bentham and his followers described lawyers as persons of a 'SINISTER INTEREST' who should be destroyed by the society... it is hardly any surprise that the Ghana Bar Association has appointed itself the opponent of the Union Government and in traditional lawyers style has been exasperating the Ghanaian public with provocative outburst and resolutions which are out of tune with the mood of the people.¹¹⁹

3.4.3.6 A subsequent editorial captioned: "The Voice Of The Minority" continued with the tirade on the lawyers. In the paper's view: "The group of barristers, who had been making noise about a return to civilian rule, are but a small minority who don't impress anybody either as champions of democracy which they purport to be or as moralist." The paper then went on to catalogue the sins of these lawyers – evasion of tax, cheating of clients, etc. – and summed up its argument by noting: "the wig and the gown don't by themselves make a genius out of any idiot".¹²⁰

¹¹⁴ Blay-Amihere, supra, p.102.

¹¹⁵ Ghanaian Times, vol. 5,962 Friday 4th February, 1977, p.4.

¹¹⁶ Ghanaian Times, vol 5,987 Saturday, 5th March, 1977,p.4.

¹¹⁷ Ibid.

¹¹⁸ Ghanaian Times, vol. 6,066 Wednesday, 8th June, 1977.

¹¹⁹ Ghanaian Times, vol. 5,982 Monday, 28th February, 1977, p.4.

¹²⁰ Ghanaian Times, vol. 5983 Tuesday, 1st March, 1977.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

3.4.3.7 There were also articles in the paper on demonstrations by the public against the lawyers' rejection of, and in support¹²¹ of the Unigov idea. According to one such article:

Several hundreds of workers, market women and various youth organisations yesterday staged a massive demonstration in Accra to condemn the Ghana Bar Association's call for a return to civilian rule in the country by 1978. The demonstration was also in support of the proposed Union Government.¹²²

3.4.4 Intimidation Of The Media

3.4.4.1 The NRC/SMC Regimes declared their intention to respect freedom of the press, but the record did not match the declaration. In an interview with the Ghana News Agency (GNA) shortly after taking power, Col Acheampong was quoted as saying "Freedom of the press in Ghana is absolutely guaranteed under the NRC."¹²³ Commenting on the statement the Ghanaian Times noted:

The Chairman of the NRC, Col. Acheampong, is reported to have said that the freedom of the press is absolutely guaranteed under his military regime. This is re-assuring indeed and we fervently hope that the military regime in spite of its obvious peculiar nature, will do much to entrench this freedom in all the affairs of the nation...We must point out, however, that freedom of the press is not license for the press to indulge in undue or cheap sensationalism or any form of vicious propaganda.¹²⁴

The paper hoped that true to the words of the Chairman, the NRC will for all time guarantee the freedom of the press and take criticism in good faith so that they could always win the sympathy and support of the people.¹²⁵ Speaking to members of the print media and radio in the Western Region, Col P. K. Agyekum, Western Regional Commissioner, also noted that the freedom of the press was not to be interpreted to mean that a licence had been given to go beyond what is expected of decent men. The Commissioner was quoted as saying: "we expect you to exercise this freedom with caution, cooperation and loyalty from the rank and file of the press within the expectation of the NRC."¹²⁶

3.4.4.2 It is evident that the regime did not really mean to keep its promise about the freedom of the press. It has already been noted that soon after the coup d'état, editors of state-owned press were briefly detained and later replaced. They were John W. Dumoga of the Daily Graphic, Abraham Kutin Mensah of the Ghanaian Times and Anthony

¹²¹ See Ghanaian Times, vol. 6,011 Saturday, 2nd April, 1977, p.2: "More support for Union Government".

¹²² Ghanaian Times, vol. 5,991 Thursday, 10th March, 1977.

¹²³ Ghanaian Times, vol 4,404 Monday, 24th January, 1972.

¹²⁴ Ghanaian Times, vol 4,405 Tuesday, 25th January, 1972.

¹²⁵ Ibid.

¹²⁶ Ghanaian Times, vol 4,406 Wednesday, 26th January, 1972.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

Ghansah of the Weekly Spectator. The rationale for this action was that the new Head of State, Col Acheampong, needed to have the full support of the media in his campaign for national unity and the promotion of his political agenda.¹²⁷ Similarly as was to be expected the new regime dismissed or transferred journalists outside their news organisations.

3.4.4.3 The NRC had shown its anti-media hand very early on through its first Commissioner of Information, Maj Anthony H. Selormey. In the heat of agitation by journalists for the establishment of a Press Trust, Maj Selormey is quoted as saying:

A military government, by its very nature, is certainly inconsistent with any pretensions to subscribing fully to the concept of freedom of the press in the normal acceptance of the expression. I will, therefore, appeal to all of you to re-adjust your orientation on this matter of Press Trust... On our part we shall do our utmost to ensure that these state-owned Newspapers and mass media should, as far as possible, continue to operate in a free and unimpeded atmosphere and as far as our present circumstance, as a Military Government permit.¹²⁸

3.4.4.4 Four months into his position, the Head of State took over as Commissioner of Information from Maj Selormey. This particular development was to be a big pointer to the extent of control the NRC intended to have over the media.

3.4.4.5 The Commission received evidence of instances of victimisation on grounds of people being a “security risk.” For example, Col John Asassie’s appointment as the Director- General of GBC in February, 1975, coincided with the removal of the Head of Television News, Dentu, and a few senior GBC broadcasters to the Information Services Department, then euphemistically referred to as “Siberia.” The order was said to have emanated from the Commissioner of Information, Col Tachie-Menson. Dentu was later redeployed from “Siberia”, only to work as supervisor of gardens at the GBC.

3.4.4.6 The relationship between journalists and the military leadership was marked by a lack of respect for, and high-handedness towards, the journalists. A former journalist with the GNA¹²⁹, described the NRC/SMC regimes as having the worst record regarding the press, and described the press as sycophants, who practised self-censorship. He cited as an example, the closing down of the GNA office at the Airport by Maj Kwame Asante, the Commissioner for Communications, and the locking up for three days of its correspondent, Steven Gbafa. According to the journalist, Maj Asante was angered, when upon a visit to the GNA Airport office, Gbafa, an old schoolmate of his, called him by a nickname. He also noted that the press became docile and took instructions from Burma Camp or the Castle, and that the military considered the press as non-partners in development. “I could still remember Col. Sanni Thomas treating us, the Castle correspondents, as if we were his slaves,” the journalist said. It was not unusual, he said,

¹²⁷ Asante, op cit supra.

¹²⁸ Ghanaian Times, vol 4,461 30th March, 1972, p.6.

¹²⁹ Memorandum to the National Reconciliation Commission.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

for journalists to be summoned to the seat of government where they were berated by the Head of State for any perceived misreporting.

3.4.4.7 Six months into its term of office, the NRC regime introduced a series of anti-media legislation to control the press. The first was the Defamation Decree, 1972 (NRCD 67), passed in May, 1972. The Decree criminalised any publication which was against the government. Then in July, 1972 the government enacted the Control of Publications Decree, 1972 (NRCD 89) which banned the publication of the The Pioneer, and the Echo. The Decree made it an offence for anyone to publish, distribute, sell or offer for sale the two independent newspapers.¹³⁰ The banning order was lifted, however, on 18th September of the same year. It is interesting that The Pioneer suddenly became an ally of the NRC, dutifully joining the government in its declared campaign to rid the nation of all forms of corruption and economic sabotage.

3.4.4.8 On 2nd March, 1973, the NRC promulgated another Decree, this time covering the publication of newspapers in the country. The Newspaper Licensing Decree, 1973 (NRCD 161), a replica of Nkrumah's Newspaper Licensing Act of 1963, stated essentially that no person shall print, publish or circulate any newspaper, magazine or journal without an official licence issued by the Ministry of Information. Under this Decree, the Commissioner for Information was authorised to suspend or revoke all newspaper licences. The penalties for offenders included a fine and up to twelve months imprisonment. A year after this Decree, the Legon Observer and the Echo were shut down because of government pressure on the printers who stood to lose their supply of newsprint if they continued to print those publications.

3.4.4.9 Legislation apart, the NRC also used subtle methods, such as starving printing firms of import license, to control the media. Thus, the Legon Observer in 1974 was unable to publish, the reason being its inability to find a willing printing establishment, including its own regular printer. The printers of Legon Observer, the Liberty Press, in a letter to the publishers, stated that its business was in jeopardy due to its association with the journal.¹³¹ Just about the same time in June, 1974, the privately-owned Evening News was also compelled to change into a fortnightly newspaper for the same reason.

3.4.4.10 In order to stem the increasing tide of rumour-mongering in the country about some of the government's unpopular actions and decisions, the SMC in 1977 promulgated the Prohibition of Rumours Decree, 1977 (SMCD 92), which stipulated that:

Any person who by print, writing, painting or word of mouth publishes or reproduces any statement, rumour or report which is false and likely to cause fear or alarm or despondence to the public peace or cause disaffection against the Supreme Military Council or National Redemption Council among the public or members of the armed and police forces shall be guilty of an offence punishable upon conviction by

¹³⁰ Daily Graphic, vol. 6775 Wednesday, 19th July, 1972, p.1.

¹³¹ Audrey Gadzekpo, Kwame Karikari and Kwesi Yankah (eds) Going to Town. The Writings of PAV Ansah, vol. 1. Ghana Universities Press, Accra, 1996, p.3.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

imprisonment of not less than five years or more than ten years without the option of a fine.

3.4.4.11 At the GBC, a former employee reports of official interference in programming. For example, one episode of the programme: “Talking Point” (hosted by Prof. Daniel Adzei Bekoe, later to become Vice Chancellor of the University of Ghana), was once ordered to be taken off the air in the middle of the programme, by the Commissioner of Foreign Affairs, Major Kwame Baah. Direct censorship at the GBC newsroom was imposed, especially when the government sent a former employee-turned public relations officer as a “news consultant” to the corporation.

3.5.0 SMC I3.5.1 Media Intimidation

3.5.1.1 On 9th October, 1975, the NRC was re-constituted into the Supreme Military Council (SMC), with Gen Acheampong still as its Chairman. One of the early anti-media actions undertaken by the government was the arrest and detention of two freelance journalists, Adolphus A. Patterson and Kwame Kesse-Adu. According to Asante, they were arrested and detained for “destructive criticism of the NRC”.¹³²

3.5.1.2 In May, 1978, the regime again banned The Pioneer from publication. The paper’s crime was the publicity it gave to the closure of the University of Science and Technology by the government, following a boycott of lectures by the students. The ban lasted for a month, before being lifted by the government in June.

3.5.2 Media Support

3.5.2.1 On the credit side, the SMC (I) in response to media pressure, appointed the ‘Essah Committee’ in January, 1978, to look into the salary and other working conditions of journalists in public service. However, the regime did not last long enough to implement or ignore the committee’s recommendations.

3.5.3 Media Inducement

3.5.3.1 The relationship between the government and the media was not all negative. It has been noted that “[Gen] Acheampong was popular with the press and enjoyed often close, affable relationships with Ghanaian journalists, especially senior editors.” The Head of State was known to have often invited journalists to his residence to be entertained lavishly and sent away home with drinks and cash presents.¹³³ These acts of inducement and efforts to forge personal friendships with senior journalists, were not always in the interest of the public, as it was bound to affect the capacity of the ¹³² Asante, supra, p.63.

¹³³ Ibid, pp. 63-64.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

journalists to be objective in their reportage, as well as their willingness to give space to dissenting views in the public media.

3.5.3.2 Certainly one can appreciate the effect that such inducements had on the press during the now-infamous Unigov campaign, when the state-owned media became a part of the Unigov campaign team. It is not surprising that the Ghanaian Times announced the palace-coup of 5th July, 1978, in an uncharacteristically restrained fashion. “Kutu Resigns And Retires, Akuffo Now Takes Over”,¹³⁴ was the subdued manner in which the ousting of the Chairman of the SMC I was announced to the Ghanaian public. However, the impression of “voluntary retirement of the Head of State” that the headline sought to create was completely false as Gen Acheampong had then been arrested and detained by his former colleagues. The news item also sought to explain the event by creating the false impression that the resignation of Gen Acheampong had been a thoughtful act, done in the interest of the nation, to ensure the unity and stability of the nation. The active Unigov campaigning that the Ghanaian Times had done, made the event a tragic one for the paper and its Editor, Kwame Gyewu-Kyem.

3.6.0 SMC II3.6.1 Government – Media Relations

3.6.1.1 Widespread public opposition to the SMC I was enough to invite the military to oust Gen Acheampong on 5th July, 1978. The SMC II was born under its new Chairman, Lt-Gen Akuffo. SMC II pledged itself to ensuring greater freedom of the mass media. However, it soon became clear that the intervention was not exactly in the interest of the media. “The Press Is Truly Free Now, SMC Pledges” was the banner headline of the Friday, 4th August, 1978 issue of the Ghanaian Times. The paper reported,

The government yesterday assured the press of freedom to report, criticise and comment on any subject of public interest without fear or favour provided they are not libellous or seditious...a journalist who panders the interest of his or her employers or sectional interest tends to sacrifice his or her independence and professional standards...this has been the bane of Ghanaian journalists in recent years.

3.6.1.2 The editorial of the same Ghanaian Times issue was revealing of the plight of journalists over the years, and worth reproducing:

It is well that the SMC came out yesterday with what could be taken as a new policy statement on the freedom of the press, short of libellous, seditious, discourteous and state security busting items, the Press is free to publish what is printable...the freedom of the Press does not consist in the freedom of an editor to crucify principle so that he can say one thing today and another tomorrow. That could be weathercock behaviour, and it is as bad as sycophancy...this freedom does not, either, mean what the ¹³⁴ Ghanaian Times, vol. 6,402 Friday, 6th July, 1978.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

Ghanaian public want it to be – that some 500 pressmen should say what they themselves, 10 million people do not want to say...and what is worse, when the whole nation fail [sic] to appreciate it when a pressman dies...or when for the sake of getting personal favours nobody's no is truly no and nobody's yes is truly yes, it is self deception to think that the Press can secure freedom of expression in such a nation. Pressmen have fallen for standing by the truth and seeking the public good. Editors were dismissed for opposing government agreement inimical to the national interest; they were sacked for criticising government foreign policy; they were fired for telling the government that freedom of the Press could not be like the freedom of the zoo. Pressmen have been disgraced by the authorities in many ways over the years... In thus daring to fight for the interest of the people and dying for it, what have the editors got in the form of support and encouragement from the public? Nothing! The dismissed disgraced editors went unsung, with no public protest in their favour. Indeed many Ghanaians secretly said, "They deserve it, these too known editors!"...It is not the members of the press who are being released, as from bondage, by the SMC's press freedom statement yesterday. It is the whole of society that is being united to conduct itself in the manner that can make press freedom possible and realistic.¹³⁵

3.6.1.3 No sooner had these high-sounding ideas on press liberty been expressed by the SMC II, than it dismissed Kwame Gyewu-Kyem, the Supervising Editor of the New Times Corporation from that position. He was moved to a much less-prestigious position at the Information Services Department. Abraham Kutin-Mensah, Editor of the Weekly Spectator, was appointed the new Supervising Editor in his place. The government also appointed Willie Kwarteng, then deputy-editor of the Weekly Spectator, as the new editor of Ghanaian Times.

3.6.1.4 Soon a confrontation ensued between the government and journalists. In October, 1978, the GJA mounted a strike against the government asking it to act on the Essah Committee Report. But, the government slighted the journalists, most of whom were on government payroll, by refusing to act directly on the recommendations.

3.6.1.5 Belatedly into its short term in office, the SMC II under Gen Akuffo, attempted to warm up to media practitioners by promising at the inauguration of the 'Guild of Ghana Editors', an independent press council. This press council was "to provide a suitable framework within which the media, Ghanaian and foreign journalists could practise their profession."¹³⁶ Akuffo's Government was overthrown shortly after, however, and the council was never established.

3.6.1.6 The Ghanaian Times provides further perspective on the situation of Ghanaian journalists in another editorial captioned "Chops and Booze". Although it is unclear what provoked this tirade, it is instructive in what it notes as the "stumbling blocks" in journalism:

¹³⁵ Ghanaian Times, vol. 6,427 Saturday, 4th August, 1978.

¹³⁶ See C. Udofia, "Ghana" in G. T. Kurian (ed.), World Press Encyclopaedia, New York, N.Y.: Facts on File, 1982, pp. 398- 397.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

The development of the standards of journalism in this country suffer [sic] a number of stumbling blocks, including the fact that anyone who can afford a cheap meal of dirty salad, rotten meat, and smuggled drinks, thinks he has a right to engage the attention of Editors. Another stumbling block is the tendency of most high officials both in the public service and private business to maintain with Reporters the kind of relationship that exist [sic] between prostitutes and the members of public honour: they deny the prostitutes in the day and hug them at night. A third stumbling block in the way of the Press is the class-conscious, superiority complex attitude towards journalist from too many self estimating people in the society...food and drinks as the basis for determining news value is only in the minds of those who want publicity and this sort of awry and skewed view of the Press in many otherwise knowledgeable circles is one reason why journalists are bombarded right and left with unsolicited offers of inducements.¹³⁷

3.6.1.7 Some observations of the Essah Committee, however, are worth noting as they provide a good assessment of the public image of journalists and their culpability in the denigration of their own profession:

Some journalists, it is sad to observe, do not wait for the government to give them a line. Motivated by opportunism to the exclusion of any professional ethics or regard for the public interest, they can launch witch hunts against political dissenters and carry out distortion of facts if they surmise that such activities, while not ordered by the government, will not unduly displease it.

As a result of such activities, journalists in the public service have largely become objects of hatred and contempt in the society that normally expects so much of them. Instead of being regarded as leaders of opinion (which is their right as members of the 'Fourth Estate of the Realm,' a status won for them by men of integrity throughout the ages), they are almost generally regarded as stooges, ignorant dealers in misinformation or perverters of truth...

Before any dismissal, transfer or deployment is effected in any of the mass media organisations in the public service, the individual affected should be confronted with his or her accusers and given an opportunity to state his or her case...¹³⁸

3.6.2 Media Resistance

3.6.2.1 As already indicated, the Acheampong and Akuffo Governments of the NRC/SMC showed a dubious record regarding media liberties, and the press in general, a disappointing record of complicity with the ruling regimes. However, there were some ¹³⁷ Ghanaian Times, vol 6,635 Monday, 9th April, 1979.

¹³⁸ The Essah Committee Report as reported in the Daily Graphic vol 8701 Wednesday, 11th October, 1978, pp. 8 & 9.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

few acts of resistance that must be acknowledged. For instance, in 1977, with the debate on Unigov just starting, the Christian Messenger and The Standard voiced opposition to the idea. A lead article in the Christian Messenger, for example, said: “Union Government Is Not The Answer.”¹³⁹ The article was on an interview with a professor of the Political Science Department at the University of Ghana. The July/August, 1977 issue of the same paper had an editorial with the title “Will It Work?”, which questioned some appointments of civilians and soldiers to head public corporations that the government had made. The paper’s beef was whether the action was not calculated to pre-empt demands by students for civilian rule. The paper also asked how different such appointments of civilians to work with the military were from the proposed Unigov. The paper, however undermined its critical stance by noting:

We of the Christian Messenger firmly believe that given the goodwill of the people minus all recriminations, and search for scape-goats, this new experiment in civilian cum military co-operation stands a chance of saving Ghana from death. Backed with prayers, the experiment will succeed.¹⁴⁰

3.6.2.2 Two articles in The Standard better illustrate attempts at criticism rather than support of the government. One editorial titled “The Task Ahead”, was a critique on the commemoration of the 1972 revolution. The paper started by praising the NRC on some of its policies, such as, the “operation feed yourself” programme and pursuing a vigorous foreign policy. However, the paper said some of these laudable policies were being pursued at the expense of the “common man – the average worker and labourer – to be precise.” The paper proposed that to keep the economy buoyant, the government should drastically cut down on military expenditure, spend less money on non-essentials such as hiking, exercise, training and ammunition. The paper added that expenditure on non-productive sectors such as defence, anniversaries and parties should be reduced for great allocation to be made on productive sectors of agriculture, industry and corporations.

3.6.2.3 The second article took the form of an editorial, which dealt with a call by the Ghana Bar Association (GBA) on the government to hand over power to a civilian government not later than 1978, and also to abolish the existing military tribunals, since their existence was unfavourable to the rule of law.¹⁴¹ The paper’s view was that “the call by the GBA is a call for a truly representative government, a government which rules by the mandate of the people.” The paper then went on to say that even the most liberal among military regimes were not truly representative of the people. Thus, the call by the GBA was “timely and to the point.” The paper ended with a strong warning:

Maybe the SMC had better pay heed to the call of the ‘learned men’. For the same people who are loud in singing paeans and praises of the militia, shall be the same elements of the society to discredit the SMC should they fail the Nation in their duty.¹⁴²

¹³⁹ Christian Messenger, March/April 1977.

¹⁴⁰ Christian Messenger, July/August 1977.

¹⁴¹ The Standard, 10th-17th October, 1976.

¹⁴² Ibid.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

3.7 4TH JUNE, 1979 - 23RD SEPTEMBER, 1979: ARMED FORCES REVOLUTIONARY COUNCIL (AFRC)

3.7.1 Government- Media Relations

3.7.1.1 The short three-month period of AFRC rule is generally considered by some as being an “interregnum”, as indeed was the belief of the coup-makers themselves, who described it simply as a period of “house-cleaning.” However, it is also notably a period during which the military government exerted a profound impact on the psyche of the nation and on the media.

3.7.1.2 On the one hand, the regime was able to appeal to, and evoke the fervour of nationalism in the citizenry, including journalists, through its brutal campaign against trade malpractices or “kalabule”, that were blamed for the scarcity of basic consumer goods on the market. For example, on 24th June, 1979, the AFRC announced the establishment of the special “People’s Court” to try people in pursuance of its house-cleaning exercise. The policies that resulted in deprivation within the generality of the population, and the extent of corruption - perceived or real - during the NRC/SMC I & II regimes, did win some public sympathy for the AFRC. On the other hand, the arbitrariness with which the AFRC enforced compliance to whatever it alone considered right, and the brutal executions of former military leaders, shocked many Ghanaians.

3.7.1.3 The “secret trials” of alleged “economic saboteurs,” and the execution by firing squad of eight senior Military Officers, Gen Ignatius K. Acheampong; Maj-Gen Edward K. Utuka; Gen Frederick W. K. Akuffo; Lt-Gen Akwasi A. Afrifa; Maj-Gen. Robert E. A Kotei; Air Vice-Marshall George Y. Boakyee; Rear Admiral Joy Amedume; and Col Roger Felli, on 16th and 26th June, 1979, as well as the razing to the ground of Makola No.1 Market on 20th August, 1979, were particularly traumatic. There were very few voices in the press that made bold to condemn these atrocities.

3.7.2 Media Support

3.7.2.1 The Daily Graphic cautiously welcomed the takeover by the AFRC, led by Flt Lt Jerry John Rawlings, on 4th June, 1979. The paper’s report of the events immediately after the takeover showed that while people rejoiced in the past when coups occurred, this time some people went looting in Accra-Central, while others were seen in clusters discussing the development.¹⁴³ The editorial in the same issue was not so exuberant as previous editorials (immediately after the NLC and NRC coups d’état) and serves as a good illustration of mitigated press euphoria:

Ghanaians woke up yesterday to what certainly has all the features of a people’s revolution...There is no doubt that Ghanaians in general have had their feel [sic] of military rule. It is therefore welcome that the ¹⁴³ Daily Graphic,_ vol. 8902 Tuesday, 5th June, 1979.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

leaders of yesterday's exercise have assured the nation that the electioneering procedure will continue as scheduled so that the country can return to civilian rule as planned.¹⁴⁴

This time the coup-makers were not "gallant men" neither was the revolution a "glorious" one. The Daily Graphic called the coup "a people's revolution" and an "exercise", and asked the leaders to avoid bloodshed.

3.7.2.2 The Ghanaian Times was also equally sober in its initial reportage of the coup. "Revolutionary Council takes over - Hamidu appeals for calm" was the banner headline in the Ghanaian Times announcing the coup d'état by the AFRC. Unlike former coups d'état, the Ghanaian Times reported that people did not take to the streets in support of the uprising but hurried back to their various homes.¹⁴⁵ The editorial in the same issue captioned, "Need for Peace, Calm," appealed to all Ghanaians to help maintain peace and calm in the nation. The editorial was neither supportive nor condemnatory of the coup.

3.7.2.3 Subsequent issues of the paper gave the raison d'être of the takeover. In his maiden speech to the nation, the Chairman of the AFRC, Flt Lt Rawlings declared, that the coup was "a natural reaction to injustices and events of the last few years". He added that any person who attempted to misuse the opportunity to serve the country was to be "shot outright". The Ghanaian Times editorial on the maiden speech, captioned "Chance for Discipline", lauded the commitment of the new regime and prayed that all resistance to the regime should cease. The editorial also highlighted the incidence of burglaries and lawlessness since the day of the takeover.¹⁴⁶ The Ghanaian Times, three days later, dutifully reported that the Chairman of the AFRC had declared in Accra that, "Ghana needs a strong man who is a benevolent dictator."¹⁴⁷

3.7.2.4 The Ghanaian Times rapidly resumed its characteristic posture of using its pages to vilify and de-legitimise the past government that it had lauded and defended aggressively, once it had fallen. It began to portray the past government as corrupt, by carrying stories cataloguing dubious practices of the previous leaders, and questioning whether assets had been declared by these former leaders.¹⁴⁸

3.7.2.5 The initial restraint and unenthusiastic support for the new regime displayed by newspapers during this period was severely contradicted by the most disturbing endorsements of gross human rights abuses ever manifested in the Ghanaian media. Under the caption, "A Lesson To All Ghanaians", the *Daily Graphic*¹⁴⁹ welcomed the ¹⁴⁴ Ibid.

¹⁴⁵ Ghanaian Times, Vol. 6,683, Tuesday, 5th June, 1979.

¹⁴⁶ See Ghanaian Times, Vol. 6,684 Wednesday, 6th June, 1979; Ghanaian Times, Vol. 6,686 Friday 8th June, 1979- "Coup was a spontaneous reaction – Rawlings".

¹⁴⁷ Ghanaian Times _vol. 6,685 Thursday, 7th June, 1979.

¹⁴⁸ See Ghanaian Times, vol. 6,691, Thursday, 14th June, 1979; Ghanaian Times, Vol. 6,692, Friday, 15th June 1979-Illegal loans covered by bank loans; Kutu has three houses in UK; Ghanaian Times, Vol. 6,693, Saturday, 16th June, 1979 - Declaration of assets by top military men.

¹⁴⁹ Daily Graphic Vol. 8913 Monday, 18th June, 1979.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

execution of “Mr.”¹⁵⁰ Acheampong former Head of State, and Maj-Gen Utuka, former Commander of the Border Guards. According to the paper, “there cannot be a better anti-coup elixir than what has begun to unfold before our very eyes.”¹⁵¹ The Ghanaian Times did not condemn the execution by firing squad of the former Heads of State and military officers, but rather encouraged the regime not to begin the house cleaning exercise from only the year 1972, but 1966 when the first coup occurred.¹⁵²

3.7.2.6 Often newspapers depicted through words and pictures the human rights abuses meted out on the citizens of the country, but failed to criticise or condemn such abuses. Indeed, the framing of stories suggested that the press endorsed some of the junta’s harsh measures. Even before the public executions of alleged economic and other saboteurs started, the Ghanaian Times, for example, showed pictures of the Teshie Firing Range and another one at Sunyani, being prepared for those who would be brought to the stakes.¹⁵³ The paper enhanced its endorsement of human rights abuses with pictures and sensational headlines. Some of the headlines of the articles that carried the reports were: “Woman Contractor given 24 strokes”;¹⁵⁴ “T’di Contractor caned in public”;¹⁵⁵ and “18 caned in K’si”.¹⁵⁶ One article showed four soldiers holding the hands and legs of the victim, while the victim was being caned on the bare back and buttocks.¹⁵⁷

3.7.2.7 Both the Christian Messenger and The Standard also hailed the AFRC’s revolution and its policies as well. The 24th June, 1979 editorial in The Standard completely backed the executions of “Mr” Acheampong and Maj-Gen Utuka at the Teshie firing range. The paper was of the view that the executions had brought the sordid history of the notorious second military regime to a close. The paper termed the executions a “disciplinary action”, taken by the AFRC in public to serve as a deterrent, adding that the AFRC’s determination to tackle the economic problem of the country is seen through its action of executing the two officers. The Standard ended by saying that the fate of leaders since Independence, should be a warning to future aspiring political leaders: Nkrumah and Busia had both died in exile, the assets of Ankrah and Afrifa had been frozen, and Mr. Acheampong had been shot by firing squad.

3.7.2.8 On the revolution, the Christian Messenger said:

Rawlings showed the way by his speedy and lightening [sic] decisions. One may not accept all his methods, or even accept most of their actions. His revolution however made Ghanaians sit up. Within a brief spell, the nostalgic and clammy effects of kalabulism were exposed. The nation’s oppressed masses especially the youth were electrified...

¹⁵⁰ Gen Acheampong had been stripped of his military rank when he was removed from power under the Armed Forces (Miscellaneous Provisions Decree, 1979 (SMCD 235).

¹⁵¹ Ibid.

¹⁵² Ghanaian Times, vol. 6,686, Friday, 8th June, 1979-Editorial- “The House Cleaning”.

¹⁵³ Ghanaian Times, vol. 6,689 Tuesday, 12th June, 1979 – “Site ready for firing squad”.

¹⁵⁴ Ghanaian Times, vol. 6,700 Monday, 25th June, 1979.

¹⁵⁵ Ghanaian Times, vol. 6,699 Saturday, 23rd June, 1979.

¹⁵⁶ Ghanaian Times, vol. 6,701 Tuesday, 26th June, 1979.

¹⁵⁷ Ghanaian Times, vol. 6694 Monday, 18th June, 1979 – “5 men and a woman whipped in public”.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

3.7.2.9 To sum up the performance of the AFRC at the end of their stay in power, The Standard paid the government this memorable tribute in its editorial:

Flt. Lt. J. J. Rawlings and the AFRC have performed their onerous task with a touch of high drama, rare courage, dedication and a high sense of duty. In the final summation therefore, we should always remember that if Flt. Lt. J. J. Rawlings had not happened on the Ghanaian political scene when he did, it is hard to envisage what could have been done about the stupendous task of moral regeneration and ‘house cleaning’ on which he and the AFRC are now engaged. We salute Flt. Lt. J. J. Rawlings and the AFRC.¹⁵⁸

3.7.3 Media Intimidation

3.7.3.1 The brief period of the AFRC in 1979, has been described by a former employee of the GBC as “harrowing.” According to the journalist, many GBC staff members at Broadcasting House in Accra were in a state of constant fear of their lives, as it was not uncommon for soldiers to fire their guns, including the heavy weapons mounted on armoured vehicles, on the compound of the corporation.

3.7.3.2 The period also witnessed its share of direct interference in the work of the media with the AFRC Chairman, Flt Lt Rawlings, actually going to address GBC workers at the Music Studio in August, 1979, and asking them to comply with the dictates of the revolution.

3.7.3.3 The AFRC regime also appointed Elizabeth Ohene, Literary Editor of the Daily Graphic as its Editor, an elevation she declined. She rather chose to be the Acting Editor, pending the return to constitutional rule.

3.7.3.4 In June, 1979, the Commissioner for Information of the AFRC Government, Dickson Kwame Afreh, verbally announced the removal from office of Nana Addo-Twum, as editor of the Daily Graphic, and the appointment of Ms Elizabeth Ohene as Acting Editor. Nana Addo-Twum sued the government for breach of contract at an Accra High court, but before a date could be set for the hearing of the case, the Press Commission intervened and a compromise was reached. Nana Addo-Twum retained his job as editor, when it became clear that both his removal and the appointment of his successor were done by verbal instructions only.¹⁵⁹ Needless to state, such a reversal was possible only because the government that caused the removal was no longer in power, and the Press Commission had been established under the authority of the 1979 Constitution. What was also remarkable was that the occupant of a position as important as that of the editor of a major newspaper, could be removed merely by verbal instructions. The incident thus only illustrated the measure of authority that the AFRC

¹⁵⁸ The Standard, September, 1979.

¹⁵⁹ *Daily Graphic*_vol. 9279 26th August, 1980, pp. 1, 4-5.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

Government exercised over the media. The Chairman of the Press Commission, Kofi Badu, expressed the hopes of the media in these words:

The myth of a monolithic information community within which editors can be moved, transferred or banished at the whims of a government, needs to be exercised [sic]. Journalists should be free to select their places of employment and to rise and fall with their employers on the basis of their performance.¹⁶⁰

3.7.3.5 Media intimidation did not emanate from the government only, but from other sources as well. There is the example of Elizabeth Ohene, Acting Editor of Daily Graphic who was physically threatened by students for daring to write an editorial condemning the call “Let the blood flow”, that was being spearheaded by students. This attack occurred, when a group of angry students, dissatisfied with the stance of the paper, marched to the premises of Graphic Corporation and painted graffiti on the walls. Some of these writings read “Death to Ohene”.¹⁶¹ Rawlings later appealed to a crowd of students to leave Elizabeth Ohene alone, and to allow her to speak her mind.

3.7.4 Media Resistance

3.7.4.1 Soon after the coup, the Daily Graphic with Elizabeth Ohene as Acting Editor, displayed a rare moment of courage when in an editorial, in the wake of the executions, it advocated the need to avoid bloodshed and appealed to the regime to withdraw troops from the streets. Defiantly, the paper wrote:

As the ‘Graphic’ indicated yesterday, Ghanaians seem in no mood to live under military government any longer and only the right thing should be done to generate confidence and restore image to our Armed Forces.¹⁶²

3.7.4.2 Despite being intimidated, state-media journalists such as Ms Ajoa Yeboah-Afari and Ms Elizabeth Ohene were able to dissent and keep their jobs. Notable is Elizabeth Ohene’s “Death Not The Answer” article that incurred the wrath of the students in which she notes:

What is even more important, the executions will not solve the problems that we have, the anger we feel will not be expurgated after the killings because we shall still be hungry after they have all been killed.¹⁶³

3.7.4.3 In another opinion piece, Elizabeth Ohene advised the regime to stick to its pledge of house cleaning, get it done with and hand over to a civilian government. She also admonished the press to be truthful and honest if the revolution was to succeed.¹⁶⁴

¹⁶⁰ Ibid.

¹⁶¹ Asante, supra, p. 73.

¹⁶² Daily Graphic, vol 8904 Thursday, 7th June, 1979.

¹⁶³ Daily Graphic 5th June, 1979, supra.

¹⁶⁴ Daily Graphic vol. 8908 Tuesday, 12th June, 1979.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 33.8 24TH SEPTEMBER, 1979- 30TH DECEMBER, 1981: THIRD REPUBLIC THE PEOPLE'S NATIONAL PARTY GOVERNMENT (PNP)*3.8.1 Government – Media Relations

3.8.1.1 The press under the Government of President Hilla Limann also experienced a season of freedom. Soon after assuming office, the President on 15th February, 1980, before the official inauguration of a Press Commission, which had been provided for in the 1979 Constitution to ensure media freedom, appointed three senior journalists to fill editorial vacancies at the Daily Graphic, the Mirror and the Ghanaian Times. Ms Elizebeth Ohene, Acting Editor of the Daily Graphic who was confirmed as editor with other colleagues, opposed this action of the President. An editorial in the paper said:

After careful consideration of the matter, however, we are sure that these so-called appointments cannot go unchallenged since they appear at best mischievous and at worst quite contrary to the letter and spirit of the constitution. Mischievous because appointments seek to frustrate the very aims of the Press Commission which seek to protect press freedom, one of its features being the security of tenure of the office of journalists.

3.8.1.2 Despite the protests, the government went ahead with the appointments and the journalists dragged it to court. The case was settled at the Supreme Court; however, the government withdrew the appointments after that.

3.8.2 Media Support

3.8.2.1 The political and social climate that prevailed under the Third Republic permitted the free discussion of the performance of the media in the country.¹⁶⁵ Asante noted that at the end of 1980, several parliamentarians commended the press, particularly the Ghanaian Times for its objective and accurate coverage of events in the country. President Limann on his part appealed to the press, on the eve of the second anniversary of the Third Republic, “not to subject the country’s young democracy to the licentiousness, fabricated scandals and shocks which older democracies and mature economies can absorb.”

3.8.3.2 Media intimidation under the Limann Regime was subtle and carried out by government officials. Although the Press Commission had been set up, many thought the membership constituted mainly of PNP adherents. On January 27, 1981, the newly appointed Board of Directors of the Graphic Corporation told the Acting Deputy Editor of the paper that editorials “lacked meat”, consequently, they had decided to see and vet

¹⁶⁵ Asante, supra, p.89.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

editorials. The editorial staff, however, refused to comply and the GJA¹⁶⁶ supported this action. In an editorial on the issue titled “Our editors versus our board” the paper said:

If the board of directors want to determine what shall be written in the editorial columns of the Daily Graphic, then their best bet is to assume completely the production of the paper and dismiss the whole editorial staff...The board of directors want to paralyse the operations of the editors, tie their hands behind their back and effectively destroy the press freedom which the constitution guarantees.

Under the Third Republic therefore, the media tried to assert its freedom in the new constitutional dispensation, with some degree of success.

3.9 31ST DECEMBER, 1981 -- 6TH JANUARY, 1993: THE PROVISIONAL NATIONAL DEFENCE COUNCIL (PNDC)

3.9.1 Government – Media Relations

3.9.1.1. Another military take-over occurred on Thursday, 31st December, 1981, when Flt Lt Rawlings took power for the second time to launch what he claimed was a revolution that would transform the social and economic order of Ghana. The rule by the Provisional National Defence Council (PNDC) was the longest single period of military rule in Ghana, ending on 6th January, 1993, when the Fourth Republic was ushered in. The regime’s criminalisation of wealth as a result of its ideological posture, particularly in the very first year of the regime, set this military regime apart from all the earlier ones.

3.9.1.2 Although the coup d’état was represented as a continuation of the June, 1979 agenda to clean up the society, it was, in fact, not so. This was because none of the original members of the AFRC, except its Chairman, re-appeared in the membership of the PNDC. Furthermore, none of the original PNDC members retained their position to the end, except the Chairman, Flt Lt Rawlings. The PNDC Proclamation as amended, unlike any others decreed by military regimes, installed a dictator in disguise, when it invested extraordinary powers in the person of Chairman. According to the law, the Chairman of the PNDC could, in emergency situations or in exceptional circumstances, take any decision on behalf of the PNDC which could be ratified later by the whole Council.¹⁶⁷ What constituted an “emergency”, or “exceptional circumstances”, however, were not defined, leaving the decision when to act on behalf of the Council by himself, to the Chairman himself.

3.9.1.3 Immediately after seizing power on 31st December, 1981, the PNDC launched its “Power to the People” crusade by establishing revolutionary watchdogs (the Workers’ Defence Committees and the People’s Defence Committees) at workplaces and in neighbourhoods to deal with malpractices. Special courts to dispense revolutionary justice to “offenders” were also established. There was an agenda to settle old scores, stemming from the feeling that the reversal of “the gains of June 4” had either been supervised by an incompetent PNP government, or motivated by a self-seeking affluent middle-class. The media were seen as having backed that status quo. The abuse of power by the PNDC Government, individual soldiers and revolutionary PDCs/WDCs, as well as the PNDC’s anti media policies are therefore direct spillovers from the PNDC’s ideology.

¹⁶⁶ Daily Graphic vol. 9410, Thursday, 29th January, 1981, pp. 1, 4-5.

¹⁶⁷ Provisional National Defence Council (Establishment) Proclamation, 1981, section 4(1).

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

3.9.1.4 It is striking and telling that copies of newspapers during the first year in office of the PNDC are virtually unavailable. For inexplicable reasons depositories in Ghana, including the national archives, and public libraries do not have issues of state newspapers published in 1982 that would have illuminated better issues relating to the press and the PNDC Government in the early days of the PNDC government. By most accounts, however, the PNDC government had the worst record of human rights abuses, including abuses against the media. The fact that newspapers appear to have been removed from national depositories, is itself suggestive of an agenda by persons unknown to tamper with the record of available information on the first year of the PNDC. This is even more significant, viewed against the background that electronic recordings of that period were lost in the fire that engulfed GBC’s library in the late 1980s.

3.9.1.5 Several background events, some occurring as far back as the late 1979 and early 1980 during the civilian regime of the PNP may help to put the anti-media posture of the PNDC in proper perspective. On 27th November, 1979, Flt Lt Rawlings was retired from the Armed Forces, contrary to his wish to remain in active service. The Daily Graphic reported the event with a photograph of Flt Lt Rawlings smiling, and in the company of President Limann. The announced retirement happened two weeks after a jail break of 12th November, 1979. On 18th April, 1980, George E. Amuah, an AFRC convict, also escaped from prison. On 15th March, 1980, the media gave considerable coverage to a press conference held at the former Ambassador Hotel in Accra by the National Chapter of Amnesty International, during which Maj Boakye-Gyan and Maj Mensah Poku, former members of the AFRC, called for a probe into the regime of the AFRC.

3.9.1.6 In May, 1980, the government dissolved the AFRC Assets Disposal and Recovery Committee over allegations that its members made use of confiscated vehicles. On 4th June, 1980, Flt Lt Rawlings (Rtd) addressed a rally at the Accra Community Centre and expressed indignation about the campaign to undermine the Transitional Provisions of the 1979 Constitution. On 18th July, 1980, Paul Victor Obeng, a close associate of Flt Lt Rawlings (Rtd) was searched for arms. Media reports said the police found at his Tema residence some weapons and ammunition, belonging to him and Flt Lt Rawlings (Rtd). Four days later on 22nd July, 1980, the police followed up and questioned Flt Lt Rawlings (Rtd) at the CID headquarters. All these events were given prominence in national media.

3.9.1.7 In September, 1980, President Limann, at a press conference, made some remarks about an appeal by AFRC convicts for their release. The Free Press called for the impeachment of President Limann for commenting on the Transitional Provisions of the 1979 Constitution. On 23rd October, 1980, the Editor of the Daily Graphic Nana Addo Twum was verbally threatened by Flt Lt Rawlings (Rtd), when Flt Lt Rawlings (Rtd) was distributing to the Daily Graphic a press release in which he denied involvement in subversive activities. According to Flt Lt Rawlings, the Daily Graphic was part of the machinery accusing him of subversive activities. In November, 1980, George Aidoo published a Daily Graphic story of Flt Lt Rawlings (Rtd) threatening the editorial staff of the Graphic. All these events lend credence to the adversarial posture of the PNDC in its early years.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

3.9.2 Media Support

3.9.2.1 The PNDC's policy toward the media aimed at controlling them and using them to further the aims of the revolution. Ato Austin, Totobi Quakyi and Joyce Aryee became the Secretaries of Information in succession under the PNDC. The PNDC did not leave support to chance. They proclaimed a policy of "non neutrality" of the media, and this left journalists with only one of two choices of either supporting, or being against the government.¹⁶⁸

3.9.2.2 Characteristic of all military regimes, the PNDC immediately imposed editorial changes at the state-owned media. At the GBC, Kwame Karikari was appointed as Acting Director-General of GBC; David Anaglate replaced Ewusi Brookman as the Acting Director at the radio section; and Aba Hayford replaced Sam Bannerman as the Director of Television. At the Graphic Corporation, the editor of the Daily Graphic, George Aidoo, was promptly dismissed and Kojo Yankah appointed in his place.¹⁶⁹ The following day, the editor of The Mirror was also dismissed, and replaced by Yaw Boakye Ofori Atta, who was transferred from Daily Graphic. Changes were also made at the New Times Corporation; the publisher and printer of the Ghanaian Times and the Weekly Spectator were both replaced. Several other senior editors and management staff at state media, such as Peregrino Peters, Elizabeth Ohene and George Naykene were asked to proceed on an "indefinite leave."¹⁷⁰ At the Daily Graphic, in particular, there was a mass transfer from Accra, to the Regions of some senior journalists such as Kofi Akumenyi, Ben Mensah, Ken Bediako, and Joe Aggrey. Many of them resigned, resulting in the loss of experienced hands at the Daily Graphic, and this reflected on the quality of work on the paper. According to a senior journalist of the time, newly recruited journalists saw themselves as "riding the crest of the so-called revolution" and had difficulty taking instructions from older hands whom they considered as reactionaries.¹⁷¹

3.9.2.3 As time went on, other journalists from the Regions were brought to the Accra office of the Daily Graphic, among them Elvis Aryeh, who also doubled as a kind of publicist stationed at the Castle, in addition to working at the Daily Graphic. This

¹⁶⁸ Daily Graphic vol. 9696 Tuesday, 5th January, 1982, p.1; editorial, "The Media At Crossroads", p.2.

¹⁶⁹ Daily Graphic vol. 9697 Wednesday, 6th January, 1982, p.1.

¹⁷⁰ Daily Graphic vol. 9698 Thursday, 7th January, 1982, p.1.

¹⁷¹ Memorandum to National Reconciliation Commission.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

situation seriously compromised the independence and integrity of the paper.¹⁷² The PNDC also dismissed three officials who worked with the Press Secretariat at the Castle.

3.9.2.4 Taking a cue from the government's new policies, the Workers' Defence Committee (WDC) of the Graphic Corporation passed a resolution to abolish "Management" and to establish a 15-member Workers' Council to run the corporation.¹⁷³ With these changes and fresh appointments, the government was able to reorient the outlook and mood of the Ghanaian media to suit its particular needs. In fact, on numerous occasions, Flt Lt Rawlings exhorted the Ghanaian media to serve as a vehicle for the revolution, arguing that it was frivolous for them to stay neutral. Flt Lt Rawlings was seen by the outside world not only as censoring the press to minimise political criticism but also as using the Ghanaian media to arouse mass support for the 31st December Revolution.

3.9.2.5 In tune with the mood of the government, editors imposed a censorship on themselves, suppressing stories for a variety of reasons, so as not to incur the displeasure of the new revolutionary government, thereby jeopardising their positions. They justified these practices by arguing that the suppression of such stories would serve the public better than publication of the truth. During this period, rumours were rife that the Castle Information Bureau (CIB), the information and publicity outfit of the PNDC, sometimes sent already-written editorials to the state-owned press houses for publication. Even though government vehemently denied such practices, some journalists have insisted it was not uncommon for outside forces that were associated with the regime to dictate what ought to go into the pages of state-owned newspapers. The fact that the government Press Secretary doubled as editor of the Daily Graphic; that a known sympathiser of the regime was editor of the Ghanaian Times, would suggest a very strong, direct hand of government in state print media.

3.9.2.6 Control was similarly exerted on the GBC. There are reports of direct interference in the day-to-day running of the GBC by the PNDC Chairman himself, direct censorship at the newsroom, as well as oversight control from the Castle and the Ministry of Information. There was evidence before the Commission that the Secretary for Information imposed daily routine supervision, including constant summons and telephone instructions on anything, from programmes to news on labour matters.

3.9.2.7 GBC engaged in several propaganda techniques on behalf of the PNDC, as they had done in the past. These included: "name-calling" (attaching pejorative label to a person in order to discredit him or her), "glittering generality" (associating individuals or governments with 'virtue word' in order to evoke acceptability), "plain folks" (identifying a government with the ideals of the common person) and "testimonial" (having a respected individual or celebrity endorse a concept, or an individual). Other propagandist techniques were "band-wagon" (false claim that a mass of people endorse a concept in order to evoke public support), "card-stacking/disinformation" (selective use of facts or falsehoods to discredit or support a concept or policy, and finally “songs/slogans” (composition of patriotic eulogies for political leaders).

¹⁷² Aryeh was eventually made editor of the Daily Graphic.

¹⁷³ Daily Graphic vol. 9738 Tuesday, 23rd February, 1982, p.1.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

3.9.2.8 On 31st December, 1982, the Daily Graphic underwent a name-change to reflect the fact of the ownership by the people, and the views of the revolutionary leadership. It became known as People’s Daily Graphic, and remained so until 31st December, 1992.

3.9.3 Media Intimidation

3.9.3.1 The media operated under very difficult conditions, very often under the surveillance of officials from the Bureau of National Investigations (BNI), and many journalists and editors were followed around and intimidated. Editors and publishers have given harrowing accounts of how government pressures forced them out of the country’s newspaper business. Such accounts, ranging from intimidation to detention to repressive press laws, can be found in international newspapers, special watch group reports, academic journals, biographies and autobiographies of that period.

3.9.3.2 One journalist recalled that on Sunday, 3rd January, 1982, a few days after the coup, a busload of June 4th Movement activists invaded the editorial office of the Daily Graphic.¹⁷⁴ Led by Kwesi Adu and some armed soldiers, they assembled journalists and singled out some such as Elizabeth Ohene, and George Naykene, and demanded that they leave the premises of the paper and never return. They were warned that should they find them on the premises next time they came back, they would “pounce on the fellow, beat him or her to pulp and throw the person into the sea.” That incident so chilled the journalists in the newsroom that they were totally cowed. At the New Times Corporation, the workers locked out the Managing Director, Kankam Nantwi, and chased out his three female secretaries. They impounded the vehicle of the Managing Director, and invited the government to “throw out all the ‘deadwoods’ and corrupt officers”. Subsequently, the PNDC Secretary for Information sent the Managing Director on leave, in endorsement of the workers’ demonstration.¹⁷⁵

3.9.3.3 Another journalist also testified to instances of human rights abuses against GBC workers.¹⁷⁶ According to him, journalists in the news division of the GBC:

... who insisted on professional editorial principles and practice, have faced varying degrees of intimidation, harassment and outright repression. These have included wrongful dismissal, demotion, denial of promotion, unwarranted and frequent station transfers, and administrative harassment.

3.9.3.4 On 25th July, 1982, Bombardier Mathias Cudjoe and L/Cpl Samuel Amedeka, two soldiers who were prominent in the making of the coup, sent a letter to the GBC newsroom, asking for the resignation of Kojo Yankah of the Daily Graphic, Ato Austin, ¹⁷⁴ Memorandum to the National Reconciliation Commission. The incident was reported in Daily Graphic vol. 9695 Monday, 4th January, 1982, p.1.

¹⁷⁵ Daily Graphic vol. 9748 Saturday, 6th March, 1982, p.3.

¹⁷⁶ Memorandum to the National Reconciliation Commission.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

as Information Secretary and Kwame Karikari as Acting Director General of GBC.¹⁷⁷ This was unsettling for the staff, especially since these soldiers were in charge of security at GBC. Particularly after the setting up of the Castle Information Bureau, under the directorship of Mrs. Valerie Sackey, not only were the content of state-owned media often interfered with, but also journalists were summoned before either the Secretary for Information or even the Head of State, to be berated for some infraction or other.

3.9.3.5 The year 1983 proved a most trying time for state media journalists who were covering the proceedings of the Special Investigations Board (SIB), which was set up to probe the murder of three High Court Judges and a retired Army Officer. Regular reporters assigned by the media houses to cover the proceedings were recalled and replaced by editors of state-owned media by the Minister for Information, Ato Austin. Thus for example, Kwao Lotsu, the Acting General Manager of the GNA, Sam Clegg, then Deputy Editor of the Daily Graphic and David Anaglate, Director of Radio at GBC, found themselves covering the SIB proceedings, during the period Capt Kojo Tsikata was giving his testimony.

3.9.3.6 Following the conviction and subsequent execution of Joachim Amartey Kwei, a member of the PNDC, who was implicated in the murder of the judges, top and senior journalists of state media were summoned to the conference room of the Ministry for Information, where Flt Lt Rawlings played a tape on which a voice said to be Amartey Kwei's, was heard saying certain things before being executed. Evidence before the Commission indicated that the journalists were also subjected to a horror video of a nursing tigress mauling a tourist who went too close to it, and they were then given the message that anyone who took the revolution for granted would be playing a dangerous game. The journalists were told that the Amartey Kwei tape was off record, and so they were not even allowed to take notes. Subsequently, the Daily Graphic published a story based upon the embargoed tape. Following the story, Kojo Yankah was publicly reprimanded by the Secretary for Information, Ms Joyce Aryee, for having disgraced journalism and then removed as editor of the newspaper. He was later assigned as Director of the Ghana Institute of Journalism.

3.9.3.7 By 1985, when virtually only state-owned media were able to operate, the PNDC embarked on a sweeping re-organisational exercise of the country's mass media institutions to ensure that certain loyal persons were placed in key positions. The government explained that the measures were intended to motivate qualitative changes in the productive capacities of the various media organisations. Thus, under the PNDC regime many journalists became very fearful not only about retaining their jobs, but for their personal safety. According to one account:

There were spies in the newsroom; pressmen trained in the Eastern Bloc and at the Ghana Institute of Journalism to spy on their colleagues... Security operatives infiltrated GIJ and the message to young journalists

¹⁷⁷ See Jacob J. Yidana, Who Killed the Judges: Ghana In Retrospect, Bismi Enterprise. Printing and Publishing, Accra, 1988.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

was that they would have difficulty finding jobs if they stepped out of line.

3.9.3.8 Apart from professional abuse, GBC workers were known to have also suffered physical and psychological abuses, sometimes from the near-permanent presence of armed police/military presence on the premises of the GBC, or at the hands of military personnel posted to the GBC. Women staff have reported instances of sexual abuse by soldiers. It was noted that in 1983/84, a medical report to the Director-General indicated extensive cases of hypertension as well as anxiety symptoms or psychiatric disorders, among GBC staff at Broadcasting House.

3.9.3.9 Under the new regime, several private newspaper organisations were either confiscated, banned, or forced out of business. In July, 1982, a group of angry youths and workers attacked the offices of such newspapers as the Echo and The Believer in Accra, claiming that the newspapers were using their pages and editorial columns to subvert the PNDC Government and to cause chaos and anarchy in the country. The attackers smashed office and printing equipment as well as destroyed printing materials.¹⁷⁸ One victim stated that these physical harassments and ordeals had a cowering impact on the private press. He pointed out that after the attack, the management of the Echo published a letter in the 1st August 1982 edition, apologising to the government for “the nature and tone of the opinions expressed in the Echo which amount practically to an incitement of the people against the present administration.” Boafo has noted that the newspaper’s guest-editor was relieved of his post, and from August, 1982, critical editorial comments and coverage of views opposing the 31st December Revolution, and expressions which were not in consonance with official line of thinking, completely disappeared from the newspaper.

3.9.3.10 On 21st June, 1983, the Free Press and the Citadel Daily, which also had been critical of events in the country, were similarly attacked by a group of angry protesters who took over the printing press of Tommark Advertising, publishers of the newspapers, saying they intended to use the printing facilities to print the “people’s news” and to champion the cause of the revolution. The demonstrators also besieged the Supreme Court Building in Accra to show their disapproval of the old judicial system, which they thought benefited the elite. That same year a number of Ghanaians, including three journalists of the Free Press, Tommy Thompson, John Kugblenu and Mike Adjei, were arrested for their alleged involvement in an attempt to derail the 31st December Revolution, and for being agents of the CIA.¹⁷⁹ Even though it was widely believed that the Free Press was closed down because it criticised the government, government officials strenuously denied this.¹⁸⁰

3.9.3.11 Other private publications and press houses such as Unipress, the publishers of the Palaver, the Herald Tribune, and the Chronicle, also suffered a ban. Indeed, one of ¹⁷⁸ Boafo, supra, p.77.

¹⁷⁹ Mike Adjei, DEATH and PAIN RAWLINGS’ GHANA THE INSIDE STORY Black Line Publishing Ltd, London, 1993, chapter 2.

¹⁸⁰ See CPJ Update, May/June 1984.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

the first legislative acts of the PNDC in 1982, was to confiscate that press.¹⁸¹ Unipress newspapers owned by Chris Asher, had, in previous years, been stridently critical of Flt Lt Rawlings. He had even gone to the extent of occasionally organising rallies to condemn him, as well as suggesting that Flt Lt Rawlings be imprisoned for his past actions.

3.9.3.12 On 24th January, 1985, the government ordered the immediate suspension of a private newspaper, Ghanaian Voice for allegedly “distorting news” and “fabricating stories which are completely without foundation.” An official statement issued by the Ministry for Information stated that the government could not allow the newspaper’s mischievous brand of journalism which was prejudicial to the national interest, to continue. Three months later, on 5th March, 1985 the suspension order was lifted.¹⁸² By this time, the tone of the Ghanaian Voice had changed to become one that was supportive of the government.

3.9.3.13 In June, 1985, Flt Lt Rawlings verbally attacked the Catholic Church, at a function to commission new transmitters for the GBC and in December that year his government banned the The Standard, a weekly publication of the Catholic Church, for its critical news stories and comments against the government. The newspaper, among other things, had criticised the PNDC’s human rights record and had called for the democratisation of government in Ghana. The PNDC claimed the newspaper was banned for its “unpatriotic reporting.” A lead article on the front page of the 3rd February, 1985 issue of The Standard, for example, had criticised the government for pursuing traditional economic policies which called for an over reliance on foreign investments and loans and a commitment to IMF. The article also condemned the creation of the Committees for the Defence of the Revolution (CDRs) and the Joint Consultative Committees (JCCs). It complained that these organs undermined the structural basis of workers’ and the people’s power. The Standard summed up general frustration with military regimes by noting in one of its articles, “Military interventions or military bullyism is the one curse which has bedevilled this nation...”¹⁸³

3.9.3.14 An editorial in the same issue of The Standard, added its voice to a communiqué of the GBA on human rights abuses going on in the country.¹⁸⁴ Another editorial of The Standard in June, 1985, among other things, criticised the execution of some persons for embezzlement of funds from a bank, and stated that executions were not the sole answers to economic ills. An issue of the paper even went as far as to carry a news flash that challenged why some political detainees had been released on bail and not Kankam da Costa, the former Central Regional Minister. This news flash was repeated in subsequent issues of the paper.

¹⁸¹ Forfeiture of Assets and Transfer of Shares and Other Proprietary Interests (Unipress Limited) Law, 1982 (PNDCL. 3).

¹⁸² People’s Daily Graphic, vol. 10671 Wednesday, 6th March, 1985 p.6.

¹⁸³ The Standard, 3rd March, 1985.

¹⁸⁴ Ibid.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

3.9.3.15 At the end of its annual conference in Sunyani on 5th July, 1986, the Catholic Bishops' Conference issued a communiqué condemning the ban on The Standard, and describing it as "arbitrary, unjustified and repressive."

3.9.3.16 The PNDC, like other military dictatorships, used legislative restrictions to control free speech and curtail press freedom in the country. On 27th March, 1989, the PNDC passed the Newspaper Licensing Law. This Law revoked the registration of all newspapers and magazines published in the country, and asked all publishers to apply to the Ministry of Information for re-registration. In addition, all importers of foreign magazines were required to obtain authorisation from the Ministry before magazines and publications were cleared from the port of entry. The passing of this Newspaper Licensing Law, made it virtually impossible for newspapers critical of government to survive, and, created further problems for the private press in Ghana. Several editors and publishers were pressured to toe the government's line, or forced out of the country's newspaper business altogether. For example, papers such as the Free Press and The Independent had difficulty obtaining a licence to operate.¹⁸⁵ Others found a third way out: they abandoned main-line journalism and went into the publishing of sports papers and Lotto papers.

3.9.3.17 The era of the PNDC has aptly been referred to as the era of the culture of silence. An article by Ajoa Yeboah-Afari culled from the West African Magazine, and published in the February/ March issue of the Christian Messenger noted that:

The blame for the performance of the Ghanaian press does not totally lie with individual journalist, but mainly with a system that discourages dissent and encourages debilitating self-censorship...

Another article captioned "How free is the press in Africa?" by Dr. George B.N. Ayittey observed:

The rule in Africa is to toe the government's line or engage in self censorship. As a result, creativity is lost, initiative is stifled and writers wither on the vine...Ghana meanwhile exercises no direct censorship and editors are officially free to publish whatever is news worthy. Yet says Baffour Ankomah, former editor of the Pioneer: 'you publish whatever is news worthy when you want to commit suicide.'

3.9.3.18 The plight of journalists and critics such as Tommy Thompson, John Kugblenu, Kabral Blay Amihere, Kweku Baako and Kwesi Pratt, who were all detained for voicing their opposition to government, underscores the regime's hostility and abusive conduct towards the media and journalists. Kugblenu, for example, fell ill in prison and died soon after his release, having never recovered from the brutal treatment meted out to him. George Naykene was tried and imprisoned for publishing a story that was allegedly inaccurate about which of the members of the AFRC received a share of the Chiavelli loan.

¹⁸⁵ see Index on Censorship, June/July 1990.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

3.9.3.19 As it had done in previous regimes, therefore, the state dailies under the PNDC government gave their unflinching and uncritical support to the regime and made little attempt to criticise government's human rights abuses and excesses. This status quo was maintained even after the Rawlings regime lifted restrictions on the press and the ban on political parties, as a prelude to democratic rule.

3.9.4 Media Resistance

3.9.4.1 In the face of intimidation however, there were certain isolated incidents of resistance from state media journalists and many noteworthy acts of resistance from journalists in the private media and on the part of privately-owned newspapers. In April, 1985, a confrontation ensued between the GJA and Mrs. Valerie Sackey of the Castle Information Bureau who had accused Ghanaian journalists of engaging in self-censorship and lacking judgment.¹⁸⁶

3.9.4.2 Far more impressive were the collective and individual acts of editorial resistance displayed by some journalists and the high price that was exacted from them on account of their courage.

3.9.4.3 The Free Press, owned by Tommy Thompson, The Standard and the Christian Messenger stand out as consistent critics of the abuses and wrongdoings occurring during the period of PNDC rule. Some of their critical articles have already been noted. The Christian Messenger, for example, carried a headline to a lead article in its January, 1984, that the "Revolution Cannot Succeed With Violence: Christian Council tells PNDC." The article said the Christian Council of Ghana was concerned about the "violence, hatred, human suffering, fear and flagrant violations of human rights that have characterized the two-year rule of the Provisional National Defence Council PNDC." It must be noted, however, an editorial comment in the same issue praised the manner in which the public tribunals, had dealt with the detractors and saboteurs of the revolution. On another occasion, a front-page lead article in the June 1984 edition of the Christian Messenger also carried a critical headline: "'Human Rights Are Being Violated,' says Christian Council". The article criticised the PNDC regime for its record of disquieting violations of human rights especially the kidnapping and murder of the three High Court Judges and a retired Army Officer.

3.9.5 Media As Intimidators

3.9.5.1 Intimidation by the media at this time was the norm. Editorials of the newspapers, Features as well as GBC Commentary on radio, were used to attack the reputations of private individuals. Scurrilous articles were published by print or broadcast that left reputations completely destroyed. For instance, a call by civil society groups for the government to hand over power to a National Government headed by the Chief Justice, elicited an editorial in the Ghanaian Times, "Judges, Morality And The Revolution", that attacked members of the Bench and Bar. In particular, there was a vicious attack on the ¹⁸⁶ See West Africa Magazine, Vol..... 29th April, 1985.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

integrity of the Mr Justice Akufo-Addo, former Chief Justice and President of Ghana, who had been dead for some years, as well as the sitting Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Fred K. Apaloo. This attack was intended to demonstrate that Chief Justices were not paragons of virtue. It thus appeared that nothing was sacred as long as the Ghanaian Times needed to undermine the basis for a call for a government under the leadership of the Chief Justice.

3.9.5.2 Reportage On The SIB

3.9.5.2.1 From the beginning of January, 1983, until the SIB submitted its report, the Ghanaian Times used its editorials to campaign against the Special Investigations Board (SIB), set up to investigate the murder of the three High Court Judges and a retired Army Officer.

3.9.5.2.2 The Chairman, Mr. Justice Samuel Azu Crabbe, came under a sustained attack in the media – particularly in the Ghanaian Times. In a series of editorials titled; The Drag of Vested Interests published between 4th January, 1983, and 29th March, 1983, the newspaper mounted a vicious campaign against the SIB in general, and its Chairman in particular. It alleged that selected materials from the SIB were circulating widely in the circles of Ghanaians in political exile and that enemies of the revolution in Togo, Britain and Holland were openly saying they would “use the Board by hook or by crook to topple the Government of the PNDC.”¹⁸⁷ For these alleged activities of the émigrés community, the SIB was held blameable.

3.9.5.2.3 The SIB was also accused by the Ghanaian Times of setting up its own Technical Investigative Team, made up of persons who were active in persecuting Flt Lt Rawlings and his associates during the Limann Administration, and that this new team was different from the one announced by the government under the chairmanship of the Secretary for the Interior, Johnny Hansen. This information to the public was incorrect as the investigative team which worked with the SIB, was set up by the Criminal Investigations Department (CID) of the Police, even before the SIB itself began its work. It was also untrue that there were two teams investigating the event, since the one under the chairmanship of Johnny Hansen though announced, was never, in fact, set up.¹⁸⁸ The newspaper further alleged that the in camera proceedings of the SIB were circulating among the ranks of enemies of the revolution abroad and therefore demanded that the proceedings be made available for publication in the local press to enable Ghanaians at home to read them too. The newspaper also expressed the belief “that an inquiry will reveal all the machinations, plots and manoeuvres that have taken place behind the scenes – that is, behind the public image of the Board.”¹⁸⁹ By these allegations, the newspaper sought to cast doubt on the integrity of the members of the SIB whilst fixing on them a political agenda to assist the enemies of the government to unseat it.

¹⁸⁷ Ghanaian Times, vol. 7,784 Friday 4th February, 1983 p.2.

¹⁸⁸ SIB Report, paras 34-38.

¹⁸⁹ Ghanaian Times Editorial of 4th January, 1983, supra.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

3.9.5.2.4 The editorial also repeated an allegation made to the SIB by Capt Tsikata that at a meeting of the PNDC, Sgt Alolga Akata-Pore had complained that an unnamed Judge had told him that attempts were being made to frame him up at the SIB, thus pitching him against his colleagues on the PNDC. Not only did such an allegation suggest that some judges were in league with the SIB, but that through those persons, information to potential witnesses was being leaked, for malicious purposes. Why any member of the Judiciary would have an interest in causing disaffection within the PNDC was not indicated, but it was clearly an attempt to create a perception that the Judiciary was in league with the enemies of the government to cause mischief.

3.9.5.2.5 In another editorial in the series, the newspaper accused the SIB, first of changing its procedures midstream to allow for public confrontations between witnesses, and then of adopting a legally-indefensible procedure when it allowed L/Cpl Amedeka to be present during the time Capt Tsikata appeared before it to cross-examine Amartey Kwei.¹⁹⁰

3.9.5.2.6 In a further editorial in the series, the newspaper appeared to have joined the defence team of Capt Tsikata when it accused the SIB of arbitrariness in the “manner in which the board decided to bring out the allegations against the Special Adviser to the PNDC in public contrary to the procedure which it had followed up to that point”.¹⁹¹ It also raised issues pertaining to some evidence before the SIB that it did not consider credible. The newspaper also alleged that, unknown to some of the members of the SIB, copies of a document purporting to be the Draft Report were circulating among some Western Embassies and that the Political Officer of the Embassy of the United States of America had told some journalists that the report would soon be released. This editorial thus sought, not only to sow disaffection within the membership of the SIB but also to suggest that some members were in league with the Americans to discredit the government.

3.9.5.2.7 Even more disturbing was a reproduction of a handwritten letter purporting to have emanated from one of the suspects in the murder investigations, Johnny Dzandu, in which he alleged that he and others had been offered safe sanctuary if he and others could escape from prison and make it to the American Embassy.¹⁹² This letter was supposed to expose the agenda of “vested interests” in the work of the SIB and consequently why the SIB would become their willing tool. Coming on the same day as an announcement that the report had been presented to the Attorney-General,¹⁹³ it was difficult to resist the inference of mischief-making that underlay the persistent and consistent newspaper attacks.

3.9.5.2.8 The Ghanaian Times also reported the proceedings in a manner calculated to cast doubt on the eventual conclusions of the SIB. These hostile media reports as well as other acts of official harassment, led to an attempt by the Chairman of the SIB to resign

¹⁹⁰ Ghanaian Times, vol. 7,790, Wednesday, 12th January, 1983.

¹⁹¹ Ghanaian Times, vol. 7,855 Tuesday, 29th March, 1983 p.2.

¹⁹² Ibid., p.3.

¹⁹³ Ibid., p.1.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

on 4th January, 1983. Although he was prevailed upon to rescind the decision, it was clear that the Chairman was unhappy about the war waged on him by the national media, then all state-owned.

3.9.5.2.9 The Ghanaian Times published the comments of the Attorney-General on the SIB Report before announcing its intention to publish the Report itself the next day, thereby giving primacy to the comments rather than the Report.¹⁹⁴ It is unclear why the Ghanaian Times saw its duty to the public in the light of an adversarial posture to the SIB.

3.9.5.2.10 The People's Daily Graphic was not left out of this fray, but also played its part in sabotaging the work of the SIB. Soon after the SIB handed in its report in 1983, a Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) scare-mongering effort began in the newspapers. As if on cue, any critic of the government was immediately tagged a "CIA Agent" in the media. The members of the SIB, the leadership of National Union of Ghana Students (NUGS) and the Association of Recognised Professional Bodies (ARPB), as well as some journalists, came under attack for having links with the CIA.¹⁹⁵

3.9.5.3 Intimidation Of Student Leaders

3.9.5.3.1 In 1987, following a major protest by students against the government's policies on financing of tertiary education, the People's Daily Graphic joined the fray on the side of the government. In an editorial on its front page entitled "Dishonest Poison",¹⁹⁶ remarkable for its personalised use of invective against the individual student leaders and their intellectual mentors, an attack was mounted to discredit the leaders. Even family-members of the leaders did not escape the attack. The newspaper, stated its view in the following manner:

This nation is presently having to examine the extent to which the fabric of our revolutionary process has been contaminated by the unprincipled, dishonest poison of little minds which have been turned sour by empty ambition.

We are referring to those who, on our university campuses have been focal points of misinformation and distortion and have spread their own poison to young minds in a bid to destroy that which they cannot control" (emphasis ours).¹⁹⁷

It proceeded to further explain its position on the closure of the university thus:

When the government closed down the University of Ghana and dismissed certain students last week, many people may have thought this was a harsh step.

¹⁹⁴ Ghanaian Times, vol. 7,909 Thursday, 2nd June 1983.

¹⁹⁵ People's Daily Graphic vol. 10104 Friday, 6th May, 1983, p.1.

¹⁹⁶ People's Daily Graphic, vol. 11347 Monday, 11th May, 1987 'Front Page Comment'.

¹⁹⁷ Ibid.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

Others who have been more aware of the activities of the past and present student leaders may, on the other hand, have wondered why the government has been so tolerant for so long, and why it has gone to considerable lengths [sic] to avoid publicizing and holding up for public ridicule and condemnation the carefully orchestrated game which they have been playing. It is about time, we consider, that their tactics were exposed.

3.9.5.3.2 The newspaper editorial also attacked some named persons described as “pseudo-intellectuals, the super leftists, the pretentious talkers who have become campus fixtures over the past decade” behind the students’ action. Accusing them as a “super radical clique” they were blamed for having corrupted many “good cadres by poisoning their minds.” In specific terms, blame for the 1982 misadventure of Sgt Alolga Akata-Pore that led to his departure from the PNDC was laid squarely at the door of these “infantile leftists.” The newspaper also stated that it was these same “super radicals” whose impractical theories had led to confusion in the Interim National Coordinating Council (INCC) of the PDCs/WDCs and that it was their influence that had so misled the PDCs/WDCs that they had to be changed to Committees for the Defence of the Revolution (CDR). The People’s Daily Graphic editorial left one in no doubt, by the way it attacked the “super radicals”, that the 1987 student-government clash was known to be a part of the 1982-84 struggle for ideological supremacy that caused the extreme leftists in the PNDC to attempt to usurp power in 1983, and that also immobilised and destroyed the INCC, which was set up to organise the PDC/WDC. The issue for the media is whether a national resource, such as a state newspaper ought to be used in such a manner.

3.9.5.4 Intimidation of Church Leaders

3.9.5.4.1 Church leaders did not escape the vicious campaigns of the media. In an editorial entitled “For the Pulpit”, the Churches and their leadership came in for condemnation for instigating the coup attempt of 19th June, 1983, by their constant criticism in Pastoral Letters and sermons. In the paper’s own words:

Thus the church leaders carried on until they pushed the nation into the crisis of June 19. Frightened by their realization of what would have happened to themselves if June 19 had succeeded – stupefied by looking back at the dangerous, self-effacing tiger riding game they had been playing – the church leadership are now cleverly trying to give the impression that they were not responsible for instigating the crisis. But history will judge them as fast as they are able to realize that they have misunderstood and misjudged the moral and divine solidity of the foundations of the revolution, the people’s power it has gathered, and the strength of the historic forces that push the process forward.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 33.9.5.5 Participation By Electronic Media

3.9.5.5.1 These editorials were also read on the radio, thus achieving an all-round attack on the “victim of the moment”. Commentaries read on television, also repeated the information that attacked the integrity of the “victim of the moment”.

3.9.5.6 Censorship by Editors

3.9.5.6.1 Editors also practised a policy of refusing to publish certain news items, even as paid advertisements. This was not an exercise of the “gate-keeping function” of the media, but a deliberate policy to deny publicity to views they did not share because they were quick to publish the government’s reaction to such views. In 1987, the GBA was compelled to start its own publication because, as its President complained”

none of the state-owned media is willing to give publicity to our views, not even when we offer to pay for the publication of such views as advertisements. You would no doubt have noticed that although several attacks were mounted upon me personally for the views expressed in my address to you last year [1986], the speech containing the views itself was never published in any of the state-owned mass media although I was assured that the full text of my speech was communicated to the Castle the very day it was delivered.¹⁹⁸

3.9.5.6.2 These examples of the misuse of the media by their editors succeeded in shutting out alternative voices in public discourse and in the governance of the country. The editors of the period became part of the government’s arsenal against its opponents and enabled massive abuses and violations to occur, with only the very brave few, being able to mutter words of protest.

3.10 CONCLUSIONS

3.10.1 By their very nature as usurpers and self-proclaimed rulers, military dictators are able to impose themselves on societies they purport to represent by resorting to coercive measures aimed at ensuring compliance. To some extent this is also true of the period of the First Republic. During the mandate period, various tactics were used to coerce, co-opt and secure journalistic compliance, or to intimidate critics of the government:

1. intimidation of journalists through arrests, imprisonment, dismissals, threats, harassment, and physical abuse;
2. direct interference in media content;
3. compromising and co-optation of journalists – through inducements such as outright bribes and favours; special relationships between some journalists and

¹⁹⁸ Opening Address of the President of GBA, Peter Ala Adjetey, to the Annual Conference of GBA, Accra, on 1st October, 1987, p.2.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

- members of the ruling government; recruitment of informants in the media houses and planting of spies in newsrooms;
- 4. promulgation of legislation that muzzled the press; and
- 5. recruitment of editors of media houses as political activists to fight the cause of government.

3.10.2 The resulting dilemma faced by media practitioners between their professional dictates and irrational military adventurism is captured by an observation made in the Essah Committee Report:

The effect on the morale of those journalists who retain a modicum of the decent standards taught them in training schools or on the job has been catastrophic. They hold their heads low in society because they know what they are part of but cannot change. Nor can they resign easily because they see few other avenues open to them to practise.¹⁹⁹

3.10.3 Media, no doubt, constitute an important battleground in the hegemonic process mostly because they are often one of the key agents which articulate the interests of the dominant class/group in society.²⁰⁰ This perspective on the media is helpful in understanding why and how they played a legitimising role during various regimes that have taken over power through the barrel of the gun in Ghana; how they lent tacit or overt support to human rights abuses that occurred when those regimes were in power; and how the editors abused the control over their pages or airtime, to violate the rights of other citizens.

3.10.4 Just as a discernible pattern of co-optation strategy is manifested in the behaviour of military regimes, journalists themselves also employed strategies to legitimize illegal and brutal regimes, and to undermine public attachment to constitutional governance.

3.10.5 Journalistic strategies of complicity include:

- 1. villification of constitutional governments;
- 2. extolling the courage of the new military regime;
- 3. de-legitimisation and demonisation of the overthrown constitutional government;
- 4. validation of actions of the new regime, including human rights violations and abuses by the new regime, through rationalisation and extolling magnanimity that had been displayed by the regime;
- 5. villification of opponents of the new regime; and
- 6. overbearing criticism of minor infractions by constitutional governments.

3.10.6 As demonstrated in this chapter throughout the pages of newspapers and on the airwaves, government actions and pronouncements were propagated, endorsed, but hardly ever criticised. State media and sometimes private media rationalised policies – good or bad – of the different military regimes, and were in many ways accomplices in the victimisation of people. Even Christian faith-based newspapers, such as The Standard and Christian Messenger, were swept up in the euphoria that greeted some military regimes and often did not condemn human rights abuses perpetrated by them.

¹⁹⁹ Essah Committee, as reported in the Daily Graphic, 11th October, 1978, supra.

²⁰⁰ Leslie Steeves, Gender Violence and the Press: The St. Kizito Story. Ohio University Centre for International Studies, Monographs in International Studies. Africa Series No. 67. 1997.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

3.10.7 During the regime of the NRC and SMC I, when opposition from civil society groups was open, the state-owned media could have played a more professional role by being less sycophantic, or even neutral. However, not much courageous journalism was shown. Thus, whenever Ghanaian journalists have been denounced, the accusation has been mainly that of sycophancy, if not outright cowardice. A typical example was when the Front for the Prevention of Dictatorship (FDP) and the People's Movement for Freedom and Justice (PMFJ) came into being in 1976 and 1978 respectively to fight military dictatorship, the press did not give them space to air their views. Other examples were: in 1977, the GBA and the Ghana Medical Association, both operating under the umbrella of the Association of Recognised Professional Bodies (ARPB), spearheaded a daring confrontation with the military government by ordering their members to go on strike, they were vilified by the media. Asante again observes that military periods were unique times for Ghanaian journalism to have gone into history as either hero or villain, but it chose the latter by “prostituting itself to any government that came to power.”²⁰¹ The press chose to lose its dignity and self-respect in the eyes of civil society, rather than incur the displeasure of the government of the day.

3.10.8 During negotiations for a return to constitutional rule at various times, the media were able to press for the establishment of buffer institutions known variously as the Press Council, the Press Commission or the National Media Commission. This drives home the importance of protecting press freedom. Consequently, civilian governments usually are put on notice that the press intends to vigorously defend its freedom to operate, and have been less inclined to interfere with press freedom, than governments which were not accountable to an electorate. During the mandate period, the media themselves were not as supportive of colleagues in conflict with the government, as they could have been.

3.10.9 Even under military rule, state-owned media like the Daily Graphic were occasionally able to criticise some of the regimes' policies that they considered objectionable, such as the 'Abbot Agreement' under the NLC regime, and Elizabeth Ohene and Ajoa Yeboah Afari's condemnation of the executions in 1979. Through satires, such as “Abonsam Fireman” in The Standard; “Thoughts of a Native Daughter” by Ajoa Yeboah-Afari, “Carl Mutt” by Henry Ofori and “Woes of a Kwatriot” by Kwesi Yankah in The Mirror were some of the columns that voiced dissent by satire, during those critical periods of the nation's history. In the PNDC period, some dissent could also be found during discussions on television programmes such as “Talking Point” or during radio discussion programmes. Most noteworthy of all is the role the private press, in particular The Pioneer, the Free Press, The Standard and the Christian Messenger played throughout most of the period under review, at times risking their newspapers and personal liberties by taking a stand against human rights abuses.

²⁰¹ Ibid. p.69.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

3.10.10 The legacy of Ghana's illiberal, sometimes brutal socio-political history, has been a media with stunted growth; a media in which journalists, particularly of the state-owned media, have developed a culture of self-censorship and where the media in general, still show a tendency to be sycophantic to governments as well as various centres of power. Coercion, co-optation and corruption of the media by various governments, resulted in the fragmentation of the press along political lines, with many journalists pursuing their private agenda not necessarily for the public good, but for the attainment of factional and parochial goals. This legacy is hard to overcome even in a democratic era. Journalists are still likely to undermine each other and are not as sensitised to human rights abuses and violations as they ought to be. Relations remain polarised between journalists of the state-owned media, and those in the privately owned sector. The former views the latter with suspicion as "largely untrained" and lacking appropriate professional skills, and the latter views the former as lacking courage to be critical of government. Hard to change is the habit of settling old and personal scores, and even at the present time, it is not uncommon to hear of people being "fixed" in the media.

3.10.11 Surprisingly, despite the abundance of evidence to suggest that the media themselves are culpable in undermining democracy and human rights, it is often only their acts of valour that are publicly discussed. The media by their actions and inactions have sometimes encouraged would-be coup-makers to initiate action against lawfully established governments. The media, during periods of constitutional rule, often painted such gloomy pictures about the state of the economy, in comparison with the level of ostentatious living being indulged in by members of constitutional governments. These pictures undermined the loyalty of the citizenry to the constitutional government. For instance, there was a hue and cry over 504 Peugeot cars imported for sale to Members of Parliament during the Third Republic, as being over-indulgence in luxury. Yet, upon the overthrow of that government, there was never a whimper about the Nissan Stanzas and Four-wheel Drives that became the official vehicles of political office-holders. Again, during periods of constitutional rule, journalists subjected the government to such criticism that they ended up creating the impression that nothing good would come of a constitutional government because of the slowness of processes. However, without leading the public to appreciate that constitutionalism dictated compliance with requirements of legality, the public soon lost patience with civilian rulers. Yet, non-constitutional governments are the ones, whose lack of compliance with legal requirements, have ended up creating major human rights violations and abuse for the country. All these unappealing images cultivated by the media, have helped to prepare the ground for usurpers to step in, and use the media-led complaints as the justification for the seizure of power.

3.10.12 Despite these criticisms, it is important to acknowledge and validate the subtle and not so subtle ways in which the media resisted government actions and abuse. This overview indicates that some journalists took the route of martyrdom and suffered accordingly, through detention, loss of lives, loss of jobs and seizure of publications or premises. These definite acts of heroism must be commended and celebrated.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 3

3.10.13 Considering that the media are expected to be facilitators of the process of truth and reconciliation, it is important that journalists, collectively and individually examine some of the past actions of the media, in order to better understand the role the media have wittingly or unwittingly played in the country's noble and ignoble history. There is a need to recognise and acknowledge their role in promoting a culture of human rights abuse, as well as their role in helping to nurture a culture of respect for human rights and dignity. This is what would enable the media to spearhead the process of their own institutional re-invention, improve their capacity to champion the cause of human rights, and thereby prevent future governments from using them to legitimize their actions.

3.10.14 The pledge of "Never Again" is one to which current practitioners should commit themselves.

CHAPTER FIVE

PROFESSIONAL BODIES (OTHER THAN LEGAL) AND CIVIL SOCIETY GROUPS

5.0. INTRODUCTION

5.0.1 In reporting on the human rights violations and abuses that occurred during the mandate period, the Commission considered whether or not professional associations and other civil society groups had contributed to the violation or the protection of individual human rights. The scope of this chapter is restricted to the activities of the Association of Recognised Professional Bodies (ARPB), as well as those voluntary and/or political associations that had an impact on the human rights landscape. Consequently, the Commission did not study all political parties, nor all civil society groups ever formed in Ghana. The groups concerned are professional bodies (other than legal) and other civil society groups.

5.0.2 The Commission believes that a study of the activities of these movements during the mandate period would enable the nation appreciate their importance in the socio-political history of Ghana; be provided with the reasons for change or continuity in these movements; understand why the movements underwent a transformation or ceased to exist altogether, and above all assess their impact on the development or otherwise of a culture of respect for human rights.

5.0.3 This chapter is in two sections: reflecting the two sectors that were studied under the title of this chapter. Part I covers the activities of the professional bodies as they were grouped under the rubric of the ARPB, and other civil society groups with influence over, or interest in national politics. Part II covers civil society in general, as well as groups that operated in the political arena during the mandate period. These were also of two types: (1) the groups such as political parties, formed for the purpose of securing political power; and (2) the others which were formed for other purposes although they became involved in the political struggles of the country.

5.0.3.1 The Political Parties and Groupings: United Gold Coast Convention (UGCC); Convention Peoples Party (CPP); The Ghana Congress Party (GCP) National Liberation Movement (NLM); Moslem Association Party (MAP); Northern Peoples Party (NPP); Togoland Congress; Anlo Youth Association; Ga Shifimo Kpee; United Party (UP) National Alliance of Liberals (NAL); Progress Party (PP); Peoples Movement for Freedom and Justice (PMFJ); Third Force; Front For The Prevention of Dictatorship; Togoland Liberation Movement and National Liberation Movement of Western Togoland; Movement on National Affairs (MONAS); Peoples Revolutionary League of Ghana (PRLG); Kwame Nkrumah Revolutionary Guards (KNRG); June Fourth Movement (JFM); People's Revolutionary League Of Ghana (PRLG); 31st December Women's Movement (DWM); Movement for Freedom and Justice (MFJ).

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

5.0.3.2 Legon Society on National Affairs; Trade Associations and Market Women's Associations.

5.0.4 This chapter highlights the mistreatment or otherwise of the groups, their leaders and other prominent activists, either because the patron-governments had been overthrown, or because their activities were a challenge to the sitting government. It also discusses the nature of the relationship between members and leadership of these movements and the governments they worked under, during the mandate period.

PART I5.1 Introduction

5.1.1 Apart from a few of these bodies such as the Ghana Medical Association (GMA), which was formed in 1958; Ghana Institute of Architects (GIA) formed in 1962; the Ghana Institution of Engineers (GhIE), formed in 1968; and Ghana Institution of Surveyors (GIS) in 1969, most professional associations were formed in the 1970s and later. From the available evidence, professional associations were formed for the primary purpose of promoting the interest of members of their respective professions.

5.1.2 In furtherance of the professional interest, most of them sought and obtained state recognition through appropriate legislation, which in some cases regulated their professional activities, including the maintenance of professional standards and ethics. It was upon the formation of the ARPB in the early 1970s, coupled with the speed and manner in which economic conditions deteriorated in the country, that changed the nature of interaction between the professionals, as organized under their associations, and the government.

5.2 6TH MARCH, 1957–23RD FEBRUARY, 1966:
CONVENTION PEOPLE'S PARTY (CPP) GOVERNMENT

5.2.1 Professional associations were not directly concerned with politics as a civic responsibility requiring them to show keen interest in the political fortunes of the country; and thereby availing themselves of the opportunity to make critical interventions when necessary. For them, any activity associated with political parties, politics and even governance, were not to be mixed with one's professional practice. Therefore, involvement in politics as a civic duty was not considered appropriate for a body of professionals. With the exception of the Ghana Bar Association (GBA), the professional associations that existed prior to the 1970s did not feature much in national affairs. For instance, the most momentous piece of legislation of the time, the Preventive Detention Act (PDA), 1958, that empowered the government to detain without trial, any person suspected of acts that might endanger the security of the state, did not elicit any public response from the registered professional bodies at the time, except for the GBA. Doctors and engineers did not see their vocations as entitling them to meddle in issues of governance, even though other groups outside the opposition parties, such as the churches, criticized the legislation.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

5.3 24TH FEBRUARY, 1966 – 30TH SEPTEMBER, 1969: NATIONAL LIBERATION COUNCIL (NLC)

5.3.1 The Formation Of Legon Society On National Affairs (LSNA)

5.3.1.1 A few days after the 24th February coup d'état, a group of seventeen Ghanaian Senior Members of the University of Ghana were called together to form an organization that would mount guard over our patriotic interests and help preserve the coup. On 1st March, 1966, this body organised themselves in a spirit described above, into the Legon Committee on National Reconstruction. The committee's aims and objectives were simple: to help demolish the Nkrumah myth and to assist the NLC in every way possible, within the competence of the committee both as a body and as individuals:

A few weeks ago, one of the four sub-committees of the LCNR, the political, proposed to the main body the establishment of the committee's own organ, as one of the most practical ways – as well as an urgent one of giving assistance to the NLC. The Legon Observer is the result. We aim, through its columns, first, to give loyal support to the NLC.¹

5.3.1.2 This group, re-named the Legon Society on National Affairs (LSNA), played a human rights advocacy role through its mouthpiece, The Legon Observer. This was its official platform, although very often, it was individual members of the LSNA who protested human rights abuses by the NLC. During this period the official body of university teachers, University Teachers Association of Ghana (UTAG), confined itself to its trade union functions.

5.3.1.3 The LSNA made a “vow” to the nation that it was resolved “to give loyal support to the NLC” in its drive to consolidate freedom and democracy in the country. Though the LSNA was critical of certain NLC policies, its avowed opposition to the CPP compromised its ability to protest at the serious infringements on the human rights of CPP officials and activists.

5.3.1.4 Public opinion, even of enlightened persons, demanded punishment for the corrupt and “bad CPP officials”. These views supported the detention of CPP activists and functionaries, because such detentions were deemed to be necessary for the protection of society. There was also support for the confiscation of their properties allegedly acquired by corrupt means, in order that they would not be able to buy their way back into political power. The LSNA, as other intellectuals in the country, mounted open opposition to the NLC's policy of not seeking vengeance, and pacifying the nation in order to heal its wounds and unite it. Indeed, the former President of the GBA Victor Owusu, was the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice, when these laws were passed.²

¹ Legon Observer, 8th July, 1966 Vol. 1 No. 1 Editorial Comments.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

5.4 1ST OCTOBER, 1969 – 12TH JANUARY, 1972:
THE SECOND REPUBLIC – THE PROGRESS PARTY
(PP) GOVERNMENT

5.4.1 There was no appreciable change in the activities of professional associations, although more and more groups began to initiate moves to organize themselves. Politics and issues of governance were still seen as the preserve of those within the professional classes, who had political ambitions.

13TH JANUARY, 1972 – 3RD JUNE, 1979:
THE NATIONAL REDEMPTION COUNCIL (NRC)/
SUPREME MILITARY COUNCIL (SMC) I & II

5.5 The NRC and SMC I

5.5.1 Involvement Of Professional Associations In Politics

5.5.1.1 The direct involvement of professional bodies in Ghanaian politics can be dated to the 1970s. In the 1970s, their engagement in politics became pronounced when the economy of the country began to show signs of collapse, as a result of misrule and mismanagement of the military rulers. The return of the country to constitutional or civilian rule became the dominant objective, obscuring any other concerns. Before this time, involvement in Ghanaian politics had been the province of individuals (professional or not) and private (non-professional) associations, who would comment on human rights issues selectively and periodically. In general the professional groups, whose members constituted the cream of Ghanaian society, showed the same attribute as the general population, in terms of the lack of appreciation of the intrinsic value of human rights, and of the need for commitment to defend and promote the enjoyment of human rights for all persons.

² The Legon Observer Vol. 1, No. 9, p.9, 1966.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 55.5.2 The Birth Of The Association Of Recognised Professional Bodies (ARPB)

5.5.2.1 In 1977, SMC I regime, under Gen Acheampong, came under strong pressure to return the country to constitutional rule, and Gen Acheampong then introduced the concept of Union Government (Unigov) to which the professional associations took great exception. The Unigov idea was one in which the country was to be governed by representatives of the civilian population, the military and police. The professional associations came together to form the ARPB. The ARPB was formally incorporated on 20th May, 1981, although it had existed and functioned in the political arena since its birth in 1977.³

5.5.3 ARPB Begins To Oppose The Government

5.5.3.1 In June, 1977, the ARPB called on the government to resign and hand over power to an interim body to usher the country to a civilian rule, otherwise its members would resort to a strike action.⁴ On 4th July, 1977, the Ghanaian Times in its editorial comment appealed to the GMA to rescind its decision to embark on a strike action:

we had had the occasion to invite the ordinary people of this country to fight against and not to pander to the dangerous attempts by the Professionals to return this country to a class struggle. We now appeal to the Ghana Medical Association not to allow other professionals to hide behind the value of the doctor's service to the society to introduce politics into medical practice.⁵

5.5.3.2 Despite the hostility to the ARPB inherent in the appeal, members of the ARPB embarked on a nationwide withdrawal of services in protest against an inefficient and corrupt government on Monday, 6th July, 1977. The strikers called on the SMC Government to step down and until it did so, their services were to remain withdrawn.⁶ On the first day of the strike action, Gen Acheampong repealed the Professional Bodies Registration Decree, 1973 (NRCD 143), froze their assets and bank accounts under Professional Bodies Registration (Repeal) Decree, 1977 (SMCD 103), and put out a public statement to that effect.⁷

5.5.3.3 Prior to the repeal of the Professional Bodies Decree, there was a call by the Ashanti Youth Association (AYA) to repeal the Decree in June 1977. The AYA called on the SMC I Government to widen the scope of the Decree banning political parties to make it unlawful for one professional body to consult, discuss or act in concert with any other professional body, on political issues. In a statement signed by M T K Manu, the

³ Sam Okudzeto, "The role of association of Recognised Professional Bodies in the political Struggles of Ghana" in Civil Society in Ghana F.K. Drah and Mike Oquaye (eds) FES, Accra, 1996, p.109.

⁴ Mike Oquaye, Politics in Ghana, (1972-1979) Tornado Publications, Accra, 1980, pp. 58-59.

⁵ Ghanaian Times Vol. 6088 Monday, 4th July, 1977, p.4.

⁶ Oquaye, supra, p.58.

⁷ Ghanaian Times Vol. 6711 Saturday, 7th July, 1979, p.1.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

secretary, he contended that such measures had become necessary in view of the fact that some professional bodies had demonstrated clearly that they intended to rally together with a view to creating “monolithic professional bodies association” for the purpose of embarking on “general civil disobedience and other notorious political activities.”⁸ The newspapers published reports of comments from the general public that were critical of the ARPB,⁹ as well as events that showed that some professionals had not joined in the strike.¹⁰

5.5.4 The ARPB And The Unigov Campaign

5.5.4.1 On 12th October, 1977, the ARPB organized a seminar on the concept of Unigov at the Accra Community Centre. This seminar was broken up by government-sponsored thugs and many persons were assaulted. A Decree, the Union Government (Civil Proceedings) Decree, 1977 (SMCD 139), was passed to protect those who were involved in the assaults. It also prohibited any court from entertaining any civil action against anyone preaching or propagating the concept of Unigov, or for participating in, or attending any debate or discussion of the proposal of Unigov.¹¹

5.5.4.2 In 1977, in response to the campaign by the ARPB alleging corruption on the part of the SMC, the Prohibition of Rumours Decree, 1977 (SMCD 92) was passed. This decree provided as follows:

Any person who by print, writing, painting or word of mouth, publishes or reproduces any statement, rumour or report which is false or likely to disturb the public peace or to cause disaffection against the SMC or NRC among the public or among members of the Armed Forces or of the Police Force shall be guilty of an offence.

5.5.4.3 On 5th March, 1977, the Ghanaian Times wrote a scathing editorial, entitled: “The Korle-Bu Professors”, castigating the doctors for believing that they could hold the nation to ransom.¹² On 9th July, 1977, armed soldiers actually stormed the Korle Bu Teaching Hospital in a convoy of trucks and forcibly ejected doctors and their families from their homes. Many were physically assaulted. Some sustained serious injuries while soldiers burnt cars and other properties belonging to the doctors.¹³ Other members of the ARPB were harassed, trailed by security forces, and their telephones tapped.

5.5.4.4 Accusing some of the professionals of being agents of foreign powers, the government declared:

⁸ Ghanaian Times Vol. 6705 Friday, 30th June, 1977, p.1.

⁹ Ghanaian Times Vol. 6092 Friday, 8th July, 1977, p.1.

¹⁰ Daily Graphic Vol. 8310 Friday, 8th July, 1977, p. 1

¹¹ SMCD 139, section 2.

¹² Ghanaian Times Vol. 5,987 Saturday, 5th March, 1977 p.4.

¹³ Oquaye, supra, p. 59.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

... the Supreme Military Council is aware of the activities of some nation wreckers who are doing everything to bring confusion and unrest to our beloved nation. Within the past few weeks, some serious political developments have taken place in our country, which ought to be fully made known to you. The government became aware of the fact that some foreign powers, for reasons known to it, had funnelled huge sums of money to some irresponsible, over-ambitious, disgruntled and unpatriotic power seeking Ghanaians to be used to overthrow the government of the Supreme Military Council and to replace it with its lackeys. In pursuance of this objective, these same persons, using the masks of some lecturers of the nation's universities arrogated to themselves the role of the mouthpiece of the people to dictate terms to the government in the most arrogant and peremptory language.¹⁴

5.5.4.5 The ARPB later rescinded its decision and resumed work after receiving assurances from the government, giving a guarantee of protection from victimization and molestation of any of the members of the association who might have withheld their services.¹⁵ Many of the most eminent public figures had teamed up with the ARPB, the People's Movement for Freedom and Justice (PMFJ) and the Front for the Prevention of Dictatorship in order to oppose the Unigov proposal, which would have given the military a permanent stake in government.

5.5.4.6 In the crucial referendum of 30th March, 1978, Gen Acheampong was effectively humiliated, although the results that were announced after the Electoral Commissioner had been chased out of his office, indicated that Unigov had received massive endorsement by the citizenry. The results that were announced, did not reflect the real state of affairs, and agitations continued until, four months later, he was ousted in a "palace coup".

5.6 SMC II

5.6.1 On 5th July, 1978, Gen Acheampong was removed from power by his own colleagues on the SMC. He was replaced by General Frederick William Kwasi Akuffo as Chairman of SMC II and Head of State.¹⁶ The SMC II detained Gen Acheampong and also stripped him of his military rank and entitlements, declaring that he had now become a mere "Mr" Acheampong. He was also confined to his hometown, Trabuom in the Ashanti Region.¹⁷

5.6.2 The announcement declaring Gen Acheampong as "Mr. Acheampong", created strong resentment within civil society. Many people felt that it reflected the lack of

¹⁴ Ghanaian Times Vol. 6,094 Monday, 11th July, 1977, p.1.

¹⁵ Daily Graphic Vol. 8319 Tuesday, 19th July, 1977, p.1.

¹⁶ Ibid. p.29.

¹⁷ Armed Forces (Miscellaneous Provisions) Decree, 1979, (SMCD 235).

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

respect that the military had for civilians, such that a penalty and a mark of disgrace, was to be a “mere ‘Mr.’”

5.6.3 The ARPB issued a statement in which it urged the government to prefer formal charges against “Mr” Acheampong and that he should be put before court without delay. The association also complained, that merely stripping “Mr.” Acheampong of the honours he bestowed on himself, and depriving him of his pension rights, were not enough punishment for the gross mismanagement that had taken place under his leadership.¹⁸ The government did nothing about this, until it was itself overthrown on 4th June, 1979.

5.6.4 The ARPB renewed its appeal to the government to restore the Professional Bodies Registration Decree, which was repealed by “Mr”. Acheampong. Consequently, the assets and bank accounts of the ARPB were defrozen by the Professional Bodies Registration (Repeal) (Amendment) Decree, 1978 (SMCD 171).

5.6.5 After some initial procrastination, the SMC set in motion a programme for a full return to civilian rule when the ARPB protested it’s concept of Transitional Interim National Government, arguing that it was just like the Unigov concept that they had opposed. Eventually, the government gave in, and constituted a Constituent Assembly, to draft a new Constitution for Ghana.

5.7 4TH JUNE, 1979 – 23RD SEPTEMBER, 1979:
ARMED FORCES REVOLUTIONARY COUNCIL (AFRC)

5.7.1 By 4th June, 1979, when the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council (AFRC) assumed power, a transitional programme to restore constitutional rule in Ghana by the middle of July, 1979 had already been agreed by various political party leaders and the SMC II government, and even, elections had been slated for 18th June, 1979. From the standpoint of the political elite therefore, the coming of the AFRC was an unnecessary interruption of a process that they had already started. Despite initial fears, a sigh of relief greeted the decision of the AFRC to honour the transitional arrangements already put in place.¹⁹

5.7.2 The Ghanaian establishment was virtually oblivious to the tectonic shift that was taking place beneath its feet. One reason was that the successful campaign to drive the military from office actually appeared to vindicate ARPB leadership position. The ARPB did not, as a body, lend its support to the AFRC, although some of the members of the individual professional bodies participated actively in the governance activities of the AFRC.

5.7.3 During the June-September, 1979, period when the AFRC was in power, a number of atrocities were committed. In a meeting that took place between the political party

¹⁸ Daily Graphic Vol. 8880 Wednesday, 11th May, 1979.

¹⁹ Ibid. p.29.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

leaders and the AFRC, the politicians secured from the AFRC a firm promise to continue with the transitional programme to democratic rule, but nothing was said about the atrocities then taking place.

5.7.4 However, some political leaders, some workers groups and university students pledged open support, justified the “house-cleaning” exercise by the AFRC government, and called for its extension to other social sectors. However, there is no indication that the ARPB took a stand on any of the issues at stake.

5.7.5 In fact, what seemed to have happened during the AFRC period, was that the regime had support mostly from students and some members of the general public. From all over the country, individuals issued statements appealing to the general public to support the Revolution.²⁰ Many members of the ARPB were under fire, as they tended to be in senior positions in the public service. Indeed, there was a spate of resignations which caused the AFRC to issue a warning, and to insist that all letters of resignation were to be channelled through the AFRC for approval to be given, before the resignation would be accepted.²¹

5.7.6 When the AFRC government executed the former Heads of State and a number of Senior Military Officers, the Daily Graphic called it “a significant milestone”. There were no public protests from the ARPB, or any of its constituent bodies, except a statement issued by a group that called itself ‘Society for National Welfare’. The Society had issued a statement urging justice, fair play and the rule of law in the government’s effort to punish corrupt persons. In that statement, the Society also urged the AFRC not to abort the democratic process.

5.7.7 The AFRC government seized the assets of a large number of people; private houses were demolished, and special military tribunals were set up to try people alleged to have committed various crimes. Public opinion regarded the actions of the AFRC, as retribution for bad and corrupt leadership, and so tacitly supported them.

5.7.8 The short AFRC tenure graphically illustrated this lack of human rights culture that would move individuals and groups to struggle in defence of human rights. In other instances, the elites led the entire country to condone human rights violations. The leaders of the registered political parties, then engaged in electoral contest for power, were seemingly concerned more about securing the transition programme so that power would be transferred to one of them. The widespread human rights abuses that were committed by the AFRC appeared not to be their primary concern, until after the first round of the elections, when the top five political parties issued a joint statement expressing concern about the executions. They also urged the government to uphold the rule of law in all cases where a crime was alleged to have been committed.

²⁰ Ghanaian Times, Vol. 6,706 Monday, Monday, 2nd July, 1979, p.3; Ghanaian Times, vol. 6,722 Friday, July 20, 1979, p.3.

²¹ Ghanaian Times, Vol. 6,716 Friday, 13th July, 1979, p.1 “AFRC to approve resignations.”

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

5.8 24TH SEPTEMBER, 1979 – 30TH DECEMBER, 1981
THE THIRD REPUBLIC PEOPLE'S NATIONAL PARTY
GOVERNMENT (PNP)

5.8.1 The ARPB was functioning at a low level on account of the fact that the 1969 Constitution appeared to provide answers to the problems of governance to which it had committed itself. However, it continued to give advice on technical matters to the government. For instance, in 1980, it sent a memo to the Vice-President on the food situation in the country, and recommended action to be taken to address same.

5.8.2 On 20th May, ARPB Executive Council met with the Council of State on the security situation in the country. At this meeting, it advised the government on its handling of the Transitional Provisions as well as its attitude to the former Chairman of AFRC, advising the government to stop the “attempts to give Flt Lt Rawlings a bad name and allow him to settle down quietly into civilian life”.²²

5.9 31ST DECEMBER, 1981 – 6TH JANUARY, 1993:
THE PROVISIONAL NATIONAL DEFENCE COUNCIL (PNDC)

5.9.1 The Provisional National Defence Council (PNDC) came to power on 31st December, 1981, after a coup d'état led by Flt Lt Jerry John Rawlings, who became Chairman of PNDC and Head of State. There were human rights abuses during the PNDC era. People were assaulted, brutalized, maimed, imprisoned, abducted and killed. Others had their properties seized, vandalized or confiscated. In fact the PNDC period was a period of lawlessness, when the rule of law had completely broken down in the Ghanaian society, and citizens' rights, freedom and liberties were thus taken away from them.

5.9.2 Under the PNDC, when some of the most heinous crimes were committed against fellow Ghanaians, the lack of a culture of human rights struggle, became very obvious. In 1982, resistance to the PNDC by the GBA²³ and ARPB was driven as much by the demand for the restoration of constitutional rule, as by a commitment to defend human rights, although the struggle was not couched in human rights language. Gross human rights violations took place, and were rampant. The murder of the three High Court Judges and a retired Army Officer, shook the rank and file of Ghanaian citizenry, as much because of the gruesome nature of the killings, as by the fact that Ghanaians deeply valued the sanctity of life. However, those horrendous acts could not ignite a movement to stop further human rights abuses, even though the protests and condemnations by the ARPB, religious and other civic bodies were loud and consistent.

²² Okudzeto, supra, p.113.

²³ Daily Graphic vol. 9709 Monday, 18th January, 1982, pp.4 & 5.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 55.9.3 ARPB's Struggles With The PNDC

5.9.3.1 The ARPB began its struggle against the PNDC soon after it came to power. It began to issue statements, critical of various government policies which it felt to be against the interests of the Ghanaian public. On 21st July, 1982, the ARPB held a press conference at which it read a resolution which, among other things, urged the PNDC to hand over power to a "Government of National Unity", while making arrangements to return the country to a constitutionally elected government by 1983. On the state of the nation, the ARPB criticized the PNDC Government on the murder of the three High Court Judges and a retired Army Officer in the following words:

We wish to express our revulsion at the callous manner in which three eminent High Court Judges and a retired Army Officer were abducted from their houses on the night of the 30th of June 1982 and murdered and the attempt made to obliterate the evidence by burning their bodies.
24

Since the 31st December 1981, the law of the jungle has taken over a once decent and law abiding people of Ghana. Law and order has broken down and there is callous disregard for Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms.²⁵

5.9.3.2 The ARPB also called for a lifting of the curfew, because it had become a licence for killings and robbery, and condemned the destruction of the Army hierarchical structure by the introduction of the Defence Committee System into the Ghana Armed Forces. This criticism was promptly denounced by the Daily Graphic, which lambasted the ARPB for those views.²⁶ The June Fourth Movement (JFM) also condemned the statement as "waging a campaign against the democratic gains that the other ranks have acquired through the PDCs". The JFM also described the statement as "insulting to the workers of Ghana who are striving to organise themselves to effectively participate in the decision-making process of the country."²⁷ This statement elicited a comment from a columnist, perhaps conscious of the futility of press statements to restrain a military government:

This brings to mind a similar demand made of another military regime some five years ago by the same body. In 1977, the military regime "did not mind" the professionals, and there is little chance that the PNDC will hand over just because the professionals say so.²⁸

²⁴ Daily Graphic Vol.9846 Saturday, 3rd July, 1982, p.1.

²⁵ ARPB statement, 20th July, 1982.

²⁶ Daily Graphic Vol. 9862 Thursday 22nd July, 1982 editorial.

²⁷ Daily Graphic vol. 9864 Saturday 24th July, 1982, p.1.

²⁸ The Legon Observer, August 1982, No.8 Vol. XIV Editorial Comment.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

5.9.3.3 In reaction to the demand by the GBA and ARPB for the PNDC Government to hand over power in September, 1983, two groups, the People's Revolutionary League of Ghana (PRLG) and the JFM issued statements condemning them. The statements were signed by T. Kodjo Ababio Nubuor, the General Secretary of PRLG and Kwasi Adu, President of JFM, accusing the two associations and The Echo newspaper, of making efforts to negate the good intentions of the people's revolution. The statements further described the call to hand over power as:

one more attempt at the philosophy of restorationism, and they fell neatly into the framework of a well-thought out master plan, and an attempt to overthrow the revolution and restore the anti-people old order.

The most casual study of the demands made by the professionals point out clearly that they are underscored by a philosophy of restoration. We remember that well before the murder of the judges and the retired major, the professionals wrote various articles in "The Echo" claiming that certain revolutionary forces had planned to commit assassination of some people without ever indicating any concrete evidence to support their claims.²⁹

5.9.3.4 Following this statement, there was a workers' demonstration against the ARPB, whose members were described by the demonstrators as "Selfish yet vocal minority who call themselves men of distinction."³⁰ Other demonstrations in other parts of the country followed,³¹ and soon thereafter, The Echo was suspended from publication. A prominent engineer who was a PNDC appointee, Professor Mawusi Dake, criticized the ARPB in a feature article in the Ghanaian Times accusing the professionals of wanting to further their own political ambitions by calling for a government of National Unity

The professional bodies are asking for a government of national unity, which will take four years to restore the old institutions. But the same intelligent and supposedly efficient people, who obviously will man the government of national unity, have expected the PNDC, which is committed to building new structures in the face of an inherited bankrupt economy to have realized its goal in fifteen months.³²

Meanwhile, Dake's own GhiE colleagues in the ARPB had been arrested and detained by the new government.

5.9.3.5 On 28th July, 1982, the ARPB held a funeral service at the Supreme Court Buildings, at which the Chief Justice was present. The ARPB issued a list of over 200 names of individuals who had, by that date, been killed by soldiers, and for which acts no

²⁹ The Voice, No. 14, 26th July, 1982.

³⁰ Daily Graphic, 24th July, 1982, p.9.

³¹ Ibid.

³² Ghanaian Times, Vol 7,883 Tuesday, 3rd May, 1983, p.4.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

prosecution had taken place, or was likely to take place. The effort was a monumental one, as it covered killings that had occurred, region by region. This effort has left a historical record of those who were killed in those heady days of lawlessness.

5.9.3.6 In April, 1983, the PNDC amended its 1981 Proclamation with PNDC Law 42. The ARPB responded to its provisions by pointing out that it “contains essential elements and highlights the point of arbitrariness and dictatorship which have never seen a parallel in the 26-year history of Ghana”.³³ The statement further questioned why Ghanaians had not been consulted about the law and queried: “Were Ghanaians not promised that this was the time for them to be involved in the decision-making process. Is this the substitute for the Parliament which the people of Ghana elected their representatives to?”³⁴ These activities did not please the government and it was not long before reprisals followed.

5.9.3.7 On 12th May, 1983, the ARPB issued a statement alleging that one of the Food and Drugs Aid parcels sent from Libya to Ghana, and sent to Cape Coast from the Tema Central Medical Stores, was found to contain arms, and not drugs. This allegation was promptly denied by a doctor, Dr. Edwin O. Quaynor, Central Regional Medical Officer of Health. Dr. Quaynor stated categorically “there is no truth in the allegation by the Professional Bodies Association”.³⁵

5.9.3.8 Following a National Union of Ghana Students (NUGS) Congress which he had addressed in May, 1983, the President of ARPB, Sam Okudzeto, was put before the Citizens’ Vetting Committee (CVC) to be vetted. He was subsequently ridiculed in the press for responses he gave when being interrogated by that body. Later he was arrested on 26th June, 1983, and detained without charges, from that date, to May, 1984. In July, 1985, he was arrested again and detained for about six months, and then released without charge.

5.9.3.9 In May, 1983, an attempt was made to arrest and prosecute JAN Atttoh and HDL Yartey, the Vice President and the Honorary Secretary of the ARPB respectively, for sedition. They were alleged to have printed ARPB material that was seditious, ie material that tended to put the government into disrepute, or that was critical of the PNDC’s policies. Fearing for his life, Atttoh fled Ghana in May, 1983, and never returned. The two men were prosecuted and convicted. Yartey, who had been in detention until the day the judgment was delivered, was discharged. However, Atttoh, who had been tried in Absentia, was sentenced to ten month’s imprisonment. The tribunal ordered that his mini-bus, on which some of the material had been found, be confiscated to the State, for use by the National Mobilisation Committee.³⁶

³³ Okudzeto, supra, p.122.

³⁴ Okudzeto, supra, p124.

³⁵ Ghanaian Times Vol. 7,903 Thursday, 26th May, 1983, pp. 1&3.

³⁶ Ghanaian Times Vol. 8,049 Saturday, 12th November, 1983, p1.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 55.9.4 The ARPB Loses Steam

5.9.4.1 The ill-treatment of the leaders of the ARPB had an impact on the life of the ARPB. In January, 1990, its President, Sam Okudzeto, made a report to his mother-association, the GBA, that the ARPB existed only in name. He blamed the ARPB's moribund state on the suffering that the leaders had undergone at the hands of the government.³⁷ Although the GBA encouraged him to try and revive the meetings of the ARPB, it had lost the will to fight and had been intimidated into silence.

5.9.4.2 In 1991, the ARPB was able to revive itself and held a symposium on the Draft 1992 Constitution. However, it was clear that the ARPB had lost steam.³⁸ It did not feature on the list of bodies allocated places on the Consultative Assembly, although each of its constituent groups had representation.

5.9.5 Conclusion

5.9.5.1 The professionals have asserted a level of influence over national affairs which is generally far more profound than their limited numbers might suggest. The clout of the GBA and the ARPB has always been much greater than that of the business associations. In that sense, the professionals have functioned as the political vanguard of the dominant class in Ghana.³⁹

PART IICIVIL SOCIETY GROUPS*5.10 RE-INDEPENDENCE*5.10.1 Introduction

5.10.1.1 The formation of civil society groups with political orientation began to be a feature of the national landscape as a result of the introduction of the modern political economy, the subsequent urbanization and post World War II social developments that released young people from traditional control without putting in place any measure to include them in the new political arrangements.

³⁷ Minutes of GBA Annual Conference held in Kumasi, 9th –11th January, 1990.

³⁸ Okudzeto, supra, p.128.

³⁹ Paul Nugent, Big men, Small Boys and Politics in Ghana, Power, Ideology and the Burden of History, 1982-1994 Asempa Publishers, Christian Council of Ghana, Accra, 1996, p.9.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5THE FORMATION OF POLITICAL PARTIES IN THE GOLD COAST*5.10.2 The United Gold Coast Convention (UGCC)

5.10.2.1 At the end of the Second World War, the war veterans who had gone to fight in other lands for freedom, on behalf of the colonial power returned home with ideas about the quality of life that they ought to have. However, they were not trained in civil life with appropriate income-earning and marketable skills to achieve that standard, nor were they given any financial package to ease their transition into civil life. Their return, coupled with the rapid urbanisation and expansion of social amenities and infrastructure in the urban areas, produced a class of politically-conscious young men and women who began to appreciate the anti-colonial posture of the intelligentsia. It was in the midst of all this social ferment that the first mass party, the United Gold Coast Convention (UGCC), was formed at Saltpond in August, 1947, under the chairmanship and financial sponsorship of George Grant, better known as Paa Grant, a wealthy Nzima businessman.

5.10.2.2 With its slogan of “Self-Government within the shortest possible time”, the UGCC quickly attracted a large following, particularly among the educated persons, chiefs and farmers. The speed with which the party gained numbers made its proper organization somewhat difficult for the leaders who were mostly professionals and therefore only part-time politicians. A member of the UGCC Executive, Ernest Ako Adjei, proposed the employment of an energetic young man he had met in England, Kwame Nkrumah, as General Secretary, to do the work of political mobilization full time. Paa Grant paid the £100 passage for the return of Nkrumah to the Gold Coast.

5.10.2.3 The young Nkrumah arrived at the end of 1947, and soon got down to work, establishing structures through which the party could function effectively. In February, 1948, barely two months after he took office, Kwame Nkrumah and five leaders of the UGCC – Edward Akufo-Addo, Emmanuel Obetsebi Lampitey, William Ofori-Atta, Ernest Ako Adjei and Dr. Joseph Boakye Danquah - were arrested because they were blamed for the rioting and looting that occurred as a result of the killing of some ex-servicemen who had gone on a protest march.

5.10.2.4 The ex-servicemen had gone on the march to protest against high prices of goods and general hardship in their living conditions, exacerbated by the failure of the British Government to honour promises made to them on their demobilization benefits. Whilst on the march, they decided to change course and march to the Osu Christiansborg Castle, the seat of government, instead of remaining on the route for which official approval had previously been obtained. At the Osu crossroads, they were fired on when they would not heed an order to halt. Three ex-servicemen, Sergeant Adjetey, Corporal Attipoe and Private Odartey Lampitey, were killed and many others injured. This incident sparked off riots and looting of European and Syrian/Lebanese owned stores in many of the towns in the Gold Coast. By the end of the day, the death toll had reached 29 with 237 injured and property damage to the tune of £2,000,000 had occurred.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

5.10.2.5 Although it was not the UGCC that had organized the march, political responsibility for what had happened was laid at the door of the party. The six leaders of the UGCC, who were arrested, were later affectionately named “The Big Six”. They became national heroes overnight as news of their arrest spread around the country. They were sent to prisons across the country.

5.10.2.6 After the release of the ‘Big Six’, Nkrumah set out to organize in earnest. He linked up with political youth groups and formed the Committee on Youth Organisation (CYO). He also established a newspaper, the Evening News, which he used to great advantage. Conflict over strategy soon developed between him and other leaders of the UGCC. They began to feel that Nkrumah was promoting himself and his personal agenda at the expense of the party that employed him, and he began to feel that they were not ready for his style of organization.

5.10.2.7 A break became inevitable, and on 12th June, 1949, Nkrumah broke away from the UGCC and formed the Convention People’s Party (CPP) at Saltpond, taking with him most of the young people he had so successfully mobilised. The period thereafter heralded the nurturing of bad blood between the leaders of the two parties. Attacks in the Evening News on the leaders of the UGCC, especially on Dr. Danquah, as well as a whispering campaign of bribe-taking and allegations of other dubious activities made against the leadership of the UGCC, did a lot to embitter the relationships.

5.10.3 The Convention People’s Party (CPP)

5.10.3.1 The CPP under the leadership of Nkrumah grew from strength to strength. During the time when he ran the UGCC, he discovered some very energetic and good organizers who left with him to form the new party. Komla Agbeli Gbedemah and Kojo Botsio were two of these young men who came to be recognized for their organizational abilities as they recruited many other young people to join the fold. Indeed the CPP was virtually a youth movement at its inception, and it had the energy and strategy to match.

5.10.3.2 It adopted a slogan of “Self-Government Now” (“S.G. Now”) and this resonated with the youth. In January, 1950, the CPP organized an action of civil disobedience termed ‘Positive Action’, in order to compel the colonial government to grant immediate self-government. Although planned as a non-violent action, it eventually turned violent and the leadership of the CPP was arrested and imprisoned.

5.10.3.3 Whilst in prison, Nkrumah’s party won a majority of seats in the 1951 elections held under the 1951 Constitution (Coussey Constitution). Being the leader of the party that had won majority seats in the elections, he was released from prison to head the government under the title of “Leader of Government Business”. The CPP successfully maintained its leadership in the politics of the country, winning majority votes in both the

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

1954 and 1956 Elections. Ghana attained Independence on 6th March, 1957, under its leadership, after a bitter struggle with some of its opponents.

5.10.3.4 The part played by the youth in the independence movement and the place of the youth in the formation of the CPP, put the youth at the centre of the socio-political arrangements of the country after Independence.⁴⁰ A start was made to organize the youth soon after Independence with the formation of the CPP Youth League which was made up of young people with affiliation to the CPP.⁴¹ It functioned as the youth wing of the CPP and it had the same aims as the mother-party. However, it was formally abolished in 1959.

5.10.4 The National Liberation Movement (NLM)

5.10.4.1 In 1954, the National Liberation Movement (NLM) was born. The immediate cause was the agitation for higher prices for cocoa and so it gained popularity in the Ashanti, Akyem Abuakwa and the Krobo areas which had large tracts of cocoa farms. The remote cause was however, the marginalisation of the traditional ruling classes as a result of the rise of the CPP. The chiefs were also suspicious of the centralist policies of the CPP and feared marginalisation in the governance of the country.

5.10.4.2 The NLM's Ashanti base and the obvious support it enjoyed from the Asantehene as well as the fact that its chairman was the senior linguist of the Asantehene, Baffour Osei Akoto, brought to the fore the fear of domination that had existed between Ashanti and the Colony since Ashanti became a part of the Gold Coast. The NLM's proposal of a federal form of government was a reaction to the highly centralized form of government that they feared would lead to dictatorship from Accra.

5.10.4.3 The pitched battles that were fought in Kumasi between the NLM and the CPP and the political murders that were committed by both sides, showed the ugly face of partisan politics. The NLM with its Action Troopers and the CPP with its Action Groupers so terrorised residents of Kumasi that the political scars created took a long time to disappear, and led to many people being unwilling to be associated with partisan politics.

5.10.4.4 By the time the NLM problem was resolved by the amendment of the proposed Independence Constitution to provide for Regional Assemblies, a lot of harm had been done. There was a great deal of bad blood between adherents of the NLM and the CPP especially because many of the NLM leaders were also dissident CPP members; and thus there were personal animosities between the leadership of the two parties.

⁴⁰ Mike Oquaye, "Youth, Politics and Society in Ghana" in Civil Society in Ghana F.K. Drah and M. Oquaye (eds) Accra, Friedrich Ebert Foundation, 1996; chapter 10, pp.163-167.

⁴¹ M.N. Tetteh, The Ghana Young Pioneer Movement, Ghana Publicity Ltd, Accra, 1999, p.53.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 55.10.5 The Ghana Congress Party (GCP)

5.10.5.1 The remnants of the UGCC suffered other crises as most of its youth had broken away to join the CPP. In 1951, it merged with another party, the National Democratic Party, formed under the leadership of Nii Amaah Ollennu, a barrister. The merged parties came to be known as the Ghana Congress Party with Saki Scheck as the General Secretary.

5.10.5.2 The Ghana Congress Party was bedevilled by a leadership struggle between Nii Amaah Ollennu and Dr. Danquah. Ollennu eventually left politics and joined the Bench. The next stage of the leadership struggle took place between Dr. Kofi Abrefa Busia and Emmanuel Obetsebi-Lamphey. Eventually the party broke up into two when Obetsebi-Lamphey broke away and formed the Nationalist Party. This break greatly reduced the strength of the GCP. In the 1954 Elections Dr. Busia was the only one to win a seat on the ticket of the GCP. The Nationalist Party achieved little prominence as it never really attracted a following outside Accra.

5.10.6 Togoland Congress Party (TC)

5.10.6.1 This party was formed under the leadership of SG Antor, Kojo Ayeke and Emmanuel Dumoga, to champion the cause of separation of the British Trust Territory of Togoland, from the Gold Coast. The basis of this desire for separation lay in the arrangements that were made for German Colonies under the Treaty of Versailles, following the defeat of Germany in the First World War. The German colony of Togoland was split into two and administered under the Mandate of the League of Nations, the immediate predecessor body to the United Nations Organisation, by Britain and France.

5.10.6.2 The 'Mandated Territories' (as they came to be known) contained ethnic groups, such as the Ewe, Dagomba, Konkomba, etc., that had been split up by the administrative arrangements of the two powers. When the United Nations Organisation was born, the mandate was changed into a Trust, and therefore the territories became 'Trust Territories' and continued to be administered as separate entities. In the mean time, the Ewe people of the southern part of the Trust Territories had, since the end of the Second World War, been campaigning for the two Trust Territories of Britain and France respectively, to merge as one independent country, in order to re-unite the Ewe peoples who had been split up by the Mandate of the League of Nations. They feared that the split would become permanent, should separate arrangements be made for the two Trust Territories.

5.10.6.3 Agitation picked up pace. Leading to the birth of the Togoland Congress when, in 1954, the British Government informed the United Nations that it would not be in a position to administer the Trust Territory after the Gold Coast gained Independence. Ewe nationalists in Trans-Volta Togoland (TVT) as the British Trust Territory was known, believed that their chances of re-unification with their kith and kin would be destroyed, if the British Trust Territory integrated with the Gold Coast upon its Independence, as the French were likely to annex the French-speaking part, leading to a permanent split of the ethnic group. This gave them a reason for wanting the TVT to remain separate, until a decision could be taken about the French portion.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

5.10.6.4 The issue was made somewhat more complicated by the fact that the peoples of the northern TVT, preferred integration with the Gold Coast so that they could be with their kith and kin as the split had had tragic results for some of the kingdoms. For instance, the capital of the kingdom of Dagbon, Yendi, was located in the Trust Territory whilst a part of it was in the British-held Northern Territories. Other groups also had blood ties with some of the peoples of the Northern Territories and also felt a closer affinity to them than to those of the northern French Trust Territory.⁴² These considerations led the General Assembly of the United Nations to decide in December, 1955, that the peoples of the Trust Territory should be given a chance in a plebiscite, to determine if they wished to be integrated with the Gold Coast upon its attainment of Independence, or to remain separate until a decision was taken in respect of the French-administered part.

5.10.6.5 The plebiscite was held on 9th May, 1956, amidst very vigorous campaigning by the Togoland Congress (or Ablorde group), for a “No to integration” vote. Consequently, the plebiscite registered a 55% majority vote in favour of separation in the South. However, the Northern TVT voted massively in favour of integration, and so the ‘Yes to integration’ vote, won by an overall majority of 58%, counting the two parts of the TVT as one whole.

5.10.6.6 The separatists were dissatisfied with the result of the plebiscite and believed that the decision in favour of integration had been procured by manipulation by the CPP. They protested against the vote, and in 1957, there were many disturbances. Efforts to suppress these agitations led to repression of those political activists who refused to accept integration. Many were arrested and detained, and others fled into exile in Togo, and remained there until 1966.

5.10.6.7 Following the passage of the Avoidance of Discrimination Act, 1957 (CA 38), the Togoland Congress joined up with the other opposition groups to become the United Party.

5.10.7 Northern Peoples’ Party (NPP)

5.10.7.1 Chief Simon Diedong Dombo and other educated persons from the Northern Territories formed the Northern Peoples’ Party (NPP) in 1954.⁴³ This Party quickly attracted a large following from among the traditional rulers, and it won twelve seats in the 1954 elections. Considering that it had not been formed for very long before the ⁴² Mumuni Bawumia (Alhaji), A Life In The Political History Of Ghana Memoirs of Alhaji Mumuni Bawumia Ghana Universities Press, Accra, 2004, pp.51-63.

⁴³ Bawumia, supra, pp.44-49.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

elections took place, it was a remarkable feat. It also showed how attached the people of the North were to their traditional leaders.

5.10.8 The Anlo Youth Organisation

5.10.8.1 The Anlo Youth Organisation was formed by Modesto Apaloo. It operated in the south-eastern corner of the Gold Coast where the Anlo ethnic group is located. It also won one seat in the 1954 elections.

5.10.9 The Moslem Association Party (MAP)

5.10.9.1 The Moslem Association Party was an Islam-based party. Its leadership and followers were drawn largely from the immigrant group of Muslims from neighbouring West African countries. The ranks of its leadership were decimated by a policy of deportations soon after Independence. What was left of it joined up with other political parties and groups to form the United Party.

5.10.10 Ga Shifimo Kpee (Ga Standfast Association)⁴⁴

5.10.10.1 This movement was born as a result of the pressures that urbanization put on lands in Accra in the post- World War II years. These years also coincided with the period when lands were being compulsorily acquired for national projects and when private developers were also acquiring large tracts of land from the Ga Chiefs for private purposes. This created a feeling that Gas were being pushed off their ancestral lands by strangers.

5.10.10.2 To make matters worse for the landowners, the Government of the CPP decided to develop housing units to re-house those who had been displaced by an earthquake that devastated Accra in 1939. The estate houses that were built at various localities such as Kaneshie, Mamprobi and Abossey Okai, also required the acquisition of wide expanses of Ga ancestral lands. Since the goal was a noble one, there were few complaints about the land acquisitions until it was time to allocate the houses that had been built. The houses were allotted in a manner that caused great disaffection against the government, as it was widely believed that non-Ga members of the ruling party (CPP) had benefitted to the exclusion of those in whose name the project had been developed. It thus formally began its life with a major grievance against the CPP.

5.10.10.3 The Ga Shifimo Kpee was formally inaugurated as “Ga-Dangbe Shifimo Kpee” on 7th July, 1957, under the chairmanship of Nii Amunakwa II, Otublohum Mantse, after a sheep had been slaughtered and customary libation had been poured by the Nai Wulomo, the Chief Priest of the Ga State, to ask for the blessings of the ancestors. With the slogan “Ga shikpon Gamei anoni” (Ga lands are for Ga people) “Gboi mli ngbe wo”

⁴⁴ Much of the information on this association was culled from SS Quarcoopome. The Impact of Urbanization on the socio-political history of the Ga People of Accra: 1877-1957. Unpublished Ph D Thesis, Institute of African Studies, University of Ghana, Legon, June, 1993, pp.192-199.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

(Foreigners are killing us), the association was supposed to represent all Ga-Dangbe people and to fight for the protection of their common heritage. However, it ended up being a largely Ga-Mashie based association and was thus a protest movement against the creation of landlessness among the youth of Ga-Mashie. Membership was drawn from the teaching, artisanal and clerical class, with a large number of unemployed youth known as “Tokyo Joes” after the hairstyle the young men affected. Despite its avowed aim of being a non-political group, the presence of senior United Party (UP) members in the persons of Dr. JB Danquah and SG Antor at the inaugural ceremony spoke volumes about its political leanings.

5.10.10.4 The movement soon alienated the chiefs by attacking them for selling off Ga lands to foreigners. The violence, vandalism and hooliganism of the “Tokyo Joes” alienated most people and the formation of a rival organization affiliated to the CPP, Ga Ekome Feemo Kpee (Ga Unity Party) helped to undermine the support base of the Shifimo Kpee.

5.10.10.5 The Ga Shifimo Kpee was finally dealt a mortal blow when it was banned, and it had to affiliate with the United Party, in 1958.

5.10 6TH MARCH, 1957 – 23RD FEBRUARY, 1966:
THE FIRST REPUBLIC - CPP GOVERNMENT

5.11.1 THE UNITED PARTY (UP)

5.11.1.1 Soon after Independence was attained in 1957, Parliament passed the Avoidance of Discrimination Act, 1957 (C.A. 38), to prohibit the formation or existence of any political grouping that was based on ethnic, religious, or other sectional interest, with effect from 31st December, 1957. According to the long title of the Act, it was:

An Act to prohibit organizations using or engaging in tribal, regional, racial and religious propaganda to the detriment of any community, or securing the election of persons on account of their tribal, regional or religious affiliations and for other purpose connected therewith.

5.11.1.2 The formulation of the provisions immediately made it illegal to form a political party with the words “Ga”, “Anlo”, “Northern people”, “Togoland” and “Moslem”, since they referred to “tribe”, “region” or “religion”. The political groups that had participated in the elections and even won seats, found that their continued existence had been rendered illegal. Consequently, in early 1958, at risk of being declared “prohibited organizations” and wound up under the supervision of the High Court,⁴⁵ they all came together as one Party, the UP, since they were all in opposition to the CPP. These groups, in the main, were: the National Liberation Movement (NLM); Moslem Association Party

⁴⁵ Avoidance of Discrimination Act, 1957 (C.A. 38), section 9.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

(MAP); Northern Peoples' Party (NPP); Togoland Congress; Anlo Youth Association; and Ga Shifimo Kpee.

5.11.1.3 In November, 1958, 43 of its members, including the entire executive of the Accra branch of the party, still described as members of "Ga Shifimo Kpee", were arrested, and detained under the Preventive Detention Act of 1958. Some of the persons detained were very young people under 20 years of age and indeed, two of them, Yartey Annan and Oti Ankrah, were only 14 years and 16 years old respectively.⁴⁶ They remained in detention until the 1966 overthrow of the CPP Government when they were released. In Ashanti, Volta Region and in Northern Region, similar arrests of activists were made. Some were even arrested and detained for booing at the President whilst he was travelling through their village. By 1962, the leader of the party, Dr. Kofi Abrefa Busia, had fled into exile, and of the 32 Members of Parliament of the UP, three were in detention, one had gone into exile, and twelve had crossed over to the Government-side, leaving only sixteen to sit on the Opposition Bench.⁴⁷

5.11.1.4 There were a number of bomb outrages in Accra, as well as assassination attempts on President, Nkrumah. These outrages caused great suffering, as there were many casualties. The UP was blamed for these outrages, and every such incident resulted in arrests of UP activists. There was a lot of political violence between the two main Parties – the UP and the CPP.

5.11.1.5 The UP, as a legal entity, ceased to exist when the country was declared a One-Party State, in 1964. In reality, the activists had suffered such harassment that the party was all but dead, since its activists were either in detention or in exile in the neighbouring countries.

5.11.2 The CPP

5.11.2.1 On 2nd April, 1960, at the Party Headquarters, Dr. Nkrumah, the Prime Minister, declared:

The Convention People's Party is a powerful force, more powerful indeed, than anything that has yet appeared in the history of Ghana. It is the uniting force that guides and pilots the nation and is the nerve centre of the positive operation in the struggle for Africa irredentism. Its supremacy cannot be challenged. The Convention People's Party is Ghana, and Ghana is the Convention People's Party.⁴⁸

⁴⁶ See: Parliamentary Debates, Official Reports, 15th June, 1971, p.7.

⁴⁷ Albert Adu Boahen, Ghana: Evolution and Change in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries, Sankofa Educational Publishers, Accra, 2000 p.195.

⁴⁸ Kwame Nkrumah, I SPEAK OF FREEDOM Panaf Books Ltd, London, 1971, p.209.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

With these views on the CPP, it did not take long for every attempt possible to be made, to actualize the statement that “Convention People’s Party is Ghana, and Ghana is the Convention People’s Party”.

5.11.2.2 On 1st May, 1961, President Nkrumah informed the nation that he had taken over the post of General Secretary of the party, at the request of the Central Committee of the Party. He further announced that as from that date, Regional Commissioners would become the Regional Secretaries of the Party in their respective regions, whilst re-designating the Regional Secretaries of the Trades Union Congress (TUC), United Ghana Farmers’ Council (UGFC), National Co-operative Council (NCC), National Council of Ghana Women (NCGW), as Assistant Regional Secretaries.⁴⁹ Thus, the named organizations became merged into the party structure, and this was, in turn, merged with the government’s structure.

5.11.2.3 In that speech, he outlined the duties and rights of members of the CPP as follows:

Duties of members:

1. To protect the solidarity and unity of the party at all times.
2. To pay dues regularly
3. To protect the good name of the party under all circumstances and to correct wrong views held against the party.
4. To carry out party decisions and directives to the best of his ability and to ensure that any disregard of such decisions or directives is promptly reported to the appropriate party authority.
5. To be the first to obey the laws of the country passed by the government.
6. To defend any action of the party or the government.
7. To try to understand all party government matters and to explain the same to the people.
8. To set an example by working hard, efficiently and honestly and by showing a keen sense of responsibility and duty.
9. To pursue a study of the principles of African Socialism and to endeavour to be guided in action by these [principles].
10. To guard jealously any secrets of the party and to maintain constant vigilance in this respect.
11. To criticize and accept criticism in good faith and spirit and to make frequent self-examination for correction, remembering that all criticism and correction should be made not to destroy, but to build.
12. To be faithful and loyal to the party always and to eschew all qualities of opportunism, nepotism, ostentation, vanity and self-seeking.
13. To remember that the party is supreme and to do everything within his power to uphold this supremacy.

The rights of members are as follows:

1. To take part in all party activities.

⁴⁹ Kwame Nkrumah, Selected Speeches Vol 2 compiled by Samuel Obeng. Afram Publications (Ghana) limited, Accra, 1979, p.85.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

2. To attend meetings and freely express views on all matters in discussion, and to vote according to conviction.
3. To elect and be elected to party bodies.
4. To be present in person whenever decisions are taken regarding his activities or conduct.
5. To address any question or statement to any party body including the national executive and the central committee.
6. To appeal against any adverse decision against him from his branch party upwards to the central committee and to the leader of the party in person.
7. To appeal as a last resort to the national delegates' conference.⁵⁰

5.11.3 Ghana As One-Party State

5.11.3.1 In 1964, Ghana officially became a one-party state with the CPP as the national party.⁵¹ This was after a referendum had been held on 24th, 28th and 31st January 1964, to ask the people to approve that step and give the President power to dismiss judges. Following the results of the referendum, variously stated as 99.9 percent⁵² and 92.81 percent.⁵³ The transformation of Ghana into a one-party state was born out of the feeling that the elimination of official opposition would make governance easier as there would be little opposition to government policies. It was also born out of the philosophy, then current, that the need to achieve economic and social rights for people in developing countries necessitated the deferment of enjoyment of civil and political rights. This philosophy, which had a respectable following, particularly in countries inclined towards socialism, suggested that the enjoyment of civil and political rights would be meaningful only if people were well-fed and had shelter as well as other basic necessities of life. Opposition could thus not be tolerated. According to Madam Regina Asamany, Deputy Minister for Labour and Social Welfare, the “No” voters during the referendum, were going to be “mercilessly crushed” because they “thought their display of selfishness and organized assassination could deter us from our progressive course have rather taught us a lesson to reinforce our determination and solidarity...”⁵⁴

5.11.3.2 In reality, Ghana became a de facto one-party state by the end of 1961, when the opposition bench had been virtually emptied by carpet-crossing in Parliament and detentions under the PDA. By the time the one-party status became a legal fact after the referendum of January, 1964, the reality had long been achieved. The farmers, workers and students who, within their unions could have mounted a viable opposition, had all been co-opted to become members of the CPP as the various unions became wings of the CPP. When President Nkrumah charged the students to ensure the “Cippipification” of Ghana because “Ghana was the CPP and the CPP was Ghana”, it was clear that it was

⁵⁰ Kwame Nkrumah, Selected Speeches Vol 2, supra, p.88.

⁵¹ Constitution (Amendment) Act, 1964 (Act 224), amending Articles of the 1960 Constitution.

⁵² Figure announced as the result of the election.

⁵³ Figure given in Parliament. See Parliamentary Debates Official Report, First Series Vol.34. 15th October, 1963-21st February, 1964. Debate of 18th February, 1964, p.1125.

⁵⁴ Ibid., p.1128.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

government policy to exclude all other political organizations or philosophies opposed to that of the CPP.

5.11.3.3 To make the point of the complete “cippipifiction” of Ghana, the colours of the Ghana Flag: red, gold, green, with the Black Star in the middle of the gold band of the Ghana Flag, was changed to the CPP colours, of red, white (with the Black Star in the white band), and green.⁵⁵

5.11.3.4 The perversion of the electoral process, as evidenced by malpractices at many public elections, effectively closed the avenue for ensuring that the government could be compelled to change its style of governance.

5.11.3.5 The declaration of Dr. Nkrumah as the Life President of Ghana effectively put paid to any notions of competitive politics in the country. In 1965, when a date for elections was set down, no elections took place because all parliamentary candidates had been returned unopposed in the general elections. This was because there was a requirement that only candidates approved by the Central Committee would be permitted to compete for office. Since only one candidate per constituency was approved to stand in the elections by the Central Committee of the Party anyway, it was not surprising that all of them were returned unopposed.

5.11.3.6 This mode of giving prior approval to candidates before they could present themselves at elections undermined the notion of parliamentarians being representatives freely chosen by their constituencies to represent them. Effectively, the Members of Parliament were lame ducks from the start, since they were not going to be able to offer any criticism of government or government policy, even if the interests of the constituents demanded it. All these events created their own brand of problems and difficulties that left indelible scars on the national psyche.

5.11.3.7 Corruption began to rear its head early in the government, and President Nkrumah sought to deal with it, even if ineffectively. In May, 1961, he also announced the setting up of a commission to investigate ministers. Consequently on 28th September, 1961, he announced that he had asked six of his ministers to resign:

Komla Agbeli Gbedemah – Health
Ashford E Inkumsah – Interior
Kojo Botsio - Agriculture
Krobo Edusei – Transport
Emmanuel K Bensah – Works and Housing
C. de Graft Dickson – Defence

⁵⁵ Constitution (Amendment) Act, 1964 (Act 224), amending Article 7 of the 1960 Constitution.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

5.11.3.8 They were also ordered to surrender properties in excess of two houses with a combined value of £ 20, 000, two cars and plots of land valued at more than £500.⁵⁶ Gbedemah and Botsio were subsequently expelled from the party on 23rd January 1962.⁵⁷

5.11.3.9 President Nkrumah wrote a fresh will dated 18th February, 1966, in which he willed all his property to the CPP. He also instructed his executors thus:

On my demise, [they shall] cause my body to be embalmed and preserved. But if this cannot be done for any reason then I prefer my body to be cremated and the ashes scattered throughout the African continent, in rivers and streams, deserts, savannas, etc and a few ashes placed in an urn and deposited at a place to be decided upon later. I am not godless but I request on my demise that no religious ceremony shall be performed at my funeral.⁵⁸

It is uncertain whether this will was changed, but it is clear that “Kwame Nkrumah of Africa” (as he described himself in the will), did not envisage a burial in his hometown. Indeed, his wishes for the disposal of his mortal remains as expressed in the 1966 will, were merely a repeat of like provisions in a previous will, dated 26th June, 1965.

5.11 24TH FEBRUARY, 1966 – 30TH SEPTEMBER, 1969: NATIONAL LIBERATION COUNCIL (NLC)

5.12.1 CPP

5.12.1.1 The End Of CPP

5.12.1.1.1 The NLC seized power on 24th February, 1966. Early on the morning of that day, an announcement on Radio Ghana was made by Col Emmanuel Kwasi Kotoka, leader of the troops that seized power, as follows:

Fellow citizens of Ghana, I have come to inform you that the Military in co-operation with the Ghana Police have taken over the government of Ghana today. The myth surrounding Nkrumah has been broken. Parliament is dissolved and Kwame Nkrumah is dismissed from office. All ministers are also dismissed; the Convention People’s Party is disbanded with effect from now. It will be illegal for any person to belong to it...⁵⁹

⁵⁶ Thomas A. Howell and Jeffrey P. Rajasooria, GHANA & NKRUMAH, Facts on File Inc, NY NY, 1972, p. 72.

⁵⁷ Ibid, p.82.

⁵⁸ T. Peter Omari, KWAME NKRUMAH The Anatomy of an African Dictatorship Sankofa Educational Publishers Ltd., Accra, 2000, p.219.

⁵⁹ A.A. Afrifa (Col), The Ghana Coup 24th February, 1966 FRANK CASS Ltd., London, 1966, pp. 34-35.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

5.12.1.1.2 The NLC, which was formed under the chairmanship of newly-promoted Lieutenant-General Joseph A. Ankrah,⁶⁰ began to dismantle the monolith that the CPP had become. One of the first legislative acts of the NLC was to formalize the dismissal of the President from office, the dismissal of all parliamentarians and the dissolution of Parliament, the banning of the CPP, the only political party at the time, and prohibition of membership of it. The original colours of the Ghana Flag of red, gold, green, with the Black Star in the middle of the gold band of the Ghana Flag, were restored.⁶¹

5.12.1.1.3 The NLC passed the Protective Custody Decree, 1966 (NLCD 2), under which all ministers, parliamentarians, regional commissioners, district commissioners and senior functionaries of the CPP were detained without trial. The CPP Party and Ghana Young Pioneers' paraphernalia were banned. Books and publications, related to Dr. Nkrumah and scientific socialism, as well as communist propaganda materials were burnt. Public exhibition of effigies of Dr. Nkrumah, as well as symbols of the CPP, were also prohibited. Persons found with these objects were molested by the security forces.

5.12.1.1.4 The rule of the NLC also saw the freezing of assets and bank accounts of CPP functionaries and CPP-related organisations.⁶² The Auditor-General was mandated to audit the accounts of the CPP and CPP-related organisations,⁶³ and following his findings, the assets were confiscated to the state.⁶⁴ Commissions of Enquiry were established to probe the assets of CPP functionaries and assets found to have been acquired by unlawful means were confiscated.

5.12.1.1.5 The NLC banned most of the leading members of the defunct CPP from contesting the 1969 elections.⁶⁵ They were also banned from holding public office for ten years. This was applied to members of the CPP after their release from prison.

5.12.1.1.6 Another act of injustice was the enactment of legislation that imposed legal bans on CPP officials and activists for a period of ten years, without a possibility of anyone challenging the ban in a court of law. The NLC enacted two laws, Elections and Public Offices Disqualification Decree, 1968 (NLCD 223), and Elections and Public Offices Disqualification Decree, 1969 (NLCD 332), which disqualified 152 functionaries of the CPP from holding any public office, and disenfranchised them from exercising their democratic rights to choose their representatives.

5.12.1.1.7 This law, which deprived some Ghanaians of the fundamental right of citizenship, was considered justified by the elite of this country, hence its inclusion, even ⁶⁰ His rank at the time of his dismissal was Major-General and he was promoted by the leadership- of the coup in order for him to take charge as the highest ranking officer of the Ghana Armed Forces.

⁶¹ National Liberation Council Proclamation, as amended by National Liberation Council Decree, 1966 (NLCD 1).

⁶² National Liberation Council (Assets and Bank Accounts) Decree 1966 (NLCD 7).

⁶³ National Liberation Council (Auditor-General's functions Decree, 1966 (NLCD 12).

⁶⁴ National Liberation Council Forfeiture of Assets Decree, 1966 (NLCD 23).

⁶⁵ F.K. Buah, A History of Ghana of Ghana, 1998, (London and Oxford: Macmillan Education Ltd.), p 198.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

in the 1969 Constitution as article 71. Under this article, Komla Gbedemah was disqualified from taking his seat in the 1969 Parliament, after he had won an election.⁶⁶

5.12.1.1.8 The NLC enacted the Armed Forces Act, 1962 (Amendment) Decree, 1967 (NLCD 131), to enable it to set up military tribunals to try people, including the military, police personnel, and even civilians, charged with sedition. Conviction carried a maximum sentence of 25 years, and there was no right of appeal. It is a principle of the rule of law that a law must not be made retrospective, yet the NLC D 131 of 1967, which took retrospective effect from 24th February, 1966, came into force without public protest as to the unfairness of changing the legal entitlements of citizens, with retrospective effect.

5.12.1.1.9 On 1st October 1966, the NLC enacted the National Liberation Council (Prohibition of Rumours) Decree, 1966 (NLCD 92), and the Criminal Procedure Code (Amendment) Decree, 1966 (NLCD 93). The first dealt with rumour-mongering as a subversive act, while the second gave the police unlimited powers of detention. The oppressive nature of NLCD 93 compelled the Legon Society on National Affairs to describe it as “preventive detention without the Preventive Detention Act of 1958”. There were no other public protests and the law remained on the statute books for two years, before being repealed.

5.12.1.1.10 The NLC enacted the Kwame Nkrumah Property Decree, 1967 (NLCD 154), the Kwame Nkrumah Property Amendment Decree, 1967 (NLCD 180), and the Public Property (Protection) and Corrupt Practices (Prevention) Act, 1962 (Amendment) Decree, 1967 (NLCD 130), and made them retroactive, with from 1962, to cover acts committed in the A.G. Leventis case. By these laws the NLC Government seized the properties of CPP functionaries who were implicated in that case. In the case of Dr. Nkrumah, the properties seized by the State, included those of his wife, children and mother.⁶⁷ There was no public protest against such seizure of property.

5.12.2.1 Reaction Of Civil Society

5.12.2.1.1 The CPP Government was generally regarded as dictatorial and corrupt. Therefore when the NLC overthrew it, Ghanaian opinion welcomed the NLC as liberators;⁶⁸ their assumption of power, though unconstitutional, was seen as marking the birth of freedom and democracy.⁶⁹ These feelings were not lessened by statements from former leading members of the banned CPP, as to the undemocratic nature of leadership within the party. Indeed, a former Minister, Kwaku Boateng, stated that they had all been reduced to ‘gaping sychophants’ in the affairs of governance. With such national ⁶⁶ Daily Graphic Vol. 5957 Tuesday, 25th November, 1969, p.1.

⁶⁷ NLCD 154 and NLCD 180.

⁶⁸ Daily Graphic, Vol. 4798, Wednesday, 3rd March, 1966, p.9.

⁶⁹ Even Accra Market Women, who were regarded as arch supporters of the CPP Government, denounced the government and pledged unflinching support to the NLC.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

disposition, public opinion welcomed the policies and actions of that government as a sense of liberation and freedom swept all across the country.⁷⁰

5.12.2.1.2 Many serious abuses were perpetrated against members of the CPP by both the government and society at large. CPP activists were arrested and detained. Officials of the party and its wings such as the Ghana Young Pioneer movement (GYP), suffered brutalities at the hands of their neighbours. Their properties were stolen or vandalized and their books and other movement-paraphernalia were set ablaze. The military, the police and prison officials subjected CPP functionaries to a great deal of ill-treatment. Only a few voices were raised in protest. For instance, whilst P.A.V. Ansah, a member of the LSNA, wrote in the Legon Observer decrying the “rough and ready” justice being meted out by military personnel in various parts of the country, others in the same medium were expressing views supportive of the ill-treatment, as their just deserts.

5.12.2.1.3 Public protests were non-existent even to such cruel acts as the public display accorded an aide of President Nkrumah, Boye Moses, who was captured and paraded in the streets of Accra in a metal cage. According to the Daily Graphic, the crowd hooted and shouted, “kill him”, “He is now a monkey”.⁷¹ This public reaction was not unusual, judging by the treatment to which suspected criminals were, and still are, subjected.

5.12.2.1.4 The public disposition towards a tendency to take advantage of the vulnerable, was affirmed many times when individuals and groups took advantage of the political situation to attack fellow citizens and/or their properties for their alleged association with the CPP Government.

5.12.3 The Abortive Coup Of 1967

5.12.3.1 Following the abortive coup on 17th April, 1967, and the killing of Lt-Gen Kotoka, his personal Orderly, Sgt Osei Grunshie, and two officers, Capt Cephas Y. Borkloe and Capt A. Avevor, the public was outraged. There was loud condemnation of the coup-makers. Many people gave money as donation to the family of Lt-Gen Kotoka, and people hailed the NLC when it decided to name the Accra International Airport after him.

5.12.3.2 The government also established a Trust Fund named the Kotoka Trust, to provide for the families of the fallen soldiers, and many public-spirited persons, as well as chiefs, paid money into the coffers of the Trust. For reasons that are not clear, Brig Afrifa was blamed for the coup attempt, with a whispering campaign that he master-minded the coup in order to become Head of State. This unsubstantiated allegation was to dog his steps in the years that followed, and is rumoured to be the basis for his execution in 1979.

⁷⁰ Daily Graphic, Vol. 4801 Monday, 7th March, 1966, p.19.

⁷¹ Daily Graphic Vol. 5075 Tuesday, 24th January, 1967, p.1.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

5.12.3.3 A military tribunal tried and sentenced Lt Samuel B Arthur and Lt Moses Yeboah to death by firing squad, for their part in the coup; whilst the third Officer, 2nd Lt Osei-Poku was sentenced to 30 years imprisonment. The two condemned men were executed in public at 9.00 a.m. on 26th May, 1967, and a large crowd of people went to the spot, almost in a carnival mood, to watch the public execution.

5.12.3.4 Many other officers were sentenced to prison terms, whilst five officers and about 200 Other Ranks were placed in Protective Custody.⁷² Under about ten Protective Custody Decrees made that year, hundreds of people were put into custody on the accusation of jubilating upon hearing news of the coup, before it was foiled. The public played an active part in causing the arrests of the “jubilants”, who were mostly former activists of the CPP. Those arrests were made upon information supplied by the general public, to the military authorities.

5.12 1ST OCTOBER, 1969 - 12TH JANUARY, 1972:
THE SECOND REPUBLIC -PROGRESS PARTY
(PP) GOVERNMENT

5.13.1 THE PROGRESS PARTY

5.13.1.1 The Progress Party (PP) won the elections of August, 1969, and the government was inaugurated on 1st October, 1969. The elections were marred by a campaign tainted by ethnic tensions.

5.13.1.2 The Aliens Compliance Order And Civil Society Reaction

5.13.1.2.1 Soon after the government came to power, pressure began to mount for firm action to be taken against the influx of aliens into the country. The matter was discussed in Parliament and the government announced that it was going to enforce the provisions of the Aliens Act, 1963 (Act 160) and its accompanying regulations in L.I. 265 as amended by L.I. 553. On 19th November, 1969, the government issued the following statement:

All aliens both African and non-African without residence permits should leave the country within 14 days – not later than December 2, 1969.⁷³

⁷² National Liberation Council (Protective Custody) (Amendment) (No. 9) Decree, 1967 (NLCD 172).

⁷³ Daily Graphic, Vol. 5952 Wednesday, 19th November, 1969, p.1.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

5.13.1.2.2 This “Aliens Compliance Order”, as this Order came to be known, gave all aliens a period of fourteen days within which to regularize their stay in Ghana, or leave. The Leader of the Opposition, Dr. GK Agama, indicated that the opposition was in agreement with the government in enforcing the order that aliens without resident permits should leave the country.⁷⁴ The problem with the Order was not the policy, but the manner of its implementation. While the government was within its legal rights to check illegal immigration, the nature and history of cross-border migration within the West African sub-region, as well as Ghana’s own policy on African unity, should have been taken into account. These factors of sub-regional migration, meant that the potential number of affected persons was large. It was estimated that there were about 250,000 Togolese nationals, about 5,000 Biafran (Eastern Nigerian) refugees under the protection of United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), hundreds of thousands of Nigerians, Malians, and nationals of Upper Volta (Burkina Faso), Niger and Dahomey (Benin). Ambassadors of these neighbouring countries pleaded for more time to enable them process the necessary documentation, but these entreaties did not change the government’s stand.

5.13.1.2.3 In the event, there was a lot of human suffering as families which had resided in Ghana for more than three generations, and persons who had lost touch with their original homelands, were given only fourteen days to regularize their stay or leave the country. Many who had established thriving businesses had to wind them up or sell them off cheaply. Those who owned buildings and land sold them off at very low prices. Many were trapped under inhuman living conditions as they waited for inadequate or non-existent transportation to carry them home. There were many reports of Ghanaians attacking and molesting aliens, to the extent that the government had to issue a warning to the public to desist from such acts. It even became necessary for police protection to be given to some aliens in Kumasi.

5.13.1.2.4 The urgent need to procure residence permits and other identity papers created an opportunity for unscrupulous civil servants to exploit the desperation of the affected aliens by indulging in corrupt practices. Many were the heart-rending tales of suffering that were told and the sad spectacles that were seen during the implementation of this Order. After 2nd December, 1969, aliens who had not complied with the Order were arrested and kept at police stations under inhuman conditions. Since their numbers were so large, they sat out in the open, around police stations, waiting for the police to take action. These incidents caused a lot of disaffection for Ghana in the sub-region, and the Aliens Compliance Order of Nigeria in 1983, was perceived to be in retaliation for what happened to her citizens of those of other West African countries, in 1969.

⁷⁴ Ghanaian Times Vol. 3,771 Monday, 5th January, 1970, p.1.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

5.13 13TH JANUARY, 1972 – 3RD JUNE, 1979:
 NATIONAL REDEMPTION COUNCIL (NRC)/
 SUPREME MILITARY COUNCILS (SMC) I & II

5.14.1 End Of PP

5.14.1.1 The National Redemption Council (NRC) came to power on 13th January, 1972, suspended the 1969 Constitution; proscribed all political parties; and asked all government officials, party functionaries and activists to report to the nearest police station. They were subsequently sent to prisons around the country to be detained.⁷⁵ Many members of the proscribed PP fled into exile in the neighbouring countries.⁷⁶ In May, 1972, many of the detainees were freed from custody.⁷⁷

5.14.1.2 Commissions of Enquiry were established to investigate the assets of PP functionaries, including Dr. Busia, the Prime Minister. Dr. Busia's assets, including those acquired before coming into political office, were confiscated to the State, although he was outside the country at the time and could not be present to defend himself. There was very little public sympathy for the members of the erstwhile PP members as the precedent of ill-treatment of officials of overthrown political parties had already been set.

5.14.2 Trade Organisations' Support For NRC

5.14.2.1 Market women in Accra and Kumasi took to the streets, demonstrating in support of the NRC, chanting anti-PP slogans. The women paraded through the principal streets bearing placards, some of which read: "Busia's Democracy is a sham", "Afrifa must face the Firing Squad", "Down with Busia's Tribalism",⁷⁸ "Afrifa must face trial", "Open up more employment avenues", "Busia is a thief" and "Down with capitalism."⁷⁹ Other groups such as the Volta Region Association of Gold and Silver Smiths sent a message of congratulations to the Chairman of the NRC,⁸⁰ whilst others pledged their support to the NRC.⁸¹ The Ghana Co-operative Cattle Dealers and Butchers Association even congratulated the Chairman of the NRC, the Armed Forces and the Police for "the able manner in which they ousted the Busia Administration".⁸² With such messages of

⁷⁵ Ghanaian Times Vol. 4,408 Friday, 28th January, 1972, back page "PP Activists Are Back In Custody."

⁷⁶ Daily Graphic, Vol. 6711 5th May 1972, p.16.

⁷⁷ Daily Graphic, Vol. 6620 Tuesday, 18th January 1972, p.1.

⁷⁸ Ghanaian Times Vol. 4,402 Friday, 21st January, 1972.

⁷⁹ Ghanaian Times Vol. 4,428 Saturday, 21st February, 1972, p.1.

⁸⁰ Ghanaian Times, 21st January, 1972, supra; Ghanaian Times, Vol. 4,416 Monday, 7th February, 1972, p.5.

⁸¹ Ghanaian Times, vol. 4,400 Wednesday, 19th January, 1972, p.5.; Ghanaian Times, Vol. 4,407 Thursday, 27th January, 1972, p.7.

⁸² Ghanaian Times, Vol. 4,401 Thursday, 20th January, 1972, p.3.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

support, it was unlikely that anyone would criticize the detention of the PP Government functionaries and activists.⁸³

5.14.2.2 This form of sycophancy, often motivated by greed and opportunism, accounts partly for the inability to properly appreciate conduct on the part of rulers, that ought not to be condoned. When the NRC/SMC I rule came under immense pressure to relinquish power, and resorted to violence as an instrument for retaining power, it exposed the nation's culture of sycophancy in its most sadistic form.

5.14.2.3 Before and during the struggle over the Union Government (Unigov) proposal, a cross-section of Ghanaians declared support just to enable them to enter the huge lucrative patronage network that the government had constructed. The groups ranged from chiefs, (including individual paramount chiefs, traditional councils, regional houses of chiefs and the National House of Chiefs), civic associations like the Ashanti Youth Association and the Kumasi Youngsters Club, Volta Development and Youth Association, High Blood, Farmers Association, African Youth Command and the Ghana Peace and Solidarity Council.

5.14.2.4 While the government was under intense pressure to return the country to constitutional rule, a number of leading professionals were accepting Cabinet appointments to serve in it, but civil society did not criticize them for doing so. For example, Dr. RKA Gardiner was appointed Commissioner for Economic Planning; Dr. AK Appiah, as Commissioner for Finance; E R K Dwemoh, Commissioner for Transport and Communications; A. Karbo, as Commissioner for Health; and C K Tedam, as Commissioner in charge of Local Government.⁸⁴

5.14.2.5 In January, 1977, a Committee on Unigov was established to collate opinions on the concept. The committee, chaired by Dr. Gustav Koranteng-Addow, had the following membership:

- Dr. Modibo Ocran;
- Togbe Adja Tekpor VI;
- Kofi Badu;
- Maj Yaw Larson;
- Joe Appiah;
- DCOP B.S.K. Kwakye;
- Nii Okai Pesemaku III;
- Dr. M.M. Owusu-Ansah;
- Dr. Yaw Manu;
- Dr. A Adda;
- F. Wulff Tagoe; and

⁸³ Ghanaian Times, 20th January, 1972, supra; Ghanaian Times, 4,405 Tuesday, 25th January, 1972, p.7.

⁸⁴ Daily Graphic Vol. 8290 Wednesday, 15th June, 1977; Daily Graphic vol.8295 Tuesday, 21st June, 1977, p.1.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

- Two other unnamed representatives of the Military Advisory Council and Research Bureau of Ministry of Information.⁸⁵

5.14.2.6 This committee drew up a programme for implementation of the concept, which they preferred to be named “National Government instead of Unigov”. A referendum to determine if Ghanaians wanted that form of government was fixed for 30th March, 1978. Immediately thereafter, many pro-Unigov groups sprang up, as it became clear that the government was willing to spread money around in order to purchase the people’s support. Associations such as “The Friends”, suddenly sprang up and spearheaded the campaign in support of the concept. Everyday, chiefs and opinion leaders from every part of the country made their way to the Castle, to “pledge unflinching support” for Unigov.

5.14.2.7 The symbols representing the “Yes” and “No” vote were eloquent in the images they cultivated in the public mind. The “Yes” vote was represented by two hands in a warm handshake (signifying unity) against a sky-blue background, and the “No” by three heads of two males and one female, all facing different directions in obvious disagreement (signifying discord), against a red background. These pictorial gimmicks notwithstanding, the “No” group had massive support.

5.14.3 THE PEOPLE’S MOVEMENT FOR FREEDOM AND JUSTICE (PMFJ)

5.14.3.1 The PMFJ was formed in the mid-1970s to spearhead opposition to the government of Gen Acheampong, and his idea of Unigov as the most suitable form of government for Ghana. The PMFJ, though made up of various personalities attracted a large number of young people. Its leaders were prominent politicians such as Lt-Gen Akwasi Amankwah Afrifa, Professor Albert Adu Boahen, William Ofori-Atta (popularly known as Paa Willie), K A Gbedemah, G W Amarteifio (popularly known as “Mr. No”) and Nana Addo D Akufo-Addo.

5.14.3.2 The PMFJ organized public protests and anti-Unigov demonstrations which were brutally suppressed by the State. On one occasion, a PMFJ rally was broken up with force, resulting in the death of three people, with many injured, including Gbedemah.⁸⁶

5.14.3.3 Subsequently, the government ordered that no police permits were to be issued to the PMFJ, alleging that as people hated them very much, if they held rallies in public places, the public might attack them. The PMFJ was therefore deprived of the opportunity to lawfully assemble to campaign against Unigov. There was even an occasion when a police permit that had been issued was withdrawn, only hours before the publicized event.

5.14.3.4 The PMFJ managed to continue campaigning in the face of serious official threats and intimidation until the referendum was conducted on 30th March, 1978, when

⁸⁵ Ghanaian Times Vol. 5,940 Tuesday, 11th January, 1977, p.1.

⁸⁶ Oquaye, Politics in Ghana, supra, p.89.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

in the face of massive rigging, the majority vote was alleged to have been cast in favour of the Unigov concept. Very few people, familiar with the events of the Referendum, and the chasing out of the Electoral Commissioner by soldiers, believed the official results that declared to be genuine. However, one of the prominent supporters of Unigov disputed the good faith of such doubters, querying why the “No” votes were believed to be correct and not the ‘Yes’ votes.⁸⁷

5.14.3.5 Thereafter, by the Voluntary Associations (Prohibition) Decree, 1978 (SMCD 161), passed on 4th April, 1978, the PMFJ, together with two other anti-Unigov associations, Front for the Prevention of Dictatorship and Third Force were prohibited by the government.

5.14.4 NATIONAL LIBERATION MOVEMENT OF WESTERN TOGOLAND AND TOGOLAND LIBERATION MOVEMENT

5.14.4.1 In about 1975, the unabated desire of certain persons to secede from Ghana, based upon the dissatisfaction with the results of the 1956 Plebiscite that incorporated the former Trust Territory of Togoland (also known by the earlier name of “Mandated Territories”) into Ghana, resurfaced. Some people began to organize themselves to push for secession from Ghana, and these two movements were formed, with objects which included “advocating and promoting the secession from Ghana of the former British Mandated territory of Togoland”.

5.14.4.2 These “secessionist organizations” were promptly banned, under the Prohibited Organisations Decree, 1976.⁸⁸ The Decree also prohibited membership of the organizations or any other organizations with the same objects, as well as advertising meetings or even putting up notices for such meetings to take place. It also made it an offence for anyone to provide financial support by way of contribution, or granting of a loan or even guarantee of a loan, to such an organization.

5.14.4.3 The government followed the promulgation of the Decree with interaction with chiefs from those areas, and the problem abated to some degree.

⁸⁷ Joseph Appiah, JOE APPIAH The Autobiography of An African Patriot Asempa Publishers, Accra, 1996, p.299.

⁸⁸ SMCD 20.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

5.15 24TH SEPTEMBER, 1979 - 30TH DECEMBER, 1981:
THIRD REPUBLIC -PEOPLE'S NATIONAL PARTY
(PNP) GOVERNMENT

5.15.1 THE PEOPLE'S NATIONAL PARTY (PNP)

5.15.1.1 The Third Republic was ushered in with the formal inauguration at the Parliament House in Accra, on the 24th September, 1979. At the handing over ceremony, Flt Lt Rawlings told President Limann that his government was on probation, but this veiled threat against the constitutional government did not elicit any public disapproval.

5.15.1.2 The PNP itself did not help matters, in the manner in which it conducted its affairs. Very early in the life of the government, the party secured a loan of US $ 1 million from an Italian, Dr. Marino Chiavelli, ostensibly to resettle the members of the AFRC and their associates. A scandal soon broke over the handling of the funds, with allegations of misappropriation of the funds. Such scandals, coming so soon after the era of "house-cleaning", did not improve the public's acceptance of, and loyalty to the constitutionally-elected government.

5.15.1.3 In 1981, a member of the PNP, Addae Amoako, sued his party over the disbursement of the Chiavelli loan. The fact of a member of the ruling party suing his own party for an account money involved in a currency-printing contract, caused ripples in the public domain. Whilst some hailed it as a positive mark in the democratic development of the country, others saw it as a weakness in the system; evidence of how corrupt civilian politicians were; and how quickly the new civilian rulers had returned to the "bad old ways".

5.15.1.4 The factors that made for instability, were enhanced by the impatience of the general populace in the face of constitutionalism and its seemingly slow nature and pace of governance. Against such a background, there were, unfortunately, serious wranglings taking place within the ruling PNP. The PNP appeared to be feeding on itself as factions and groups within it battled the leadership, or harangued it for its inability to articulate and adhere to a leftist ideology.

5.15.1.5 On 31st December, 1981, a band of military personnel, both serving and retired, launched an attack on the State, and succeeded in overthrowing the government. It came as no surprise when, upon the fall of the Limann Government, some members of the youth wing of the PNP took up prominent positions in the new government.

5.15.2 NEW DEMOCRATIC MOVEMENT (NDM)

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

5.15.2.1 The New Democratic Movement (NDM) was a leftist intellectual organization that shared the ideals of the JFM although it was more in the nature of providing intellectual support for revolutionary change. It was formed in 1980, after the Third Republic had come into being, but its formative period pre-dated 1980.⁸⁹

5.15.2.2 Its roots lay in the mid 1970s, when those who later on formed the NDM operated as part of the group generally known as the “progressive intellectuals” on the various university campuses, but particularly at Legon. By the time the NDM was formed, the members had been operating in about five Study Cells. In 1979, it began to publish a journal called Direction, which was intended to help espouse the views of the progressive intellectuals on national affairs. Although many of its members were supportive of the 4th June Uprising, the group was also critical of attacks on small propertied people because the feeling was that the real culprits of the country’s economic problems were the “big boys” of the economy but they had been left intact. The group also criticized the demolition of the Makola Market, as well as the execution of the Senior Military Officers, including three former Heads of State, even though both events were very attractive to a section of the student movement.

5.15.2.3 After the AFRC handed over, the group examined its options and decided that although the group was close in philosophy to the CPP tradition, it would form a new movement known as the New Democratic Movement (NDM). Not all of the members of the amorphous progressive intellectuals group, made the transition to the NDM. However, many other progressive intellectuals joined the NDM as a natural transition from activism in the student movement. Principal among the original members of the Movement were: Ofei Nkansah, Kwame Karikari, Ms Takyiwaa Manuh, Kwasi Adu-Amankwah, Kwame Mfodwo, Tsatsu Tsikata, Fui Tsikata, Dr. Kwesi Botchwey, Ato Austin, Anthony Akoto Ampaw, Jude Quarshie and Ms Cynthia Aninkora Nuamah. In April, 1980, one Dodoo, a Public Servant, became the chairperson.⁹⁰

5.15.2.4 The NDM was basically leftist in philosophy, and its main purpose was to create a platform for the propagation of socialist ideology through seminars, workshops, etc. It functioned through its study groups and study cells, but did not engage in active field operations as did the JFM. It focused on education because it felt that Self-Rule and Independence had not been meaningful to the people of Ghana since the national economy was still dominated by external forces. Consequently, the need to raise the consciousness of the people in order to ensure that social and political policy would be directed at promoting indigenous Ghanaian enterprise. Such awareness-raising would also ensure that democracy would go beyond the articulation of formal political rights to meaningfully impact on the lives of the people. It also believed that Africa stood a better chance of winning the economic war if it operated on a united front. For this reason, the group was committed to promoting pan-Africanism as well as gender consciousness.

⁸⁹ Memorandum to National Reconciliation Commission.

⁹⁰ Contrary to what some authors have stated, Sgt Akata Pore was never a member.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

5.15.2.5 When the 31st December, 1981 coup occurred, its members became active in the People's /Workers Defence Committees (PDCs/WDCs) since the establishment of the Defence Committees was an idea that ran through all popular socialist movements because they were seen to be the means by which the people could maximize their power. The NDM also embarked on a programme to provide the people with political guidance, and were active in both the Student and Labour movements. It was in the light of this commitment to conscientise the people that, in 1982, it was active in holding educational seminars on various national issues.

5.15.2.6 The NDM opposed certain aspects of the exercise of people's power, and it remonstrated with those PDCs which were harassing traders to desist from doing so, as well as with the Greater Accra Regional Secretary, for adopting certain measures against vendors in Accra, arguing that those actions did not advance the revolution in any way since its main aim was to fight imperialism.⁹¹

5.15.2.7 The intellectual debates within the National Defence Committee (NDC) were not idle intellectual debates, but had significance for the direction of the national economy. This was because at the time of the coup of 31st December, 1981, the economy was in shambles, a major justification for the take-over. Thus, right from the first day, a major challenge to the PNDC Government as well as a major threat to its stability was how it was going to manage the economy.

5.15.2.8 The threat to stability increased with every passing day, but the options seemed to be limited. The economy needed a major infusion of capital, but approaches to socialist economies had not yielded much. Therefore it appeared that the economy could get support only if it would agree to the IMF way, and this ignited a huge debate within the regime. Economists, such as Dr. Joe Abbey, were pushing the orthodox line and the debate was as to whether the currency should be devalued, according to the prescription of the IMF. The extreme leftists who dominated the NDC, were completely opposed to any notion of devaluation. Therefore when the Economic Review Team that had been established to manage the economy did a presentation to the NDC on the new direction of the economy, the NDC rejected it. The NDC then appointed another committee to review the plan and propose more acceptable options.

5.15.2.9 Subsequently, from these ideological clashes, it became clear that "government by ideology" was not going to work, and therefore, a move was made to purge the extreme leftists from the PNDC and NDC. The NDC was reorganized, to make the Chairman of the PNDC its Chairman.

5.15.2.10 The NDM was sidelined, and it moved into opposition by December, 1984. It linked up with a Catholic action group led by Rev Fr Joop Visser, a Dutch Catholic priest, and criticized the government's social commitment. It had thus embarked upon a collision course with the government, and it was only a matter of time before the government mounted an attack on it.

⁹¹ Daily Graphic, Vol. 9748 Saturday, 6th March, 1982, p.14.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

5.15.2.11 The time came, when the government announced a programme of decentralization of government structures. This was in 1986. The NDM and other progressive groups opposed the concept and they protested because they suspected that the government was transforming itself from a “provisional government” to a “permanent government” by using the hierarchical structure of District Assemblies, Regional Assemblies, National Assemblies with Chairman Rawlings at the top. The NDM’s protest led to the arrest of its principal activists in 1986. However, they were soon released.

5.15.2.12 In 1987, some leading members of NDM were arrested again for opposing government policies. This time, they were detained without trial, for periods ranging from a few months, up to two years.

5.15.2.13.0 Funding

5.15.2.13.1 Evidence put before the Commission, was to the effect that the NDM had no external funding, and that it was the members themselves who funded everything from their own pockets, because the members were motivated by ideas and a will to achieve social transformation.

5.15.2.14 In 1990, on the initiative of the Kwame Nkrumah Revolutionary Guards (KNRG), many of the groups involved in the struggle for a return to civilian rule agreed to work together in one organization known as Movement for Freedom and Justice (MFJ). This body that included the NDM, was inaugurated in August, 1990, with the avowed aim of fighting for the return to constitutional rule.

5.15.3 KWAME NKRUMAH REVOLUTIONARY GUARDS⁹²

5.15.3.1 Kwame Nkrumah Revolutionary Guards (KNRG) was conceived, originally, as the left wing of the PNP. It was made up of senior CPP members of the extreme left, such as KSP Jantuah, FA Jantuah, Johnny Hansen, Sonny T Provencal and Emmanuel Owusu Gyimah. Its main concern was the maintenance of ideological purity of the PNP, and to protest the policy of deference to the IMF and World Bank; the government’s failure to participate in the Moscow Olympics of 1980; President Limann’s statement that he had no ideology, etc. It was also to be instrumental in the attempt to secure leftist unity in the country. The group participated in the Forum of leftist groups at Labone Secondary School, at which a decision was taken that Limann’s Government was not a socialist government and so was not to be given support by the socialist groups.

5.15.3.2 The KNRG was the first to issue a statement of support for the PNDC. In the Daily Graphic of 4th January, 1982, the KNRG sent a message of congratulations, signed by Provencal, to the newly-formed PNDC. In the statement, the KNRG complained about the “laissez-faire policies” of the Limann Administration that had destroyed many homes and turned many Ghanaians into economic refugees in foreign lands. This attack on the PNP government by a senior member of the PNP was not really surprising since the Labone Forum had reached a consensus that the PNP Government had abandoned the socialist path. In any case, a number of its members who were also senior members of the PNP, quickly found their way into the new PNDC Government, and took up prominent positions.

⁹² Memorandum to the National Reconciliation Commission.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

5.15.3.3 Within the first year of the PNDC, the KNRG began to have problems with the government. When the murder of the three High Court Judges and the retired Army Officer occurred in June, 1982, the KNRG expressed its disapproval and issued a statement condemning the event, although the organization was perceived to be part of the PNDC.

5.15.3.4 In 1985, new personalities were recruited into the leadership. Kwesi Pratt (Jnr), a journalist with leftist credentials, became its General Secretary. By this time, the leftist credentials of the PNDC were being questioned, and so the programme of the new leadership was to attempt a unification of all the truly left-wing groups.

5.15.3.5 In early 1986, the KNRG built an alliance with the NDM and Africa Youth Command (AYC), all leftist groups, although the AYC did not last long in the alliance. The KNRG, joined a campaign for the release of Victor Owusu, leader of the former rightist Popular Front Party (PFP), who had been arrested on suspicion of involvement in a coup plot. This campaign had an interesting aspect: the leftist groups in the country, had joined up with rightist groups, to work for the release of the leader of a proscribed rightist party.

5.15.3.6 The KNRG was also one of the early advocates of a return to multi-party democracy when in 1986, it published a document rejecting the District Assembly concept and calling for a restoration of multi-party democracy. After this period, some of its activists such as John Ndebugre and Kwesi Pratt (Jnr) were arrested in 1987, and again in 1991, when Owusu Gyimah and Kwesi Pratt (Jnr) were arrested at Kwame Nkrumah Circle for putting up posters advocating a return to multi-party politics in 1991.

5.15.3.7 The KNRG began to disintegrate in 1992, when it became clear from the Report of the National Commission for Democracy (NCD) that multi-partyism was about to be restored, and various possibilities for joining various political parties of Nkrumaist persuasion had opened up. The members joined some of the new political associations they believed best represented the interests of the CPP family.

5.15.3.8 Funding Of The Kwame Nkrumah Revolutionary Guards

5.15.3.8.1 The KNRG was financed mostly by members such as Johnny Hansen, Lord Ocloo of ICU and many other people from the CPP. Ebo Tawiah, member of the PNDC,

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

was also a member and provided some funds until he began to disapprove of the direction of the movement.

5.16 31ST DECEMBER, 1981 - 6TH JANUARY, 1993
PROVISIONAL NATIONAL DEFENCE COUNCIL (PNDC)

5.16.1 The Demise Of PNP Government

5.16.1.1 On 31st December, 1981, Flt Lt J.J. Rawlings took over the administration of the country and declared a “Holy War”. In the usual manner of seizures of power, the 1979 Constitution was suspended, the members of the government were dismissed; Parliament was dissolved; and all political parties were banned. Members of Parliament, the PNP leadership and other functionaries, were ordered to report to the nearest police station, where they were detained, and later sent to prisons around the country. This time round, the detentions were not limited to members of the ruling government, but included Members of Parliament of the minority parties as well. Some of these persons were thereby forced to go into exile in the neighbouring countries.

5.16.2 THE 31ST DECEMBER WOMEN’S MOVEMENT

5.16.2.1 It has been stated that no “analysis of the relation between the State and Women in Ghana would be complete without a consideration of the 31st December Women’s Movement.”⁹³ This statement is no exaggeration as the role of the movement is wound up with the course of the 31st December “revolution.”

5.16.2.2 On 15th May, 1982, a new women’s organization, the 31st December Women’s Movement was launched by Flt Lt Rawlings at the Nicholson Stadium in Accra. In his address, Flt Lt Rawlings was reported to have said:

Ghanaians could solve their problems if they would put an end to the habit of making the woman responsible for only bringing up children in the home. This habit, he noted had forced women to turn to ‘kalabule’ and trading because they could not feed their children... Flt Lt Rawlings hoped that with the formation of the movement, there was no doubt that a genuine and real revolution was taking place.⁹⁴

5.16.2.3 Formed to be the “Women’s wing of the revolution”, women were advised to join the revolution and fight alongside the men and be prepared to die in defence of the motherland.⁹⁵ The logo of the movement was a young woman holding a gun above her

⁹³ Takyiwaa Manuh, “Women, the State and Society under the PNDC” in GHANA Under PNDC Rule, E. Gyimah-Boadi (ed) CODESRIA BOOK SERIES, p.176, at p. 185.

⁹⁴ Daily Graphic Vol. 9806 Monday, 17th May, 1982, p.1.

⁹⁵ Daily Graphic Vol. 9842 Monday, 28th June, 1982, pp.1, 4/5.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

head with her left hand. The women wanted to be given military training so that they could shoot just as effectively as men, and so the women called upon the PNDC “to institute military training for them too so they could fight alongside their menfolk to defend and rebuilt [sic] the nation.”⁹⁶

5.16.2.4 The founders of the movement persuaded the wife of the Chairman of the PNDC, Nana Konadu Agyeman Rawlings, to become the president of the movement, and this act lent it the political clout and influence it needed.⁹⁷

5.16.2.5 The Movement (known as the DWM) began to spread across the country, using the network of queenmothers for its membership drive. By 1990, it was represented in every region, district and even locality. This massive drive, was said to be on account of the exposure that the First Lady, Nana Konadu Agyeman Rawlings, the DWM’s President had, on a visit to Cuba in 1983 to visit women’s organizations.⁹⁸ Credited with being the turning point in the life of the DWM, the visit to Cuba exposed the political advantages that an organization of that nature carried when represented at the remotest village level, in the country. Indeed, to mark the 5th anniversary of the 31st December revolution, 18 branches were inaugurated at the same time at Cape Coast.⁹⁹ According to Takyiwaa Manuh:

Queenmothers were also asked to put the power and the influence they wielded in the community behind the movement and to help in its mobilising and membership drives. In return for supporting the movement, queenmothers were promised representation with male chiefs on chieftaincy committees of traditional councils a move which boosted their power and influence and also carried some pecuniary advantages.¹⁰⁰

5.16.2.6 The DWM abandoned its initial militant approach and began to tackle projects aimed at providing income-generating resources for its members. It described itself as “a broad based development oriented Non Governmental Organisation which aspires to achieve these objectives through the effective mobilisation of women.”¹⁰¹ With its political clout, it soon had tentacles in every facet of economic activity. It became involved in a bakery project at Burma Camp, that had allegedly been begun on the initiative of some soldiers’ wives. The DWM wrestled the project from them, and took over the baking of bread for the Ghana Armed Forces (GAF). Soon a contract for the supply of kenkey with the GAF was also secured.

⁹⁶ Daily Graphic Vol. 9871 Monday, 2nd August, 1982, pp.1, 4/5.

⁹⁷ Kevin Shillington, Ghana and the Rawlings Factor, MACMILLAN PRESS LTD, 1992, p.152.

⁹⁸ Ibid., p.153.

⁹⁹ Ghanaian Times, Vol. 9,120 Tuesday, 16th December, 1986, p.4.

¹⁰⁰ Manuh, op cit supra, p.118.

¹⁰¹ 31ST DECEMBER WOMEN’S MOVEMENT OF GHANA Official Brochure of the Movement, p.2.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

5.16.2.7 The period 1986-1989 was a busy time for the DWM as it spread rapidly around the country. Various branches were inaugurated in villages around the country and given publicity in national newspapers. At the end of 1989, it was estimated that there were 450 branches of DWM in Ashanti Region alone.¹⁰² The DWM was organized along the lines of the Committees for the Defence of the Revolution (CDRs): it had zonal organizers; district organizers; regional organizers; and national officers. It co-operated with the “other revolutionary organs” and engaged in community clean-up programmes together during the various anniversary celebrations of the 31st December revolution.

5.16.2.8 The DWM also got involved in gari-making, palm oil processing, shea-butter processing, bead-making, pottery, etc. Apart from these businesses, the DWM was also into cultivation of the various crops, shea-nut picking, afforestation, etc. With the onset of HIV/AIDS, health projects also joined the list of the DWM’s projects.

5.16.2.9 With their involvement with women, it rapidly became clear that one of the major concerns and therefore the major obstacle to women’s participation in activities, economic or otherwise, was the welfare of their pre-school children. Therefore, in 1986, the DWM began to open Day-Care Centres all over the country and encouraged their branches to put up structures to serve this purpose.¹⁰³ At these day-care centers, pre-school education was subsidized.

5.16.2.10 Many of these centres were not new, or were alleged to belong to private persons, but they were all taken over and branded as the property of the DWM. It is estimated that by 1991, the DWM was financing 500 Day-Care Centres all over the country.¹⁰⁴ However, since there are no independently verifiable statistics of the DWM’s Day-Care Centres, it is impossible to be certain of these figures. For instance, in May, 1990, the estimated figure of what the DWM was reputed to own, stood at 252 Day-Care Centres,¹⁰⁵ but within a space of one year, the estimate stood at 500, making it difficult to give credit to either figure. According to a former member of the DWM:

carved a niche for itself in the gender and development terrain by championing the economic empowerment of women. It also facilitated the participation of women in small-scale income generating activities through the establishment of day nurseries which enabled women to free themselves of childcare to participate in entrepreneurial activities.¹⁰⁶

¹⁰² Daily Graphic Vol. 12158 Wednesday, 20th December, 1989, p.4.

¹⁰³ Edzodzinnam Tsikata, “Women’s Political Organisations 1951-1987” in The State Development and Politics in Ghana, Emmanuel Hansen and Kwame A. Ninsin (eds), CODESRIA BOOK SERIES, Dakar, 1989, p.73, at p.86.

¹⁰⁴ Shillington, p.154.

¹⁰⁵ People’s Daily Graphic Vol. 12280 Wednesday, 16th May, 1990.

¹⁰⁶ Memorandum to the National Reconciliation Commission.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 55.16.2.11 Relationship With National Council On Women And Development (NCWD)

5.16.2.11.1 In March, 1982, an activity organized by NCWD was picketed by a group of women, calling themselves “Concerned Women of Ghana”. In truth, these young women were activists of the nucleus group that became the DWM. The take-over of NCWD was therefore on the agenda right from its formation, and so it was not surprising that eventually, DWM used its immense political clout to get its members into the leadership of the NCWD.

5.16.2.11.2 The leadership of the DWM, determined that the NCWD, the national institution, set up in 1975¹⁰⁷ to mobilize women for national development, had gone outside its mandate of policy-making, into project implementation, and that such functions would be better performed by implementing agencies, such as the DWM, working under the oversight of the NCWD. It also criticized the NCWD for not doing enough gender-advocacy, and for losing focus in the execution of its mandate.

5.16.2.11.3 In 1986, the Governing Council of the NCWD, chaired by Prof Florence Dolphyne of the University of Ghana, was dissolved and an Interim Management Committee (IMC), with Mrs. Selina Taylor, a member of DWM, as its chairperson. Later, Mrs. Gertrude Zakaria-Ali, a founding member of the DWM, became the NCWD’s Executive Secretary. Other members of the DWM assumed various roles and ensured that the once-vibrant NCWD became a quiet little government organization, advising the government on women’s issues. By 1989, the NCWD had become completely emasculated by the DWM, and it was probably because of its statutory nature that it was permitted to exist, and not fully absorbed into the structures of the DWM.

5.16.2.11.4 In other aspects of national life, the DWM was equally prominent. According to Shillington:

It is believed that through the organization and its President, members gained the ear of the Head of State. Petitions and appeals against injustice are referred to Mrs. Rawlings in the sure knowledge that if the case is strong enough, and the allegations of injustice or corruption firmly founded, the details will be passed on to her husband. Then woe betide the wrong-doer as the Head of State, with his customary vigour, activates the full process of law. Similarly it is feared that the converse is also true and that the 31 December Women’s Movement is the eyes and ears of the Head of State.¹⁰⁸

¹⁰⁷ National Council on Women and Development Decree, 1975 (NRCD 322).

¹⁰⁸ Shillington, p.156.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

5.16.2.11.5 Indeed, it was even reported in May, 1989, that the Head of State himself and other members of the PNDC attended meetings of the DWM's executive committee. These acts gave it the aura of a state-sponsored agency.

5.16.2.11.6 The perception of the DWM as the only recognized national women's organization was given form and substance by the appointment of some of its members to district assemblies as government nominees. Wherever there was a requirement of representation for women, the DWM was the body that supplied candidates and so it had representation on many committees and bodies dealing with issues affecting women, children and the community. Prominent members of the DWM usually filled the slot for women on government delegations travelling abroad. The DWM was even reputed to be the official body administering scholarship schemes for women, especially to countries of Eastern Europe and Cuba.¹⁰⁹

5.16.2.11.7 The DWM also had affiliate bodies. Some of these were:

- Accra Markets Associations;
- Regional Administration Staff;
- Zion Women's Union;
- West E P Church Women;
- Battor Women's Union;
- Murtarmar Women's Association;
- Financial Institutions (Ladies' Clubs) ;
- Police Wives Association;
- Prisons Wives Association;
- Armed Forces Wives Association;
- Fire Service Wives;
- Achimota Brewery Ladies Club;
- GNATLASSs (Ghana National Association of Teachers Ladies' Associations);
- Dzodze Women's Union;
- Tsui Shitoo Alajo GBC;
- Beverages and Dispensers and Shacks [sic] Association (BEDSA);
- Information Ladies Club;
- Departmental Stores (Ladies' Club);
- Nurses Association;
- Media Ladies club;
- Power Queens Club;
- Ghana Hairdressers and Beauticians;
- Accra Zonal Co-operative Bakers Union Ltd; and
- Prison Officers Wives Association¹¹⁰

¹⁰⁹ Manuh, supra, p.188.

¹¹⁰ Manuh, supra, p. 195.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

5.16.2.11.8 In 1988 and 1992, a majority of the women who were elected to the District Assemblies and Parliament respectively, were those with strong links to the DWM as the DWM had created opportunities for women's participation in politics at the local level.¹¹¹

5.16.2.12 Funding Of December Women's Movement

5.16.2.12.1 The funding for this massive institutional structure was always a source of speculation. Many people suspected that it was largely state-funded, although this was vigorously denied often. However, it is incontrovertible that state-funding, by way of subsidies for the remuneration of its employees, was what enabled the organization to function to the levels that it operated during the mandate period. Many of its Day-Care Centre staff as well as its Regional Organisers and District Organisers were usually teachers still on the payroll of the Ministry of Education, although working full-time for the DWM.

5.16.2.12.2 The DWM did manage to attract funding from international agencies, such as the United Nations agencies of UNFPA and UNDP, etc. Since the DWM usually developed projects in areas where foreign funding was available, it procured funds for its programmes and projects. "Its influence and access to finance and logistics and resultant power or clout in directing policies was unimaginable".¹¹² Diplomatic Missions that wished to have improved relations with the country through social relations also made donations to the DWM.¹¹³

5.16.2.12.3 Direct funding from national resources was also secured, when the Programme of Action for the Mitigation of the Social Consequences of Adjustment (PAMSCAD) policies was initiated. This made sizeable sums of money available to the DWM for those of its operations that qualified for support.

5.16.3 CIVIL SOCIETY REACTION

5.16.3.1 The Early Years Of PNDC Rule

5.16.3.1.1 Workers, farmers, fishermen, drivers, market women all began to declare their support for the revolution.¹¹⁴ The Greater Accra Branch of the National Canoe Fishermen Council also organized a demonstration to re-affirm the unflinching loyalty of the fishermen to the PNDC and the People's Revolution.¹¹⁵ When as usual, Makola Market

¹¹¹ Beatrix Allah-Mensah, Women in Politics and Public Office in Ghana 1993-2004 Friedrich Ebert Stiftung, Accra, 2004, p.12 (forthcoming).

¹¹² Memorandum to National Reconciliation Commission.

¹¹³ People's Daily Graphic Vol. 10536 Thursday, 27th September, 1984, p.1.

¹¹⁴ Daily Graphic, Vol. 9772 Saturday 3rd April, 1982, p.5.

¹¹⁵ Daily Graphic, Vol. 9699, Friday, 8th January, 1982, p.1.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

Women also went to the Burma Camp too, to demonstrate in support of the revolution but were, ominously, chased out by soldiers.¹¹⁶ Soon, anger began to mount against the market women for increasing their prices.¹¹⁷

5.16.3.1.2 Many “mushroom” groups sprang up, each one trying to outdo the other, in their display of revolutionary favour. However, many did not last.

5.16.3.1.3 Cheered on by chants of “J.J.”, “J.J.” and “Junior Jesus”, the Chairman of the PNDC was very much in the centre of national life, as he cleared choked drains himself; helped to lay rail lines; dived to help clear the Volta Lake of aquatic weeds; and generally showed himself to be “a man of the people”. Consequently, there were expressions of popular support for the Chairman of the PNDC, and even the forces of disorder that had been unleashed on the society, did not appear to dim civil society support and reaction.

5.16.3.1.4 The attempted coup of Sunday, 19th June, 1983 (otherwise known as the Gyiwah coup’), and the reaction of a part of civil society, was the first obvious display of the extent of disaffection against the PNDC Government in the country. Following the foiling of the attempt, there were mass arrests of persons (termed ‘jubilants’) because they were alleged to have expressed jubilation on hearing the news, as well as those who were accused of having been a part of the plot (termed ‘dissidents’). There was also a crackdown on dissent generally.

5.16.3.2 The Later Years

5.16.3.2.1 The vigorous suppression of dissent, as well as the implementation of strategies for co-optation, produced a general silence in the public domain towards officialdom. Labelled the “culture of silence”, this silence was ominous for the development of the nation because it excluded carefully crafted praise of all official action. A sociologist has lamented on the development thus:

The fact that we applaud certain utterances and behaviour patterns, instead of showing deserved contempt for such conduct, shows the abysmal absence of standards of public decency and decorum in social life, and for reasoned, dispassionate debate in contemporary Ghanaian society. What is even more pitiable is the manner in which people applaud enthusiastically in public, only for the same people to complain bitterly in privacy to confidantes.¹¹⁸

5.16.3.2.2 There was mass retrenchment (officially termed “redeployment”) from the public services. This created mass unemployment, as many quickly expended the amounts paid to them as the financial package that went with being “redeployed”. Promises of re-training were not honoured for a vast majority of the labour-force that was ¹¹⁶ The Mirror, Vol. 1461 Friday 8th January, 1982, p.3.

¹¹⁷ Daily Graphic, Vol. 9869 Friday, 30th July, 1982.

¹¹⁸ J. Max Assimeng, An Anatomy of Modern Ghana, J. B. Danquah Memorial Lectures, 28th Series, March, 1995, Ghana Academy of Arts and Sciences, Accra, 1996, p.43.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

shed. Consequently, poverty, particularly in urban areas, as manifested by a rise in female-headed households, began to produce the usual social problems, such as child labour in its modern manifestations, and “streetism”.

5.16.4 MOVEMENT FOR FREEDOM AND JUSTICE (MFJ)

5.16.4.1 This group was inaugurated on 2nd August, 1990,¹¹⁹ to spearhead the struggle for a return to civilian rule despite attempts by the government through the BNI to scuttle it. Its executive officers were the following:

- Prof. Albert Adu-Boahen - National Chairman;
- Johnny F.S.Hansen - 1st National Vice-Chairman;
- Ray Kakraba-Quarshie - 2nd National Vice-Chairman;
- Dan Lartey - National Treasurer;
- Obeng Manu - National Secretary
- Kwesi Pratt (Jnr) - Deputy National Secretary;
- John Ndebugre - National Organiser;
- Akoto Ampaw - National Executive Member;
- A.Owusu Gyimah - National Executive Member; and
- Dr. T . Darko - National Executive Member.

5.16.4.2 In August, 1990, the MFJ issued a statement condemning the suppression of free speech on account of the existence of “oppressive laws as the Preventive Custody Law”.¹²⁰ In 1991, it criticized various aspects of the transition process, such as the composition of the National Commission for Democracy (NCD), charged with devising rules for the transition. The MFJ also took issue with the government over the manner in which the programme for transition was being pursued without due representation of the citizenry.

5.16.5 THE POLITICAL PARTIES OF 1992

5.16.5.1 The country had been under military rule since 31st December, 1981. In the late 1980s, agitation began to be felt for a return to civilian rule. The NCD under the chairmanship of Mr. Justice Annan, a member of the PNDC, was tasked to go around the country and collate views on the form of civilian government that should be adopted. The NCD reported that the generality of Ghanaians favoured a multi-party democracy. A Committee of Experts was therefore commissioned to prepare proposals for a new constitution and they submitted a report in 1991. A Consultative Assembly was established to prepare a draft constitution for approval in a referendum.

¹¹⁹ Kabral Blay-Amihere, Fighting For Freedom (The Autobiography of an African Journalist), Trans Afrika News Ltd. Accra, 2001, p.342.

¹²⁰ Current Political Situation and the PNDC's Evolving Democratic Process Press Statement on 5th April, 1991.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

5.16.5.2 Civil society organizations began to spring up which bore names that were indicative of their political agenda. The most prominent of these were: the Danquah-Busia Memorial Club, Our Heritage club, Kwame Nkrumah Welfare Society, Kwame Nkrumah Youngsters Club, Great Unity Club, the Ex-CPP Group, etc. In response to the emergence of these groups, the pro-Rawlings groups also formed the following clubs: Eagle Club, Friends of the Progressive Decade, Rawlings Fan Club, New Nation Club, Development Union, Development Club.¹²¹ These clubs eventually formed the nucleus of the political parties that were formed when the ban on political activities by the PNDC was lifted on 18th May, 1992.

5.16.5.3 A Referendum to approve the draft Constitution was held, amid criticisms that it was a waste of money. The GBA had argued that the Consultative Assembly should be given power to promulgate the Constitution. This was not done, nor was the Referendum made the occasion for the promulgation of the Constitution. The question for the Referendum was:

Do you approve of the Draft Constitution presented by the Consultative Assembly to the Provisional National Defence Council on Tuesday, 31st March, 1992 and published in the Gazette as the Constitution of the Republic of Ghana to come into force with effect from the 7th day of January, 1993?¹²²

5.16.5.4 The GBA complained that the formulation of the question for the referendum was unfair as it had rolled two questions into one:

namely whether the voter approves of the constitution as a whole, unreasonable though the question is, and secondly, whether the voter agrees that the constitution should come into force on 7th day of January, 1993, instead of immediately. These are two separate ideas and it should be possible to give a 'Yes' answer to the first while giving a 'No' answer to the second. To roll both questions into one question is, therefore, to prevent the people of Ghana from expressing effectively their views as to whether the Constitution should come into force from the moment of approval or whether its coming into force should be postponed for another 8 months after it has been approved.¹²³

5.16.5.5 A new Law on political parties was also promulgated to regulate the formation and administration of political parties. The Law set out the conditions and rules for the formation of political parties, as well as who was competent to form a party. The Law also dealt with the registration of political parties and stipulated among other conditions, that no party was to be formed on ethnic, regional, professional or religious basis; or use

¹²¹ Kwame Ninsin GHANA'S POLITICAL TRANSITION 1990-1993 Selected Documents Freedom Publications, Accra, 1996, p.129.

¹²² Executive Instrument No.18 of 1992.

¹²³ Ninsin, supra, p.145.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

words, slogans, symbols which could arouse ethnic, regional, professional or religious division, or use the symbols of the proscribed political parties.¹²⁴

5.16.5.6 As soon as the Political Parties Law was passed, and the lifting of the ban on political activities announced, there was a proliferation of parties, all of which announced their intention to contest the 1992 Presidential and Parliamentary Elections. Among the parties which emerged were the National Democratic Congress (NDC), the New Patriotic Party (NPP), the People's National Convention (PNC), the National Independence Party (NIP), the People's Heritage Party (PHP), the Ghana Democratic Republican Party (GDPP), the National Convention Party (NCP), the Egle Party, the New Generation Alliance (NGA), the National Justice Party, Good Citizens Party, Democratic People's Party (DPP), the Nkrumah National Party (NNP), the Concerned Citizens, Redemption Congress, Obaatan Pa Association, People's Party for Democracy and Development (PPDD), Great Consolidated People's Party (GCPP), etc. The manner in which political parties sprang up was criticized as being likely to create a situation in which some parties would end up "being composed of only founding and leading members, without a broad based membership"¹²⁵ Many of these did not survive to participate in the election.

5.16.5.7 These Political Parties claimed to be the inheritors of the legacy of Ghana's previous leaders. Those claiming the legacy of Dr. Kwame Nkrumah, President of the First Republic were: the PNC, PHP, NCP, NIP, NNP and PPDD. The NPP also traced its roots to the political tradition founded by Dr. J B Danquah and Dr. K A Busia. The NDC, the DPP and Egle claimed to be a continuation of the PNDC.

5.16.5.8 Some of these parties presented presidential candidates for the elections which were slated to be held one month ahead of the Parliamentary Elections in November and December respectively. Flt Lt J J Rawlings, Chairman of the PNDC was put up as the presidential candidate for four parties: the NDC, Egle Party, DPP and NCP, that had formed 'the Progressive Alliance'. The other parties had the following as their presidential candidates:

- NIP – Kwabena Darko;
- NPP -- Professor Adu Boahen;
- PHP – Lt-Gen Emmanuel A Erskine;
- PNC – Dr. Hilla Limann.

5.16.5.9 The banning of the old political parties and the prohibition of the use of their symbols under the Political Parties Law, was seen by the leaders of the new political parties as a violation of the fundamental human rights, in particular, freedom of association. They therefore decided to contest the issue in court, and 29 persons, all leaders of the opposition, joined in the suit. They were led by K A Gbedemah, and included such prominent politicians as B.J. da Rocha, Dr. Hilla Limann, and Professor A. Adu Boahen.¹²⁶ They sought a declaration that the Political Parties Law as published by the PNDC was a violation of the fundamental human rights of freedom of association of Ghanaians.

¹²⁴ Political Parties Law, 1992 (PNDC L 281), sections 2, 10 and 11; Ghanaian Times, vol. 10,892 Wednesday, 13th May, 1992, p.1.

¹²⁵ Ghanaian Times, Vol. 10,964 Thursday, 6th August, 1992, p.3. Comment by Kwaku Baah, a veteran politician and an Accra-based Legal Practitioner.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

5.16.5.10 This action was dismissed by the High Court, which invoked its inherent jurisdiction in order to declare that it had no jurisdiction to entertain the plaintiffs' action.¹²⁷ The Judge, Mr Justice Kwadu Amponsem, merely wished Ghana the "peace of God which passeth all understanding", and dismissed the suit. The newspapers reported that the court had struck out the case because it was frivolous and vexatious, yet the judge specifically stated that the court "was not saying that the Plaintiffs' action is frivolous and vexatious" (emphasis in original).¹²⁸ The Interim National Electoral Commission (INEC) therefore proceeded to put arrangements in place for the elections.

5.16.5.11 The parties warmed themselves up into the political game in 1992, when they received their certificates of registration and started vigorous campaigns to win political power. During the elections, soldiers were deployed in Kumasi to keep order, but it was generally felt that they had been deployed to intimidate the electorate. In spite of the fact that the political temperature was high, Ghanaians went through the Presidential Elections peacefully, with the National Democratic Congress (NDC) winning the Presidential Elections in November, 1992.

5.16.5.12 The opposition parties were not satisfied with the results, alleging various electoral malpractices. Consequently, all the parties, with the exception of the NCP, Egle party and DPP announced a boycott of the parliamentary elections.¹²⁹ These were the only elections for constitutional government that were held outside the terms of the 1992 Constitution that was to govern the affairs of the Republic.

5.16.5.13 Some activists of opposing parties in Kumasi, in particular, were arrested and detained for two weeks at the offices of the Bureau of National Investigations (BNI) in Accra. They were later released without charge. At Kwesimintsim in Takoradi, a man who was a well-known activist of the NDC was the victim of arson, leaving him nearly dead from severe burns. Activists of the NPP were immediately suspected and some prominent activists from Kwesimintsim were arrested and detained for about two months. There was evidence before the Commission that they were subjected to severe ill-treatment during the time in custody. They were eventually released when no evidence was found against them, and rumours emerged that the source of the arson was due to intra-party squabbles, and not inter-party rivalry.

¹²⁶ Ghanaian Times, Vol. 10,895 Saturday, 16th May, 1992, p.3.

¹²⁷ K.A. Gbedemah and 28 Others v. Interim National Electoral Commission. SUIT No 1087/1992; decided on 26th May, 1992 by Kwadu Amponsem J High Court, Accra.

¹²⁸ Ghanaian Times, Vol. 10,904 Wednesday, 27th May, 1992, p.1.

¹²⁹ Ghanaian Times Vol 11,034 Thursday, 5th November, 1992, p.1.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

5.16.5.14 The Fourth Republic was inaugurated on 7th January, 1993, the date for the coming into force of the 1992 Constitution.

5.17 CONCLUSION

5.17.1 Apart from a few which were formed between 1958 and 1968, most Professional Bodies (other than legal) and Civil Society Groups were formed in the 1970s and later. Professional Bodies and Civil Society Organizations are generally expected, by virtue of their learning and expertise, to be more concerned about and more actively involved in human rights issues and, therefore, spearhead the fight against human rights violations and abuses.

5.17.2 Admittedly, some voices were raised by some of the Professional Bodies and Civil Society organizations at gross human rights violations and abuses during the mandate period. However, these were too feeble, too sporadic and too disjointed to make the desired impact on society, because it was generally felt by professionals that human rights issues are the preserve of political parties and that politics was a vocation that could not be mixed with one's professional practice. Thus, the culture of respect for, and tutelage of human rights per se was hardly one of the objects of the Professional Bodies and Civil Society organizations dealt with in this chapter.

5.17.3 Evidence shows the Professional Bodies (as represented by the ARPB), and the Civil Society Organizations, were very active in the fight for constitutional governance, in particular, during the latter days of the SMC I, through the short-lived SMC II, the AFRC days and finally, during the PNDC regime. The ARPB deserves commendation; it was the loudest voice of opposition, at the time, to unconstitutionality, which was and gave rise to several gross violations and abuses of the human rights of the citizenry

5.17.4 Professional Bodies should not confine themselves to the pecuniary interests of their respective associations alone, but also avail themselves of the opportunity to make human rights interventions when necessary. They should make human rights education and protection an integral part of their professional responsibility and ethics.

5.17.5 Of the four Civil Society Organizations that sprang from the roots of the AFRC Revolution that are discussed in this chapter, only the MFJ was anti-PNDC right from its inception. The others, NDM, KNRG and DWM were overtly pro-PNDC, and therefore saw nothing wrong vis-à-vis human rights issues of the regime. Their concerns were merely ideological, or were focused on widening the support base for the PNDC, and could not be said to have championed human rights issues per se.

5.17.6 It has to be admitted, though, that at the time, in a country where nearly everyone and every institution had either been cowed into silence or co-opted by the PNDC Government, it was no surprise that most Civil Society organizations could only mind their own business, or join the government band wagon in perpetrating further violations and abuses against fellow citizens and institutions that dared march out of step and tune with the “revolution.”

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

5.17.7 During the mandate period, political parties however, had a lot to do either defending human rights or violating them or even condoning with their violations and abuse. In the pre-Independence period, political associations and groupings were themselves founded, based inadvertently or otherwise, on considerations that promoted one abuse or the other of human and social rights. They were mostly founded on ethnic or religious or regional affiliations. Only later, were those ethnic – religion – region-based political associations compelled by law to team up and form an opposition that was nationalist in aspect. This was good for the promotion of a sense of nationhood, in a newly-independent country.

5.17.8 Throughout the mandate period, however, the two main political traditions, namely, the CPP and the UP took turns in violating and abusing the human rights of sections of the citizenry, or in condoning violations and abuses as and when they (the parties) were in power or were allied with the military regime that had usurped constitutional governance. Thus, one cannot say of the political parties that they pursued an agenda of championing human rights. Indeed, when in power, they abused and violated them and seemed insensitive to the human rights of those supposedly in opposition.

5.17.9 Invariably, these political parties and their membership too suffered violations and abuses of their human and institutional rights, whenever their governments were ousted in the military take-overs that characterized the mandate period. The power to suppress the human rights of the opponent, was seen as one of the spoils of victory over the opponent.

5.17.10 All said and done, there was not, indeed, a good or even fair sense of the notion of fighting human rights causes, let alone their respect and support among the elite, the leadership and practitioners of party politics. This is a serious shortcoming that calls for remedial action. There is the need to inculcate into the rank and file of the citizenry and also into institutions and organizations such as Professional Bodies and Civil Society Organizations, the need to champion, and so develop the culture of respect for the human and civil rights of all.

5.17.11 In the context of the political parties, this need is paramount, if the art and good practice of partisan politics, the bedrock of good and democratic governance, is to be sustained and the harmonious co-existence of citizens, irrespective of their ethnic, religious or political affiliation, is to be ensured.

5.17.12 On Civil Society generally, an expert on national security has outlined the part that Civil Society plays in maintaining national political stability. According to him,

An irresponsible citizenry is as much a threat to national security as an irresponsible leadership... Where the people do not know their basic rights, or do not care to know, there is a problem, because they can be tossed about and manipulated not only by politicians, but by all those who seek to exercise authority over others. Again where the citizenry is irresponsible to the extent that basic laws and rules that regulate good conduct in the society are violated, in some cases with impunity, there is a problem... An irresponsible or discontented or frustrated or disillusioned people constitute a fertile base for insecurity.¹³⁰

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 5

5.17.13 Civil Society must take its share of the blame in the events that have produced massive human rights abuses in the country. It must now be appreciated by all, that taking to the streets and dancing to welcome a usurper, has always been the first step towards condoning, and even giving approval to, all human rights abuses committed by a particular regime. The need to know, respect, uphold and defend human rights is of paramount importance in the march for peace, freedom and justice.

5.17.14 It is clear on the evidence, that abuses are most brutal and rampant during periods of non-constitutional rule. Therefore, it is in the interest of all citizens that democratic and constitutional forms of government be maintained, to create space for the nurturing of a culture of respect for human and civil rights of the citizenry. Therefore, Civil Society also plays a part in ensuring that no usurper is tolerated, or given room to operate, even in the event of seizure of power. Civil Society and Civil Society Organizations must stand up and give meaning to those words in our National Anthem:

“And help us to resist oppressors rule with all our will and might forever more.”

¹³⁰ K B Quantson, Ghana: NATIONAL SECURITY: The Dilemma, NAPASVIL VENTURES, Accra, 2003, p.94.

CHAPTER SIX

THE STUDENT MOVEMENTS

6.0 INTRODUCTION

6.0.1 The Commission set out to examine the socio-political environment within which human rights abuses have occurred within the mandate period, and the role played by students, organized as political party wings on the campuses, as Student Representative Councils (SRCs), or as a movement known as the National Union of Ghana Students (NUGS). This chapter has chronicled the activities of the student movements during the mandate period, and has thrown some light on the experiences of their leaders and other prominent activists, either when the patron-governments were overthrown, or because their activities were a challenge to the sitting government. The Commission did not include in its focus of study, movements on the student-front that were not of political significance.

6.0.2 The chapter has also captured the flow of tides that characterized student-government relationships in some detail, to enable the public to follow the history of these movements within the mandate period; understand the activities of these movements under military and civilian regimes; appreciate their importance in the socio-political history of Ghana; be provided with the reasons for change and continuity in these movements; and also understand why some of the movements underwent a transformation, whilst others ceased to exist altogether.

6.1 PRE-INDEPENDENCE

6.1.1 The National Union of Gold Coast Students (NUGS) (later National Union of Ghana Students) was founded in about 1950 as the national representative of the World Youth Assembly, a body composed largely of university students, of which the Gold Coast was a member.¹ This is understandable in view of the fact that the Gold Coast acquired a university institution in 1948. At that time, NUGS was an official organ with no power but it was transformed into a powerful organization in the 1960s. Agbodeka attributes this development to the coming into being of university-authority-sponsored Student Representative Councils, the breakdown of the Hall tutorial system and “the changing values of Ghanaian society”.² Whatever that expression was intended to mean, it does not appear to take into account the rise of nationalism, the adoption of socialism as the national politico-economic philosophy and the transformation of Ghana into a One-Party State where all sections were mobilized into one unit for purposes of national development. It would appear that these events produced a chain of actions and reactions over time that transformed the NUGS from a mere association of university students to a major player in national politics. As subsequent evidence shows, the students were neither oblivious to, nor untouched by the national politics of the day.

¹ Francis Agbodeka, A History of the University of Ghana. Half a century of Higher Education (1948-1998) Woeli Publishing Services, Accra, 1998. p.133.

² Ibid; also Memorandum to the National Reconciliation Commission.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

6.2 6TH MARCH, 1957 -- 23RD FEBRUARY, 1966:
CONVENTION PEOPLE'S PARTY (CPP) GOVERNMENT

6.2.1 Students And National Politics

6.2.1.1 The independence movement involved all sectors of Gold Coast society and this obviously included students. Oquaye observes that there were several youth groups in the forefront of social change, including the Ga Students Association in the then University College of the Gold Coast.³ Thus, students were active in national politics right from the time when the independence movement picked up steam. Indeed, it was as a result of the involvement in political activity that a group of students in some schools in Cape Coast and their teachers were dismissed in 1949, leading to the founding of the Ghana National College in Cape Coast in order to enable them to complete their education. It, however, took a while before the students were organized as a political entity.

6.2.1.2 The National Union of Gold Coast Students (NUGS) being the official body of the student-representation at the time assumed the role of students' mouthpiece. Upon the attainment of Independence, the union changed the 'Gold Coast' part of its name to 'Ghana' but kept its acronym 'NUGS'. Not too long after Independence, NUGS began to be critical of some of the government's policies. In 1958, the use of the Deportation Act to silence opposition politicians of the Moslem Association Party (MAP) by deporting them to their countries of origin excited critical murmurs of the students. By 1959, these murmurs had matured into public expressions of disaffection and the students courted the ire of the government when they adopted a resolution that publicly criticised the passage and use of the Preventive Detention Act (PDA), 1958 (CA 7), to detain opposition figures, at its annual conference of 1959. The government's response according to Rathbone, was to "consider seriously the withdrawal of scholarships of all members of the union's executive". In the end, based on the intercession of the Minister of Education, Cabinet agreed to reprimand them instead.⁴

³ Mike Oquaye, "Youth, Politics and Society in Ghana" in Civil Society in Ghana F.K. Drah and M. Oquaye (eds) Accra, Friedrich Ebert Foundation, 1996; chapter 10, p.163 at p.175.

⁴ Richard Rathbone, Nkrumah & the Chiefs. The Politics of Chieftaincy in Ghana 1957-60 pp.152-153.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 66.2.2 THE CONVENTION PEOPLE'S PARTY STUDENTS UNION

6.2.2.1 Students were involved in partisan national politics before Independence. By June, 1960, a branch of the Convention People's Party, Convention People's Party Students Union (CPPSU), had been established on the campus of the University College of Ghana and was ready for inauguration. At the inauguration, the Prime Minister, Dr. Kwame Nkrumah, exhorted the students thus:

You who have come together to form this Union subscribe to the programme of the Convention Peoples' Party. You, and those that will join you, are a body of Ghanaian youth seeking knowledge in order to find truth. Your studentship of this College and your membership of the party are not incompatible. On the contrary they are complementary to the extent that the knowledge acquired by studentship is made relative to real issues of our country by membership of Convention People's Party.⁵

6.2.2.2 The CPPSU was very active on the campus of University College of Ghana (UCG) and through the members, the CPP exercised great influence on campus. The government believed the college "had been associated with anti-Convention People's Party attitudes, which is the equivalent of saying that the University College is anti-government of the day"⁶. The Prime Minister expressed the hope that the presence of the Union was evidence of the "warm new life which is being injected into its veins by the presence in its halls of the Convention People's Party."⁷

6.2.2.3 The division and dissension that existed on the Legon campus was real, as an atmosphere of fear was created on the campuses. Students reported on their colleague-students as well as on their lecturers. The dissension on the university campuses was exemplified by an event that occurred in 1965, and which Oquaye recounted as follows:

At a formal dinner in Commonwealth Hall, L. O. Cantey a fifth year law student led students to observe a minute's silence in Danquah's memory.[Dr. J.B. Danquah had been detained under the Preventive Detention Act and had died whilst in detention.] The CPP group in the hall led by R.A. Atta-Kesson and J.C. Akosah fiercely resisted the popular will to no avail. The following day, the CPP flag in Legon which had also become the national flag was found torn. Cantey and others were arrested and detained till after the 1966 coup.⁸

6.2.2.4 With such incidents and the existence of a "web of spies that had been established in the universities and the application of the Preventive Detention Act against protesting

⁵ Dr. Kwame Nkrumah, "Come Down To Earth" 5th June, 1960 Selected Speeches of Kwame Nkrumah, Samuel Obeng (ed) vol 1 Afram Publications, Accra 1997 p.78.

⁶ Ibid.

⁷ Ibid., p.79.

⁸ Oquaye, supra, p.181.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

students”,⁹ it was no surprise that members of the CPPSU were the target of reprisals when the regime fell. Many students who belonged to the group were badly beaten up by some of their fellow students, and some were also detained in February, 1966.

6.2.3 THE NATIONAL AFRICAN SOCIALIST STUDENTS ORGANISATION (NASSO)

6.2.3.1 The National African Socialist Students Organisation (NASSO) was formed as the educational wing of the CPP. Although a party organ, NASSO operated as a state-sponsored organization of students who espoused the ideology of African Socialism - the official ideology of the CPP. It had local as well as international branches (in particular, in the United Kingdom) and it was to this organisation that the task of forming party study groups to study African Socialism was consigned. It also had the task of studying and explaining party decisions, programmes and policies of the government in order to achieve the “‘cipification’ of the national life”¹⁰. The intrusion of national politics into academic life was therefore mandated.

6.2.3.2 According to student activists of the time, NASSO though a student movement, enjoyed privileged status on campus. For instance, on the campuses, it had offices whilst NUGS had no office of its own. Members of NASSO were favoured with government attention and even sent to the Kwame Nkrumah Ideological Institute at Winneba to deepen their knowledge of socialist ideological thinking.

6.2.3.3 When the 1966 coup d’état occurred, some prominent members of NASSO on the Legon campus were held in “protective custody”. At the UST, the NASSO students burnt the records of the organization on the night of 24th February, fearing that records bearing their names would set them up for political reprisals.¹¹ There was general insecurity on campus as these students worried about their fate. NASSO continued to exist in international circles on account of the students on government scholarship abroad. Its ranks were considerably thinned by the discontinuation of scholarships of certain students by a screening of all students on government scholarship. This exercise of determining who was a “genuine” student caused a lot of pain as it was seen to be arbitrary. Many otherwise genuine students lost their scholarships in the middle of their academic programmes.

⁹ Ibid.

¹⁰ Dr. Kwame Nkrumah, “The Kwame Nkrumah Institute” Speech at the laying of the Foundation Stone of and the Inauguration of the First Course of the Ideological Section of the Institute; 18th Feb., 1961, in Selected Speeches Of Kwame Nkrumah, Samuel Obeng (ed.) Vol. 2 Afram Publications, Accra, 1997 p.5 at p.12.

¹¹ Memorandum to National Reconciliation Commission.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

6.2.3.4 The overthrow of the government in 1966 by and large ended the life and influence of NASSO within the country although the international branches operated for some time.

6.2.4 THE NATIONAL UNION OF GHANA STUDENTS (NUGS)

6.2.4.1 The loss of NASSO was the gain of NUGS. As the evidence showed, the leadership of NUGS nearly lost their scholarships as a result of their criticism of the operation of the PDA in 1959. It was thus no favourite of the government, and in 1964, six of its leaders including A.K.P. Kludze a Law student; Yao Fiagbe, a student of Pharmacy; and one Easmon, a student of Engineering, got into difficulties with the government and were detained under the PDA. It was therefore not surprising that the NUGS would achieve prominence as the official mouthpiece of students in the country, when the government was overthrown. Although Agbodeka indicates that the “politicization of student issues” occurred after the 1966 coup,¹² this does not accurately reflect the state of the student movement of the time because politicization of students and consequently issues affecting them had become a phenomenon by 1966. According to his own findings:

Around October 1964 it was alleged that certain people enjoying a considerable measure of public favour began to incite the university students to ‘watch out for’ and ‘expose’ those of their lecturers in whom they thought they detected unsuitable ideological tendencies.¹³

Although the author excuses these activities on the grounds of necessity imposed by “violent opposition creeping into Ghanaian politics”, it is certain that well before this time, students had become involved in national politics and that NUGS rose up to fill a vacuum created by the demise of the CPP-sponsored student groups.

6.2.4.2 The student-body expressed great support for the act of the coup-makers who consequently formed the National Liberation Council (NLC). Indeed early in the morning of the day after the coup, i.e. 25th February, 1966, the students poured onto the streets of Accra and demonstrated the entire day in support of the coup d’état. The student-body expressed its support for the overthrow of the First Republic in unmistakable terms. There is little documentary evidence of opposition within the student community although one could not overlook the fact that there was such severe repression of CPP-related activity and the suppression of CPP-related documentation, that any exhibition of support for CPP and the former President would have landed that person or organization in serious trouble. It is thus an irresistible conclusion that although a powerful role had developed for students within national politics by the activities of the state-sponsored groups, all of these had died with the end of the regime.

¹² Agbodeka, op cit supra, p.225.

¹³ Ibid. p.148 et seq.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

6.2.5 THE UNIVERSITY COMMUNITY AND ACADEMIC FREEDOM

6.2.5.1 The university community is made up of staff and students. These component parts were affected in various ways. For instance, when lecturers or Hall officials were detained or dismissed or deported, it became a matter of concern for the students as they lost teachers and such other persons as made their lives what they wished it to be, on the campus. In November, 1961, the President was formally installed as the Chancellor of both the University of Ghana and the Kwame Nkrumah University of Science and Technology (KNUST). These positions gave him an opportunity to relate to the universities in a dual capacity: as President and as Chancellor. In the latter capacity, the Chancellor sought to control the university even to the extent of appointing professors.

6.2.5.2 A cleavage occurred between the academics and the political authorities, and as it widened, lecturers of the University of Ghana were dismissed or deported and academic freedom came under direct attack. At a university dinner in February, 1963, the President gave the assurance of his absolute respect for academic freedom and urged the staff to uphold it for “scholars must be free to pursue the truth and to publish the results of their researches without fear, for true scholarship fears nothing”.¹⁴ However, in the same speech he stated that academic freedom could “become the dangerous cloak for activities outside the academic interests and pre-occupations of the community or of the university”, and he urged the academics to “be ready to expose those individuals in the university itself who abuse academic freedom”.¹⁵ These were ominous words for it appeared that academic freedom in the nature of the “freedom to pursue the truth” was not absolute, but was limited to ideas that the government found acceptable.

6.2.5.3 The relationship between the academics and government continued to deteriorate, and by 1964, students were being incited to report on those of their lecturers who espoused “unsuitable ideological tendencies” so that they could be taken to task.¹⁶ Indeed, on 18th February, 1964, E W Nortey Dowuona, Member of Parliament for Accra East, when contributing to the Debate on the Constitution (Amendment) Bill made an ominous prediction:

The temptation given by the colonialists to our Judges to nurture the notion that they were above the law itself and the State, has now been removed and they have now been helped to realize the fact that there is a limit to everything. I pray that soon, indeed very soon, we should help

¹⁴ Dr. Kwame Nkrumah, “University Dinner” 24th February, 1963 Selected Speeches of Kwame Nkrumah, Samuel Obeng (ed) vol 5 Afram Publications, Accra, 1997, p.10 at p.11.

¹⁵ Ibid., p.13.

¹⁶ Agbodeka, supra, p.148.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

students of our universities and their tutors also to realize this fact and behave accordingly.¹⁷

6.2.5.4 In the latter part of 1964, a committee was announced to have been formed by the government to inspect books and publications in the bookshops and libraries of the universities to ensure that those that were not in consonance with the ideology of the Convention People's Party would be removed.¹⁸ The Vice-Chancellor had to address the students on the essence of university education and the importance of developing habits of critical thinking as an integral part of the students' ability to advance the development of the country.¹⁹

6.2.5.5 NUGS itself did not escape the ravages of the PDA. In 1964, it reacted to the decision to hold a referendum to enable the President have power to remove the Chief Justice and other Judges on a panel that had acquitted the accused persons in an infamous treason trial involving an attempt on the life of the President by the explosion of a bomb. NUGS believed that this was contrary to the tenets of democracy and issued a statement condemning the act in a campaign for the restoration of the rule of law. The response to this condemnation was for CPP "loyalists" to invade the campus in "an unbelievable demonstration of the masses against the University"²⁰. The university students were asked to go home and vote, but other observers opined that the universities had been deliberately closed down in order to prevent the students from demonstrating against the referendum.²¹ As already stated, the leaders of the NUGS campaign were arrested and detained²² and this event silenced the students and a feeling of insecurity developed on the campus.

6.2.5.6 The government's anxiety to curb the independence of the universities was manifested by moves made through the students to achieve ideological subjugation of the students, most of who were at an impressionable age. It therefore directed in 1964, that a mandatory period of two weeks ideological orientation at the Kwame Nkrumah Ideological Institute for all students should become a condition precedent to admission into university.²³ It is uncertain what successes this policy achieved, perhaps except to breed more secret resentment against the party and the government. These developments may explain why the students poured onto the streets of Accra on the day after the coup and demonstrated the entire day in support of the overthrow of the government.

¹⁷ Parliamentary Debates Official Report First Series, vol. 34, 15th October, 1963-21st February, 1964. Debate of 18th February, 1964, p.1126.

¹⁸ Ibid., p.149.

¹⁹ Ibid.

²⁰ L.H.Ofosu Appiah, "Authority and the Individual in Ghana's Educational System" vol.II No. 2 The Legon Observer, 1967, p.16.

²¹ L.H.Ofosu Appiah, "Authority and the Individual in Ghana's Educational System" vol.II No. 1 The Legon Observer, 6-19 Jan. 1967, p.8.

²² Oquaye, supra, p.181.

²³ Ibid., p.180.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 66.3 24TH FEBRUARY, 1966 -- 30TH SEPTEMBER, 1969:
 NATIONAL LIBERATION COUNCIL (NLC)*6.3.1 NUGS

6.3.1.1 On 24th February, 1966, the Government of the CPP led by President Nkrumah, was overthrown by a group of military and police officers. The coup was led by Col Emmanuel K. Kotoka, Maj Akwasi A. Afrifa, John W.K. Harlley (Commissioner of Police) and Anthony K. Deku (Commissioner of Police) who with others formed the National Liberation Council (NLC) with Lieutenant-General Joseph A. Ankrah as Chairman. The NLC was established to replace the overthrown government. This development electrified the student front, and they poured out onto the streets in support of the change of government. It was against this background that the first invasion of the UST campus by the police occurred.

6.3.1.2 According to contemporary accounts that are confirmed by the report of the Committee of Enquiry into the KNUST Affairs, the students had grievances against the university administration and the Vice-Chancellor Dr. R.P. Baffour. Before the 1966 coup, the students had grievances such as: the arbitrary withdrawal of a week-end bus service to town; poor catering services; official high-handedness; inadequate accommodation; conflicts between the workers and students; and several other petty grievances. In addition, the Vice-Chancellor was accused of practising occultism²⁴; siting of the KNUST Guest House at Elmina (Elmina, in the Central Region, is off the beaten track and had no relationship with the hospitality needs of the university, except being the hometown of the Vice-Chancellor); nepotism in favour of persons hailing from Elmina in employment and promotion of staff in general, and the university laundry in particular. In addition to these, the students were disappointed when their NUGS leaders were detained and the Vice-Chancellor who had promised to help secure their release because of his personal relationship with President Nkrumah, was unable to do so. When the coup occurred in 1966, the students decided to demonstrate against him and his administration for being unable to resolve their grievances. It must almost certainly have been a factor that with his political connections gone, he had become vulnerable enough for the students to mount a public protest.

6.3.1.3 The demonstration was timed to take advantage of a scheduled visit by the leaders of the NLC, Col Kotoka and Maj Afrifa, who were then paying an official visit to Kumasi. This was because some of the students were the school mates, and indeed, even classmates of Maj Afrifa at Adisadel College, and so they intended to take advantage of their relationship, to make their grievances known. The students planned to meet the convoy of the NLC near the University Hospital to present their petition to the new national leaders. The students started the protest on the campus and went to the house of the Vice-Chancellor. He had then left for his office and so they followed up there. At this point, reports have it, that the Vice-Chancellor called in the police to suppress the demonstration.²⁵ It was therefore with some surprise that the students found that the police had come onto the campus with armoured cars to prevent them from marching to the agreed spot near the University Hospital. A confrontation ensued between the police who were under orders to prevent the students from getting to that spot, and the students who were determined to get there to present their petition. The fight led by the students cadet corps, led to the arrest and detention at the Kumasi Zongo Police Station, of four students: J H Owusu-Acheampong, Kwasi Abeasi, Seth Anipa and Emil Dove.

²⁴ He was reported to be using a certain “pendulum” as a means of determining culpability in matters involving student-problems.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

6.3.1.4 Despite these clashes, the students did not give up, but intercepted the convoy and threw copies of the petition into the vehicles as they passed. When the leaders of the NLC read the petition and discovered that it was about student grievances, they agreed to meet with the student-leaders. A meeting between them resulted in the withdrawal of the police from the campus. When the students later learnt that the police action was occasioned by information from the Vice-Chancellor to the Police Commander, that some Malian students had linked up with a few Ghanaian students to intercept the convoy of the NLC members and cause mayhem, they understood the ferocity of the police response. They then moved for an investigation into the incident as well as into their grievances. The government set up a committee of enquiry. The students hired their own counsel and decided to pay counsel's fees by forgoing dessert in the dining hall for a period, thereby making savings on the funds allocated for their feeding.

6.3.1.5 The report of the committee resulted in the removal of Dr R P Baffour as Vice-Chancellor of KNUST (which had by this time undergone a name change from KNUST to UST, dropping the name 'Kwame Nkrumah').

6.3.1.6 However, these matters were brought into sharper focus when the students also began to enjoy "liberation" to the extent that authorities of the universities began to worry about their activities on campus.²⁶ Ironically, the troubles at UST led once again to another closure of the University of Ghana during this period of "liberation".

6.3.1.7 More than a year on, the support was still solid; for, on 17th April, 1967, when an abortive coup against the NLC resulted in the death of Lt-Gen Kotoka, one of the leaders of the coup and a member of the NLC, NUGS issued a statement condemning the coup attempt and said, among other things:

Students this is the hour for concerted action. The future of Ghana which is yours is at stake. Be alert. Be prepared for anything. Stand by now. Long live Ghana.²⁷

²⁵ Memorandum to National Reconciliation Commission.

²⁶ Ibid., p181.

²⁷ NUGS notice on 17th April, 1967. vol II No.2 Legon Observer, 28th April, 1967, p.16.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

This statement indicated that the students were even contemplating physical resistance to the coup d'état. Indeed one writer describes the relationship between the students and the government of the NLC as "cordial."²⁸

6.3.1.8 In general, 1968 was a difficult year for students and their authorities. There were strikes and demonstrations in secondary schools, training colleges and even in the universities. In at least one case, some students were put before court for unlawful procession,²⁹ but in most others the students were sent home and the schools closed down. So many of these incidents involved the destruction of school property that the Commissioner for Education, Modjaben Dowuona had to administer a caution that students responsible for such destruction would be surcharged with the cost of repair. In October, 1968, a major upheaval occurred on the campus of the University of Ghana on account of four students who had been rusticated for publishing obscene material in the Siren, the student magazine of the Mensah Sarbah Hall. The student body refused to attend lectures and in the ensuing confusion, the police was brought in to maintain order. The university was closed down on 30th October, 1968,³⁰ and was re-opened about four weeks later. The students were made to sign a declaration to be of good behaviour; to observe the Statutes of the University; and to pursue their studies with diligence.

6.3.1.9 These protests were against the institution's authorities and did not involve the government directly. Indeed the government expressed regret at the sight of steel-helmeted police on campus and hoped that those kinds of incidents would not recur. The government also pledged its intention to respect academic freedom and the autonomy of academic institutions.

6.3.1.10 Within this period, there were many student demonstrations in the various academic institutions, resulting in their closure for periods of time. One even ended in the courts. Thirty-two students of Amaniampong Secondary School were put before court and remanded in custody for rioting and destroying school property.³¹ From the length and breadth of the country, students took to the streets in protest against their school authorities, and it was as if the whole student front was on the boil. The verdict at the time was that students were also expressing their "liberation", and that the coup had created indiscipline among students. However valid the assertion was, it must not be forgotten that 1968 was a very tumultuous year for students in Europe and the United States of America as well, and that there might have been some global influences on the student movement.

²⁸ Oquaye, supra, p.183.

²⁹ Students of Akrokerri Training College were prosecuted for going on demonstration and destroying school property. Daily Graphic vol. 5405 Friday, 16th February, 1968, p.1.

³⁰ Agbodeka, supra, p.225.

³¹ Daily Graphic, vol. 5430 Saturday, 16th March, 1968, back page.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

6.3.1.11 In general, however, the relationship between NUGS and the government remained cordial. NUGS tried to reform itself by adopting a new Constitution and restructuring its operations so that it could be the mouthpiece of all students in Ghana, instead of just university students. At this time, there were opposing views as to whether or not the NLC should remain in power or hand over to a civilian government. The latter position, espoused by Professor Kofi Abrefa Busia in a statement advocating an early return to civilian rule,³² generated great controversy which was warmly embraced in academic circles. Despite the cordiality between the students and the NLC, they, being a part of the academic community, were not left out of the reckoning. They waded into the fray and their front was split on this matter of the length of stay in office by the NLC. Vigorous though the debates were, there were no physical clashes between the proponents and opponents, and NUGS as a body, insisted that it would remain neutral in politics when the ban on political activity was lifted and that it would not throw its weight behind any particular party.

6.4 1ST OCTOBER, 1969 - 12TH JANUARY, 1972:
THE SECOND REPUBLIC PROGRESS PARTY (PP) GOVERNMENT

6.4.1 NUGS

6.4.1.1 The ferment on the student-front continued. So numerous were the student disturbances that Parliament was forced to take note of the phenomenon. By 1971, Parliament had taken a decision to set up a Committee on Student Unrest to study the phenomenon since students of every level were taking to the streets to protest one thing or the other. Most of these protests were violent, and led to the destruction of public property. The Parliamentary Committee was made up of the following Honourable Members: K B Ntim (Chairman), Harry Sawyerr, Sam Okudzeto, J A Anyan, Victor Aidoo, T K Agadzi, S.A.Manson.³³

6.4.1.2 In 1970, the economy was in bad shape and people grumbled about the level of affluence being exhibited by the government. In a classic display of intellectual arrogance, a Ph.D student of the University of Ghana, G.C. Hutchful, confronted Prime Minister Busia whilst on a visit to the campus and told him bluntly “It is a disgrace to the country for you and your entourage to ride on Mercedes Benz cars. Why don’t you ride in smaller cars like Morris Minor? Why all this motorcade?”

6.4.1.3 In April, 1971, NUGS issued a statement calling upon the government to grant amnesty to all Ghanaians in exile, particularly ex-President Dr. Kwame Nkrumah, and all other Ghanaians who had gone into political exile since 1966 so that they could return and help to rebuild the nation. This call infuriated the government. Oheneba Kow

³² Ibid.

³³ Parliamentary Debates of Second Republic, 23rd March, 1971, pp.912-913.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

Richardson of the Prime Minister's Office described the students' statement as "treacherous and treasonable". The Prime Minister's spokesman declared further "their action is overtly meaningful otherwise the NUGS could not have the courage to go to the treasonable extent of raising matters of political implications as contained in their statement."³⁴ He further went on and called them "the little minds of our society today" and warned them not to take the government's magnanimity for a licence as they:

were aware of that scourge of young pioneer movement is making itself manifest in the students who when they were youngsters, joined that movement and were indoctrinated in the act of carrying out political manoeuvres.

6.4.1.4 This harsh response did not appear to have been justified unless one takes cognizance of the frayed relations that existed between the government and the students as a body. Indeed, soon after this diatribe, the NUGS President, Albert Cann Tamakloe, was accused by the President of Progress Clubs (the club of students of the Progress Party), that he was hiding behind NUGS to form a political party with the TUC leader B A Bentum. The President of the Progress Clubs stated firmly that:

we cannot deny them the right to form political parties or join hands with existing political parties, but we deny them the right to involve the whole student body and the entire workers of this country in their ...personal ambition for political power.³⁵

6.4.1.5 The President of NUGS defended the effort to co-operate with the TUC, but denied that they were forming a political party.³⁶ He further explained that the idea had been mooted as far back as 1969, before he came into office as president. His defence notwithstanding, the Progress Clubs of Universities called on executives of NUGS to resign forthwith. The students further threatened that the failure of the NUGS Executive to resign would result in inviting the government to consider the advisability of withdrawing recognition of NUGS.³⁷ This was a very serious split in the students' front. It showed that student political activists were willing to get the government to ban their own student union merely because they did not agree with the anti-government stance of their leadership.

6.4.1.6 NUGS went to its annual congress and resolved to give an ultimatum to the political leaders to declare their assets, as required the Constitution. Subsequently, the leadership got into difficulties with Parliament over their alleged misrepresentation of communication between the leadership and the Speaker on the issue of assets declaration. The President and Secretary of NUGS were hauled before Parliament on a charge of contempt, and they were made to render a formal apology to the House. This act of ³⁴ Daily Graphic, vol. 6377 7th April, 1971.

³⁵ Daily Graphic, vol. 6392 Saturday, 24th April, 1971, p.3.

³⁶ Daily Graphic, vol. 6393 Monday, 26th April, 1971, p.3.

³⁷ Daily Graphic, vol. 6404 Saturday, 8th May, 1971, back page.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

humiliation was not calculated to endear the Busia administration to the leadership of the student movement.

6.4.1.7 The government proposed the student loan for university students instead of the full scholarships that every student was enjoying and planned to implement it in the next academic year of 1972-73. This loan scheme proposal did not go down well with the students as it meant that they were no longer going to enjoy university education that was completely free. NUGS criticized the University Loans Scheme as “reactionary and premature”, and further complained that the government’s efforts to solve the country’s problem and that of the university had been misplaced. NUGS therefore suggested that a fuller review of the whole structure of university education be undertaken instead.³⁸ Prior to this formal reaction of NUGS, students of UST had gone on a four-hour demonstration against the scheme, and a like demonstration at University College of Cape Coast (UCCC) had been averted only at the last minute by the intervention of the Parliamentary Committee on Student Unrest.³⁹

6.4.1.8 In addition to the issue of student loans, the government was also proposing to enter into “dialogue” with apartheid South Africa, instead of the total freeze in relations favoured by the Organisation of African Unity (OAU), and pan-Africanists in general. The policy, termed “Dialogue with South Africa”, was considered reactionary by the students, who had been raised on the Nkrumaist policy of total liberation of the African continent from imperialist domination, and they strongly opposed it. The relationship between the government and students was thus not very cordial when the military struck again on 13th January, 1972.

13TH JANUARY 1972 -- 3RD JUNE, 1979:
NATIONAL REDEMPTION COUNCIL (NRC)/
SUPREME MILITARY COUNCIL (SMC) I & II

6.5 NRC/SMC I6.5.1 NUGS

6.5.1.1 The reaction of the student body to the military takeover was predictable. The new Government of the National Redemption Council (NRC) led by Colonel Ignatius Kutu Acheampong, promptly revoked the policy on the loan scheme, cancelled the devaluation; announced the repudiation of Ghana’s external debt otherwise known as the “Yentua” (“We won’t pay”) policy; and renounced “Dialogue with South Africa”. All these policies had the desired result of pleasing the student body and ensuring the support of that constituency. The agricultural programme of food self-sufficiency for the nation

³⁸ Daily Graphic, vol. 6447 Monday, 28th June, 1971, p.5.

³⁹ Daily Graphic, vol. 6442 Tuesday 22nd June, 1971, back page.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

known as “Operation Feed Yourself” won instant support from the students. So voluble was the support expressed by the students, that the Chairman of the NRC publicly thanked students of the universities for their support.⁴⁰

6.5.1.2 At the 9th NUGS Congress in 1972, the students called for the death penalty for those who would be found guilty of embezzlement and misappropriation of funds; and to vest all land in the state.⁴¹ NUGS took a further decision to demonstrate their support for the government in more concrete terms. A decision was taken to volunteer services to help in national development, by constructing irrigation canals and other infrastructure for improving agriculture. The most famous of these were the construction of the Dawhenya Irrigation Project canal, which was required for the production of rice and the harvesting of sugarcane at Komenda to feed the sugar factory. As a contemporary account goes:

Dawhenya was probably the peak of the cordial relations between students and the Acheampong Government. Streams of students literally kept flooding to this camp every day in support of the government’s laudable plan to build an irrigation scheme for the area.⁴²

It was great fun for the students as well as a big help to the nation.

6.5.1.3 Soon, the relationship between the students and the government began to deteriorate as the government began to propose policies that the students did not support. According to the NUGS President of 1972-73, the students’ position was influenced by interests external to the student body. He has stated as follows:

The students supported the coup d’état of Colonel Acheampong because apart from the problems with the Busia Government, the student movement was under the influence of the old CPP politicians, in particular, Kojo Botsio, the Father of all radicalism at the time. Although the CPP had been banned. Botsio was recognized by all as the father-figure of the CPP. Since the radical lecturers of the UCC tended to be CPP inclined, they all looked up to him for leadership and consequently, the student movement with its leadership then at UCC, was heavily influenced by him as the leader of the CPP.

When I became a student leader, I was introduced to CPP stalwarts such as Kojo Botsio, Dan Lartey, Tawia Adamafio, etc. by Dr. S.B. Arthur, who had great influence on us at UST. These national political figures gave us political direction in relation to student agitation and student demonstrations.

⁴⁰ Daily Graphic, vol. 6667, Monday, 13th March, 1972, p.1.

⁴¹ Ibid.

⁴² Memorandum to the National Reconciliation Commission.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

It was on account of this influence that NUGS and the student body showed such support for the coup d'état that was thought to be CPP-inspired. At an executive meeting, NUGS decided to demonstrate its support for the government by supporting the 'Operation Feed Yourself' Policy. This decision culminated in the "Walatu Walasa" at Dawhenya by the construction of an irrigation canal, and the harvesting of sugar-cane for the Komenda and Asutsuare sugar factories by students. Although it was the Cann-Tamakloe administration that planned the programme, I had to implement it. I had no choice but to continue in that vein.

The relationship between the students and government soured when the relationship between Acheampong and Botsio turned sour. They [Colonel Acheampong and Mr. Kojo Botsio] fell out over the political direction of the government, and General Acheampong even had a conversation with me during which he warned me as NUGS President to be careful of the leftist Lecturers and the 'Kojo Botsio group' under whose influence we operated. He told me that he knew Botsio wanted to overthrow him and so I was to be careful in my dealings with those people as they were leading us into doing things we did not fully understand.⁴³

6.5.1.4 The Acheampong Government also began to irritate the students with policies of which they disapproved. For instance, there was a suggestion that all students of tertiary institutions should undergo military training as National Service. This proposal eventually was transformed into the National Service Scheme as it now operates by the intervention of NUGS. Kabral Blay-Amihere gives the credit for the decision of NUGS to vote for National Service in the form in which it now is, to Professor Akilagkpa Sawyerr who addressed them at the NUGS Congress in 1973 and dissuaded the militant UCCC group from opting for military training.

6.5.1.5 At the 1973 Congress, NUGS formally adopted the ideology of Scientific Socialism as its official ideology. By this time, the Arab Oil crisis was underway and the economy had taken a turn for the worse. Rumours of corruption began to seep to the campuses, and students began to be unhappy with the government. The first major protest by students of the three universities was sparked off by an assault on a student of the University of Ghana, Kwesi Doe, by soldiers at Ho in the Volta Region. The act of the protesters, who failed to get to town from Legon as a result of a military blockade on the main Legon-Accra road, presaged more violent confrontations with the government later on.

6.5.1.6 In 1975, police brutalities on the campus of University of Ghana against striking workers of the university claimed a student-victim – Mekki Abbas, a Sudanese student of Legon Hall. The Police were using live ammunition to suppress the demonstration and a bullet killed the student who was not associated with the demonstration in any way. This incident caused great anger among the students and greatly embarrassed the government. The government sent a delegation to the Sudan to hand the body over to the Sudanese authorities, and gave a place on the delegation to the students. The students were represented by a Legon Hall student, Joe Dankwa who later became a police officer himself.

⁴³ Memorandum to the National Reconciliation Commission.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

6.5.1.7 The 1975-76 academic year was full of restlessness among students. The economy was deteriorating whilst senior military officers were beginning to exhibit opulence in lifestyle, in a manner that did not match the general deteriorating economic conditions in the country. The students met the visiting United States Ambassador to the United Nations with protests at the Kotoka International Airport. The government was very unhappy about the incident and it reinforced the bad blood that had developed between it and the students. The government issued a stern warning to the student leadership to desist from such confrontations that had embarrassing international ramifications for the government. In May, 1976, the students had a major confrontation with the government over the deteriorating economic conditions. According to accounts of a contemporary student leader,⁴⁴ this demonstration was meant to be an on-campus affair to present a petition to the Vice-Chancellor on the general conditions on campus and the deteriorating living conditions of the students. The government got wind of the demonstration and sent word to the student leaders to confine their activities to the campus. The leaders gave this assurance, but the demonstrators decided to hit the streets of Accra with their grievances. A confrontation with the police occurred at the university gates, dubbed “The battle of the Gate”, and a number of students sustained minor injuries.

6.5.1.8 The year 1977 opened with a report that at the 13th Annual NUGS Congress of the previous December, the Congress had adopted a resolution that called for the adoption of a One-Party Socialist system of government instead of the Union Government (Unigov) concept.⁴⁵ However, within a few months thereafter, NUGS held a press conference at the National Cultural Centre in Kumasi at which it made a call on the Supreme Military Council (SMC) to lift the ban on party politics since it was busily campaigning for its own Unigov idea.⁴⁶ In January, NUGS made an appeal to the government to help reinstate fifteen First Year students of University of Ghana who had been dismissed for attacking the Deputy Registrar of the University on 8th December, 1976. This led to a stand-off between the students and the university authorities. Eventually, some of the students were recalled, but the students wanted the sanctions lifted altogether. The university stuck to its guns and so the students appealed to the government.

6.5.1.9 At this time 50 students of UST had also been deprived of their residential status as punishment for breaching some university regulations. NUGS took up both causes and ⁴⁴ Memorandum to the National Reconciliation Commission.

⁴⁵ Daily Graphic, vol 8156 Saturday, 8th January, 1977.

⁴⁶ Mike Oquaye, Politics in Ghana 1972-1979, Tornado Publications, Accra, pp.62-63.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

appealed to the government to step in, but this did not yield the desired response. In mid-February, the students of University of Ghana began a boycott of lectures. They soon received support from the other universities and it looked as if the universities would be closed again, but the government added its voice to those urging the students to resume lectures by reminding them that boycotting lectures amounted to wasting taxpayers money. The stand-off finally ended when the Scholarships Secretariat gave the students a deadline of Friday, 25th February, to resume lectures, or forfeit their scholarships. The Legon SRC issued a statement calling off the boycott although a majority of the students had taken a vote to continue the boycott.⁴⁷ The students did not forgive the government for not coming in to support them in their dispute with the university authorities.

6.5.1.10 On 13th May, 1977, there was another major student protest and this led to the closure of the universities on 14th May. The government proposed that the students would be redeployed in agricultural production since their protest was over the shortage of food and the high cost of living. This decision to close down the universities turned out to be a major mistake on the part of the government for the students dispersed from the campuses to the countryside and carried anti-government messages to all corners of the country. Although it was reported that the intervention of the National House of Chiefs, the Christian Council and the Catholic Secretariat, the Chairmen of University Councils and other well-meaning citizens had caused the government to relent and agree to reopen the universities after about four weeks on 10th June, this version is contested by the student leaders of the time who insist that the meetings were set up, but that they did not attend.⁴⁸ The battle lines had clearly been drawn. Before the universities could resume serious work, more upheavals occurred as the government purported to retire two professors of the Medical School, Professors S R A Dodu and E A Badoe.⁴⁹

6.5.1.11 The government responded to these manifestations of instability, by sending intelligence operatives onto the campus to infiltrate the student movement. So heavy was the infiltration, that not only were many students recruited to spy on their fellow students and report on them, but some Military Intelligence personnel were actually assigned to the campus. Subsequently, three of their cars were burnt on the campus of University of Ghana. Although the students admitted to burning at least one of those vehicles, the reaction of the government later aroused the suspicion of the students, that not all of the three had, in fact, been burnt by students and that someone was trying to create an excuse for the students to be sent back home. Eventually, students were able to write their end of year examinations in September, instead of June, that academic year.

6.5.1.12 The year 1978, opened on a bad note in student-government relations. The 13th of January which was the anniversary of Gen Acheampong's coup d'état had, since 1973, become a public holiday marked by military parades. On 13th January, 1978, the students of University of Ghana decided to mark the day with a demonstration against the ⁴⁷ Daily Graphic, vol 8196, Thursday, 24th February, 1977.

⁴⁸ Memoranda to the National Reconciliation Commission.

⁴⁹ Agbodeka, supra, p. 228.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

government on account of its attempt to remain in power by theory of Unigov. According to contemporary accounts, the demonstration was organized as a mock funeral procession on the campus, with students carrying a “coffin” containing the” mortal remains” of the SMC. The protesting students ended their march at the main gate of the university where they burnt the coffin. At the gate, the police had massed up in riot gear, believing that the students intended to go into town and whip up public sentiment against the government thereby causing disaffection towards it. The students hurled taunts at the police and a few were alleged to have thrown stones at two passing police vehicles. Later that day, the students in retaliation, kidnapped a policeman on guard duties at one of the banks on the campus and seized five rounds of ammunition. This “provocation” proved too much for the Police Command and an order was given for the police to attack the campus.

6.5.1.13 The police beat up the students, staff and even kitchen women in the dining halls indiscriminately. Several students were brutally assaulted and had to be rushed to the University Hospital. The university was closed that day and students were sent down after a two hour notice. The students suffered great hardship as there was no transportation and the university authorities were insisting that the students were to leave the campus or they would be forced out by the police. The academic year suffered great disruption. These events affected the two other universities at Kumasi and Cape Coast and therefore, all the universities were closed.

6.5.1.14 The government was determined to recapture the ammunition and so until 31st January, there was interruption of classes. On 5th February, 1978, representatives of the Police and Ministry of Defence went to search seven named students in the Halls for home-made explosives. They found none. After all these disturbances, more interruptions occurred in the third term which began on 14th April, because by that date some senior members were in detention.⁵⁰

6.5.1.15 There was, however, a curious aspect to the whole episode. This was because there seemed to be an insistence on the part of the student leaders to keep students off the campuses. Whenever the students were invited back onto the campus, the leaders declared “Campus is not safe” and that they were demanding “guarantees” of safety for the students yet they themselves remained on campus without being any the worse for it. Rumours began to circulate that students were being deliberately kept off-campus by the leaders . Available information now confirms that there was truth in the rumour.⁵¹ Had the student leaders compromised themselves with the government in order to prevent students massing up to demonstrate against the Unigov Referendum? Who were the student leaders who were also informants of the government as Blay-Amihere hints at when he writes:

As events and records at the Bureau of National Investigations were to prove later, some of the student leaders who accused my cousin (now

⁵⁰ Agbodeka, supra, p.228.

⁵¹ Memorandum to National Reconciliation Commission.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

Hon Freddie Blay, First Deputy Speaker of Parliament) and me of being government agents were indeed the real agents. After the 31st December [1981] coup d'état the records of their duplicity and complicity were discovered?⁵²

6.5.1.16 Kofi Quantson, a senior intelligence operative, alleges that the government had set up a rival security network by recruiting its own agents who filed false reports against the students. He states categorically that:

Unigov agents filed a report to the Castle that there were three loud bomb blasts at the University of Ghana. That was the time when students had taken a confrontational stance against the Acheampong regime for a whole lot of reasons. Obviously to depict the students as violent and destructive, that very untrue report was secreted to the Castle. When we investigated we found that the report was fabricated by intelligence operatives drafted to join a Unigov conclave plotting to ensure that the outcome of the campaign resulted in government success. Actually there were no bomb blasts at the University at all. Some evil-minded persons had manufactured a report.⁵³

There is thus some indication that the government was actively involved in fomenting the unrest that disrupted the academic year.

6.5.1.17 The Universities re-opened for the completion of the academic year when the SMC was reconstituted after the Head of State, Gen Acheampong, had been removed in a palace coup on 5th July, 1978.

6.6 SMC II

6.6.1 NUGS

6.6.1.1 The University of Ghana finally resumed at the end of July and adopted a crash programme that made it possible for the academic year to be concluded at the end of October. It was on account of this that the academic year which should have been from October, 1978, to June, 1979, was transformed into January, 1979, to September, 1979, resulting in the students being in the middle of the academic year when the events of June, 1979, occurred.

⁵² Blay-Amihere, op. cit. supra, p.81.

⁵³ Kofi B. Quantson, Ghana: Peace and Stability Chapters from the Intelligence Sector Napascom Ltd, Accra, 2000 p.170.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

6.6.1.2 During the 1979 academic year, there was not much disruption of a political nature on the university campuses. However, there were social difficulties. Water shortage in Legon was so serious that on 1st March, 1979, the University of Ghana had to be closed down.⁵⁴ The government did not seem able to provide the social services necessary to sustain the operations of the university. However, the ban on party politics had been lifted for a return to civilian rule and people were hopeful that the future looked bright. The political parties were actively campaigning and students did not have any problem with the government. On Saturday, 5th May, the students of Commonwealth Hall, University of Ghana went to the Railway station to clean up the place as part of their annual Hall Week celebration. They got into an altercation with the police and one student, Adjei Barimah, was shot dead.

6.6.1.3 This event produced a student demonstration to the Castle, as the students demanded that a judicial enquiry be held into the circumstances surrounding the killing of the student. The committee that was eventually established was under the chairmanship of a High Court Judge, Mr Justice K A Agyepong. Students felt the committee was not sympathetic to the students' cause. The committee was still sitting when the 4th June Uprising occurred. These events may also explain the students reaction to the overthrow and punishment of their perceived "enemies".

6.6.1.4 The rise of the NUGS and the filling of the power vacuum helped to undermine the essence of the Hall System based on the "Oxbridge" model. Agbodeka opines that the effect of the decline of the system was that:

to the extent that Hall control over students was declining, to that extent the university was unwittingly becoming a means of congregating large numbers of young people with different backgrounds in one place with hardly any control apart from the influence of the student handbook which the majority, on admission, might have been too excited to read and digest".⁵⁵

In addition to this development, "the habit of the government often dealing directly with students instead of through the university authorities further weakened the control [of the university authorities]"⁵⁶ with little control and a government anxious to please the students, the students were set up as fodder for any agitator.

⁵⁴ Agbodeka, supra, p. 226.

⁵⁵ Agbodeka, supra, pp.224-225.

⁵⁶ Ibid.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

6.7 4TH JUNE 1979 – 23RD SEPTEMBER 1979:
ARMED FORCES REVOLUTIONARY COUNCIL (AFRC)

6.7.1 NUGS

6.7.1.1 The events of that day are constructed from contemporary accounts of students of the time. The 4th of June, 1979 was a rainy and cold Monday morning. There had been a blackout throughout the night of Sunday, 3rd June, to Monday, 4th June, 1979, with its attendant water shortage and the Legon campus was in a depressed mood. The announcement that there had been a coup d'état gingered up the campus. Several of the lecturers had not heard of the event. Contemporary accounts have it that the final year class (B A Part II) of Political Science explained their restlessness to their lecturer in the graphic words: "No light, no food, no water and no government" Later on that day Flying Officer Richard Forjoe and other Junior Officers came to the campus to solicit students' support for the coup. At the frontage of Legon Hall, where quite a few students were congregated discussing the events unfolding in town, he, in a voice almost hoarse with screaming, informed the students that Flight Lieutenant Rawlings, who had then attained folk hero status on campus, had sent him to urge the students to go to town and jubilate in support.

6.7.1.2 With the outcome of the confrontation quite uncertain, many students thought it was somewhat foolhardy to go into town. Nevertheless a few students were rallied round when contact with the student leadership was made, and a bus was arranged to take them to Accra town to jubilate in support of the overthrow of the government. This incident which was reported in the Daily Graphic of 5th June,⁵⁷ marked the first in a series of efforts to involve students as partners in the effort to "house-clean".

6.7.1.3 The students entered the fray in full force and began issuing statements, and giving advice as well as direction to the AFRC. In the Daily Graphic of 9th June⁵⁸, it was reported that the Northern Students Union (NSU) had sent a statement containing a congratulatory message to the AFRC. The statement, signed by its national secretary Napoleon Abdulai, recommended "the setting up of a government machinery to probe the activities of all top civil servants who have held office since 1972". The report indicated that the union also "suggested that Managing Directors of all public corporations and other quasi government agencies and organizations should also be probed". It further "stressed that the revolution must bring about radical transformation of society and suggested that all those who controlled large sectors of the economy should be forced to hand over any illegally acquired property to the poor." The union then suggested:

a land reform policy under which all lands whether stool or skin should be confiscated without compensation. The NSU recommended that ⁵⁷ Daily Graphic vol. 8901 Tuesday, 5th June, 1979.

⁵⁸ Daily Graphic, vol. 8905 Saturday, 9th June, p.8.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

irrigated lands at Vea, Goliaga, Fubesi Valley & Dawhenya should be confiscated and redistributed to the poor.

6.7.1.4 In that statement, the NSU also had suggestions on the distribution of goods. It asked that “the names of all importers and import licences allocated them should be published by the Bank of Ghana in the dailies”. The union suggested that every family that has more than one car be deprived of the others. All Benz and BMW cars should be seized and turned into a nucleus of State Taxi Corp.” In the same statement, the union “warned the AFRC to beware of civilians who have been advising governments wrongly since 1957 and said the Council should let information on their activities flow freely to the public.”⁵⁹

6.7.1.5 On 7th June, NUGS, whose leadership was then at UST following a rotational system of leadership amongst the three universities of the time, issued a statement to the GNA signed by its President, Steve Akuffo. The statement contained an invitation to all NUGS Executive Committee members as well as all past Executive Committee members for the last three years to an Extraordinary Congress at Kumasi on Saturday, 9th June.⁶⁰

6.7.1.6 On 10th June, the extraordinary congress announced its suspension of the President of NUGS, Steve Akuffo, from his position on the ground that he was related to the deposed head of the SMC (II) Gen Akuffo. The *Daily Graphic*⁶¹ reported that the union believed that such suspension was in the president’s interest as well as in the interest of the union. At that same Congress, NUGS adopted a ten- point resolution in which it pledged its total support to the AFRC and urged “all progressive and democratic forces to support the Council’s revolutionary exercise”. The Congress observed that the house-cleaning exercise was to be accorded top “priority over all national programmes since the success of the Third Republic depended upon the success of the house-cleaning exercise”. The students further agreed with the statement of the Chairman of the AFRC that “A person is either part of the problem or part of the solution” Consequently, the students urged the Council that “all those who formed part of the problem should be eliminated in accordance with revolutionary discipline”.

6.7.1.7 On 12th June, the students of University of Ghana demonstrated through the principal streets of Accra in support of the revolution and ended the demonstration with a march to Burma Camp.⁶² The students chanted songs urging the AFRC to kill Gen Akuffo and “Mr” Acheampong, and carried placards, some of which bore the following inscriptions: “Let the Blood flow” “Akuffo no more, Kalabule no more” and “Probe Parties”. The group was addressed by the Chairman of AFRC who gave them assurances that the AFRC would translate the ideas that motivated them to seize power into reality, since “Ideas not translated into reality mean nothing”. A People’s Court was therefore

⁵⁹ Ghanaian Times, vol. 6,687, Saturday, 9th June, 1979, back page.

⁶⁰ This statement was carried by Ghanaian Times vol. 6,685 Thursday, 7th June, 1979, back page.

⁶¹ Daily Graphic vol. 8907 Tuesday, 12th June, 1979, p.9.

⁶² Daily Graphic, vol. 8908, Wednesday, 13th June, 1979, p.1.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

promised, which would decide the fate of the “nation wreckers”. The newspaper further reported that the spokesman for NUGS, Sakkua Agambilla, explained why students had committed themselves to the revolution and stated that the students would support the AFRC as long as it stuck to its aspirations. The students urged the Council to shoot all those caught in the “net”, and encouraged the AFRC to resist pressure that some politicians were bringing to bear on the Council to hand over power to them.

6.7.1.8 During that address, persons who were in positions of authority were denounced as being guilty of acts that sabotaged the welfare of “ordinary Ghanaians” and the nation was told that since “power rests with the people and not the bosses” they were to “stand up and say ‘this is wrong. I cannot do it sir’”. Consequent upon the belief that it was people in authority who always gave bad instructions and got their subordinates to break the law and do other morally wrong acts against the public welfare, they were branded as “nation wreckers”, and the general populace was urged “to feed the Council with all the vital information (“hard, solid and concrete facts, nothing false”) about the nation wreckers”.

6.7.1.9 These demonstrations were obviously coordinated, for a report from Cape Coast in the same newspaper quoted a GNA report that more than 1,000 students of UCC had also demonstrated through the streets of Cape Coast for two hours in support of the AFRC. The students, according to the report, carried placards that read “clear managers and businessmen”, “workers expose your bosses”, “firing squad for nation wreckers”, “give workers good deal this time” and “watch out for imperialist manoeuvres”.

6.7.1.10 At this time, letters began to appear in the dailies written by persons who gave their addresses as being from educational institutions. These persons did not indicate whether they were students or teachers. These letters urged the government to use executions by firing squad as punishment for those who had indulged in kalabule. A letter bearing an Accra Polytechnic address and written by one E O Awudi, said:

I personally feel that the only drastic measures to clamp down on the Kalabule system of living is to introduce firing squad in the 3rd Republic. Even ancient Babylon which was a devoted Christian city underwent the law ‘An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth’ Why can’t Ghana adopt this method to bring sanity into our community. Ghanaians need an exemplary action. If two or three are fired to death it would serve as a lesson to the rest to refrain from their evil deeds.⁶³

6.7.2 REACTIONS TO EXECUTIONS

6.7.2.1 The first two Generals, “Mr” Acheampong and Maj-Gen E K Utuka, a former Commander of the Border Guards, were executed by firing squad on Saturday, 16th June.

⁶³ Daily Graphic, vol. 8906 Monday, 11th June, 1979 p.7.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

The execution in public of a former Head of State in this manner, was unprecedented and it was condemned in Ghana and abroad. Again on Tuesday, 26th June, 1979, two other former Heads of State, Gen Akuffo and Lt Gen A A Afrifa, as well as three members of the SMC – Maj-Gen Robert E A Kotei, Air Vice-Marshal George Y Boakye, Rear Admiral Joy Amedume, and a former Commissioner for Foreign Affairs, Col Roger Felli, were executed. Thereafter, Ghana came under strong international pressure to end the executions. The Governments of United Kingdom, Nigeria, etc, fired protest statements to the AFRC.

6.7.2.2 A letter bearing a School address, Aburi Girls' Secondary School, and co-authored by two females - Caroline Acquah and Vida Nudekor – with no indication as to whether they were teachers or students, appeared in the Daily Graphic on 28th June. The letter expressed indignation at the reaction of foreign powers to the execution as follows:

We would like to comment on British interference on the execution published in the Daily Graphic dated June 27. The British should know that Ghana is no more their colony and is at liberty to do whatever she thinks is right for her provided it does not affect any other community. This execution is our own internal affair not theirs.

The first question we should ask them is the time we were eating yellow corn did they send us a better substitute? We of the lower class had to hang on with the eating of yellow corn whilst those of the higher class were eating delicious foods. We were being told in between their teeth to cope with the eating of the yellow corn which was meant to be given to pigs and for poultry feed.⁶⁴

6.7.2.3 This letter was instructive in airing some of the grievances of the time and indicated the direction of student response to the executions, but it is even more interesting for having been published on 28th June, in reaction to news published in the newspaper on 27th June. This means that the letter was written, sent to Daily Graphic, received and used the very same day, in time to appear in the newspaper the very next day after the publication to which it purported to react was published. This is a most unusual occurrence and creates the impression that it did not emanate from outside the newspaper.

6.7.2.4 At this time, NUGS also reacted to the criticism from the international community by complaining that the AFRC seemed to be losing the resolve to carry on with the “house-cleaning” after receiving international criticism and coming under international pressure to end the executions. In order to strengthen the resolve of the AFRC, NUGS sent a note to the AFRC encouraging it to stay the course, and urging it to keep up the tempo of the revolution. According to a Daily Graphic report, NUGS wrote that it had observed that the present house-cleaning exercise by the AFRC “has set a new precedent in African politics.” NUGS therefore urged the AFRC to keep up the revolutionary spirit, adding that it had no illusions that the Council would succeed. The students also noted that they believed that “through the series of stern actions we will have laid down a framework with all the necessary deterrents within which subsequent governments and future handlers of the peoples wealth will have to act.”

⁶⁴ Daily Graphic, vol. 8921 Thursday, 28th June, 1979, p.7.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

6.7.2.5 The Note further went on to give advice to the AFRC. In an obvious reference to the “National Week of Repentance” declared by the SMC I and II of Generals Acheampong and Akuffo respectively during periods of severe economic problems, the NUGS discounted the value of such measures and urged the AFRC to concentrate on a thorough “house-cleaning” of those who were most to blame for the woes of the country at the time, and that weeks of national repentance by previous governments had had no change whatsoever on the attitudes of the “looters of the peoples wealth”. With their patience exhausted by use of prayer to solve economic problems, NUGS advised that their revolution could only succeed if backed by action or by force.⁶⁵ However, the students did not require the AFRC to continue in office after the “house-cleaning” and therefore requested it to hand over power to civilian politicians immediately after cleansing the body politic of its “nation wreckers”.

6.7.2.6 The Note also expressed disappointment of the students at the slow tempo with which the AFRC was enforcing its promises and warning that “any further delay can neither be in favour of the Council’s image nor in the ultimate interest of the common man who has suffered for far too long”. The students also accused Ghana’s neighbours of conspiring with the “nation wreckers”, “When our timber, cocoa, diamond, rice, maize and essential imported commodities were being smuggled to these countries by the few local enemies of the people of Ghana these good neighbours of ours actively collaborated with them”, the students charged. They stated that the foreign powers were protesting about the “house-cleaning exercise” “because they know full well that if this clean-up exercise succeeds it would cut off their supply of smuggled goods.” NUGS also accused the western powers of showing concern because of the zeal with which the executed officers had implemented directives of the International Monetary Fund “and other imperialist organizations”.⁶⁶

6.7.2.7 Since this Note was not an open letter and therefore not originally sent to the media but to the AFRC directly, it must have found its way into the public domain by a deliberate act of someone, to achieve a particular effect – to show that the young people of Ghana expected even more of the AFRC than it had already done. This was therefore intended to discount the value of the voices that had been raised in protest against the executions. Some of these were the Acting Editor of the Daily Graphic, Ms Elizabeth Ohene, who had written a powerful editorial which criticized the AFRC for the executions; the GBA; the Christian Council and the Catholic Secretariat; and a few others who had protested against the secret trials of the AFRC and the executions.

⁶⁵ Daily Graphic, vol. 8925 Monday, 2nd July, 1979, p.1.

⁶⁶ Ibid.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

6.7.2.8 On Saturday, 30th June, the Chairman of the AFRC, Flt Lt Rawlings, in a dawn broadcast, informed the nation and “friends of Ghana” that there would be no more executions of people convicted by the Special Courts of the AFRC. Instead, such persons would be sentenced to penal servitude on penal farms and their properties confiscated. Flt Lt Rawlings stated that the AFRC “had taken note of the special appeals for restraint from the world community especially those from sister African states”. He assured Ghana’s friends that Ghana had not abandoned the rule of law and its adherence to the principles of United Nations Declarations on Human Rights, but appealed to them to understand Ghana’s peculiar situation. He also appealed to Ghanaians to understand the situation.

6.7.3 STUDENTS PROTEST DECISION TO END EXECUTIONS

6.7.3.1 This 30th June announcement of the decision to end the executions did not go down well with the students. Believing that it was not just foreign “interference” that had caused the termination of the executions but also internal criticism from Ms Elizabeth Ohene, the Ghana Bar Association, etc. The students took to the streets to express their rage at the effect of those criticisms on the plan to execute more people. Early on Monday, 2nd July, students of the three universities began a series of demonstrations. The *Daily Graphic*⁶⁷ carried the following report from Kumasi under the headline:

“STUDENTS BACK SECRET TRIALS”:

Students of UST yesterday paraded through the principal streets of Kumasi to demonstrate their support for the secret trials and executions by firing squad of the eight top officers of the Ghana Armed Forces.

They chanted revolutionary songs such as ‘let the blood flow’ and carried branches of trees and placards some of which read ‘Farming not a punishment, kill them all’ ‘Down with foreign pressures’ ‘Lawyers do not pay taxes – away with them’ ‘Nigeria hoard your oil – we shall clean our house’. ‘Let the blood flow. A half revolution is no revolution’

Other placards read ‘Elizabeth Ohene Acting Editor must go’ ‘Can Col Slater weed? Kill him’, ‘Bar Association, to hell with you’ and ‘For heavens sake kill’.

The students ended the parade at the Ghana National Cultural Centre where the President of the SRC Mr. Ben Odame handed a resolution to the Commander of the Fourth battalion of Infantry Capt. J.K. Attipoe to be forwarded to the AFRC.

⁶⁷ Daily Graphic vol. 8926, Wednesday, 4th July, 1979, p.1.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

The eight-point resolution which was read before being handed over condemned in no uncertain terms the unwarranted interference in the national affairs of Ghana by countries and bodies who have never shown any concern for the suffering people of this country and who can have no appreciation of the revolution process which is unfolding in this country today’.

It also called on the AFRC to take firm and revolutionary action ‘against all the local reactionary forces’ like the Ghana Bar Association, the Christian Council of Ghana, the Catholic Secretariat, the so-called political pressure groups defending only the propertied people because it is our contention that all these groups are mainly afraid of the house cleaning exercise for their own reason and have no concern whatsoever for the poor starving people.

It demanded that the AFRC should not relent the task of national housecleaning, which should embrace every sector of the society including the university and that allegations that certain student leaders in the past collaborated with the Acheampong government be investigated and those found guilty made to face the same fate as other saboteurs.

The resolution further demanded that the death penalty be reinstated immediately for ‘no revolution can afford to do without capital punishment and moreover, penal labour is hardly any encouragement to our farmers and labourers and furthermore, the constitution will not permit penal labour after October 1 1979.

It further called on the AFRC to remove Elizabeth Ohene immediately for her counter revolution and treacherous activities using the Graphic to mobilize forces against the revolution in general and the AFRC in particular. It urged the total support of the students for the AFRC and all progressive elements with the GAFF and wish to make it clear that if it is true that power truly belongs to the people, then only the people can determine the course of the revolution and the AFRC must not yield to pressure from any quarters without the people’s concern [sic]’

Captain Attipoe assured the students that he would forward the contents of the resolution and another resolution from the Armed Forces in Kumasi since the contents were similar. He stressed that in all revolutions, corrupt elements must be weeded out. He appealed to the students to come out with information about corrupt persons in the society to enable the AFRC to take revolutionary action against them.

6.7.3.2 The following day, about 200 students of the University of Ghana also took to the streets.⁶⁸ In a demonstration through the principal streets of Accra that was reported to have lasted seven hours, the students of University of Ghana made the same demands as those of UST the previous day. The students protested against the punitive measures being adopted by Nigeria and other countries in their protest against the measures adopted by the AFRC to do its “house-cleaning”. The students chanted war songs and carried placards bearing various inscriptions such as “Shut up Nigeria”, “Expose British hypocrisy”, “Let no nation stand in our way”, “Hands off Ghana Imperialists”, “Down with isolationist policy”, “Graphic against the revo”, “Petrol or no petrol the revo must continue”, “People of Ghana don’t bow to external pressure”, etc. The students then went to various places to present protest notes to the following foreign embassies and organisations: the Nigerian High Commission, American Embassy, GBA, the Judiciary and the Graphic Corporation. The students were also reported to have declared their further intention of presenting similar notes to the Embassies of Upper Volta (now Burkina Faso), Benin, Togo and those of the European Economic Community (now EU) countries. They also named the Christian Council, Catholic Secretariat and the Makola Women’s Union as organizations they were upset with for their criticism.

⁶⁸ Daily Graphic vol. 8925 Tuesday, 3rd July, 1979, p.1.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

6.7.3.3 In the protest notes, the students expressed disgust and serious concern about the attitude of the countries concerned since their decision to mount an economic blockade against Ghana was interpreted as an act of interference “in the internal affairs of Ghana”. To Nigeria in particular, the students wondered why she, a longtime close neighbour, should place an oil embargo on Ghana for carrying out a necessary house cleaning exercise. The students pointed out that the then leadership of the Federal Republic of Nigeria was afraid that similar events would be carried out in that country hence the punitive measures since the oil wealth of Nigeria had not benefited the ordinary Nigerian, but like Ghana had gone into the pockets of top military and public officers and foreign interests.

6.7.3.4 At the British High Commission and the American Embassy, the national flags of the two countries were torn into shreds. The students in their protest note addressed to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II through the British High Commissioner, stated that from recent developments, they were convinced that the British government decided to accord recognition to the AFRC in order to protect its trade links with Ghana. They also pointed out that they believed Britain’s protestations about human rights in Ghana were meaningless since the protest was not backed by action to meet the basic needs of the people in terms of food, housing, clothing, transport and education. The students also drew the attention of the British Government to their own acts of oppression of human rights in Northern Ireland, Nigeria, South Africa and Rhodesia. Although the demonstration was described as peaceful and decent by Edward Holmes, Chargé d’Affaires at the American Embassy, his only regret was that the students had torn the American flag into pieces.

6.7.3.5 The newspapers reported further that, as “the students trooped to the city centre they were cheered and joined by onlookers including market women, workers and children.” The demonstration ended up at El-Wak stadium where they were addressed by Flt Lt J.J. Rawlings and other AFRC members. At the El-Wak Stadium, they demanded that Miss Elizabeth Ohene, Acting Editor of Daily Graphic should be dismissed for her views on the executions and the secret trials. To this demand, Flt Lt Rawlings stated that he had respect for Elizabeth Ohene for her past stand on national issues, and so appealed to the students to leave her alone as she was free to speak her mind. He indicated that the Council had no quarrel to pick with the stand taken by the Daily Graphic in its editorials about some measures adopted by the Council in its “house-cleaning exercise”.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

6.7.3.6 As regards the other “revolutionary methods” for sanctioning wrongdoers, the Chairman took the opportunity to address the concerns expressed by the students in the note sent to the AFRC by NUGS a few days earlier. He therefore assured the students that there would “be no turning back in the Council’s revolutionary actions aimed at redeeming the masses” from the economic difficulties they were labouring under, although the Council had had to re-assess its position on some aspects. He asked the students not to misconstrue this tactical retreat to mean “a loss of revolutionary fervor”. Chairman Rawlings urged Ghanaians “to stand as solidly as one man behind the revolution”, and gave the assurance that “if we are taking some steps which fall short of the expectations of some of you, that is not because we are pulling back.” He stated that as they were good revolutionaries, they knew every action of theirs would bring reaction and therefore they had to pause at some point to assess their position so that they could evolve the correct policy to deal with particular situations in which they found themselves. The Chairman also pointed out that they would let down the revolution if they did not analyze their strengths and weaknesses. “To deal a sharp blow to the internal and external enemies who want to nip our revolution in the bud”, the Chairman cautioned Ghanaians to consider that “even the little that we have done has brought counter measures against us and the people have to understand so that when they feel the pinch, they will know why they are suffering ...” The students accepted this explanation and Vadis Kamassah, the President of the SRC of the University of Ghana, pledged the support of the students to the Council in its “house-cleaning” exercise.

6.7.3.7 On 8th July, the Chairman, whilst on a visit to Mampong in the Ashanti Region, paid a visit to the campus of UST and addressed staff and students on a “meet the people tour”.⁶⁹ During his address, Chairman Rawlings attributed the greater part of the country’s present economic and governmental woes to some businessmen who had hidden behind the curtain to dupe the country through trade malpractices and other anti-social activities. He also criticized the past leadership of the country for the disorganized state of the country over the previous 22 years since Independence and accused them of mismanagement.

6.7.3.8 On the night of 12th July, Chairman Rawlings also addressed students of the University of Ghana on the campus. At that meeting he announced that the trial of the “corrupt people who are in military custody” had begun the previous night, i.e. the night of Wednesday, 11th July.⁷⁰ Chairman Rawlings further appealed to them to assist in bringing home for trial all those who were on the run, and to exercise patience since caution should be taken in “drawing the line”. He also explained why it was necessary to end the executions because “if the gun were to be used, all of us would be victims because for five years I used my weapons to protect them while they raped the country.” He, however, gave the students the assurance that those who were being held would be severely punished for ruthlessly reducing Ghanaians to where they had got to at the time. He also alerted the students as to the possibility of fraudsters “taking advantage of the revolution for their own selfish ends”, and asked students to be vigilant in exposing them. He exhorted students to eschew cowardice and be bold to tell any person, group of persons or people in authority whose actions were inimical to the interests of the nations to put a stop to their “dubious ways.”

⁶⁹ Daily Graphic, vol. 8930, Monday, 9th July, 1979, p.5.

⁷⁰ Daily Graphic, vol. 8934, Friday, 13th July, 1979.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

6.7.3.9 Following students protests at “western interference” in Ghana’s internal affairs, the All Africa Students Union (AASU) based in Accra and manned by Ghanaians, issued a statement signed by K. Gyan Apenteng, supporting the stand of NUGS on the “house-cleaning”. The statement condemned western interference in the internal affairs of Ghana and blamed the activities of “past military regimes and their political alliances who did everything to impoverish the masses of the people install a dictatorship and entrench neocolonialism and destroy the base for popular change.” AASU also stated that in appreciation of the political situation prevailing in Ghana, it had decided to hail “the positive democratic gains” in the interest of the people of Ghana. It went further to give the assurance that “in as far as the present situation in Ghana reflects the aspirations and genuine hopes of the people, the positive nature of the measures adopted by the AFRC cannot be denied”. AASU also explained that “the situation presented the revolutionary forces the enormous potentiality and diverse perspectives” and consequently, it assured the student, youth and people of Ghana of its support against imperialism and neo-colonialism.⁷¹

6.7.4 MOBILISING STUDENTS FOR LABOUR

6.7.4.1 The student movement at the UCC decided to take a two-week break from their studies and go out to the rural areas to spread the message of the revolution and explain its tenets to the rural people. This decision by students of UCC was communicated to the public in a statement issued in Accra on 6th July, and signed by the President of the SRC, John S Achuliwor.⁷² According to the SRC President, the “students’ decision to undertake such an important national assignment was to ensure that the gains being made by the people towards creating a just society are in no way reversed.” Although the students recognized that such a move would affect their own studies they were willing to make that sacrifice as they were of the firm belief “that no efforts should be spared in thwarting the efforts of those who seek to turn back the moving hands of history.” The statement also informed the public that during the period of the assignment, the students would assist the authorities in locating piled up foodstuffs in food growing areas and would be so organized that where possible, they would assist in even the harvesting of ⁷¹ Daily Graphic, vol. 8934 Friday, 13th July, 1979, back page.

⁷² Ghanaian Times, vol. 6,711, Saturday, 7th July, 1979.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

food crops. They would also appeal to the producers of food to feel free to bring their produce to the market without fear of molestation or otherwise. This statement was obviously in response to the shortage of food on the market as a result of the fear of molestation from soldiers. This move to quit the campus in favour of conscientising the people in the rural areas was, according to Professor Kofi Awoonor, then a mentor of the student movement, unrealistic given the fact:

“that ninety-five percent of these students did not know what a revolution is. The exercise itself revealed a degree of arrogance on the part of the naïve idealists who actually believed that from the privileged citadels of bourgeois life, they could carry messages of a revolution to a depressed peasantry that had long been exploited...”⁷³

6.7.4.2 The AFRC approved this “initiative” of the students, and issued a terse notice on 11th July, informing the public that the students had offered to go to rural areas to explain the revolution to the rural people and that they were to be given any necessary assistance by regional and district authorities.⁷⁴ However, on 14th July, the AFRC issued another notice directing the students of UCC to return to campus to complete the academic year. The notice was contained in a statement by the AFRC to the effect that it had come to its notice that students of the university had left their campus to explain objectives of the revolution to the people, and that since the students left without taking their scheduled exams this would disrupt the university’s programmes affecting new students now in the sixth form. The AFRC further noted that the students had already collected their feeding allowance for the rest of the academic term, and a late return to the campus would mean finding additional money to maintain them. The statement then expressed the appreciation of the AFRC for the support and enthusiasm of the students for the moral revolution, although it was of the view that the immediate aim of the students ought to be the completion of their studies.

6.7.4.3 The SRC of UCC promptly issued a statement denying that students of the university had already collected their feeding allowances for the rest of the term as published in the statement of the AFRC. The SRC with a degree of ire, stated that “the students knowing they will need this money after the programme did not take their feeding allowances for even two weeks.”⁷⁵ Their return to school had become a sore point with them.

6.7.5 RE-AFFIRMING THE BONDS OF FRIENDSHIP

6.7.5.1 The students of UCC became disaffected as a result of the decision of the AFRC in respect of their public education campaign. The announcement of the AFRC that they were to abandon their public education effort and return to campus because they had ⁷³ Kofi Awoonor, The Ghana Revolution, Background Account From A Personal Perspective, Oases Publishers Bronx N.Y. 1984 p.116.

⁷⁴ Daily Graphic, vol. 8929 Saturday, 7th July, 1979.

⁷⁵ Daily Graphic, vol. 8936 Monday, 16th July, 1979, p.3.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

already collected their feeding allowance for the rest of the academic year, greatly offended the students. The AFRC tried to assuage the feelings of the students by explaining its position. At the 18th July meeting of students vacationing in Accra. Capt Oduro-Kwarteng, a representative of the AFRC, took the opportunity to congratulate the students of UCC for their initiative in “embarking on a worthwhile revolutionary duty countrywide in support of the national clean-up exercise”. He then explained to the students there gathered, that the AFRC had “no sinister motives” behind the decision to ask the students to return to their studies on campus.

6.7.5.2 When the students of UCC returned to campus, the SRC issued an indignant statement denying the fact of their decision being disruptive of the university’s programme, and the allegation that they had already collected their allowances for the rest of the year be taken on the matter, “and it should be clear to you in whose interest it is for such distortions to arise.” The Chairman went to the campus of UCC and interacted with the students. He declared that the AFRC had accepted responsibility for the statement put out in its name and commended the SRC for coming out with the “offensive distortion”.⁷⁶ He went on to blame the media because, according to him, publications such as these were put out by enemies of the revolution who gave the wrong information to the AFRC, and attributed ulterior motives to the person since that untruth had succeeded in bringing the public education effort to an end.⁷⁷ These same allegations later appeared in the readers’ letters column of 25th July issue of the Ghanaian Times, in a letter authored by one Kweku Arhin Dennis of UCC. The letter stated:

With no one coming out to accept having given false information to the AFRC, I take the opportunity to call on the AFRC to be wary of detractors and counter-revolutionaries who are determined to break the students support for the moral revolution...as we return to campus with our spirits rather low we reconcile ourselves to our belief that ‘It is easier to kill a revolutionary but not at all easy to kill a revolution.

6.7.5.3 This reaction from the students greatly alarmed the AFRC and the Chairman quickly paid a visit to the campus of UCC on 20th July.⁷⁸ The Ghanaian Times banner-headlines screamed: “AFRC-STUDENTS BOND IS SOLID” and the Daily Graphic carried the banner-headline: “LET’S MOVE TOGETHER ...TO FIGHT COUNTER-REVOLUTIONARIES”. The newspapers reported that the Chairman of the AFRC had explained to the students that it was the acts of counter-revolutionaries who were trying to split the AFRC-students bond that had caused the decision to abort the public education campaign. The Chairman assured the students that the bond was stronger than what the distortions could destroy.⁷⁹ The Chairman denied that it was the AFRC that put out the notice requesting the students to return to campus. In his own words, “the recently

⁷⁶ Ibid. , p.3.

⁷⁷ Ghanaian Times, vol 6,718 Monday, 16th July, 1979 back page.

⁷⁸ Daily Graphic, vol. 8941 Saturday, 21st July, 1979 pp.1,6 and 7.

⁷⁹ Ghanaian Times, vol. 6,723 Saturday, 21st July, 1979, pp.1,3.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

publicized statement attributed to the AFRC and widely publicized in the media seems to me as one of those attempts”, but, he went on:

We respect the initiatives students take because we know that we share common cause with you. Everybody knows how much students have stood in the forefront of resistance to tyranny in this country and how much since May 13 1977 you struggled relentlessly against corrupt and bankrupt leadership in this country... This is what unsettled those who wanted the revolution to be stillborn. They have adopted the strategy of inventing views and statements in the name of the Council in order to break the revolutionary solidarity between us ...I assure you that, we are investigating the circumstances surrounding the issuing of this statement so that appropriate steps can as the one the UCC students found offensive ... and that this was the work of ‘counter-revolutionary elements’ [who] still do not see eye to eye with us in the bureaucracy in the mass media who we have been trying very hard to educate.⁸⁰

6.7.5.4 To prove to the students that sections of the media had counter-revolutionary agenda, the Chairman complained that he had been misquoted on an issue affecting workers in a manner calculated to cause disaffection among the workers towards the AFRC. He took the opportunity to correct the impression created by the media in respect of the story affecting the workers, and also went on to assert that, “We knew too that our openness in not hiding our views or our actions in respecting the freedom of the press and not wishing to take action against even those who openly attack us is probably being abused by some.”

6.7.5.5 The Chairman used the opportunity to assure the students that the AFRC valued their support and initiative “in seeking to advance the revolution” and told them that, “Even while you are on campus there is much you can do for us by way of suggestion, even criticism where we seem to be going wrong.” The meeting ended with the SRC President, Achuliwor, suggesting to Chairman Rawlings to direct an announcement to be made to disabuse the minds of the public that students of UCC had collected their allowances for the rest of the term.

6.7.5.6 There is no indication that this announcement correcting the earlier “offensive” statement that the students had already collected their allowances was ever made. Despite the degree of unhappiness with the announcement, the students accepted the explanation that the earlier announcement was the work of “counter-revolutionary elements”. This hiccup in organization was smoothened over and partnership was restored after the students were made to appreciate that such incidents were to be expected from counter-revolutionaries.

6.7.5.7 The initiative of the students of UCC in going out of campus to do public education had exposed the utility-potential of the students in galvanizing the citizenry into publicly demonstrating support for the revolution. Their subsequent withdrawal to complete the academic year created a vacuum which had to be filled. The plan to mobilize all students on vacation in the towns and cities was then born. The plan caused the government to announce arrangements for the drawing up of an official programme in which all students would actively participate during the vacation. Efforts were made to draft other students such as polytechnic students, trainee teachers, secondary school students, etc, to replace the university students who had to return to campus to complete the academic year.

⁸⁰ Daily Graphic, vol. 8941, Saturday, 21st July, 1979, p.6.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

6.7.5.8 The move to involve students in activities to promote the revolution had support from various personalities within and without the student movement. On Thursday, 12th July, an appeal to students to volunteer to spread the message of the revolution was published in the Ghanaian Times.⁸¹ The message was from the President of the Brong-Ahafo Students Union Kusi Aborah who urged students to see it as their civic duty to “educate the masses” in the rural areas. According to him: “It behoves every student to voluntarily educate the people on issues at stake because the revolution is not one man’s responsibility.” It is instructive that at the meeting at which this appeal was made students of UCC were present, as well as a director of operations for the Brong-Ahafo, Wilson Benneh.

6.7.5.9 The 13th July issue of Ghanaian Times in reporting the meeting between the Chairman of the AFRC and University of Ghana students at Legon, the newspaper gave a cryptic report thus:

He [the Chairman] asked them to fight in a relentless war to protect the economy by exposing the profiteers, hoarders and smugglers, but left it to them to decide on when they plan to go to the villages to enlighten the farmers on the aims of the revolution and bring foodstuffs to the market centres.

6.7.5.10 In that same 13th July issue of the newspaper, an appeal was made by Kofi Lamptey, a former Secretary of NUGS, while addressing Oguaa Students Union at the Cape Coast Town Hall, for secondary school students to take over from university students in educating the rural dwellers. According to the report sourced from Ghana News Agency (GNA): “The former secretary asked the students to be in the vanguard of the present revolution whose objectives are in line with the aims of the struggle waged by NUGS a few years back.” This was the clearest articulation of the reason why NUGS saw itself as the partner of the AFRC in the enterprise of effecting societal change. Consequently, the need for the students to do their fair share of the work involved in the task of achieving this change in Ghana became pre-eminent. Since the students could be found in every nook and cranny of the country and had in fact been used to great effect in the anti-Unigov campaign of the previous year it was not surprising that their contribution to the “revolution” was cast in terms of their obligation to spread the message of the “revolution”.

⁸¹ Ghanaian Times, vol. 6715, Friday, 13th July, 1979, p.1.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

6.7.5.11 The plan to mobilize the students was put into motion. The AFRC representative organized a meeting of students from secondary schools, training colleges, and Polytechnics on holidays in Accra.⁸² The students, reported to number over two thousand, (2000) were addressed by Fg Offr Forjoe and Capt Oduro-Kwarteng both representatives of the AFRC. Fg Offr Forjoe called on all student organizations in the country to mobilize their members to carry the objectives of the revolution to the rural folk. He explained the need for such education by stating that it would “enable the students play an effective role in lifting the country from the present chaotic stage.” He also told the students that the revolution was meant to better the lives of Ghanaians and called for their wholehearted support since they, as future leaders of the nation, would benefit from its success. The AFRC representative also asked the students to assist in the “clean up” effort which had started from the top, but which had to go down the lower rungs of society. He then advised them to start the “clean up” from their own homes and advise their own “kalabule mothers and fathers into repenting and turning over a new leaf.” He was also reported to have further advised the students “If you know your mother is a cheat and your father is kalabule, you better report them now.”⁸³ An appeal was then made to female students to spend their vacation in more useful enterprises such as “cooking for their male counterparts who are spreading the revolutionary gospel to the people rather than putting on gorgeous dresses with the aim of enticing the corrupt managing directors and managers.”⁸⁴

6.7.5.12 The Daily Graphic’s report of that meeting stated that at that same meeting, six working groups based upon specified residential areas - Tema, Madina-Legon, Nsawam, Winneba, Oda and Accra Central were formed. The working groups elected leaders to join the Interim Co-ordination Committee to plan strategy for their operations.⁸⁵ The importance of that meeting and the fact that it had the highest political support, was demonstrated by the fact that the Chairman and other members of the AFRC put in an appearance at the meeting. The students thus received assurances that the speeches and other operational plans were authorized by the AFRC. Thus from a volunteer programme, the decision by the students became a national programme for conscripting the students to give free labour.

6.7.5.13 The newspapers began to fill their pages with reports of student-activities in support of the revolution, but the fact that these activities were organized under official authority was underplayed as information to the public sought to portray the students as partners in the patriotic act of returning Ghana to the moral path. The newspapers failed

⁸² The meeting was convened by a notice in Ghanaian Times vol. 6719 Tuesday, 17th July, 1979, back page.

⁸³ Ghanaian Times, vol. 6,720 Wednesday, 18th July, 1979, p.1.

⁸⁴ Ibid.

⁸⁵ Daily Graphic vol. 8938, Wednesday, 18th July, 1979, p.6.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

to disclose the link between the meeting of 18th July, at the Accra Community Centre, where students had been organized into groups based on residential addresses, and the subsequent activities that the students undertook. This omission thereby created the impression in the public mind that the activities of the students was voluntary and on the students' own initiative. However, the evidence of official organization was incontrovertible, as demonstrated by this notice titled "Student Volunteers" carried in the Daily Graphic of 27th July,⁸⁶ which appealed to the public to support and gave a State-House address for receipt of donations in the following terms:

The Greater Accra students have volunteered to use their holidays in educating the public and assuring farmers to harvest their crops in connection with the campaign to spread the June 4 Revolution. A statement from the office of student affairs and signed by Pilot Officer [sic] Fordjoe said the student volunteers would welcome donations from organizations, firms, corporations and individuals.

The official nature of the publication as well as the existence of an office to coordinate student affairs was not left in doubt since the address of the student office provided in the notice indicated that it was based at State House in Accra.

6.7.5.14 From Koforidua came a report that the AFRC representative on student affairs addressed a meeting of students in Koforidua at the Hotel Eredec on 1st August. He urged them to stand behind the revolution and educate the rural people on its aims. He advised the students whose parents were kalabule to denounce them to their friends if they could not do so to the authorities themselves. He also advised those whose parents had already been caught in the net to put away sentiment and concentrate on supporting the revolution.⁸⁷

6.7.5.15 Students in various parts of the country were reported assisting in various ways to achieve the objects of the revolution. In a 2nd August report in the Daily Graphic, students were reported to have worked for five hours, helping to harvest some corn on the farms of Mankoadze Commercial Farms at Gomoa Abaasa. The harvesting group numbering over 200 students and 370 women volunteers from Mankoadze village, was under the Command of Fg Offr J M K Akom-Mensah AFRC representative at Swedru. The group of volunteers was later joined by about eighty "queue contractors" I e conscripts who had been rounded up in different parts of Swedru town for being in queues because queues breed kalabuleism which the AFRC wanted to discourage."⁸⁸

6.7.5.16 Although there was no documentary evidence of a specific decision by the press or political authorities to manipulate public opinion by portraying students as patriotic and imbued with public spiritedness, the newspapers, then state-owned and government-controlled, began to report on the activities of the students regularly. On a daily basis,

⁸⁶ vol. 8946 Friday, 27th July, 1979, p.3.

⁸⁷ Ghanaian Times, vol. 6,733 Thursday, 2nd August, 1979, pp.1,3.

⁸⁸ Ibid.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

students appeared in the newspapers engaged in one activity or the other. The two newspapers reported on the same incidents, often quoting the same portion of documents presented or giving prominence to interviews that explained the rationale for engaging in that activity as “the students’ contribution towards the success of the revolution.”

6.7.5.17 In the newspaper reports, prominence was also given to the leaders of the student group, thus creating a platform for other students to emulate the worthy example of the others. For instance, the Daily Graphic reported that more than 400 students from various secondary schools and technical colleges and training colleges on holidays in Accra conducted a clean up campaign around community centers, main bus stop, Tema Lorry station and Department of National Lotteries. It then went ahead to name the leaders of the volunteers as Elvis Amedekar and Miss Gifty Dadson, and added a few words from the subsequent interviews. The same pattern was repeated in several other instances, such as a report from Ho, which stated that more than 80 students spending their vacation at Ho under the leadership of G S K Agrah,⁸⁹ had undertaken a five-day voluntary labour programme by working on a canteen being built by the Public Works Department. This prominence in the media was bound to be flattering to students, who, like most young people must have been fascinated by seeing themselves in print and it created an incentive for more activism from more and more students.

6.7.6 VIGILANTISM BY STUDENTS

6.7.6.1 Students were reported to be engaged in field operations with uniformed personnel of the Armed Forces. In the Daily Graphic was a report that a combined team of students and Border Guards had impounded one hundred and ten cartons of fish allegedly being hoarded in a cold store at Kaneshie, Accra. The owner was arrested and taken away for questioning. The leader of the students was named as Alex Asare, and he was interviewed as to the circumstances of the arrest and seizure of the fish by L/Cpl Osei Owusu. The same group also intercepted a mummy truck carrying fourteen cartons of fish without any waybill. The fish was seized, sold to the public at the controlled price of ₵4.00 a kilo and proceeds paid to the owner.⁹⁰ A similar report from Kpando indicated that a combined team of army personnel and students had impounded ten truckloads of fish and that nineteen women had been arrested. The newspaper reported that the students had also taken the women to a nearby classroom and given them more than six hours of lectures on good citizenship.⁹¹

6.7.6.2 From Ketu District came a report that student volunteers of the Dzodze Students Union had recovered assorted goods either abandoned or hidden in the bush by smugglers at Dzodze in Ketu district. The items included 80 drums of local gin and three bags of granulated sugar. J W K Achilles Akyea, leader of the volunteers and a student of the University of Ghana, explained to the press that they had received a tip off that a group of ⁸⁹ Daily Graphic, Vol. 8969 Thursday, 23rd August, 1979, p.6.

⁹⁰ Daily Graphic, Vol. 8970 Friday, 24th August, 1979, p.8.

⁹¹ Ghanaian Times, Vol. 6,750 Wednesday, 22nd August, 1979, p.1.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

smugglers had hidden some goods in the bush apparently to smuggle them into Noefe in the Republic of Togo. Consequently, they went into action, and successfully retrieved the goods. The Dzodze Students Union also announced that it had embarked upon a one month civic education of people in the Ketu District.⁹²

6.7.6.3 These reports demonstrated the extent of student vigilantism. However, there were muted protests as the following report from Tema demonstrated: the report was to the effect that the activities of the students caused some anxiety and concern among members of the public. Students were accused of harassing market women and thus causing a food shortage which was described as “artificial” because the women were afraid that if they displayed their wares, “they would be subjected to humiliation at the hands of their children [ie students young enough to be their children].” The report went thus:

Students assigned for price control have been asked to go about their assignment with restraint so as not to scare food sellers from bringing their wares to the markets. Egya Ansah, General Secretary of the Tema Voluntary Club said much as the public appreciates the efforts of students in enforcing price control as their contribution to the success of the revolution, the mode of operation of some of them was scaring the women from bringing their wares to the market places for sale. Complaints have been made to the club at Tema that some students dictated their own prices and that when those prices were not complied with, the sellers were harassed. This Mr. Ansah said had resulted in food sellers being reluctant to display their wares for fear that they would be subjected to humiliation at the hands of their children.⁹³

6.7.6.4 Another report demonstrated that not only had student vigilantism been authorized and facilitated by the national authorities, but that difficulties were also addressed by officials of the new government at high official levels. Thus, when some of the students who had gone into the field to enforce price controls and do public education at Winneba began to experience difficulties with the general public, they complained to the AFRC and a meeting was held at Winneba with student representatives and heads of departments to discuss the issue. At the end of the meeting, Wing Commander AK Tamakloe of the Air Force Headquarters, was reported to have urged all, and in particular, traditional rulers and certain governmental agencies such as the police, to appreciate the work of students who had undertaken to spread the aims of the revolution and to give them much needed assistance. The students on their part were advised to stick to checking profiteering, hoarding, lateness and malingering. This advice had become necessary because some of the students were taking over the functions of the police in checking crime. In thus calling a meeting of “heads of departments” of government agencies to address these issues, anyone who doubted the degree of political support the students activities enjoyed was educated on that score.

⁹² Daily Graphic, Vol. 8999 Thursday, 27th September, 1979, back page.

⁹³ Daily Graphic, Vol. 8973 Tuesday, 28th August, 1979, back page.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 66.7.7 THE STUDENTS' SWANSONG

6.7.7.1 The AFRC was due to leave office on 24th September, 1979, when power was to be handed over to President Limann. On 21st September, 1979, the students organized demonstrations ostensibly to congratulate the AFRC and thank them for a job well done. Thus, they appeared to have maintained their support for the AFRC to the very end. The essence of the student demonstrations, was captured by the Daily Graphic in the headline: WELL DONE AFRC,⁹⁴ and the Ghanaian Times as STUDENT VOLUNTEERS THANK AFRC.⁹⁵ The newspapers reported that thousands of students from the secondary, technical and tertiary institutions had taken part in a peaceful demonstration through the principal streets of Accra, in appreciation of the efforts of the AFRC in bringing sanity into the country's economy. They carried placards some of which read "WELL DONE AFRC", "GHANA IS NOT A GOLDMINE", "R.I.P. KALABULE", "TAX INVADERS SHOULD BE WARNED", "EDUCATION SHOULD BE A RIGHT NOT A PRIVILEGE", "THE FIRE IS STILL BURNING", "KALABULE YOU ARE NOT CHRIST YOU CAN'T RESURRECT" and "LIMANN BEWARE!". The demonstration started from the Liberation Circle through Accra Central to the "Revolutionary Square" (El-Wak Stadium) where the students were addressed by Fg Offr Fordjoe, Liaison Officer for Student Affairs.

6.7.7.2 The students also pledged support for the incoming government of the People's National Party (PNP) under Dr. Hilla Limann, but sounded a warning that the youth were now wide awake from their slumber and were in no way going to compromise principles. They therefore hoped Dr. Limann and his team would do all they could to make life worth living for the people. They urged Dr. Limann's government to continue, in the revolutionary rhetoric of the time "without fail", the "house-cleaning" exercise as promised. In an interview, Alfred Vanderpuijie, spokesman for the students said the AFRC had done exceedingly well by eradicating to some extent kalabule and other social vices. He observed that the sure way to eliminate these evils is "rigid and frequent checks on public officials and traders' activities." Later, amidst singing of mourning songs, the students burned a coffin to signify the end of "kalabuleism" in Ghana.

6.7.7.3 The demonstration was not spontaneous, and appears to have been organized by the AFRC, or at least with its approval. This is because at the end of it, the report indicated that "the demonstration started from the Liberation Circle through Accra Central (a very "official route") to the "Revolutionary Square" (El-Wak Stadium) where the students were addressed by Fg Offr Fordjoe, [AFRC] Liaison Officer for Student Affairs". Clearly the route used by the students was a pre-determined route. The Liaison Officer had to know about where and when it was expected to end in order to be present to address the students, and the fact that it ended at the so-called "Revolutionary Square"

⁹⁴ Daily Graphic, Vol.8995 Saturday, 22nd September, 1979.

⁹⁵ Ghanaian Times Vol. 6,777 Saturday, 22nd September, 1979.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

(El-Wak Stadium) and not at the Castle or at Burma Camp was significant. It is in the light of this reality that the warning to President Limann to carry on the “house-cleaning” was ominous.

6.7.7.4 The news reports of the time gave little prominence to a new development that showed signs of the beginning of the end of the “honeymoon” between the students and the AFRC. Indeed, the Daily Graphic did not publish that aspect of the demonstrations. However, the Ghanaian Times gave a cryptic report of another aspect of the demonstration. The AFRC had announced an increase in boarding fees for the new academic year for secondary and technical schools. This did not go down well with the student volunteers because some of them were in secondary school. Therefore, during the demonstration to “thank the AFRC”, a cryptic report in the Ghanaian Times confirmed that a “section of the students also demonstrated in protest against the increase in the boarding fees.”

6.7.7.5 From Tema, the GNA reported that the Students Union had issued a statement criticizing the government’s approval of increase in boarding fees from ₵150.00 to ₵231.00, for secondary and technical schools in the public system. They complained that there had been an increase the previous year and therefore the new increases were not justifiable. The students, however, blamed “some top officials of the Ministry of Education and the Ghana Education Service” for trying to discredit the AFRC by convincing the council to approve such ‘killing and prohibitive school fees’.

6.7.7.6 This was an ominous sign that suggested that the “honeymoon” between the two groups may have ended if the AFRC had remained in office longer than it did. The disappointment of the students was understandable because only six weeks before then, the AFRC had issued a warning to proprietors of private schools to decrease their school fees “before the government steps in to do it for them”⁹⁶ and that “any proprietor who fails to comply with this instruction will have himself to blame”. It was thus surprising that the same body would authorize increase in fees for public schools. It is therefore not surprising that the students believed that the advice they had received from “some top officials of the Ministry of Education and the Ghana Education Service” had been given by persons who wanted the AFRC to act to its own detriment.

6.7.8 INTELLECTUAL SUPPORT FOR THE STUDENTS

6.7.8.1 The students did not operate without intellectual support. From the mid-70s when the student movement had become radicalized, it had its intellectual fathers. The account of one student leader, Kabral Blay-Amihere,⁹⁷ has been written in such fine prose that it is impossible to render the subject in more intelligible language. His account of the role of the intellectual fathers of the students' movement in shaping its ideological direction goes thus:

⁹⁶ Daily Graphic Vol. 8959 Saturday, 11th August, 1979, back page.

⁹⁷ Kabral Blay-Amihere, Fighting For Freedom (The Autobiography of an African Journalist), Trans Afrika News Ltd. Accra, 2001, pp.47-50.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

Life at the University of Ghana in the 70s was quite an exciting one, marked by radical politics. We had very brilliant lecturers who became our intellectual mentors. There was Ebo Hutchful, an articulate lecturer in political science who hit the headlines during the short-lived rule of Dr. Kofi Busia. He made the headlines when he broke the protocol and security cordon of Prime Minister Busia during a visit to the University of Ghana and traded words with him...Returning after graduate studies in Canada, he joined the department of political science which had other famous names like Dr. Emma Hansen and Chris Hesse.

They constituted the left at the department which had other lecturers of rightist political persuasion, notably Professor Folsom. Complementing the dominant leftist camp of lecturers were Dr. Kwesi Botchway, Professor Akilagpa Sawyerr and Tsatsu Tsikata, all of the Law faculty. What these lecturers had in common was their academic brilliance and Marxism. They indeed inspired my generation to adopt a radical Marxist view of history and political developments. They were popular with the students and were always on the lecture circuit mostly at the University's auditorium where they engaged other lecturers of the right in debate. Young, fiery and articulate, they obviously won the battle for the minds of students, at least in the radical leadership of the National Union of Ghana Students.

The cold war was still raging on fiercely in the 70s and universities were fertile grounds for winning souls. One lecturer who might have made the greatest impression on students was Dr. Kwesi Botchway who was in his 30s. He was one of the socialist boys who on the overthrow of Nkrumah had been harassed for supporting the socialist policies of the Convention Peoples' Party. He later studied at Yale University and taught at the University of Dar es Salaam during the same time that the famous leftist author and historian Walter Rodney who wrote the third world classic – How Europe Underdeveloped Africa was also teaching at Dar es Salaam University ... Dr. Kwesi Botchway, many years later became Minister of Finance of Ghana and earned the reputation as the best spokesman and defender of policies of the International Monetary Fund. For the generation of students he so inspired as a lecturer, his new role as defender of IMF policies was a complete ideological U-turn and a paradox of the highest order.

From his radical beginnings to his years as a lecturer, Kwesi B as he was called by his friends was a bitter critic of the International Monetary Fund and other international organisations like the World Bank. For me and many others, his anti-imperialist neo-colonial stance on global developments was what made him an intellectual mentor. He was consistently emphatic in blaming these institutions for all the 'woes of the third world'. It must have been a source of worry to him years later when he mounted political platforms and spoke of these institutions and their programmes as sine qua non for our development. Of course in the 70s when he was a simple lecturer in the same trenches as other leftists who years later would abandon the ship and become apologists for capitalism, his message touched base with the ideological struggles of many.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

Another lecturer who made a lasting impression on students in those days was Dr. Jawa Apronti. He was the doyen of socialists on Legon campus. A soft-spoken, grey-haired noble-looking professor of the Institute of African Studies, he supervised many meetings of our small socialist circle. He was not as fire-spitting as Botchwey, but he made the same impact on us with his soft manner of articulating his views.

It was during this period that I met another lecturer, Atukwei Okai. ... Known as the logoligi man, Atukwei Okai was a staunch Nkrumaist and Pan-African [sic]. His unorthodox poetry had made him famous and popular. I was later to use many of his poems to give headlines to my articles...

These prominent intellectual fathers had several other followers within the academic community as well as the worker-population at Legon.

6.7.8.2 The students of the UCC had their mentors in the leftist academics such as Ms Ama Ata Aidoo, Dr Atta Britwum, Nkunu Akyea and Professor Kofi Awoonor. The UST students also had their mentors who were such leftists as the Soviet-trained Dr S B Arthur and Dr Akyeampong as well as Dr Amoo. Many student leaders acknowledge that these lecturers were a great influence on the student movement as they were held in very high esteem by the students. These mentors of the student movement thus acquired a national platform for their ideas, when the students came into partnership with the Junior Officers and Other Ranks of the Armed Forces. Indeed, as was the case with the youthful leaders of the NLC, many of the Junior Officers who were active in the AFRC were school mates, and even classmates of the leaders of the student movement. It was, thus, not surprising that the mentors of the student movement were roped in to mentor the "revolution" and provide intellectual support for the students.

6.7.8.3 Thus, it was, that on 26th July, 1979, a three-day seminar was organized for students on vacation in Accra at the Accra Community Centre under the theme "Spread the aims of the revolution". It was unclear who organized the seminar, but it featured Kwesi Turkson, and some of the "intellectual fathers" of the student movement. Kwesi Turkson, a student of UCC explained to the participants the need for the students themselves to understand the background of the crisis in which they had intervened, hence the need for the seminar. The seminar was also addressed by the representative of the AFRC in charge of student affairs, Fg Offr Forjoe. He lectured the students on the need to keep the revolution going even after the AFRC handed over power, and criticized the Ghanaian public for always wanting soldiers to be at their elbows to protect them, instead of standing up for themselves.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

6.7.8.4 The seminar was also addressed by N N K Aggrey Orleans of the Institute of Adult Education, at the University of Ghana, who charged the students to use the opportunity presented by the revolution as an instrument of change, and to act as watchdogs. Cameron Duodu, a journalist, on his part, urged the students to transmit the views of the rural people to the government during their public education effort.⁹⁸ Professor Akilagpa Sawyerr of the Faculty of Law, University of Ghana also addressed the students on “The structure of the Ghanaian society and change”. He educated the students on the existing classes within the Ghanaian society as a result of colonialism, and urged them to arouse the consciousness of the citizens as to the presence of imperialist agents within the economy. He also encouraged them to appreciate the force of student power, in the achievement of the aims of the revolution. Other speakers were students of the University of Ghana, Kwasi Adu-Amankwah and Tony Akoto-Ampaw.

6.7.8.5 That these “leftist intellectuals” had great influence on the students is not in doubt. Blay-Amihere relates an incident to demonstrate the influence of these lecturers on the students. The government had proposed that all students should undertake military training as national service. The students of Legon were opposed to the idea, but those of UCC supported the idea. At that year’s NUGS Congress, Professor Akilagpa Sawyerr was invited to deliver a paper on the issue. The very fact that the students had opened up their movement’s congress to a lecturer showed what a high opinion they had of him. Blay-Amihere recounts that:

With careful analysis and powerful oratory he convinced everybody that the militarisation of tertiary students was not proper national service. That nailed the agitation for military training as national service. Instead NUGS voted for the present national service whereby graduates go to work in public institutions, schools and other facilities.

6.7.8.6 There were other academics on the campuses who were influential with the students and helped to shape their thinking. One student leader alleges that some of their resolutions were drafted by their lecturers.⁹⁹ Other lecturers were involved in activities that supported the position of the students. For instance, operating under the banner of Society for National Affairs, Dr. Amoako Tuffuor, a lecturer of UST, had issued a statement supporting the executions, and the society had also organized a lecture on 31st July, on the theme “House-cleaning exercise – how to make the benefits permanent”. At this lecture, Dr. Yaw Saffu, a Senior Lecturer at the University of Ghana, expressed the view that “the benefits of the Revolution must be institutionalized, structured and taken beyond the reign of the AFRC”. He also advocated the setting up of a Special Court with a Special Prosecutor to try cases of tax evasion.¹⁰⁰ At that lecture, Agambilla, immediate past President of the SRC of University of Ghana, and a law student, advocated that the in-coming administration of the PNP ought to resist pressures from lawyers to review the decisions of cases tried by the AFRC Special Courts.

⁹⁸ Ghanaian Times, Vol. 6,728 Friday, 27th July, 1979, back page.

⁹⁹ Memorandum to National Reconciliation Commission.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

6.7.8.7 The views expressed at these lectures were important in indicating the direction of the thinking of the AFRC, because not only was the Special Court idea adopted, but Transitional Provisions containing “almost water-tight” ouster clauses were drafted into the 1979 Constitution. These ouster clauses purported to oust the jurisdiction of the courts in order to prevent them from questioning or reviewing the decisions of the AFRC Special Courts. The review of some of those decisions, despite the prohibitions set down in the Transitional Provisions to the 1979 Constitution, became one of the rallying points of the pro 4th June “revolution” group, and was eventually cited as the reason for the murder of three High Court Judges in 1982.

6.7.9 STUDENTS-WORKERS ALLIANCE COMES INTO BEING

6.7.9.1 Students and workers, particularly on the campuses had not been very cordial in relating to one another. Students constantly complained about the treatment that workers on campus meted out to them. Indeed, this lack of cordiality was not a recent phenomenon as it was one of the grievances that fuelled the disturbances at UST in 1966. Socialist rhetoric bases much of its criticism of the bourgeoisie on the exploitation of the masses, represented by the working people. Since “bourgeoisie” was synonymous with persons in authority at this time, support for the interest of the working people as the basis for societal transformation meant solidarity with workers’ unions. Consequently, an alliance was forged between the workers and the students.

6.7.9.2 On 9th August, 1979, the NUGS issued a statement in which it called on the AFRC to appoint workers on commissions of enquiry set up to investigate charges against corrupt officials. According to the students: “This will give these commissions a more revolutionary and worker character, which is better than their present slow and bureaucratic committees.” The statement explained that the recommendation stemmed from their belief that it was the workers who “lived nearest to the dirt and filth and could do the cleaning better.” On housing problems, NUGS called for extension of the “one man, one house” exercise in Tema to all other government-owned or government-built housing units in the urban centres especially at Dansoman and Teshie-Nungua. Those with more than one house in these areas should be brought to book and severely punished. They said they were satisfied with the implementation of the findings of the committee which probed the State Fishing Corporation and the action taken on Tata Brewery Ltd. NUGS also expressed the hope that time would not be wasted

¹⁰⁰ Ghanaian Times, Vol. 6,733 Thursday, 2nd August, 1979. Twenty three years later, the same speaker, now a Senior Fellow and Head of Governance of the Institute of Economic Affairs, made the same call. See, Daily Graphic Vol. 1486472 Friday, 25th October, 2002, p. 1.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

implementing reports on probes on the Black Star Line, the Cocoa Marketing Board, the Timber Marketing Board, RT Briscoe and all other organisations that deserved the broom in the “house-cleaning” exercise. The statement expressed students’ satisfaction with the AFRC’s action in bringing to book all tax evaders and reiterated that the “big fishes” should not be spared. It further called for maximum concentration on the big business houses in the anti-hoarding exercise and the elaboration of an effective system for the distribution of essential commodities and food items. It commended the AFRC for ensuring that these items were within the reach of the common man. The statement accused Irani Bros of hoarding a large consignment of flour, and other business houses of hoarding large stocks of essential commodities.¹⁰¹

6.7.9.3 A few days after this statement, an announcement was made establishing a 58-member committee to dispose of seized assets. The committee included representatives from NUGS, University Teachers of Ghana (UTAG) Trades Union Congress (TUC), Ghana Armed Forces, the police and Lands Department.¹⁰² The committee was to oversee the disposal of assets that would be confiscated to the State.

6.7.9.4 The desire to “house-clean” spread to all other organizations. The demonisation of all persons in authority by the portrayal of all subordinates as hapless victims of the system created by immoral bosses, legitimized any force and violence perpetrated against them. The junior ranks of the Police also mutinied against their superior Officers. This resulted in the creation of a Committee of Enquiry into the Police Service. This Committee was chaired by Capt Karl G Huppenbauer.

6.7.9.5 On 14th August, 1979, NUGS issued a statement commending junior ranks of the Police Force for initiating a clean-up of their institution in tune with the spirit of the revolution. The NUGS took the opportunity to express its disapproval of the premature termination of the action of the junior ranks by the establishment of a committee of enquiry, and observed that the clean-up exercise should have been allowed to proceed to its logical conclusion just like the Armed Forces achieved theirs on 4th June. NUGS thus expressed solidarity with the junior ranks for rising up against their superiors and approved their action because “for far too long the rank and file had been manipulated by their seniors who coerced them to engage in activities that run counter to the ethics of the force.”¹⁰³ NUGS, however, declared its faith in the work of the committee by noting that “recent statements by the chairman of the committee have given worried observers some relief and one would not be wrong to assert that the committee is on the right track”.

6.7.9.6 A group calling itself “Students Investigative Bureau” of the University of Ghana wrote to the Chairman of the PNDC complaining that the AFRC had been soft on B A Mensah, Chairman of International Tobacco Company Ltd, Ghana (ITG), who had committed tax offences on the same scale as J K Siaw of Tata Brewery. In the undated

¹⁰¹ Daily Graphic, Vol. 8961 Tuesday, 14th August, 1979, p.1.

¹⁰² Daily Graphic, Vol. 8958 Friday, 10th August, 1979, pp. 1,5.

¹⁰³ Daily Graphic Vol. 8967 Tuesday, 21st August, 1979, p.5.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

and handwritten letter, they alleged corruption on the part of Maj Boakye Djan and Maj Mensah Poku, two members of the AFRC, for this situation and ended with the statement: “all eyes are watching you in these your last days. Action Now. Long live Student/Chairman comradeship”. They supplied some documentation and quoted one Edward Akumfi Agyeman, a former Financial Controller of ITG, who had resigned from the company, and made a surprising request for the man’s re-instatement even though they themselves stated that the man resigned his office. The Student Investigative Bureau document stated that:

Our study of the character of Mr. B A Mensah shows that he is a robust character and therefore is a security risk to the armed forces revolutionary council and the chairman yourself in particular, and could use his wealth to topple any future government. We are of the view that whether he had paid the tax he evaded or not, once he had committed the offence, he should be brought to book ... We the executives of the Students Investigative Bureau believes [sib] that if the AFRC fails we the students of Ghana in general have failed and therefore we have to work in unison.¹⁰⁴

6.7.9.7 Although there was no named member of the Student Investigative Bureau, an article published by Kwasi Adu a former General Secretary of NUGS, in the Daily Graphic in 1980, asserted his membership of an investigative team that investigated an allegation of ₵20 million tax default, and repeated allegations of corruption against Maj Boakye Djan as well as their previous associations as student-leader and Military Intelligence official respectively.¹⁰⁵ Not only was this “investigation” the gist of the SIB letter, but it also showed a link between student-leaders and national security officials that is disturbing. Kabral Blay-Amihere, a former NUGS President laments the absence of the student movement in the anti-Unigov campaign in 1977, and categorically states:

it is evident that some student leaders worked then for the security forces. At least one letter from one of my opponents explaining to Acheampong’s Security boss, Buckman, actions he took to delay a demonstration by students confirmed this phenomenon of students working as agents.¹⁰⁶

Incidentally allegations were made by the Student Investigative Bureau against E K Buckman, the Security boss at the Castle during the SMC regime, as well, and a recommendation that some properties believed to belong to him ought to be confiscated. It is uncertain who these students of the Student Investigative Bureau were, and who provided information on whose properties ought to be seized by the AFRC. What is clear is that whoever they were, they were powerful enough on the student front to be able to assert the right to speak for “students”.

¹⁰⁴ Letter from Students Investigative Bureau, University of Ghana, Legon, pp. 4-5.

¹⁰⁵ Daily Graphic Vol. 9157 Thursday, 3rd April, 1980, p.8.

¹⁰⁶ Kabral Blay-Amihere, supra, p.97.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

6.7.9.8 Subsequently, Kwasi Adu - then a prominent member of the June Fourth Movement (JFM) who also served on the Confiscated Assets Committee- defended the opposition of the JFM to a public call by Maj Boakye Djan for a probe into AFRC affairs. He maintained that the call was a “dangerous invitation to these international institutions who opposed the AFRC to dismember it”, because opponents of the AFRC would be enabled “to know the little details as to how major policy decisions were made.”¹⁰⁷

6.8 24TH SEPTEMBER, 1979 -- 30TH DECEMBER, 1981:THIRD REPUBLIC PEOPLE’S NATIONAL PARTY (PNP) GOVERNMENT

6.8.1 NUGS

6.8.1.1 The Third Republic opened with skepticism from many in the student leadership about the capacity of the constitutional government to meet the aspirations of the people. Some of the new student leaders had tasted power during the brief period of the AFRC, and so linked up with other persons to form the JFM to “protect the gains of the revolution”. The students of the University of Ghana began to turn away from leftist politics and elected a new NUGS administration on the platform of the ‘Christian Right’. Although out of office at the NUGS level, the Leftist group was still in control of the SRC.

6.8.1.2 The expanse of the university campus provided good cover for any activities that should have been of interest to the state security agencies. As documented by Oquaye,

During the Third Republic, Legon became a den for conspirators against the Limann administration. Captain Kojo Tsikata [(the security chief of the PNDC government)] Amartey Kwei, [(later to be a member of the PNDC)]; Jerry Rawlings [(later to be the Chairman of the PNDC)] and E T Mensah [(then a worker on the campus and later a prominent member of the government of the PNDC)] (all future members of the PNDC) were part of the Legon alliance. Kojo Tsikata had identified the students as a viable source of strength to be exploited to the fullest.¹⁰⁸

This observation is corroborated by accounts of persons, then students, in the University of Ghana. One account is as follows:

[w]e often saw prominent personalities in the leftist movement on campus such as Mr. Tsatsu Tsikata a Lecturer at the Faculty of Law, Tata Ofosu a member of the leftist organization MONAS, Nyeya Yen, Nicholas Atampugire, Zaya Yeebo the editor of the NUGS magazine

¹⁰⁷ Daily Graphic, Vol. 9157 Thursday, 3rd April, 1980, p.8.

¹⁰⁸ Oquaye, supra, p.189.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

‘Aluta’, Bright Oduro Kwarting (all these people named were in the leadership of the student -movement although they had already graduated from the university) and the former Chairman of the AFRC, packed into a Datsun 120Y vehicle zooming around the campus as if on an important errand. Occasionally, the group included Dr. Kwesi Botchwey also a lecturer at the Faculty of Law. It was the frenzied movements of the group and the fact of the jam-packed Datsun 120Y vehicle zooming off as if on an errand that aroused our curiosity and our suspicion that some untoward mischief was afoot. It was therefore no surprise to us when the coup occurred on December 31, 1981.¹⁰⁹

The “conspirators” used the freedom on the campus to freely organize and recruit students and this was not surprising as the “intellectual fathers” of the revolution were mostly lecturers of the University of Ghana, with some prominent ones in the Faculty of Law. The Chairman of the erstwhile AFRC was seen so frequently on the campus that it was no surprise when uninformed observers wrongly concluded that he had enrolled as a student of the university.

6.8.1.3 In 1980, the government mounted a sustained overt surveillance on Capt Tsikata (Rtd). This meant that being a frequent visitor to the campus, the intelligence officials always followed his car onto the campus. The SRC of University of Ghana felt concerned enough to write to the Director of Military Intelligence, protesting the Intelligence operation on the campus. In the letter signed by the President, W.K. Asiedu, entitled “TRAILING OF EX CAPT. KOJO TSIKATA ON THE UNIVERSITY OF GHANA CAMPUS” which was given very wide circulation, the SRC of University of Ghana complained about the operation which it described as “inhuman and undemocratic acts by the Military Intelligence” that was “causing unnecessary uproar and excitement among [the] students on campus”.¹¹⁰

6.8.1.4 Later in the month of November, 1980, an anonymous piece entitled “RAWLINGS-TSIKATA AFFAIR” was mailed to lecturers and students on the campus of University of Ghana alleging that the overt operation against then retired Flt Lt Rawlings and Capt Tsikata (Rtd), was a plot by the American Central Intelligence Agency (CIA). The four-page mimeographed piece contained very serious allegations against officials of the Military Intelligence and demanded the deportation of certain foreign diplomats who, it was alleged, were CIA operatives under diplomatic cover. The document ended with an instruction to the addressee thus: “PASS THIS PAPER ON TO ANOTHER PERSON MAKE MORE COPIES FOR WIDER CIRCULATION SPREAD THEM TO OUR TOWNS AND VILLAGES THE TRUTH MUST BE KNOWN.” Such materials freely circulated on the campus at the time, and helped to engender hostility against the Government of the PNP and also prepared the minds of the university community against the Military Intelligence and the subsequent ferocious assault unleashed on them when the government was overthrown.

¹⁰⁹ Memorandum to National Reconciliation Commission.

¹¹⁰ Reference number SRC/D/33/80/1 dated 21st October, 1980.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

6.8.1.5 The 17th Annual Congress of NUGS in 1981 demonstrated the level of contempt that the NUGS leadership had for institutions of the Third Republic. The 17th Congress was reported in the Citadel Daily as noting that:

Parliament is now the immediate source of our problems and the first enemy of the people. As a result, our people cannot expect anything from that institution.¹¹¹

The Congress further adopted a resolution that offered congratulations to:

the parliamentarians of the 3rd Republic for doing very very well in the role of supervising the poverty, hunger, and disease of our people ... [and that] they shall never find in us friendship when the people of Ghana come to understand them full [sic] and demand their Birth Right back.¹¹²

The NUGS' resolution is not surprising when examined against the backdrop of its participation in the 'Labone Forum' that decided that the PNP Government was not socialist enough to achieve anything purposeful for the poor in Ghana.

6.9 31ST DECEMBER, 1981 -- 6TH JANUARY, 1993:
PROVISIONAL NATIONAL DEFENCE COUNCIL (PNDC)

6.9.1 NUGS

6.9.1.1 The last day of 1981 saw a struggle between the forces supporting the democratically-elected government of President Limann and those of Flt Lt Jerry John Rawlings, former Chairman of the AFRC. The struggle was short-lived, and the government was overthrown. On 2nd January, 1982, Flt Lt Rawlings broadcast to the nation, and called upon "workers, farmers, fishermen, artisans, students and soldiers to make it their collective responsibility to take their destinies into their own hands."¹¹³ He accused the PNP Administration of failing to continue the "house-cleaning" that it had promised to do and that it was the "most disgraceful government in the history of this country". He also complained that the PNP Government had gone ahead to "mutilate all the positive and concrete achievements of the people in order to pave the way for their own corruption", and made democracy mere paper guarantees. Flt Lt Rawlings then announced the suspension of the 1979 Constitution, the dissolution of Parliament and the formation of the new government, the Provisional National Defence Council (PNDC).

¹¹¹ "PARLIAMENT – CONSCIOUS CLIQUE OF NATION WRECKERS - NUGS Congress declares" Citadel Daily, Vol 2 No.4 Wednesday, 13th May – Wednesday, 20th May, 1981, p.1.

¹¹² Ibid.

¹¹³ Daily Graphic, Vol. 9695 Monday, 4th Jan., 1982.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

6.9.1.2 An invitation was thrown to all progressives and students to join the fight to re-build Ghana. The students responded to the invitation to participate in the “Holy War” through the leadership of NUGS. The PNDC took a decision not to permit the re-opening of the universities for the second term in order to enable students assist in national reconstruction. In a speech by the Chairman of the PNDC, it was announced that it had been:

decided with immediate effect to constitute a number of task forces consisting of students of all three universities including the Medical and Law schools as well as the students of the Polytechnics, the IPS, the GIJ, the NAFTI and all equivalent institutions of higher education. These task forces will operate under some of the new units we are creating as under existing arrangements ... for the immediate provision of teaching and basic school facilities in our schools.¹¹⁴

The justification for this decision as the *Daily Graphic*¹¹⁵ reported it was that,

The democratic education policy that was instituted in the country at Independence is what has provided skilled manpower that is now available not only to other countries, but to international agencies and institutions all over the world, even in developed countries. And we are entitled to ask did this country spend all those resources simply to create our own poverty simply so that all the trainees can scatter abroad [and pursue their] personal comfort and not contribute anything to our own development. What use is this expensive education if beneficiaries only see it as an avenue of personal enrichment and then exploit their own people? Have students simply been waiting to get degrees in June so that they can escape the crisis and find brighter pastures outside the country of their birth and their eventual destiny? We know that the development of our African community country is being served by the provision of our skilled manpower and we are not asking people to flock back and abandon their commitments elsewhere...

6.9.1.3 Following this decision, the PNDC caused a radio announcement to be made instructing the universities not to re-open for the second term. The Executive Committee of University of Ghana met on 6th January, 1982, and announced the postponement of the re-opening date which was to have been 8th January, 1982.¹¹⁶

6.9.1.4 NUGS welcomed the decision of the PNDC to send university students out to work. Its central committee issued a statement signed by its President, Philip Gardiner, in which it commended the PNDC for taking a decision that was “a demonstration of bold initiative towards mobilizing the active youth to arrest the deterioration and decadence in ¹¹⁴ Daily Graphic Vvol. 9697 Wednesday, 6th January, 1982, pp.4-5.

¹¹⁵ Ibid.

¹¹⁶ Minutes of Executive Committee Meeting of University of Ghana, 6th January, 1982.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

the Ghanaian society.”¹¹⁷ The statement further revealed the fact that “it had always been the wish of students to be allowed to contribute towards nation building” and that “the call has offered us a chance to carry out this very wish.” NUGS took the opportunity to suggest that the task to be assigned to students should be:

the harnessing of students of such institutions to participate in the education of other students in our schools and colleges. The level of knowledge of the third cycle institution student qualifies him under the present circumstances to at least teach our younger brothers and sisters in schools and colleges.

The NUGS further suggested that: “While based in the schools and colleges, the students it stated could also study possibilities and modalities of mass literacy campaigns.” The rest of the statement was a call on: “all well meaning Ghanaians to use this opportunity to make Ghana a better place”, and “to be alert, offer suggestions and help shape out the destiny of the country.” The statement further called for the preservation of the political situation such that its democratic tendencies would be deepened, though in the tradition of student-support, the PNDC was warned that while giving of their best in the present situation, students would be watchful of deviations from the ideals of the PNDC and would not hesitate to criticize if the need arose.

6.9.1.5 Following this approval of the decision to conscript students for work in the rural areas, the PNDC appointed Lt B F Kusi as PNDC Coordinator-in-charge of Student Affairs. The office, with the support of NUGS, set up task forces which were inaugurated at a function held under the auspices of NUGS to launch the programme. The function was chaired by Edwin Oklu, former Secretary of NUGS, and the President of NUGS, Philip Gardiner, performed the formal launching. In a speech at the function, Lt Kusi stated that there was a need for “a vanguard of all structures of the community” and then revealed that the PNDC had made contact with NUGS because it had realized that students “constitute the most important structure in the revolution.” The speech was made to shouts of “yasom” (“we have embraced it”), when he announced that the academic year had been suspended so that the programme could be started. He then expressed the hope that students would co-operate for the success of the onerous task ahead.¹¹⁸

6.9.1.6 On his part, the NUGS President stated that the students were going out to the rural areas to exchange views with, and help the people to help themselves. He expressed regret that the country inherited an educational system that did not teach students enough about their own people, and that it was on this account that students were being sent to the rural areas to help the people “to initiate programmes of everlasting change”. The NUGS President also informed the students of the scope of the work: some students would be attached to schools that did not have the full complement of its teaching staff.

¹¹⁷ Daily Graphic, Vol. 9699 Friday, 8th January, 1982.

¹¹⁸ Daily Graphic, Vol. 9701 Monday, 11th January, 1982, p.1.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

Others would assist to rebuild roads and evacuate food crops and cocoa, and still others would help to implement communal health services and education programmes on electoral processes. Finally, he announced that participation was compulsory since it was “a period when nobody could escape work” and that “attendance to all functions would be recorded to ensure maximum success of the exercise”.

6.9.1.7 There was no doubt that the students formed a part of a mass mobilization programme that the PNDC had planned. This was because Lt Kusi indicated that the students were to “set the ball rolling” so that by the time they returned to school other people could continue from where they left off. He then announced that the PNDC was working on proposals for the establishment of a national secretariat as well as regional and district secretariats and that the outcome of modalities being worked out would be announced in a week. Clearly the students were to be a part of an already designed scheme. Unlike 1979, which saw the students seizing the initiative to be at the forefront of the “revolution”, the events of the first week of January 1982 revealed a project design that had the students as “canon-fodder”. When NUGS suggested that the students should go to schools to teach and that being in university they knew enough to function as teachers, NUGS was, in fact, pleading with the PNDC to limit the scope of work to one, more suited to the scholarly inclinations of students. Had the student leadership been consulted in advance, the “appeal” would not have been contained in the statement issued by its central committee. Another fact that bears out this view is that during the speech, Lt Kusi expressed the hope “that students would co-operate for the success of the onerous task ahead”. It is unlikely that this would have been the case if the students had agreed to be a part of this programme. What it is most suggestive of, is that the students were being presented with a fait accompli. Indeed, there was no evidence of broad support from students in general, although there was enough to suggest that the leadership of NUGS had condoned the plan to put students from the three universities and other higher institutions to work as conscripts.

6.9.1.8 The mobilization was extended to the other regions as evidenced by this announcement in the Daily Graphic:

All students from the universities and diploma awarding institutions under the GES and IPS who live in and around Ho are requested to meet at the Urban Council Hall, Ho, at 10 am this morning for the inauguration of the Volta regional task force. Similar exercises in the districts would be announced in due course.

6.9.1.9 Regional Co-ordinators were also appointed to administer the programme as evidenced by these newspaper reports a few days later:

Certificates of participation are to be awarded to students who will diligently take part in the mass mobilization programme in the current revolution to help improve the living conditions of the people. The Eastern Regional Co-ordinator, Mr Carl Kpetakpa disclosed this at

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

Koforidua on Wednesday at the inauguration of the students task force for the region. He hinted that the certificates would in future be a major factor in determining the justification for the continued free education for the students in higher institutions. The decision was aimed at checking students who would take advantage of the closure of the country's three universities to pursue their selfish and individual interest rather than the promotion of the ideals of the revolution. He appealed to all students to diligently participate in the programme to avoid any embarrassment to themselves. He told the students that they would be mobilized alongside other units to help cart cocoa and foodstuffs and would also undertake road construction and other development projects. Students would be assigned to schools where their talents would be required.¹¹⁹

The same point was made by the following:

The regional co-ordinator of the Student Task Force for Greater Accra has lined up a number of projects such as road rehabilitation, community health, garbage collection and fertilizer bagging due to begin today. A statement by PNDC said students within the Greater Accra Region had been grouped into zones for the implementation of the projects.

Students living in and around the Airport area , Madina, Legon, Achimota and Kanda would constitute zone 1. And students at Nima, New Town, Kotobabi, and Alogboshie zone II ...Students living in areas not specified should join the nearest zone and buses would be provided to pick them up from the various city express bus stops in their zones to the project sites.¹²⁰

6.9.1.10 The Cape Coast branch of the Student Task Force was inaugurated at Cape Coast by H S Brew, Regional Administrative Officer. The group numbering about 300, cleared rubbish and drains in Cape Coast after the inaugural ceremony.¹²¹

6.9.1.11 As the students were taken off the campuses, it became necessary to involve officials of the education system and, therefore, the following announcement was placed in the dailies:

The following persons are to meet the PNDC co-ordinator on youth and student affairs at the office of the former Council of State (State House) at 9am today. They are the Director-General GES, and a representative of the Council for Higher Education, 2 Representatives of NUGS, a representative of GNAT and a representative of Ghana Association of University Teachers.¹²²

¹¹⁹ Daily Graphic, Vol. 9705 Friday, 15th January, 1982, back page.

¹²⁰ Daily Graphic, Vol.9706 Saturday, 16th January, 1982, back page.

¹²¹ Daily Graphic, Vol. 9711 Friday, 22nd January, 1982, p.1.

¹²² Daily Graphic Vol. 9702 Tuesday, 12th January, 1982, p.5.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

The next day's newspaper carried a report that explained the purport of the previous day's announcement:

A national education committee, which is to examine the task of nation building in the use of the youth and students held its inaugural meeting at the State House in Accra yesterday under the chair of Lt Kusi. Organizations represented were the GES, National Council for Higher Education, and GNAT. Others were NUGS, UTAG and the Press. Lt Kusi called on the organisations represented on the committee to work as hard as they could to spread the message of nation building throughout the length and breadth of the country. He recalled Rawlings speech which said PNDC felt that the fresh energies of the youth of the country could be most taxed in nation building, the students and lecturers constituted a wealth of important talents to deal with the problems of the country. Lt Kusi said the committee on education would have branches in the various regions. The liaison officer made it clear that ... there could be no time wasting on the part of the committee.

After suggestions from members of the committee it was agreed that the meeting reconvene next week to work out the details of how the students and the youth were going to be used. The organizations were also to carry out a lot of homework and present memoranda on the issue. Representatives of NUGS said students would have to forgo most of the comforts because they would be involved in a national exercise of considerable importance.¹²³

At that meeting it was also announced that the involvement of students in teaching would initially last three months and that: "Provision would be made in the programme for the continuation of any project when the students return to the classroom."

6.9.1.12 Contrary to what the students had been told about being used to fill classrooms, the following news item appeared in the newspaper:

The PNDC announced that the 'Student Task Force of NUGS' would mount a nationwide cocoa evacuation exercise from Monday January 18th and that "the exercise will begin in Achiase, Asamankese, Kade, Akroso, Ofoase, Akim Oda and Akim Techiman all in the Eastern Region.¹²⁴

6.9.1.13 Subsequently, on 16th January, the Daily Graphic reported that the task forces had started their work, and in the days that followed the newspapers carried report after report of the activities of the task forces. For instance, on 20th January, the newspaper carried the following report:

¹²³ Daily Graphic, Vol. 9703 Wednesday, 13th January, 1982, p.1.

¹²⁴ Daily Graphic, Vol.9706 Saturday, 16th January, 1982, p.4.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

About 1000 students yesterday left Accra for Akim Oda to evacuate locked up cocoa in the Birim district of the Eastern Region. Students in very high spirits travelled in 7 Tata buses released by the States Transport Corporation and a Bedford bus provided by the CMB. Gardiner told newsmen that the secretariat initially planned for 450 but 1000 of them turned up at the Accra Community Centre to participate in the exercise ... The leadership had contacted the PNDC to provide more ration to supplement what has been earmarked for the exercise. Seventeen towns and villages will be covered in a three -phase programme in the Eastern Region. In all a total of 28,000 tonnes of cocoa is [sic] expected to be evacuated in six weeks.¹²⁵

The newspapers tracked the progress of the Students Task Force, as well as the various organizations which were donating money for the upkeep of the students.

6.9.1.14 The insistence that there was a shortage of manpower in the country became a little difficult to appreciate when the following notice appeared:

The PNDC has asked private farmers requiring the services of student labour to apply to the office of the youth and student affairs at the State House today. Applications should describe the type of farm, location number of students and the nature of work students would be required to perform. Where it would be inconvenient to submit labour applications direct to the office, such requests should be made through the various regional and district administrative offices for submission to the national co-ordinator for youth and student affairs by January 18.¹²⁶

6.9.1.15 The students in Accra were also sent out to undertake a clean-up exercise that lasted six hours according to a newspaper report¹²⁷. At the end of the programme, the students converged at the Nicholson Stadium at Burma Camp where they were addressed by the NUGS President, Philip Gardiner, and the Chairman of the PNDC. Gardiner was reported to have affirmed students support for the PNDC and warned that NUGS would force the removal of any imperialist agent who might be appointed to work with the PNDC. Gardiner made it clear that PNDC should not stand in their way if they wanted to change the country for the betterment of the ordinary people. The NUGS President then reminded students of their responsibility to the underprivileged and declared, “if we fail to use our education for the betterment of the people then we are traitors”. To the PNDC, he gave the caution that it should be wary of imperialists because they would do everything humanly possible to obstruct the success of the revolution. To this end, the NUGS President advised the PNDC to stay away from the old way of doing things. As a first step, it was to avoid appointing to high office any persons who could be shown to have subscribed to the past ideals of ruling the country and that no “person with a

¹²⁵ Daily Graphic Vol. 9709 Wednesday, 20th January, p.1.

¹²⁶ Daily Graphic, Vol. 9707 Monday, 18th January, 1982, p.1.

¹²⁷ Ibid.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

provable history of links to western imperialists” was to be allowed to control the council.

6.9.1.16 The Chairman of the PNDC then took over and addressed many issues of national importance. He reminded students of their responsibility within the society and urged them to use their creative powers, and abilities for the benefit of their citizens. He urged them to set the right tempo to enable Ghana assume her proper place in Africa and in the world at large, and exhorted them thus: “Your intellectual and physical power is mighty and must be harnessed to project the creative ability of the individual”. “ You are the consciences of this society and you must unearth the creative power in you for the development and growth of this our beautiful nation.” He ended by cautioning students not to permit themselves to be “disorganized by the detractors of the revolution”.¹²⁸

6.9.1.17 The news report makes interesting reading especially as the NUGS followed up on the threat by issuing a statement when certain personalities it did not approve of were appointed to head some Ministries a few days later. The newspaper reported the news thus:

The NUGS yesterday asked PNDC to revoke the cabinet appointments of 4 persons because they represent ‘the enemies of the people’. In a strongly worded statement reacting to the composition of the PNDC cabinet, students stated that they had been extremely disappointed in the inclusion of J A Kufuor, Obed Asamoah, Alhaji Mahama Iddrissu and K B Asante in his cabinet. It described the 4 persons as reactionaries, anti-people Ideologues and active political party functionaries. [The] Students’ body observed that the appointment did not reflect a broad sample of political tendencies but a simple amalgamation of rank reaction and ‘representatives of foreign interests’.

The NUGS explained that the action of December 31 in which several soldiers lost their lives was a move to destroy a situation with which a few political party tycoon of the same basic mould collaborated to rule this country in the interest of foreign imperialist powers to the detriment of the working people. The Statement made it clear that all political parties had the same interests and performed the same functions. This is why the military take-over made sense, rather than waiting for the next election for Ghanaians to vote an alternative party into power NUGS stressed. The statement said the union saw in the appointments the return of political power to the same group of politicians and their foreign masters.

The 31 December uprising appeared now as just another palace coup d’etat replacing PNP government which at least was popularly elected with its opposite party the (APP) All Peoples Party. NUGS observed that the character of PNDC government was a wholesale adoption of a programme of the 'National Government' proposed by the professional bodies association and the Bar Association two bodies who have shown continually that they are on the side of the enemy. The student body asked the PNDC to resist the intense pressures of the agents of imperialism to dictate policy even through the Council. NUGS thereby warned PNDC to clearly make an alliance either with the people as it promised or with the enemy. There is no middle way. This national government will simply lead to a lack of direction and inertia which will allow ousted forces to consolidate their power and stage a complete come back. It said the composition of the cabinet was like a group within which the one or two popularly acceptable people would be paralysed and made incapable of fruitful contribution. In the interim, NUGS warned that it would advise itself on possible courses of action should satisfactory resolution to its demand not be immediately forthcoming. It called on workers, farmers, and students to come out and denounce the move in very clear terms.¹²⁹

¹²⁸ Daily Graphic, Vol. 9707 Monday, 18th January, 1982, p.1.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

6.9.1.18 In March, 1982, prominence was given to a statement by a group of students who attended a National Task Force Conference in Kumasi and resolved to continue the work "instead of rushing back to campus". The tell-tale signs of dissent among the students on their continued stay off-campus were visible when this group described those agitating for a return to campus as "anti-revolutionaries".¹³⁰ Two days later, the news item was featured again, leaving the strong impression that their position reflected the official position. The following week, students organized under Zone Eight Task Force, issued a statement reacting to the resolution passed at the Kumasi Conference and attributed it to NUGS and maintained that since they had been made to believe that they would be allowed to return to campus in April, the extension of the programme would affect their psychological well-being.¹³¹ The Daily Graphic wrote an editorial on the conflict among the students, and urged the PNDC to intervene to resolve the conflict amicably. This cleavage began to show the non-voluntary nature of the Task Forces, as the leadership of the students appeared to be more worried about who would fill the vacuum created by the departure of the students, than they were with the welfare of their membership.

6.9.1.19 The Task Forces did not just evacuate cocoa, etc, but were reported to be effecting arrests of officials who had allegedly defrauded the state,¹³² enforcing price control on goods, and even demanding the dismissal of "corrupt" officials. They were also involved in checking smuggling and other unhealthy economic practices.

¹²⁹ Daily Graphic, Vol. 9712 Saturday, 23rd January, 1982, pp.1,4-5.

¹³⁰ Daily Graphic, Vol. 9758 Thursday, 18th March, 1982.

¹³¹ Daily Graphic, Vol. 9764 Thursday, 25th March, 1982.

¹³² Daily Graphic, Vol. 9728 Thursday, 11th February, 1982; Daily Graphic, Vol.9917 Saturday, 25th September, 1982, p.5.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

6.9.1.20 NUGS was subsequently awarded the “Order of the Star of Ghana (Civil Division)”, for the work of the Students Task Force. The award, which was presented to NUGS at the closing session of the 18th Annual Congress of NUGS at Cape Coast, was received by Philip Gardiner, then out-going President of NUGS, on behalf of the students.¹³³

6.9.2 STUDENTS’ TASK FORCE IS RE-NAMED

6.9.2.1 When the university students returned to the campuses and the secondary schools re-opened for the new academic year, the Students Task Force continued to function. However, it was clear at this point that those left to carry on the work of the Task Force were no longer students, as all “students” had returned to their various campuses. Consequently, those who had just ceased to be “students”, as well as other out-of-school youth were recruited to continue the activities, and so the group was then re-named ‘Students and Youth Task Force’ or just ‘Youth Task Force’.¹³⁴ The Task Forces in their new form, continued from where the others left off. They conducted vigilante activities to effect arrests; performed anti-smuggling operations; and performed police duties, such as criminal investigations.¹³⁵

6.9.2.2 Eventually, the Students and Youth Task Force was converted into the National Mobilisation Programme, that was used to absorb the many young Ghanaians who had been deported from Nigeria in 1983, by forming them into work-gangs known as “mobi-squads”.

6.9.3 OTHER ACTIVITIES OF STUDENTS

6.9.3.1 The Ghana Bar Association (GBA) announced after its Annual Conference on 24th September, 1982, that it had no intention of appearing before the Public Tribunals for stated reasons. A group calling itself “Future Leaders Organization”, said to be composed of students and youth numbering “several hundreds”, took to the streets chanting revolutionary songs and accusing lawyers of arrogance.¹³⁶ Although the report was careful to name a “Master Abu Mohammed Lawal, a form four student of West Africa Secondary School” as one of the leaders, the demonstration seemed somewhat contrived.¹³⁷ The newspaper backed the action of the “students aged between 14 and 18” with a cutting editorial, stating that:

If progressive and honest lawyers do not make their own individual decisions, it seems quite clear that the Bar Association will bring the

¹³³ Daily Graphic, Vol. 9871 Monday, 2nd August, 1982.

¹³⁴ Vol. 9951, Thursday, 4th November, 1982, p.5.

¹³⁵ Daily Graphic, Vol. 9961, Tuesday, 16th November, 1982, back page.

¹³⁶ Daily Graphic, Vol. 9922, Friday, 1st October, 1982, p.1.

¹³⁷ Ibid.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

noose down the entire institution faster than the revolution would determine.¹³⁸

These were chilling words indeed, from the national newspaper, giving credence to the suspicion that the students' demonstration was organized with official approval.

6.9.3.2 On the same day, the Daily Graphic carried an ultimatum from a group of youth associations in Koforidua calling itself "The Progressives of Eastern Region" to lawyers in Koforidua ordering them to close down their chambers within three days from September 30, or face reprisals. This order was in reaction to the decision of the GBA to boycott the Public Tribunals. One week later, the "Progressives in the Eastern Region" were reported to have besieged five chambers of lawyers in private practice taking away their "law books and legal documents during a four-hour operation code-named 'Operation Close Down'".¹³⁹ In the days following, lawyers' chambers were attacked and their properties destroyed in a bid to force them out of business.

6.9.4 "INTERNATIONAL BRANCHES"

6.9.4.1 This period also saw the development of a new phenomenon: overseas branches of NUGS. The newspapers began to report on programmes organized by the United Kingdom branch of the NUGS. This was a strange bit of news as this branch had not been known to be in existence before this time. Thus, NUGS had not only assumed a supra-institutional character, but had allegedly developed international branches as well.

6.9.4.2 NUGS had also acquired permanent off-campus offices at the offices of Ministry of Youth and Sports in 1980. Since permanent offices required permanent staff, NUGS appointed some persons, who were former student leaders as staff to run the secretariat. NUGS therefore began to rely on persons who had ceased to be students, to run the offices as full-time staff. These were developments that changed the character of NUGS to a significant extent as it became possible for former student-leaders to retain their influence over the NUGS long after they had ceased to be students.

6.9.5 NUGS MOVES INTO OPPOSITION

6.9.5.1 By the beginning of December, 1982, the students' disenchantment with the government had begun to spill over. The government and its allies in the labour movement had mooted the idea of students being sent off from campus for up to two years to assist in the reconstruction effort. The students on the various campuses began to protest the policies of the PNDC. On 14th December, some students of the University of Ghana under the leadership of the SRC, went on a demonstration against the government

¹³⁸ Ibid., "Comment".

¹³⁹ Daily Graphic, vol. 9928 Friday, 8th October, 1982.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

on the campus, echoing a call by the Religious Bodies for the government to hand over power to a National Government. They carried placards, some of which read “DOWN WITH DICTATORSHIP”, “PNDC HAND OVER TO NATIONAL GOVERNMENT”, “NO MORE DETENTION WITHOUT TRIAL”. Another group of students calling itself “Concerned Students” held a counter-demonstration. The Daily Graphic account headlined “LOYAL WORKERS FORCE ANTI-GOVT STUDENTS TO RETREAT AT LEGON” described the confrontation as follows:

Suddenly the WDC members of the university also arrived on the scene carrying placards and chanting war songs in support of the PNDC under the leadership of Flt Lt J J Rawlings. They then took control of all vantage points of the university. Sensing danger, the anti-government student demonstrators started retreating in small groups to escape the wrath of the workers. The workers and the ‘concerned students group’ then marched to the various halls warning that minority group of students calling on the government to hand over to a national government to stop what they described as evil deeds.¹⁴⁰

6.9.5.2 The confrontation so affected the atmosphere on the campus of the University of Ghana, that the Executive Committee of the University closed the session a few days early, citing the students’ apprehension about their safety on the campus.¹⁴¹

6.9.5.3 The same type of confrontation occurred at UST and with the kitchens and canteens closed by reason of the workers action, the students had to leave the campus for the Christmas vacation a few days early as there was no food.¹⁴² The anti-government students began to be described by such epithets as “reactionaries” and “imperialist agents”, and were accused of being in the pay of “crooked politicians”. The University of Cape Coast also had its “concerned students” group that issued an 11-point resolution in Accra, criticizing the demands of their colleagues as unreasonable, whilst they remonstrated with the workers to be more understanding of the students. NUGS, under its new President, K Amoah Labi, stoutly defended the students’ position and insisted that it was not reactionary, but that its new position had been born out of their experience on the Task Forces earlier in the year.

6.9.5.4 From this point onwards, it appeared that the alliance that had been forged between the students and workers at the beginning of the year was broken. The workers of the University of Ghana persisted in their calls for the university to be closed down and for the students to be put to work to assist in national reconstruction, whilst the students stoutly resisted this demand. It had become clear that the workers resented the students for enjoying privileges funded by the tax-payer, whilst being unwilling to sacrifice for the comfort of the underprivileged in the country.

¹⁴⁰ Daily Graphic, Vol. 9986, Wednesday, 15th December, 1982, p.1.

¹⁴¹ Daily Graphic, Vol. 9987, Thursday, 16th December, 1982, p.7.

¹⁴² Daily Graphic, Vol. 9988, Friday, 17th December, 1982 p.7.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

6.9.5.5 The year 1983 was a difficult year for NUGS, as its anti-government stance widened the breach between the government and university workers on the one part, and students on the other. At the urging of the workers, a proposal was mooted to extend the National Service Scheme to two years instead of the original one year, because students ought to contribute more to national development. NUGS resisted this idea, maintaining that it was doing enough. NUGS renewed its call for the PNDC to hand over power so that a civilian government could take over the reigns of government.

6.9.5.6 As if on cue, there was a newspaper publication two weeks later to the effect that the leadership of NUGS and the Association of Recognised Professional Bodies (ARPB) had met an agent of the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) of the United States of America and assisted the agent to collect sensitive information about Ghana.¹⁴³ Those leaders were also accused of secretly circulating the report of the Special Investigation Board to foreign embassies. These accusations, coming in the middle of an anti-CIA campaign that demonized the agency in Ghanaian eyes, had very grave implications for the persons concerned as anti-student sentiments had been whipped up among workers. Stephen Asamoah Boateng, one of the student leaders concerned, denies this alleged NUGS link with the CIA, maintaining that it was he who, as the NUGS officer in charge of international relations, sent those materials in person to foreign embassies as part of NUGS strategy to fill a perceived leadership-vacuum and to keep the wider world informed about the goings-on in Ghana.¹⁴⁴

6.9.5.7 On 4th May, 1983, the NUGS Annual Congress, meeting at UST, was disrupted by a demonstration by workers of Obuasi Mines. The miners had been transported to the campus in a large number of buses by the Ashanti Regional Secretary, Kwame Dwemoh-Kessie, to UST ostensibly to demonstrate in favour of the Workers Defence Committee (WDC) of the University. Why it was that it was miners from Obuasi, rather than other workers of Kumasi itself, who travelled on a working day to demonstrate on the university campus in solidarity with the workers of the university is not immediately obvious. However, what is not surprising is that the students read this as an attack on them on their own campus and a violation of their “territory” and fought off the miners. The miners thus got the worse of the encounter as the terrain was unfamiliar to them and so they could not make a speedy exit. About five persons were injured, and one of their vehicles was set ablaze by the students.¹⁴⁵ The next day, TEWU of University of Ghana issued a press statement in which it condemned the students of UST whilst congratulating the miners for demonstrating on the university campus. The government also issued a statement in which it condemned the students of UST¹⁴⁶ and the stage was thus set for a showdown between the students on the one hand, and the government and workers on the other.

¹⁴³ People's Daily Graphic Vol. 10104 Friday, 6th May, 1983, p.1.

¹⁴⁴ Memorandum to National Reconciliation Commission.

¹⁴⁵ Ibid.

¹⁴⁶ People's Daily Graphic, Vol. 10105, Thursday, 7th May, 1983, p.1.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

6.9.5.8 On 6th May, 1983, students of the three universities went on demonstrations against PNDC in Accra, Kumasi and Cape Coast, asking the government to hand over power to the Chief Justice in preparation for a civilian government. The students of University of Ghana led by the NUGS leaders, Arthur Kennedy and Asamoah Boateng carried placards, some of which read: “JJ WE HELPED YOU IN AND WE SHALL HELP YOU OUT” and “WE DETEST MILITARY RULE”, and marched to the centre of town. At the Makola area, they burnt the effigy of the Chairman of the PNDC. They then re-grouped and set off for the offices of Graphic Corporation and the New Times Corporation to demonstrate their displeasure at the uncritical support the press was lending to the government. The march turned violent when the students were ambushed on the New Times Corporation area which is a narrow corridor linking Ring Road East to the Industrial Area of Accra, and attacked by soldiers and persons suspected to be thugs. According to eye-witness accounts, the fleeing students were chased to offices of businesses in the area where they had sought refuge, dragged out and subjected to severe beatings. Many students suffered various degrees of injury. The People’s Daily Graphic report gave a slightly different account of the incident, maintaining that the protesting students banged on a passing military vehicle and the occupants fired warning shots. The newspaper account did not explain why the occupants of the military vehicle abandoned their journey and chased the students from office to office.

6.9.5.9 Following this incident, the National Defence Committee (NDC) and the TEWU of University of Ghana met and passed a resolution asking for the universities to be closed down. Some workers of the university also arrested a vehicle belonging to the American Embassy, suspecting it of espionage on the campus, manhandled the Ghanaian driver, and sent it to the Graphic Corporation to show it to the press. They urged the government to close down the universities for five years, after which the students were to be made to re-apply for admission.¹⁴⁷ At Cape Coast, the students of UCC also marched to the offices of ‘Graphic Corporation’ and ‘New Times Corporation’ at Cape Coast and seized about 800 copies of People’s Daily Graphic.

6.9.5.10 A group calling itself the Progressive Students Front of University of Ghana issued a statement dissociating itself from the demand of NUGS and accused Arthur Kennedy and the other NUGS leaders of being in league with reactionaries to derail the revolution. The statement, signed by its leader, Marlon Anipa, criticized the NUGS for its “reactionary posture” and that the NUGS leadership was only representing its own self and no one else.¹⁴⁸ The statement further alleged that Sam Okudzeto and William Ofori-Atta, two veteran Ghanaian politicians described as “bankrupt politicians”, participated fully in the NUGS Congress and suggested that it was these personalities who had influenced the adoption of the anti-government stance. This statement from the Progressive Students Front, showed a split in the student front at a time it was engaged in a life and death struggle with the government. The NUGS leadership was subsequently isolated politically, and it was no surprise when it was reported in the newspapers in June that the President of NUGS, Arthur Kennedy and another student, Stephen Asamoah Boateng were on the run. Unfortunately for one other student leader, Hans Djaba, a medical student, he was arrested and detained in prison.

¹⁴⁷ People’s Daily Graphic, Vol 10105 Saturday, 7th May, 1983, p.1.

¹⁴⁸ People’s Daily Graphic, Vol 10106 Monday, 9th May, 1983 p.5.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

6.9.5.11 On 9th May, 1983, Accra-Tema Central WDC and workers of University of Ghana took over the university following a People's Daily Graphic report that the students claimed to have access to arms, and were determined to use petrol bombs against the workers. The situation was so chaotic that the university authorities sent the students home. The JFM hailed the closure of the universities by the workers as a good step that would let the students stay at home and also experience the kind of suffering that workers had had to undergo. The campus of the University of Ghana was occupied by “cadres of the revolution” to undergo a “course” using the university’s lecture rooms and Halls of Residence.

6.9.5.12 On 16th May, 1983, the government issued a statement that the universities should remain closed indefinitely, and that consultations would take place with the university authorities and representatives of workers on the future of the two universities.¹⁴⁹ Subsequently on 2nd June, 1983, the University of Cape Coast was also closed down following clashes between the pro-NUGS and pro-Government student groups.¹⁵⁰ Although Civil society organizations, in particular UTAG and the Religious Bodies¹⁵¹ mounted pressure on the government to re-open the universities, they remained closed for ten months. As time passed and there was no word from the government, parents and students began to experience frustration. Meeting after meeting between the authorities of the universities and the government yielded no result. Finally, after eight months, with one set of school-leavers waiting at home for the old academic year to be completed so that they could also enter university, the government began to relent. The government agreed to reopen the universities on condition that the students would reapply for admission.

6.9.5.13 On 12th January, 1984, the Committee of Vice-Chancellors of the three universities met and issued a notice informing the students to re-apply for admission. The application had to contain the following pledge:

- “I of the Department ofin the University of do hereby apply for re-admission into the University. I make this application on the understanding that
- (1) I will not at any time engage in any activities which could have the effect of disturbing the academic life of the university.
 - (2) I will behave responsibly in accordance with the University’s statutes and regulations as well as the laws of the land.

¹⁴⁹ People's Daily Graphic, Vol 10112 Monday, 16th May, 1983, p.4.

¹⁵⁰ People's Daily Graphic, Vol. 10128 Thursday, 3rd June, 1983, p.9.

¹⁵¹ See Ghana Bishops Speak, National Catholic Secretariat, Accra, 1999.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

Date..... signed"

Each student was expected to fill this form, sign and return it to the registrar of the university concerned.

6.9.5.14 The universities were finally allowed to reopen at the end of March 1984. The University of Ghana, which suffered the take-over by “occupation forces” lost a great deal through theft, involving even some of the university’s own employees, rough use of facilities by the cadres”¹⁵² and sheer vandalism. It is officially estimated that this eventually cost the university the equivalent of $4 million because during “the sojourn of the ‘occupation force’”, a lot of damage was done to public and private property.

6.9.4.15 By the time of the re-opening, many students had found placement abroad in foreign universities. Sixth Form leavers had to wait one year before entering university and so they were put on National Service in order to use the wait-time profitably. Those who had options to attend school outside Ghana exercised the option and thus began the practice of students aiming for foreign universities and filling application form after application form in order to attend a university – any university – outside Ghana. The workers of the universities had by this time, managed to press their demand to be represented on the governing councils of the universities. Consequently, in February 1984, the university councils were dissolved and reconstituted with worker and student representation.

6.9.4.16 The clashes did not end. In 1986, the government announced a planned withdrawal of subsidies from the Second and Third cycle institutions. This caused tension between the students and the government. The students began to agitate against the government. In the course of such agitation, the Secretary of NUGS, Kakraba Cromwell, was arrested allegedly on charges of being involved in drug trafficking. A statement by Kwamena Ahwoi indicated in a public statement that Cromwell was arrested at the airport in 1982, for attempting to smuggle marijuana out of the country and that he had since been on bail. He had also been implicated in a marijuana smuggling case in Dakar, Senegal, and that his name was on the list of international drug traffickers. This explanation did not sit well with the students since no attempt had been made to pursue the charges until he became a student leader. Eight students of the university and one from the Ghana School of Law, who had met with government on the Kakraba Cromwell issue, reported the proceedings to the student body. Their report led to a boycott of lectures by the students of University of Ghana.

6.9.4.17 The government reacted by dismissing them from the university, claiming that they had so skewed the report that they had misinformed the student body on campus about what had happened at the meeting with government. The affected students were: Kwame Akyianu, Kofi Ofori Yeboah, Kofi Gyamfi, Bedu Ansah, Abeku Brew, Amoah Larbi, Kweku Paintsil and Arthur Kennedy. In addition to this order, Amoah Larbi, ¹⁵² Agbodeka, op.cit supra, p.230.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

Arthur Kennedy, Tony Akoto-Ampaw and Augustina Agyirigah were ordered to report at the Nima Police Station on the following 9th May, 1987, and were also barred from entering any educational institution in the country. On 8th May, 1987, however, the government closed down the university¹⁵³, and issued a statement in which it alleged that the disturbances on the campus were the result of “activities of political agitators and agent provocateurs as well as people hiding behind the cover of the student movement to perpetrate criminal and subversive activities.”¹⁵⁴ The government statement further stated that it:

“would not tolerate the adventures of infantile leftists who would under the hypocritical guise of championing legitimate causes, were seeking to create conditions for the paralysis and destruction of certain vital national structures. The permanent closure of the university is only one of their callous designs on the insane and simplistic premise that universities are breeding grounds for elitism, reactionaries and the bourgeoisie.”¹⁵⁵

6.9.4.18 The government seemed to be addressing particular persons, and the inclusion of Tony Akoto-Ampaw, a prominent member of the New Democratic Movement (NDM) in the list of persons banned from entering any educational establishment was very revealing for more than one reason. First, the statement cast the dispute in the old mould of the struggle for control of the revolution that occurred between the intellectual Left and the leadership of the PNDC. This appeared to be the last phase of the struggle since the leadership of the PNDC had, by this time, abandoned all trappings of leftist ideology. Second, it was revealing because the government had a substantial number of past student leaders amongst its own ranks, and must have been familiar with the political agenda of student leaders.

6.9.4.19 The People’s Daily Graphic followed this blistering statement from the government with a diatribe of its own in the form of an editorial on the front page entitled “Dishonest Poison”.¹⁵⁶ This editorial, remarkable for its personalised use of invective against the individual student leaders and their intellectual mentors with swipes against some family of their members in a state-owned newspaper, was remarkable in other ways. It stated that:

This nation is presently having to examine the extent to which the fabric of our revolutionary process has been contaminated by the unprincipled, dishonest poison of little minds which have been turned sour by empty ambition.

We are referring to those who, on our university campuses have been focal points of misinformation and distortion and have spread their own

¹⁵³ Agbodeka, op. cit supra, p.231

¹⁵⁴ People’s Daily Graphic, Vol.11345, Thursday, 8th May, 1987 p.1; also, West Africa, vol. 3640 18th May, 1987, p.983.

¹⁵⁵ Ibid.

¹⁵⁶ People’s Daily Graphic, Vol. 11347 Monday, 11th May, 1987 ‘Front Page Comment’.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

poison to young minds in a bid to destroy that which they cannot control".¹⁵⁷

It proceeded to further explain its position on the closure of the university thus:

When the government closed down the University of Ghana and dismissed certain students last week, many people may have thought this was a harsh step.

Others who have been more aware of the activities of the past and present student leaders may, on the other hand, have wondered why the government has been so tolerant for so long, and why it has gone to considerable lengths [sic] to avoid publicizing and holding up for public ridicule and condemnation the carefully orchestrated game which they have been playing. It is about time, we consider, that their tactics were exposed.

6.9.4.20 The newspaper editorial then took to task some named persons described as “pseudo-intellectuals, the super leftists, the pretentious talkers who have become campus fixtures over the past decade” behind the students’ action. Accusing them as a “super radical clique”, they were blamed for having corrupted many “good cadres by poisoning their minds.” In specific terms, blame for the 1982 misadventure of Sgt Alolga Akata-Pore that led to his departure from the PNDC was laid squarely at the door of these “infantile leftists.” The newspaper also stated that it was these same “super radicals” whose impractical theories had led to confusion in the Interim National Coordinating Council (INCC) of the PDCs/WDCs and that it was their influence that had so misled the PDCs/WDCs that they had to be changed to Committees for the Defence of the Revolution (CDR). The People’s Daily Graphic editorial left one in no doubt, by the way it attacked the “super radicals”, that the 1987 student-government clash was known to be a part of the 1982-84 struggle for ideological supremacy that caused the extreme leftists in the PNDC to attempt to usurp power in 1983, and that also immobilized and destroyed the INCC.

6.9.4.21 Akoto-Ampaw denies this link between the two events and explains that the NDM had nothing to do with Akata-Pore’s problems with the PNDC; but that the link was drawn in an attempt to discredit all the leftists by lumping unrelated events together.¹⁵⁸ Be that as it may, a cryptic notice appeared in the Daily Graphic of 15th July, 1987, requesting all persons in the TUC, NDC, INCC, NDM and KNRG to hand over all weapons and ammunition in their custody to the Inspector-General of Police for registration by the 16th of July.¹⁵⁹ The inference from this notice is that some civilians were provided with arms and ammunition without proper registration procedures being respected. However, Akoto-Ampaw denies this, and maintains that the notice was part of

¹⁵⁷ Ibid.

¹⁵⁸ Memorandum to National Reconciliation Commission.

¹⁵⁹ People’s Daily Graphic Vol. 11391 Thursday, 16th July, 1987.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

the intimidatory tactics adopted against them, and that they had never been provided with arms and ammunition as the notice claimed.¹⁶⁰ It is uncertain whether he could make this denial on everyone's behalf since it is unlikely that he knew what everybody in those named groups had been involved in within the relevant period.

6.9.4.22 The end to this saga came when the student leaders, with the exception of Akoto-Ampaw, failed to report to the police and instead, fled into exile. From this point on, NUGS became even more disaffected with, and estranged from the PNDC and actively worked to see a return to constitutional rule. In May, 1991, it organized a demonstration at Cape Coast after a meeting of its central committee, to protest the membership of the Consultative Assembly. Some of the placards the students carried, read "What do HAIRDRESSERS, MECHANICS AND BUTCHERS KNOW ABOUT CONSTITUTIONS?", "PNDC HAS DESTROYED THE ECONOMY", "NO REFERENDUM".¹⁶¹ At Tamale, a week later, another demonstration, obviously under the auspices of NUGS took place. The placards there read: "JJ STEP DOWN", "PNDC ENOUGH IS ENOUGH" and "NUGS CALLS ON PNDC TO QUIT".¹⁶² What is worthy of note is that such demonstrations no longer took place in Accra, nor were they reported on the front page of the state-owned newspapers where such action used to be a few years earlier.

6.9.4.23 A few months later, NUGS joined a group known as the Coordinating Committee of Democratic Forces (CCDF) that organized press conferences, beginning from 6th August 1991, to take a stand on the need for a return to civilian rule. The group was said to be open to "all independent organizations that stand for multiparty democracy, respect for fundamental human rights, the rule of law and the sovereignty of the people of Ghana."¹⁶³ (emphases in original). The need to form the group was made manifest "by the continued intransigence of the PNDC in the face of popular and democratic demands and by the need to unite all democratic forces to press forward, with greater effect, the struggle for democracy in Ghana and the assertion of the sovereignty of her people".¹⁶⁴

The group was made up of the following organizations:

1. The Movement for Freedom and Justice
2. The National Union of Ghana Students
3. The Danquah-Busia Memorial Club
4. Our Heritage
5. Great Unity Club
6. Ex-PP Group
7. The Kwame Nkrumah Welfare Society

¹⁶⁰ Memorandum to National Reconciliation Commission.

¹⁶¹ People's Daily Graphic, Vol. 12591 Monday, 20th May, 1991, p.9.

¹⁶² People's Daily Graphic, Vol. 12597 Monday, 27th May, 1991, p.3.

¹⁶³ Joint Declaration of Democratic Forces on the Process of Transition to Democratic Rule in Ghana, Issued at a Press Conference, Accra, 6th August, 1991.

¹⁶⁴ Ibid.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

8. The Ashanti Youth Association
9. The Gold Coast Ex-Servicemen Union
10. The Kwame Nkrumah Revolutionary Guards
11. The New Democratic Movement.

The NUGS had thus come full circle when it joined other democratic forces in the struggle for a return to constitutional government and multi-party rule.

6.9.4.24 1992, NUGS condemned the transitional timetable of the PNDC, the continued detention of political prisoners, as well as the inclusion of indemnity provisions in the Draft Constitution. NUGS expressed its opposition thus:

It is a paragon of bunkums for the PNDC to have convicted and punished innocent Ghanaians since 1981 through its own kangaroo court viz. the Citizens Vetting Committee only to turn round to indemnify itself against the due process of justice. Is it not ironic to extend the indemnity to the coup plotters of 1966 and 1972 when their leading members have already been killed by the incumbency? Of better profit to them would have been for the PNDC to wish them “rest in peace”.¹⁶⁵

NUGS also asked for a general amnesty to be declared, to enable political exiles to return home.

6.9.4.25 Following the disagreement over the results of the Presidential elections in 1992, NUGS adopted a resolution on 26th December, declaring a boycott of the 29th December, 1992 Parliamentary Elections, complaining that it was a subtle attempt to “return this country to a one-party dictatorship”, because the Voters Register was flawed.¹⁶⁶ NUGS thus shares the credit for the victory that pro-democracy forces achieved, when they enabled Ghana to return to constitutional rule in January, 1993.

6.10 CONCLUSION

6.10.1 The student movement was active in national politics throughout the mandate period. It co-operated with the military rulers and was always in the forefront of public demonstrations of support for every usurper-government. However, the students were usually, also the first to publicly oppose the government. This usually marked the government’s decline and subsequent inability to hold on to power.

¹⁶⁵ National Union of Ghana Students Statement on the Transitional provisions of the Constitution in Ghana’s Political Transition 1990-1993 Selected Documents Kwame Ninsin (ed) Freedom Publications Accra, 1996, p.141.

¹⁶⁶ National Union of Ghana Students Resolution Declaring a Boycott of the 29 December Parliamentary Elections in Ghana’s Political Transition 1990-1993 Selected Documents, supra, p.165.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 6

6.10.2 It is obvious that the student movement played a big role in national affairs during the mandate period. It was also observable that the role got even larger during periods of unconstitutional government than during periods of constitutional rule. During the AFRC days in 1979, it became a partner of government as it put its numbers behind every policy of the government. It participated actively in the events that resulted in massive human rights abuses. The student movement will never live down the moment when it made the call “Let the blood flow”, in agitation for more executions. During the first few days of 1982, it was also counted on as a base for support when the PNDC came to power.

6.10.3 The leaders of the student movements also suffered harassment and detentions in much the same way as the politically-active members of the general population did. During the SMC I days, students did a lot to bring down that government.

6.10.4 The anti-government position it took up early in the life of the PNDC, gave the government the impetus to break up the body so that it could be neutralized. It could be stated that a government that started its life with past student-leaders as its basic human resource, ended its life as an implacable enemy of the student movement.

CHAPTER SEVEN

THE YOUTH MOVEMENTS

7.0 INTRODUCTION

7.0.1 The task of the Commission was to determine whether or not the youth movements had contributed to the violation or protection of human rights during the mandate period. The chapter has chronicled the activities of the politically-inclined youth movements of the mandate period. In the main, these were the Boy Scouts and Girl Guides Movements; Ghana Young Pioneers movement (GYP); the National Youth Service Corps (NYSC); the June Four Movement (JFM); the People's Revolutionary League of Ghana (PRLG); and the Movement on National Affairs (MONAS). The chapter endeavours to shed some light on their activities, mode of organization and funding. In addition, the impact of their activities on the human rights terrain is also highlighted. In this regard, the fate suffered by their leaders and other prominent activists when the governments that sponsored them were removed from office. It also discusses the nature of the relationship between members and leadership of these movements and government during their period of office.

7.0.2 The chapter is organized to reflect the historical chronology of their life as youth movements under particular regimes, and the part they played in sustaining the regime. The hope is that the public would better appreciate the whys and wherefores of these movements, as well as the importance of their contribution to the socio-political history of Ghana; be provided with the reasons for change and continuity in these movements; and understand why the movements underwent a transformation or ceased to exist altogether, during the mandate period.

7.1 PRE-INDEPENDENCE

7.1.1 Mobilisation of the youth had always been a part of traditional society, and the youth had a place within the social and political arrangements of traditional society.¹ "Youth" was not necessarily a reference to people of a certain chronological age, but of social standing as well.² Consequently, those referred to as "nkwan kwaa" or "youth"

¹ David Kimble, A Political History of Ghana, The Rise of Gold Coast Nationalism, Clarendon Press, Oxford, 1963; Richard Rathbone, Nkrumah & the Chiefs, the Politics of Chieftaincy in Ghana 1951-60, James Currey, F. Reimmer, Ohio University Press, 2000, Chapter 2.

² As Richard Rathbone ably demonstrates, "youth" was a poor translation of the Akan words 'nkwakwaa' or 'Mmerantee' that literally meant 'young men' but that connoted much more than chronological age in were the “commoners” or non-royals. Youth movements began to be a feature of the national landscape as a result of the introduction of the modern political economy, the subsequent urbanization and post World War II social developments that released young people from traditional control without putting in place any measure to include them in the new political arrangements.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 7

7.1.2 The part played by the youth in the independence movement and the place of the youth in the formation of the CPP put the youth at the centre of the socio-political arrangements of the country after Independence.³ A start was made to organize the youth soon after Independence with the formation of the CPP Youth League which was made up of young people with affiliation to the CPP.⁴ It functioned as the youth wing of the CPP and it had the same aims as the mother-party. However, it was formally abolished in 1959.

7.1.3 BOY SCOUTS ASSOCIATION AND GIRL GUIDES ASSOCIATION

7.1.3.1 The Boy Scouts Association was incorporated in England by a Royal Charter granted on 4th January, 1912. The Association of Girl Guides was also incorporated as the Girl Guides (incorporated), on 24th September, 1915. Branches of these associations were started in the Gold Coast by the instrumentality of Lord and Lady Baden Powell. They were given statutory recognition under the Boy Scouts Association Ordinance, 1918 (Cap 265), and the Girl Guides (incorporated) Ordinance, 1922 (Cap 271), respectively.

7.1.3.2 These associations organized young boys and girls of the Gold Coast and taught them how to use their leisure hours profitably for self-development and service to others.

7.2 6TH MARCH, 1957- 23RD FEBRUARY, 1966:
CONVENTION PEOPLE’S PARTY (CPP) GOVERNMENT

7.2.1 BOY SCOUTS ASSOCIATION AND GIRL GUIDES ASSOCIATION

7.2.1.1 Upon the attainment of Independence, the two associations were re-named the Ghana Boy Scouts Association and the Ghana Girl Guides association (Incorporated) on 16th December, 1960, and 13th February, 1960, respectively. The Associations began to come under pressure when nationalists began to criticize them for not teaching nationalism to the Ghanaian children and holding out foreign role models for Ghanaian his book , Nkrumah and the Chiefs, The Politics of Chieftaincy in Ghana, 1951-60 F. Reimmer, Accra; Ohio Univ. Press, Athens; James Book Services, Currey, Oxford, 2000, p.23.

³ Mike Oquaye, “Youth, Politics and Society in Ghana” in Civil Society in Ghana F K Drah and M Oquaye (eds) Accra, Friedrich Ebert Foundation, 1996; chapter 10, pp.163-167.

⁴M N Tetteh, The Ghana Young Pioneer Movement, Ghana Publicity Ltd., Accra, 1999, p.53.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 7

children. There was even a suggestion on the floor of Parliament that it should be abolished in favour of an indigenous youth movement.⁵

7.2.1.2 The members of the associations were used at public functions to perform errands, assist in crowd control, etc.⁶ When the GYP was born, the associations fell into official disfavour as the GYP tried, with official backing, to supplant them in schools. The roles performed by them at functions were given over to the GYP and the associations were so side-lined that they lost their vibrancy, although they were never formally abolished.

7.2.1.3 Following the 1966 coup d'état, efforts were made to restore both associations to their former status, as the GYP had been banned. The Scouts and Guides Decree, 1969 (NLCD 399), was passed to regulate the activities of the associations. For the first time, the objects were put on statutory footing. Some of the objects were specific to Boy Scouts and some to Girl Guides. The two shared the following objects:

- (a) to encourage loyalty, thoughtfulness to others and good citizenship among boys(or girls) and help develop their character;
- (b) to promote the physical, mental and spiritual development of boys (or girls), and
- (c) to encourage international goodwill and understanding by establishing friendly contact with boys (or girls) of other nations.⁷

The objects that were specific to the Scouts were as follows:

- (a) to train boys in habits of observation, obedience and self-reliance;
- (b) to teach boys services useful to others and handicrafts useful to themselves.

The Guides on their part, had these specific objects:

- (a) to train girls in habits of courtesy, obedience and service to others;
- (b) to develop in girls an interest in homecraft, health, social service, love of nature and traditional arts and customs.

7.2.1.4 The members of these associations were specifically prohibited from claiming or pretending “to be or to act as the police force or of the Armed Forces or any agent or officer of the Government.”⁸ They were also specifically prohibited from engaging in any:

attempt by virtue of wearing any uniform or badge token of either association or appearing to be such, to enforce or exercise

⁵Statement by Hon. Regina Asamany MP from Volta Region (CPP) 9th May 1961, vol. 23 Parliamentary Debates, p.451.

⁶ Statement by Hon. B F Kusi MP for Atwima Nwabiagya (UP), 9th May, 1961, vol. 23 Parliamentary Debates, supra, p. 468.

⁷ Section 2 NLCD 399.

⁸ Section 4 NLCD 399.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 7

authority otherwise than in accordance with and as authorized by the bye-laws, rules or orders of either association.

7.2.1.5 Once the State formed its own Youth Association, the associations reverted to their roles of character-moulding and the cultivation of useful leisure hour activities, as well as service to others.

7.2.2 THE GHANA YOUNG PIONEER MOVEMENT (GYP)

7.2.2.1 After Independence in 1957, a need was felt to attack attitudes born of the socialization produced by a state of mind derived from colonial subjugation. The need to improve the education of young people and to mobilize them for national development was also keenly felt. The CPP Youth League was largely made up of children of CPP members and was restricted to a few urban areas. One truth that was not lost on the leadership of the CPP, was that anyone who wished to influence the future with new ideas, had to get to young children and introduce those ideas to them. The need to inculcate patriotism of the new country called “Ghana” into its newly-liberated citizens meant that the youth had to be targetted if the changed relationship between the citizen and the State as well as the new responsibilities inherent in the changed relationship were to be properly appreciated. Subsequent governments found the youth a ready vehicle to reach impressionable minds and harness their energies in favour of the government’s policies.

7.2.2.2 The Ghana Young Pioneer movement (GYP) was founded on 14th June, 1960, as a youth movement to “inculcate in the children of Ghana a feeling of pride for the country. It would also seek to foster physical fitness, respect for manual work, self-discipline, sense of duty and of responsibility and above all love for and a strong desire to serve the country”.⁹ The model for its formation was derived from the findings of a delegation sent on a study tour to various countries to study their mode of youth training. The delegation was made up of Kofi Baako; Krobo Edusei; Professor William Abraham; Kofi Batsa; Mowbray Elliot; and Reverend J S A Stephens.¹⁰ The group brought home a recommendation that, based on what they had seen, the most appropriate models for youth training were those of East Germany and the USSR. There was close collaboration between Russian Committee of Youth Organization and the leadership of the movement. Indeed, many of the leaders were sent to Russia under the aegis of the Russian Komsomol Schools and to other institutions in Eastern Europe to study youth training. At the time of the overthrow of the CPP Government in 1966, many GYP members were in Eastern European countries undergoing training in youth leadership, and other academic

⁹ M N Tetteh, supra.

¹⁰ M N Tetteh, The Ghana Young Pioneer Movement, supra, 1999. Foreword by Reverend Dr. J.S.A Stephens, p.xii .

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 7

disciplines, and their scholarships were withdrawn. Consequently, many of them got stranded in Europe.

7.2.2.3 At the formation of the GYP, the Ministry of Finance was requested to make £G5,000 available for the administration and organization of the movement;¹¹ and so it was a fully-funded state organization. In 1961, it was put on a statutory footing by being made a part of the Ghana Youth Authority (GYA) under an Executive Instrument, the Ghana Youth Authority Incorporation Instrument E I 130. The National Organiser of the GYP was also appointed the Chief Executive of the GYA,¹² and although the GYP was to operate under the general direction of the GYA this was a cosmetic provision since the chief executive of the authority was also the National Organiser of the GYP.

7.2.2.4 Even though the GYP began in Accra as a voluntary movement, it was soon introduced nationwide by order of the President, into schools for children and young people aged between four years and twenty five years. It also covered out-of-school youth, and was reported by the Evening News to have a membership of 20,500 within a year of its formation;¹³ and according to official reports, had ballooned to 500,000 within two years of inauguration. According to a post-Nkrumah Government of Ghana publication, the GYP reported to the President in September, 1964, that its membership had risen to one million children and young people, and it was operating 3000 centres in various districts. It was organized by age-group in four categories,¹⁴ each with its focus. Group I was known as Young Party League, consisting of ages twenty one years to twenty five years, and these were given various forms of technical and ideological training both in and outside Ghana. Group II known as “Nkrumah Youth” consisting of ages seventeen years to twenty one years, focused on providing technical and ideological training for mostly out of school youth. Group III known as ‘Young Pioneers’ was made up of ages 8 years to sixteen years, and concentrated on cultural activities such as drama and artistic crafts. Group IV, the “African Personality” group, was for children aged between four years and seven years.¹⁵ The main activity of this group was to sing and recite poems about “The Great Osagyefo”.¹⁶ School teachers were recruited as organizers and instructors and there was a code of discipline which was rigidly enforced.

7.2.2.5 The GYP was fully funded by the State though supposed to be a wing of the CPP. The Minister of Education and Social Welfare justified the state expenditure by declaring that “The C.P.P. is Ghana, and Ghana is the C.P.P.”¹⁷ Although membership was said to ¹¹ See Parliamentary Debates, Official Report First Series vol. 23 18th April – 23rd June 1961 p.445; statement by Hon. A J Hammond on the Ghana Young Pioneer Movement.

¹² Section 5(2) of E I 130.

¹³ The Evening News, Thursday, 8th June, 1961.

¹⁴ John S Pobee, Kwame Nkrumah and the Church in Ghana 1949-1966, Asempa Publishers, Accra, 1988; and Ebenezer Obiri Addo, Kwame Nkrumah, A Case Study of Religion and Politics in Ghana, University Press of America Inc Lanham, Maryland, 1999, list three categories.

¹⁵ Nkrumah's Subversion In Africa official Ghana Government Publication, 1967, pp.49-52.

¹⁶ Obiri Addo, supra, p.143.

¹⁷ Parliamentary Debates, supra, p.469.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 7

be voluntary, this was not its mode of organization in reality. At least for children in the rural areas, membership was compulsory for all school children and was enforced by school authorities as such. When the Hon Miss Regina Asamany¹⁸ suggested in Parliament that “it is wise to abolish such youth movements as the Boy Scouts and other similar organizations”,¹⁹ the Minister’s response was that the suggestion was “too true”, and that a Bill was going to be put before Parliament to ensure that Boy Scouts and Girl Guides movements were abolished. A little later on, the President directed that the GYP, having been “constituted as the sole youth authority in Ghana”, had the responsibility to ensure “that all organizations of youth are conducted in accordance with our national directives and not in relation to any foreign directives.”²⁰ This was obviously a reference to the Boy Scouts and Girl Guide movements which had their roots in British colonialism.

7.2.2.6 With support from the highest political authority in the land, the GYP developed a fearsome reputation. Heads of institutions who were not keen to promote it in their schools suffered punitive action.²¹ There were also whispered allegations of how public criticism of the movement could lead to one’s detention under the Preventive Detention Act. By the time it celebrated its third anniversary, the President could order that its programmes be made compulsory for all youth groups. This was a clear indication that the government was not in support of the existence of any other youth groups. The President justified the new policy thus:

The youth of Ghana should stand together in singleness of purpose in order to meet loyally and boldly this supreme challenge of our time. We can no longer afford to see the energies of our youth dissipated and their loyalties confused, as a result of protracted membership of a variety of organisations, the aims and policies of which, however worthy they may be, are not always in our national or cultural interest.²²

7.2.2.7 Thus young people lost their freedom to freely associate or not to associate and parents their right to determine what activities their children could engage in, or to what ideas their children could subscribe.

¹⁸ CPP Member for Volta Region.

¹⁹ See Parliamentary Debates National Assembly, Official Report First Series vol. 23 18th April – 23rd June, 1961, p.451; statement by Hon.Miss Regina Asamany on the Ghana Young Pioneer Movement.

²⁰ Dr. Kwame Nkrumah, “The Fight on Two Fronts. On assumption of office as General Secretary and Chairman of the Central Committee of the CPP” 1st May, 1961, in Selected Speeches of Kwame Nkrumah, Samuel Obeng (ed) vol 2 Afram Publications, Accra, 1997, p.83 at p.92.

²¹ It is reported that the late Reverend W.G.M. Brandful was removed from his position as Headmaster of Mfantsipim School under a forty-eight hour- ultimatum for failing to attend the inauguration of a branch of the movement in his school in 1964. This was by no means a unique occurrence. See John S Pobee, supra, p.131, and Obiri Addo, supra, p.146.

²² Dr Kwame Nkrumah, “Third Anniversary of Ghana Young Pioneers” 14th June, 1963 in Selected Speeches of Kwame Nkrumah, Samuel Obeng (ed) vol 5 Afram Publications, Accra, 1997, p.51.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 7

7.2.2.8 GYP programmes were held after school and even during school hours, and all children had to attend or face punishment in school. Red silk scarves with borders in the colours of the CPP had to be worn by school children. Many people felt that the movement was a vehicle for indoctrination of children and the promotion of a personality-cult of the President.²³ For instance, M N Tetteh corroborates allegations of blasphemous acts taught to children, although he blames enemies of President Nkrumah, whom he described as “fascist secret agents within the movement with a definite mission to destroy the image of the movement and its founder”.²⁴ According to him, these “fascist agents” “were reported to have gone to one selected centre in a region and actually orchestrated the blasphemous act of dropping some sweets and food items from a ceiling of a Pioneer Centre while calling on Nkrumah in a mock prayer”. Thus the blasphemy lay in the fact that according to contemporary accounts, the ability of the President to supply the children’s wants by having “sweets and food items” rain down during a mock prayer was contrasted with the inability of God to do likewise since nothing happened when they called upon God. These accusations were denied at the time, and the denial is supported by Pobee who states that “in our researches we have not come across any youngster who experienced it”. It is thus somewhat surprising that one of the officials who ought to know the truth would recount the incident many years later and blame “fascist agents” who had been planted on the GYP.

7.2.2.9 The GYP also had sentences extolling the greatness of the President that had to be recited by school children everyday. For instance, the Young Pioneer Pledge was seen as a vehicle for indoctrinating the children and building up a personality cult around the President. This criticism had some justification as the text reproduced below, of the pledge that was to be recited any time the youth met, suggests:

“YOUNG PIONEER CODE AND PLEDGE”

- I sincerely promise to live by the ideals of Osagyefo Dr. Kwame Nkrumah, Founder of the State of Ghana and Initiator of the African Personality;
- to safeguard by all means possible, the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the State of Ghana from internal and external aggression;
- to be always in the vanguard for the social and economic reconstruction of Ghana and Africa;

²³ See Parliamentary Debates of National Assembly, Official Report First Series vol. 23 18th April – 23rd June 1961 pp.457-469 statements by Hon E N Ocansey (CPP) Osudoku), Hon. B.F Kusi (UP)Atwima-Nwabiagya).

²⁴ Tetteh, supra, p.108.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 7

- to be in the first ranks of men fighting for the total liberation and unity of Africa, for these are the noble aims guiding the Ghana Young Pioneers;
- as a young Pioneer, I will be a guard of workers, farmers, cooperatives and all other sections of our community;
- I believe that the dynamic Convention People's Party is always Supreme and I promise to be worthy of its ideals."²⁵

7.2.2.10 Some of the sentences such as: "Nkrumah does no wrong"; "Nkrumah is our Leader"; "Nkrumah is our Messiah"; and "Nkrumah Never Dies", were thought by many to be an undue indoctrination of school children and the creation of a personality cult around the President. Some of the lyrics of popular GYP songs had images borrowed from the Bible. One of such songs was:

If you follow him, If you follow him,
Kwame Nkrumah, he will make you fishers of men, fishers of men, fishers of men, he will make you fishers of men if you follow him.

Other songs had secular lyrics but put to tunes of church, especially Hymns, were viewed as an attempt to imbue the personality of the President with Christ-like qualities since the phrase "fishers of men", was derived from the Biblical story of the calling of the first disciples by Jesus Christ. Indeed, in some elementary schools, the practice was for the leader of the Young Pioneers in the school to conduct a parade and raise the GYP Flag and the Ghana Flag during the school's Morning Prayer assembly while the school's teachers looked on.

7.2.2.11 Opposition to the movement was strong, being largely spear-headed by the churches, but largely covert as any expression of open opposition at the time could portend detention for the particular person or deportation for a foreigner as the experience of Anglican Bishop Reginald R. Roseveare, Chairman of the Christian Council, amply demonstrated. He was deported as a result of an address he gave at the Anglican Annual Conference in 1962. In that address, he criticized the movement in the following manner:

Not only myself, but the heads of churches in Ghana, are shocked by the godlessness of this movement and by some of its phrases and songs for the children to repeat or to sing. We made our views known to the Minister of Education last April, saying that we found it impossible to give our support and co-operation in the development of the movement as at present constituted. It is an affront to our age-long traditions that, in Ghana of all countries a national institution for the training and development of boys and girls should entirely ignore the existence

²⁵Obiri Addo, supra, pp.143-144.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 7

and claims of Almighty God. Moreover, it seems that the movement confuses the work and example of a great man with divine acts which are unique in history. The incipient atheism is quite foreign to the traditional concepts of African Personality. Surely it is our duty to ask that some consideration be given to convictions of loyal citizens of Ghana who, by virtue of their Christian Faith, desire that nothing shall hinder their children from growing up to be loyal and faithful Christian men and women. Is there a finer basis for citizenship than this?²⁶

7.2.2.12 Bishop Roseveare was promptly deported as being a person whose “presence in Ghana was not conducive to the public good”, after being subjected to name-calling in the state media as “the neo-colonialist Lucifer”. He was also criticized for being a part of an “ungodly clique and quislings”, who did not appreciate that: “God does not like imperialist chicanery, religious sabotage and anti-national manoeuvres (sic), nor is he impressed by chauvinistic Christian ballyhoo or hypocritical and deceptive Synod addresses”.²⁷ He was accused in CPP quarters of stabbing the President in the back since he had had dinner with the President the night before the Synod.²⁸ He was eventually allowed back into the country only after he had apologized and had formally applied to be allowed to return. From then on, there was no indication that the church ever openly criticized the GYP.

7.2.2.13 The motivation to inculcate patriotism in children of school-going age was a good idea, but the implementation was problematic. There was no doubt that the organizers of the GYP were overly high-handed in their treatment of dissent, but this was in line with the culture of those days. Blaming “fascist agents” from within for the excesses of the GYP, is obviously a disingenuous attempt at blame-shifting and revisionism since the same Tetteh himself admits that at some point in time, stories that reached the President caused him to set up a five-member committee to study the situation and submit a report,²⁹ and that the report led to the adoption of some reforms.³⁰ Since, in those days, it took much less than obvious subversion of the government for a person to be detained under the Preventive Detention Act, it is somewhat curious that no one was punished as a “fascist agent”, when the committee submitted the findings upon which reforms were initiated.

7.2.2.14 The GYP attracted other types of criticism such as it being a means by which parental authority was being weakened in favour of loyalty to President Nkrumah. The movement was alleged to be encouraging children to spy on their own parents. M.N. Tetteh denies this, though he asserts that the children were asked to join the search for the bomb-throwers who were maiming and killing some of their colleagues. Therefore if any ²⁶ Pobee, supra, p.131; Obiri Addo, supra, p.145.

²⁷ Pobee, supra, p.132.

²⁸ M.N. Tetteh, p.xvii.

²⁹ Ibid., p.96.

³⁰ Ibid.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 7

parent happened to be a bomb-thrower, then it was in response to this patriotic duty that the children informed on them.³¹

7.2.3 Bomb Outrages

7.2.3.1 The GYP came under physical attack when many of its members became victims of the bomb-throwing incidents that became a feature of Ghana's politics as certain persons alleged to be members of the opposition, in a bid to assassinate the President or cause disaffection for the government, detonated bombs and other explosives at public gatherings when the Young Pioneers would be in attendance. Many children, not necessarily Young Pioneers only, were killed on such occasions, and others maimed for life. At least on three of such occasions, twice at Accra Sports Stadium and at Arena in Accra, Young Pioneers attending functions at which the President was to be present were prominent among the victims when the explosive devices were detonated. Ms Elizabeth Asantewa, Master Ayikwei Hammond and Ms Elizabeth Hammond were prominent among such victims of each of those incidents.

7.2.3.2 At Kulungugu in the Upper East Region, an assassination attempt was made on President Nkrumah, and it was alleged that a number of GYP children were killed. Indeed, contemporary accounts of the time indicated that the source of the bomb was a bouquet presented by a young girl who was consequently killed in the blast. As recounted by Tetteh, "a member of the movement in the infants division was blasted to death in cold blood by a bomb which was secretly planted in a bouquet which a young lass was given to present to the President"³². However, this account of the incident is contradicted by an eye-witness, Gariba Ndego Tijani, then a 12-year old boy at the time, and now a graduate of the University of Ghana and a tutor at Bolgatanga Secondary School:³³

I had to struggle with adults on a tree top to catch a glimpse of President Nkrumah on the first day of his arrival from Accra (Saturday, 30th August) en route to Haute Volta (now Burkina Faso). Tree trunks along the road through the village were whitewashed before the day since the President was to make a stop over in Kulungugu before proceeding to Burkina Faso. He arrived after twelve noon on 29th August amidst shots of gun salutes [sic]. I could not see the sequence of events around the President since the crowd of adults shielded him from my view. And after about thirty minutes, the President proceeded across the border into Burkina Faso [then Upper Volta].

It was the following day that the President returned from Burkina Faso [then Upper Volta] at about two o'clock p.m. and after welcome formalities, (again blocked from my view by adults) the President started walking with a large number of followers towards a parade of school

³¹ Ibid., pp.107-108.

³² Ibid., p.103.

³³ Memorandum to National Reconciliation Commission.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 7

children and young pioneers. He was waving his left hand with a white handkerchief in it while holding a walking stick in the right hand. He wore an ashy-white political round-necked suit.

Suddenly, I heard a huge bang just close to the President's left hand side. I mistook the sound for a gun salute because it followed a warning shout from somebody close to the President's right arm. The person was in a khaki-looking suit. He fell flat on his belly, pulling the President along, before the bomb blast was heard. All these happened in my clear view although I was standing on a vehicle with some adults at a distance of about sixty metres.

Within some seconds, the atmosphere was filled with a thick and dirty-black smoke. I could not understand why the teeming crowd (it was a market day) suddenly started running helter-skelter until I saw a large number of people lying on the ground. Prominent to me amongst them were a policeman of the village police station whom we had given the name "Lorso", and a young boy of the village called Parisu.

Realizing that almost everyone was gone, I also took to my heels towards my house. By the end of the day, news reached us from the Presbyterian District Hospital at Bawku that the young boy from the village had died of his wounds, and that one schoolboy called Laale Braimah was also wounded by the bomb blast and had been hospitalized at Bawku.

The following day, it was discovered that one boy in the village called Sampani Bonku could not be found among the dead or wounded, and as at the time of writing this report, the boy has not yet been found.

Some days later, all houses in the village were burnt to ashes by the police at dawn when domestic animals were still indoors. All foodstuffs in barns and living rooms were also burnt. Many people including my grandfather and uncles were arrested and taken away to Bawku township.

7.2.3.3 It would thus seem that the entire township of Kulungugu suffered greatly from the event and not just Young Pioneers, as the entire community suffered police brutalities as a result of the event. This version of events is supported by the version related by Genoveva Kanu (nee Marais), a well-known close confidante of President Nkrumah at the time, who states that she got her version from the President himself.³⁴

³⁴ Genoveva Kanu, Nkrumah The Man. Delta Publication Ltd. Enugu, Nigeria p.129.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 7

7.5 13TH JANUARY, 1972-3RD JUNE, 1979:
NATIONAL REDEMPTION COUNCIL (NRC)/
SUPREME MILITARY COUNCILS (SMC) I & II

7.5.1 NATIONAL SERVICE SCHEME (NSS)

7.5.1 Following the withdrawal of the Loan Scheme for students of the universities and the restoration of full scholarships, it became clear that students had to offer some service in reciprocal generosity. The National Redemption Council (NRC) initiated discussions towards the involvement of university students in nation-building as their contribution to a nation that had provided them free university education. The original proposal was for military training for the university students to improve their level of discipline.³⁷ However, further discussions with the student leadership resulted in the institution of the National Service Scheme, as it currently exists.

7.5.2 GHANA NATIONAL RECONSTRUCTION CORPS (GNRC)

7.5.2.1 The NRC government found it necessary to mobilize unemployed young people to support the “Operation feed Yourself” programme. Under the leadership of Sarpong Kumankumah, young people were mobilized to go into farming, and were settled on some of the State Farms that used to be operated by the Workers Brigade. They were fully funded by the State, but they did not make the desired impact on the food supply situation.

7.5.2.2 Many of the GNRC members were involved in the Unigov campaign, and were involved in the physical attacks that were perpetrated on some citizens. Indeed the GNRC was listed among the political organizations that the GBA demanded to be banned after the referendum.

7.6 4TH JUNE, 1979 – 23RD SEPTEMBER, 1979:
ARMED FORCES REVOLUTIONARY COUNCIL (AFRC)

7.6.1 The AFRC was in power for a very short time, however, the youthfulness of its leaders inspired many young people to flock to them in response to the call for the youth to save their country. Under its youthful Chairman, Flt Lt Jerry John Rawlings, and its Spokesman, Capt Kojo Boakye Djan, the AFRC itself was, in many respects, a Youth Movement.

³⁷ Kabral Blay-Amihere Fighting for Freedom (The Autobiography of an African Journalist) Trans Afrika News Ltd, Accra, 2001, p.54.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 7

7.6.2 Before the end of its short tenure of office serious differences had emerged, splitting the AFRC into two factions led by Flt Lt Rawlings and Capt Boakye Djan respectively. These factions had their following in the young civilians who associated themselves with the AFRC and it led to the birth of three Youth Associations, all claiming leftist ideological leanings: the June Fourth Movement (JFM); People's Revolutionary League of Ghana (PRLG); and the Movement on National Affairs (MONAS), that were to influence the politics of the nation for many years.

7.6.3 MOVEMENT ON NATIONAL AFFAIRS (MONAS)³⁸

7.6.3.1 This organization was formed and inaugurated on 22nd September, 1979, two days before the inauguration of the Third Republic when the AFRC handed over power to President Hilla Limann. It was inaugurated by the Spokesman for the AFRC, Maj Boakye Djan at the Accra Technical Training College (ATTC) at Kokomlemle in Accra.

7.6.3.2 It was formed as an organization to structure a front for political activities by students workers and youth in the country. The group was made up of students, workers and youth organizations either as individuals, or as corporate members. For instance, the following examples would suffice to show who the members were:

1. Labour Movement – Peter Arthiabah (Administrative Secretary of TUC); and Opare Ababio – (of the Public Services Workers Union (PSWU))
2. Youth elements who used to be members of Socialist Revolutionary Youth League of Ghana, an organization registered with the National Youth Council as a youth movement - Yaw Adu Larbi, Nat Ayivor, Kweku Baako (Jnr).
3. Groups - Pan African Youth Movement (PANYMO).

7.6.3.3 At about the beginning of September, 1979, about two weeks before the end of the rule of the AFRC, Maj Boakye-Djan met with the above-named persons at the Star Hotel in Accra to plan the formation of a movement that would assist in consolidating constitutional democracy. This was made up of persons who had actively supported the Uprising of Junior Military Officers against the Senior Officers on 4th June, 1979, but who also firmly believed that the soldiers had no role in governance after a civilian government had come into place, and therefore, they were to return to barracks and remain there, playing their traditional role of ensuring internal and external security.

7.6.3.4 This group had emerged because in the course of AFRC rule, there were cleavages based on ethnic, ideological and political differences. One of the causes most central to the cleavage was whether or not there should be a handing-over at all. Although every one on the AFRC publicly supported the handing-over, the story was different in private. Consequently, two factions developed: the Rawlings faction; and the Boakye-

³⁸ Memoranda to the National Reconciliation Commission.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 7

Djan faction. The former emerged because some people were opposed to the handing over of power after such a short period of time to civilian politicians. They therefore conspired to disrupt the handing-over ceremony and so abort the entire process. In order to effectively counteract the activities of the Rawlings faction, the Boakye Djan faction made up of persons in favour of the return to civilian rule re-grouped and sought ways of thwarting the objectives of the Rawlings faction. Intense rivalry between the two factions developed and it is alleged that it was when the more powerful Boakye Djan group won the day, that the handing-over occurred.

7.6.3.5 MONAS was thus formed and inaugurated as part of the strategy to provide support for the return to a constitutional order in the course of the struggle for power between the two factions. It was also intended to ensure the survival of constitutional rule by providing a platform for constructive criticism of the government and its policies although its commitment to the maintenance of constitutional rule was beyond question.

7.6.3.6 MONAS was headquartered at Labone at the residence of the late Kofi Baako – a prominent Minister of State in the First Republic and the father of one of the members, Kweku Baako (Jnr).

7.7 24TH SEPTEMBER, 1979 – 30TH DECEMBER, 1981:
THIRD REPUBLIC PEOPLE’S NATIONAL PARTY
(PNP) GOVERNMENT

7.7.1 The Genesis Of The Youth Groups Of The Revolution

7.7.1.1 After the handing-over to the civilian administration in 1979, it was felt in many sections of the country that the civilian government would be unable to protect the “gains” of the 4th June Uprising on account of the fact that some of the “nation wreckers” and “corrupt politicians” had jumped on the political bandwagon of the PNP. Some students, former student leaders and out-of-school youth, formed various associations either to protect “the gains of the revolution”, or to defend the concept of constitutional government. These groups attained some pre-eminence on the political landscape as events on the political landscape began to unfold, leading eventually to the toppling of the PNP from political power.

7.7.1. 2 The roots of some of these groups lay in the events that produced the 4th June Uprising (usually referred to as the “June 4 Revolution”), and the subsequent modes adopted for addressing the fallout of that event. After the AFRC handed over power to the PNP administration, the problem was what to do with these young army officers and other ranks, amongst whom were twenty-two year-olds who had to be rehabilitated in order to protect the cohesion of the army. This was because problems affecting Command and Control within the military had been created by the fact that Senior Military Officers had been obliged to pay respects to very junior officers and other ranks on account of their membership of the AFRC. This turned the Army's traditions upside down and greatly affected morale on both sides of the Command Structure. Another major problem was the great factionalism that had been spawned by differences - both personal and ethnic - between the Chairman of the AFRC, Flt Lt Rawlings, on the one part and the Spokesman and Number-Two man of the AFRC, Maj Boakye-Djan, on the other. These differences split the AFRC down the middle, and spawned two major factions both within and outside the Armed Forces. The government took a decision to offer the AFRC members a resettlement package to go abroad for further education. Many of them, including Maj Boakye-Djan, accepted the offer and left Ghana, but Flt Lt Rawlings is said to have turned down the offer of resettlement, and remained in Ghana.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 7

7.7.1.3 The respective decisions by Maj Boakye-Djan to leave Ghana, and Flt Lt Rawlings to remain in Ghana had consequences for their respective factions. The Boakye Djan faction became orphaned, whilst the Rawlings faction grew from strength to strength. Notable among the latter faction were personalities such as Kwasi Adu, Tony Akoto Ampaw, Augustus "Gussie" Tanoh, Yao Graham, Nicholas Atampugire, etc. Some members of the two factions formed the People's Revolutionary League of Ghana (PRLG); and others in the Rawlings faction split up into two groups, the June Fourth Movement (JFM) and the New Democratic Movement (NDM).

7.7.1.4 These groups were instrumental in shaping the direction of Ghanaian politics after 1979. Even the overthrow of the Limann government was an act endorsed by the leftist youth groups of the time. An event occurred on 3rd October, 1981, that was to prove the watershed for the continued survival of the Third Republic. On that date, there was a Forum of leftist youth and workers organizations at Labone Secondary School. Most of these were groups such as: NUGS, MONAS, JFM, PRLG, NDM, Socialist Society of Ghana (SSG), African Youth Command (AYC), African Youth Brigade (AYB), Pan African Youth Movement (PANYMO). The convenors of the "Labone Forum" were Osei Poku the editor of Evening News, and S S Baffour-Awuah of the African Youth Command (AYC). The Forum, attended by senior members of the PNP ("Old Guard"), deliberated on the state of the nation and arrived at the consensus that the government of the PNP had veered off the path of socialist ideology. The Forum also articulated the view that the constitutional regime no longer represented the aspirations of the people, and its downfall would have popular support. Many of those who participated in the Forum and who were outspoken in their criticism of the lack of ideological direction of the PNP Government, ended up being a part of the structures of the PNDC when the constitutional government was overthrown two months later.

7.7.2 THE JUNE FOURTH MOVEMENT

7.7.2.1 The June Fourth Movement (JFM) was a leftist movement made up largely of young people, workers, radical young academics and students that began after the AFRC handed over power to the civilian government of President Limann. Before the handing over, there were concerns that the aims of the "June Fourth Revolution" would not be pursued by the incoming government and that whatever the revolution had achieved would be lost. Therefore this movement was born in order to defend the “gains of the revolution” and it was no surprise that the Vice-President of National Union of Ghana Students (NUGS) in 1979, became one of its early General Secretaries. The JFM was vociferous in its opposition to the call by Maj Boakye-Djan for a probe into AFRC affairs. It is alleged that originally, Flt Lt Rawlings was not a member of the JFM, but became a member after his forced retirement from the Armed Forces in 1979.³⁹

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 7

7.7.2.2 The Movement was organized along Marxist lines and propounded ideas as to how Ghana could be governed after the fashion of Marxist countries such as Cuba and Libya. Within the Movement, there were Revolutionary Committees modelled after the Libyan system. According to Emmanuel Hansen, Flt Lt Rawlings paid a visit to Libya in the summer of 1980, and came into contact with this organizational structure, and adopted it.⁴⁰ He further maintains that the Revolutionary Committees formed the basis for the organisation of the People’s Defence Committees and Workers’ Defence Committees that were introduced into this country in early 1982, after the Provisional National Defence Council (PNDC) came to power.

7.7.2.3 The JFM published a newspaper, the Workers Banner,⁴¹ that contained this notion of PDCs /WDCs and that is credited with radicalizing some of the soldiers who took part in the coup of 1981, to participate in the process.⁴² However, Shillington maintains that “His [Rawlings] forced retirement from the Air Force notwithstanding, his leadership of the JFM brought into the organization a number of useful radical soldiers, especially from among the non-commissioned ranks.”⁴³ In the editorial of 14th-20th July, 1981, the Workers Banner, the organ of the JFM, wondered whether indeed, there was a revolution under way or we were merely engaged in a “reform”. The Workers Banner insisted that “if we were in a revolution we should be seeing activity at Teshie firing range, even identifying, by name, possible targets.”

7.7.2.4 The pre-eminence of the JFM in the plot to overthrow the constitutional order of the Third Republic as well as the initial direction of the government that was established thereafter cannot be underrated. According to Shillington:

The JFM, NDM and other left-wing movements of the period were important in providing the ideological rationale for the 31 December revolution ... as well as providing a corps of dedicated cadres who could implement a revolutionary programme on a national scale... [T]he JFM

³⁹ Kevin Shillington, Ghana and the Rawlings Factor, Macmillan Press Ltd, London and Basingstoke, 1992. pp.76-78.

⁴⁰ Emmanuel Hansen, Ghana Under Rawlings – the Early Years, Malthouse Press Ltd., African Political Science Association, London, 1991 p.34.

⁴¹ Workers Banner, vol. 1 No.1 1st August, 1981.

⁴² Hansen, supra; also Chris Bukari Atim, Letter of resignation from the PNDC dated 15th December, 1982.

⁴³ Shillington, supra, p.77.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 7

in particular, provided Rawlings with a public platform from which to 'sensitise' people and to hold the government accountable.⁴⁴

7.7.2.5 Indeed it was under the auspices of the Movement that the most public of the threats against the government of President Limann were uttered during a speech to celebrate the first anniversary of the June Fourth Uprising. Little wonder that it was represented on the PNDC by no less a person than Chris Bukari Atim, then the General Secretary of the JFM. According to Hansen, the move to make the JFM visible on the PNDC was to bind the JFM, the student movement and the youth to the revolutionary initiative.⁴⁵ At the 17th Annual Congress of NUGS, fraternal greetings sent by the JFM and the PRLG ended with "REVOLUTION OR DEATH".⁴⁶ "The JFM was crucial in providing the link between the military who had staged a coup and the civilians who would turn it into a revolution."⁴⁷

7.7.2.6 The JFM came to the attention of national security during the Third Republic as it was suspected of plotting subversion. The JFM started a farm at Katamanso, which land was procured through the instrumentality of the President of the Nungua Branch in order to go into farming in fulfillment of its belief in the dignity of farming. However, National Security thought otherwise, and insisted that far from it being an attempt to take to farming, the JFM was using the place as a training ground for revolutionaries to subvert the government. The JFM was also associated with the activities of a foreign revolutionary then known as Wilhelm Harrison Buller, and later as Albert Odinga, a national of Belize (former British Honduras), who had been expelled from his own country for subversive activities.⁴⁸ He was suspected of carrying on subversive activities by giving military training to some young Ghanaians for purposes of overthrowing the government and was arrested for overstaying his visa. Although the government could not prove the allegation of subversion and subsequently deported him, the suspicion of untoward activities hung around the JFM until the coup occurred on 31st December, 1981.⁴⁹ As subsequent events proved, the suspicions were not unfounded.

7.7.3 MOVEMENT ON NATIONAL AFFAIRS (MONAS)

7.7.3.1 One week after the handing over of power, Maj Boakye-Djan left Ghana in fulfillment of an agreement between the AFRC Government and the new administration of the PNP, leaving the group somewhat orphaned, but it carried on its activities. In its role of supporter of the constitutional order, it needed to collaborate with institutions of

⁴⁴ Ibid.

⁴⁵ Hansen, supra, p.25.

⁴⁶ Citadel Daily _vol. 2 No. 4 Wed. 13 May – Wednesday, 20 May, 1981, p.4.

⁴⁷ Shillington, supra, p.84.

⁴⁸ Jacob Jabuni Yidana, Who Killed The Judges? Bismi Enterprise, Accra, 2002, pp.38-40.

⁴⁹ It is significant to note that this same Buller returned to Ghana and remained in the country until 2001, when he was again arrested by officials of Ghana's National Security in a house owned by the State, again for overstaying his visa. He was deported from Ghana in 2003.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 7

state to concretize the support. MONAS therefore formed official and organized links with the state security agencies, the Youth Wing of the People's National Party (PNP) and Members of Parliament, all with a view to ensuring that the regime could serve its first term, and thereafter give the people of Ghana a chance to use the ballot box to decide the way forward. MONAS also published a newspaper known as "The Message" in which it espoused its beliefs. The movement was also in the forefront of public criticism of the decision by the National Olympic Committee in 1980 to boycott the 1980 Olympic Games in Moscow.⁵⁰ In 1980, the movement was described in a newspaper as:

"a clique... which describes itself as 'a mass research organization – for whatever that means – but believed in student circles to be working closely with Mr. Kofi Batsa of the PNP.'"⁵¹

This view of MONAS as a PNP government-influenced outfit seems to be supported by the admission by one of its leaders that since their avowed aim was to support constitutional government, they co-operated with the Intelligence system.

7.7.3.2 Early in 1982, MONAS attempted to facilitate the organization of a counter coup and so the leaders were arrested and detained for periods ranging between six months and two years initially in military guardrooms, and later in State prisons.

7.7.3.3 The long period of incarceration of the leaders, coupled with infiltration by national intelligence made it difficult for a meeting to be called. MONAS therefore fizzled out as a mass movement and its influence as an active player on the political scene effectively ended.

7.7.3.4 Funding

7.7.3.4.1 MONAS was funded from various sources. Contributions were obtained from Maj Boakye-Djan, the family of Kweku Baako (Jnr), Nana Okutwer Bekoe, Chairman of the PNP and other "friends" of the society.

7.7.4 PEOPLE'S REVOLUTIONARY LEAGUE OF GHANA (PRLG)

7.7.4.1 The PRLG was another leftist group that was also active on the youth front. It was related to both MONAS and JFM because it shared common membership of some of the organisations already named as being members of MONAS. Born during the AFRC rule, its membership was eventually split between the MONAS and JFM. In August, 1979, the President of the Central Committee of the PRLG was Kweku Baako (Jnr), later of MONAS, whilst T Kojo Nubour Ababio, the General Secretary, later became a member of the JFM. The PRLG considered itself a group to the extreme ideological left.

⁵⁰ Ghanaian Times, vol. 6, 989 Tuesday, 3rd June, 1980, p.1.

⁵¹ Ibid.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 7

For instance, in October, 1979, when an Accra High Court reviewed and granted bail to some convicts of the AFRC 'People's Courts' and ordered their release, the PRLG that took to the streets to demonstrate against the reviews, ending at the Castle where the leaders, Kweku Baako (Jnr), Nubour Ababio and Quaynor-Mettle, presented a petition to the Vice-President.

7.7.4.2 Late in 1979, a leaflet appeared attributed to Military Intelligence in which allegations of tribalism were made against Flt Lt Rawlings. Some members of the PRLG such as Kweku Baako (Jnr), Riad Hozaifeh, Nubour Ababio and Flt Lt Rawlings planned a counter-strategy of producing counter leaflets to refute the allegations and distributing them at various places, including Burma Camp, and at other military installations. In the course of distributing the leaflets in the Military Hospital area, some of the members were arrested for carrying on subversive activities in a restricted area.

7.7.4.3 A split in the PRLG occurred when in February, 1980, Maj Boakye-Djan and Maj Mensah Poku, both members of the former AFRC, paid a visit to Ghana, and held a press conference at the Ambassador Hotel to refute some allegations of corruption levelled against them. This was on account of the fact that the newspapers had begun publishing various allegations of misconduct on the part of AFRC members. At the press conference the two ex-military officers asked for two things:

1. A commission of enquiry into the affairs of AFRC in order to investigate allegations of personal misconduct of AFRC members and even supporters; and
2. A fact-finding commission to find out whether in the course of dispensing revolutionary justice, some miscarriage of justice occurred so as to give a basis for a review of the Transitional Provisions in the Constitution.

7.7.4.4 The request by the two men to clear their names was supported by some of the members of PRLG, and they gave their support to the request publicly. The reason for the support, according to them, was that some effort was being made by some persons to set aside decisions made by the People's Revolutionary Court in respect of certain persons.⁵² For instance, a letter from the "Office of the Chairman of AFRC, Arakan Barracks Burma Camp to the Director of Prisons copied to The Chairman, Special Tribunal, State House" dated 19th October, 1979, asking for the "setting aside of the sentence of J W K Harlley by the authority of the People's Revolutionary Court." This letter, ostensibly signed by Squadron Leader E K Dargbe, the President of the erstwhile People's Court, and written nearly one month after the AFRC ceased to exist as a legal entity, suggested that there were clandestine efforts to review some of the sentences even after the AFRC handed over power to the government of the Third Republic. Such clandestine efforts were tantamount to an admission that not all the decisions of the People's Court were unassailable, and created sufficient doubt that the call to re-open the cases was well-founded. The public support given to the call for a public probe, did not go down well with the Rawlings faction. The tensions between the two factions boiled over into the public domain, as those members of the Boakye-Djan faction who had given public support to the request were accused of betraying the cause publicly opposed by the PRLG, ie the review of the decisions of the AFRC People's Court. Those members of the PRLG in question were therefore announced to have been dismissed, but this occurred at the same time as they also claimed they had resigned their membership. A break between the PRLG and MONAS then occurred, as those who had been "sacked"(or who had "resigned") were mostly those who belonged to MONAS as well.⁵³

⁵² See Memorandum to the National Reconciliation Commission.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 7

7.7.5 RIVALRY BETWEEN THE FACTIONS (MONAS AND JFM)

7.7.5.1 In 1981, Maj Boakye-Djan, member of the former AFRC and patron/founder of MONAS returned to Ghana with Capt K. Baah Achamfour, another member of the former AFRC, and repeated the earlier request for a probe into the affairs of the AFRC. At this time, Flt Lt Rawlings was reported to be still going to the barracks to intervene in Command and Welfare problems, thereby undermining the Military Chain of Command. The soldiers still called him "Chairman" and deferred to him more than to the legitimate political authority. These acts were obviously incompatible with his status as a subordinate officer of the Ghana Armed Forces, and the information was brought to the attention of President Limann. Members of MONAS believed that the President had by then, cultivated such a cordial relationship with Flt Lt Rawlings that he did not take appropriate action. They also contend that the President's apparently inexplicable conduct was occasioned by wrong information that Maj Boakye-Djan was the one planning a coup against his government, and that this contradictory information became a distraction such that even warnings by Military Intelligence as to the danger presented by Flt Lt Rawlings to the stability of the regime were ignored by President Limann. However, Professor Nabila, then Minister for Presidential Affairs, contests this information, and maintains that the lack of action was caused by indecisiveness and "too much 'buck passing' " by the professionals within the national security apparatus".⁵⁴

7.7.5.2 The JFM dominated NUGS, as many of its members were in the leadership of NUGS. It had become one of Rawlings' platforms, although he himself did not become a member of JFM until 1980. The political positions of NUGS were therefore more in alignment with the JFM than with MONAS. The battle between the two groups was carried on in the press. In the "Citadel Daily", a newspaper published by Dan Lartey and edited by Nubuor Ababio, the attacks on the person and character of Maj Boakye-Djan was a constant theme, as well as articulating the political position of NUGS. This attitude was understandable since the editor of that newspaper was also the General Secretary of JFM, and also a former leader of NUGS. The newspaper also published articles that damned the civilian administration, that is, the Executive and Parliament, and called for a revolution. MONAS disagreed with the position of the Leftist forum and this completed the break between it and the other groups such as the JFM.

⁵³*Daily Graphic*, Vol. 9151 Wednesday, 26th March, 1980. The newspaper reported that the six members had resigned, but also that "the central executive directorate of the league, acting under the authority of the central committee has 'purged' Mr. Kweku Baako Kakraba from the league for what it termed "gross revolutionary indiscipline."

⁵⁴ Naa Professor John S. Nabila, "Development of the Office of the National Security Coordinator: Challenges of the Transition in Limann's Regime" in Reflections on Security African Security Dialogue And Research, Legon, Ghana, 2001, p.17.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 7

7.7.5.3 The rivalry between the two groups was very much in evidence on the university campuses and this divided the front of the student leadership.

7.7.5.4 On 1st January, 1982, Sgt Alolga Akata Pore, a member of MONAS, is alleged to have paid a visit to his MONAS friends, to persuade MONAS members to join Flt Lt Rawlings who had overthrown the constitutional government the previous day. This was a surprising development since he was a member of MONAS. Clearly some of its members had not been faithful to the objectives of the movement, and the personal animosities that had developed between the MONAS and JFM had rendered the group very vulnerable. Their position was made more difficult because Maj Boakye-Djan had granted an interview to the British Broadcasting Corporation (BBC) radio on 1st January, 1982, condemning the takeover. MONAS drafted a three-paragraph statement that was non-committal and designed to buy them time.

7.7.5.5 The statement did not achieve the desired result, because Nana Okutwer Bekoe, Chairman of PNP and one of financiers of MONAS, while in custody at Gondar Barracks, had allegedly stated that Maj Boakye-Djan had accepted a bribe of US$200,000 from the PNP to share among his “boys”.⁵⁵

7.7.5.6 The members of MONAS were arrested and detained for periods of up to two years, when information leaked to the authorities that they were involved in a plot to subvert the new regime. The battle for supremacy between the two AFRC protagonists appeared to have ended with the emergence of Flt Lt Rawlings as the unchallenged leader in 1982, and the JFM as the most-favoured youth group.

7.7.6 THE JFM

7.7.6.1 On 3rd January, 1982, barely forty-eight hours after the PNP Government had been overthrown, the JFM led a group of workers to demonstrate in support of the revolution. As part of their demonstration of support, they paid a visit to the Graphic Corporation to threaten the journalists there not to publish negative news about the revolution because the workers would not suffer that to happen. The spokesmen of the group, Kwasi Adu and Quaynor Mettle, both former student leaders and recent graduates of the University of Ghana, complained about the hardship in the country and accused the Daily Graphic of unfair editorial slant against the June Fourth Uprising on account of ⁵⁵ This news item was reported in the Daily Graphic, Vol. 9715 Wednesday, 27th January, 1982, p.1. as “Djan, Poku had $200,000” There seems to be a discrepancy between the $200,000 that was reported in the newspaper, and the $100,000 allegedly told to the leaders of MONAS by Maj Boakye-Djan.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 7

the publication of negative stories about the event. The newspaper quoted Kwasi Adu as saying: “We shall meet the enemies pen for pen and boot for boot.”⁵⁶

7.7.6.2 The JFM and the NDM were put in charge of giving direction to the PDC/WDC concept by the formation of an Interim National Coordinating Council (INCC) because this was largely a JFM idea. Shillington blames ideological conflicts between the two groups as largely responsible for the absence of clear direction and proper organization of the PDCs. Chris Atim was instrumental in establishing WDCs all over the country and was constantly on the move, inaugurating the committees. These PDCs/WDCs were to be made up of junior staff and working class people. Managers and other persons of high social standing in the communities were not allowed to be members. This resulted in a bisecting of Ghanaian society into “people” and “citizens”. The need for the PDCs/WDCs to be brought under more central control was amply demonstrated by the amount of power that those who were involved in their organization had managed to accumulate within a short space of time. The implementation of the concept also demonstrated the importance of a mass movement organized from the local level upwards for purposes of political control of the country.

7.7.6.3 JFM is also credited with proposing Dr. Kwesi Botchwey, a member of the NDM, as a member of the Economic Management Team that was formed, before he eventually got appointed as the Secretary for Finance and Economic Planning, as well as influencing the initial socialist policies of the PNDC.⁵⁷ Indeed on 21st July, 1982, the Association of Recognized Professional Bodies (ARPB) held a press conference at which it read a Resolution which, among other things, urged the PNDC to hand over to a “Government of National Unity”, while making arrangements to return the country to a constitutionally elected government by 1983. The association buttressed its proposal by making a complaint that “Not even the June Four Movement (JFM) was altogether certain about what the nation had embarked upon.” This statement suggested the importance of the JFM in giving direction to the new government. A member of the Steering Committee of the JFM, Kwasi Adu, promptly accused the association of double standards. In particular, he criticized the Ghana Bar Association for being behind the Resolution adopted by the ARPB, and accused the lawyers of starting a reactionary campaign against the revolution, since they were the same people who had aggressively defended the AFRC convicts.⁵⁸

7.7.6.4 The end came for the extreme leftists in the JFM when they were accused of plotting to depose Flt Lt Rawlings as leader of the revolution and they were purged from the leadership. It is alleged that led by Sgt Alolga Akata-Pore, the leftists made a move to oust the Chairman of the PNDC, Flt Lt Rawlings, because they began to feel that the revolution was losing leftist impetus. As they erroneously believed that their control of the “grassroot organization” could be exploited to their political advantage, they sought to use their influence to isolate the Chairman and to effect his removal. Chris Atim, the

⁵⁶ Daily Graphic, Vol. 9695 Monday, 4th January, 1982, p.5.

⁵⁷ Shillington, supra, p.98.

⁵⁸ Daily Graphic, Vol.9713 Monday, 25th January, 1982 pp. 1,4&5.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 7

mouthpiece of the ideologues at the time, categorically denied this assertion and stated in his letter of resignation to the Chairman of the PNDC that those of his friends so accused, had been framed by their political enemies in order to get rid of them. Whichever version of events represents the true situation, there were interesting developments after he resigned from the government. He left the country and went into exile.

7.7.6.5 After the purging of the leftists, the JFM was heard of mostly when the anniversary of the 4th June event was approaching, when they issued statements glorifying the event and organized public activities and programmes. The political power of the JFM within the revolutionary movement, became greatly diminished although the appearance of importance and influence was maintained by the leadership of the revolution.

7.7.6.6 In 1986, the PNDC announced that it was going to celebrate the 4th June anniversary as a national event. The day was declared a public holiday, and an elaborate programme of celebration was drawn up. The tri-colour flag of the JFM was hung on all major streets and a carnival of events was launched. The JFM was a central piece of this celebration of its “birthday”, and the day became the occasion when route-marches were held by the Security Services, fiery revolutionary lectures were delivered, and glamourised versions of the events of 4th June, 1979, were recounted. Nugent observes that by 1986, the “revolutionary banner” had become an illusion even though the leadership tolerated the behaviour of the cadres who were inclined to behave as if the revolution was still on-going.⁵⁹

7.7.7 OTHER YOUTH GROUPS

7.7.7.1 Early into the rule of the PNDC, several youth groups made their presence felt by issuing messages of support. Whilst the Akropong Youth Association urged the PNDC to nationalize all lands,⁶⁰ the Dagomba Youth Association thanked the PNDC for releasing some of the Ministers from custody, and indicated that that act had demonstrated the good intentions of the PNDC.⁶¹

7.7.7.2 A decision was later taken to establish a National Youth Organising Commission (NYOC) to replace the National Youth Council following a two-day seminar on the youth, that was organized at the University of Ghana. A 15-member Commission made up of individuals as well as representatives of some youth groups was appointed to help organize the youth. The individuals were Dr. Kwesi Botchwey, Kwesi Pratt (Jnr), Shaibu Ahmed Gariba, Ms Belinda Agoe, Ms Cynthia Nuamah and Obliteyfiio Akwettey, President of NUGS. The other nine who were not named, were to be representatives of ⁵⁹ Paul Nugent, Big Men, Small Boys and Politics in Ghana. Power, Ideology and the Burden of History, 1982-1984 Asempa Publishers, Christian Council of Ghana, Accra, 1996, p.157.

⁶⁰ Daily Graphic, Vol.9702 Tuesday, 12th January, 1982, back page.

⁶¹ Daily Graphic, Vol.9706 Saturday, 16th January, 1982, p.5.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 7

the then nine regions⁶². Kwesi Pratt (Jnr) was the first elected Secretary of the NYOC and the task was to form a mass youth movement on the lines of the GYP. However, the objective was not achieved, and many of its leaders left it to take up other responsibilities such as the Finance and Economic portfolio for the Chairman, etc.

7.7.7.3 The Democratic Youth League of Ghana (DYLG) was a “mass youth movement” that was launched in Accra on 19th November, 1982.⁶³ Its first major statement was to criticize the students of the universities who had begun to oppose the government on some of its anti-student policies.⁶⁴ However, it does not appear to have achieved any purpose and was never a major player on the political field.

7.7.8 BOY SCOUTS ASSOCIATION AND GIRL GUIDES ASSOCIATION

7.7.8.1 In 1982, the Boy Scouts entered into public life again, perhaps in answer to the call for mass mobilization for national development. In September, 1982, the Scouts held a meeting at Baden Powell Hall in Accra to discuss how to mobilise the youth to play vanguard roles in national reconstruction. Consequent upon these deliberations, the Scouts set up a committee to enable the association play a vanguard role in national reconstruction.⁶⁵

7.7.8.2 Despite the stated objects of the association, Scouts joined the revolutionary organs in activities of law-enforcement. Without proper authority, they began to enforce curfew regulations and to engage in acts of vigilantism. In rural communities, they were accused of harassing traders and were involved in the policing of curfew-compliance, the enforcement of price controls leading to the locking out of women from markets,⁶⁶ whipping of market women, and enforcement of sanitation laws of district authorities. At the Border areas, they joined in border patrols to help check anti-smuggling activities. Indeed, some saw themselves as, and acted the part of, a uniformed branch of the PDCs and Students and Youth Task Force.

7.7.8.3 In consequence of the complaints engendered by these acts of vigilantism, a one-day seminar was organized for them by the Military authorities at Ho, under the theme “The role of Scouts and Girl Guides in the Revolution”.⁶⁷ The seminar, reported to have attracted over 400 members of the associations, was intended to educate the membership of the associations to respect the human rights of the citizenry even though they were expected to assist in exposing economic saboteurs.

⁶² Daily Graphic, Vol. 9751 Wednesday, 10th March, 1982, p.5.

⁶³ Daily Graphic, Vol. 9965, Saturday, 20th November, 1982, p.1.

⁶⁴ Daily Graphic, Vol 9989, Saturday, 18th December, 1982, p.5.

⁶⁵ Daily Graphic, Vol. 9900 Monday, 4th September, 1982, p.5.

⁶⁶ Takyiwaa Manuh, “Women, the State and Society under the PNDC” in Ghana Under PNDC Rule, E. Gyimah-Boadi (ed) CODESRIA BOOK SERIES, 1993, p.176 at p.181.

⁶⁷ Ghanaian Times, vol. 7,713, Monday, 11th October, 1982, p.3.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 7

7.7.8.4 The acts of vigilantism brought the Scouts into conflict with the communities in which they operated. In 1983, an alleged smuggler was killed because he allegedly threatened a Scout on border patrol with a knife.⁶⁸

7.7.8.5 It is uncertain how long this para-military posture of the association was maintained, but what is certain is that, in the communities in which they operated, the Scouts lost their image as a friendly civil society organization.

7.8 CONCLUSION

7.8.1 No youth movement has ever been given the place and prominence that the GYP enjoyed in its heyday. The National Youth Council was revived, and in 1967, it regained its seat on the International Youth Council lost in 1961, as a result of the formation of the GYP as the sole organization for young people. Every government found it imperative to organize the youth, particularly the out-of-school youth and those without employable skills. Other political interests found the idealism of the youth a fertile ground on which to sow ideas of societal change. As the post-Independence population increased, the significance of the youth in national politics became more and more obvious.

7.8.2 The Youth Associations that were born out of the 4th June, 1979 Uprising, brought together young people with energy and drive, who defended the idea to which they had given their support. They were behind many of the human rights violations and abuses that occurred, as, in their youthful exuberance, they urged “revolutionary” punitive measures against “enemies of the revolution”. They competed for control over power at the national level, with deadly consequences for some of its members.

7.8.3 Other youth groups that were meant to provide moral training for young people, such as the Boy Scouts, corrupted their mission and perverted their existence by joining in activities that resulted in the perpetration of human rights abuses on the communities in which they operated, particularly against women traders.

⁶⁸ Ghanaian Times vol. 7,791 Thursday, 13th January, 1983, back page.

CHAPTER EIGHT

THE ROLE OF CHIEFS - COMPLICITY OR RESISTANCE TO HUMAN RIGHTS ABUSES FROM 6TH MARCH, 1957 -- 6TH JANUARY, 1993

8.0 Introduction

8.0.1 This chapter deals with the role that chiefs have played in the political history of Ghana between the period 6th March, 1957, and 6th January, 1993. The assessment of the role of chiefs is done with specific reference to their efforts in the protection or otherwise, of human rights. One fact that became obvious from the work of the Commission was that, the chiefs themselves were often victims of human rights abuses, and that the chieftaincy institution suffered human rights abuses more than any other institutions, during the mandate period.

8.0.2 Land ownership in Ghana since colonial days has been in the hands of families, clans, and traditional rulers or chiefs. The latter's position on land ownership supersedes the rest in most Ghanaian societies. The chiefs were seen as holding economic power, controlling, as they claimed to do, access to land and the people who worked on the lands, as well as what could be grown on it, dug out of it, and the labour to do all these works¹. By and large, not until the establishment of the 1992 constitution, all lands in the Northern, Upper East and Upper West Regions of Ghana were vested in the Government of Ghana. On the other hand, from Brong-Ahafo Region down to the coastal regions of Ghana, lands are in the hands of families, clans and traditional rulers.

8.0.3 Those in charge of these lands usually release them to individuals who want to invest on the land and in return these people pay royalties or some kind of compensation or rent. One could obtain a parcel of land for a project by lease or outright purchase from the land owners. However, the acquisition of land and its management is bedevilled with a myriad of problems, ranging from double sale of a parcel of land; improper documentation, encroachment by unauthorised individuals or groups or families; litigations and disputes. Along side these, most lands compulsorily acquired by government; and its agencies, little or no compensation has been paid to the owners of these lands. Where compensation has been paid, the land has been left

¹ See Richard Rathbone, op cit.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 8

unattended to for so many years, allowing all kinds of peoples, individuals and families to claim ownership.²

8.1 Pre-Independence

8.1.1 In modern times whatever role chiefs have played in the governance of Ghana, has depended very much on the attitude of the nation to the chieftaincy institution. In Ghana, the interference in the exercise of powers by chiefs formally began with the signing of the Bond of 1844, under which some chiefs claimed protection from the British and agreed to respect British authority in respect of the adjudication of specified crimes. As Kumado put it, “the British convinced themselves with the cumulative effect of the treaties like the bond and the various Annexation and Protection Orders in the Council to mean that they have vested in them, the power to administer the areas”.³

8.1.2 One major legislation that created some kind of uncertainty with regards to some of the powers of the chiefs, was the introduction of the Supreme Court Ordinance of 1876 and Native Jurisdiction Ordinance of 1878⁴. These laws facilitated and regulated certain powers and jurisdiction of the chiefs and more so the power to dismiss chiefs, but with prior approval from London⁵. In 1883, the 1878 Ordinance was repealed, after some chiefs had protested.⁶

8.1.3 In 1904, the Chiefs’ Ordinance was passed, and this provided a situation whereby chiefs could apply to the Governor for the confirmation of their election and installation.⁷ The confirmation by the governor determined the lawfulness of the applicant’s status as chief in his traditional area and the colony. As Kumado observed, “by 1910 the central government had, through legislation, weakened the authority of the chiefs, by making their position dependent both in law and on central government prop”.⁸

8.1.4 As the process of colonisation crystallised, the chiefs gradually lost their judicial and military roles, since the defence of the territory became the prerogative of the colonial government. In addition, more and more disputes were adjudicated upon in courts set up by the colonial government as the authority of the chiefs’ courts was pared down by legislation. By the time the colonial government introduced Indirect Rule as a formal administrative policy in the Gold Coast in the early part of the twentieth century, the subjugation of the chiefs to British authority had become complete and the political and judicial roles of the chiefs had become circumscribed.

²³ CEK Kumado, “Chieftaincy and the Law in Modern Ghana”, (1993-95) , Vol XIX, pg.197.⁴ Kimble David, A Political History of Ghana 1850-1928, Claredon Press, Oxford ,1963, p.460.⁵ Kimble, ibid.⁶ Kimble , ibid.⁷ The Chiefs’ Ordinance No 4 of 1904, Cap 21 1 Laws of the Gold Coast 1928, p 151.⁸ See CEK Kumado, op.cit, supra.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 8

8.1.5 The history of Ghana is replete with cases, in which several courageous chiefs stood up to colonial governors and challenged their authority. In 1866, for instance, King Aggrey of Cape Coast refused to recognize the authority of the Governor of Cape Coast Castle beyond the bounds prescribed by the Bond of 1844. King Aggrey considered himself to be the lawful enthroned King of Cape Coast, for which reason the Governor had no right to set limits to his powers as king, and to set free, persons he himself had tried and imprisoned. The dispute between the King and the Governor led to the dethronement and exile of the King to Sierra Leone⁹.

8.1.6 Some chiefs attained prominence within the colonial administration of Sir Hugh Clifford and Sir Gordon Guggisberg as Governors. Chiefs, such as Nana Sir Ofori Atta I, Nene Sir Azu Mate Kole, Togbi Sri and Nana Sir Tsibu Darko even served as members of the Legislative and Executive Council in the Gold Coast¹⁰. The Guggisberg Constitution of 1925 introduced the Provincial Council of Chiefs. Through this council, the chiefs of Gold Coast had the opportunity to participate in government at the highest possible level as it was the first organised group to be consulted by government on major issues¹¹.

8.1.7 The struggle against the colonial government as to whether it had the authority to interfere in the chieftaincy institution continued well into the twentieth century and those chiefs who maintained their opposition to the colonial government were marginalized.

8.1.8 The picture was somehow different in the northern part of Ghana. In the Northern Territories, even though kingdoms existed, their political authority had been weakened on account of the activities of the slave raiders, before the impact of colonialism and formal politics in Ghana was felt. Treaties concluded with the British government were signed during the closing years of the 19th century bringing those areas under the protection of the British Government.

8.1.9 By 1911, Northern Ghana had been subdued by the British with the use of the Gold Coast Police Force. Having consolidated their control of the area, the British decided to involve chiefs in their administration just as they did with the chiefs in Southern Ghana. At that time, Northern Ghana had two categories of political groups – the acephalous and the centralized groups. The acephalous political groups lacked a centralized authority and machinery of governance, whilst the centralized political groups had chiefs. On account of possessing more identifiable political authorities, the authorities of the centralised groups were easier to locate and appoint as agents of the colonial government, than were those of the acephalous groups where the exercise of political authority was more diffuse in nature of political authority.

⁹ See Kofi Baku, “Chieftaincy in Historical Perspective”, in Chieftaincy, Traditional Leadership and Development in Africa. Preliminary Edition of Lecturers’ Notes, African Studies Courses AFST231-2001.

¹⁰ See Kofi Baku op cit.

¹¹ see Kofi Baku op cit.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 8

8.1.10 The weakness inherent in the absence of a centralised authority was further accentuated by slave-raiding activities of Samori and Babatu. Even in the centralised states, the slave raiding activities contributed to undermine the authority of the chiefs, but the effects were worse on the acephalous groups. A further significant factor was the incidence of intra-state and inter-state wars in the late 19th century. The result of all these factors that weakened the chiefdoms was that chiefs were unable to control the people who were supposed to be their subjects. This situation was even worse for the non-centralized groups. Once they had no institution around which to rally, the British took advantage and created new political organisations with the chiefs of the centralised communities as heads. The introduction of indirect rule in the northern part of Ghana empowered some chiefs to be political authorities, and brought whole areas under their control. This was done by putting smaller and independent chiefs under bigger ones and then creating paramountcies out of the bigger polities. Consequently chiefs, who were previously autonomous were forced to come under these paramount chiefs. Prominent among such Paramount Chiefs were the Nayiri of the Mamprusi, Ya Na of the Dagomba, the Yagbumwura of the Gonja, the Wa Na of the Wala, and the Krachi Wura of the Krachi.¹²

8.1.11 The British Government empowered the chiefs to exercise their authority within the new political organisation. They also had to create chiefs in the acephalous areas that had no chiefs. State power was put at the disposal of the new paramountcies and new chiefs used State power to suppress all resistance from new subjects. Consequently, the foundation on which the chief's power rested in the northern part of Ghana was in the hands of the "white man." With the outbreak of the First World War, and the withdrawal of colonial officials for service outside their stations, the weaknesses in the new system began to show, as the chiefs became vulnerable in the absence of colonial support.

8.1.12 As a result of these developments, a fundamental contradiction in local administrative policy in Northern Ghana became evident. The chiefs had become agents of colonial rule, many, with little or no claim to traditional authority, or to the status of chiefs, and were thus completely dependent on the colonial administration. This situation made them vulnerable to manipulation by the colonial government.

8.1.13 When partisan politics became prominent in Northern Ghana in 1954, the two main political parties, Convention People's Party (CPP) and the Northern Peoples' Party (NPP) began to court the support of the chiefs. The parties realized that they could not make any progress among the people, who were still under the effective control of their chiefs. During the 1954 and 1956 Elections, the NPP was regarded as the party of chiefs and the CPP was seen as being anti-chief. In the 1956 elections, the CPP recognised the necessity to find and field candidates with chiefly backgrounds in order to make an impact. Though the two parties courted the support of chiefs, the ¹² N.J.K. Brukum, "Chiefs, Colonial Policy and Politics in Northern Ghana, 1897-1956", in Transactions of the Historical Society of Ghana New Series, No 3 University of Ghana, Legon 1999.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 8

NPP had more support from the chiefs and this showed in the massive support that the NPP enjoyed. It thus became imperative for politicians, who wanted votes in Northern Territories, to court and win the support of chiefs first. This phenomenon has remained in Ghana's political life till the present time.

8.2 Chiefs And Land8.2.1 Pre-Independence To 1957

8.2.1.1 The British Colonialist was reticent and even more cautious when it came to regulating Gold Coast's (now Ghana) economic resource, land. There were many discussions about the importance of land reforms, but no such reforms were ever to take place. So far as the vast majority of Ghanaians were concerned, land allocation mostly in the form of confiscation, taxation and rights were matters controlled by chiefs and their council.

8.2.1.2 The British then passed the Native Jurisdiction Ordinance (NJO) in 1883, which entrenched them in Southern Ghana and reduced the traditional rulers and their people from the status of protégés to that of subjects of the British¹³. The Ordinance also set up democratic local councils, which took over certain lands in the Colony (the south) and in the Ashanti Region onto their care. As a result, the chiefs lost control of what were traditionally stool lands, and even if the general ownership of those lands remained vested in the stools and hence, the communities which owed allegiance to those stools¹⁴.

8.2.1.3 In 1900, the Concessions Ordinance was enacted to regulate the granting of concessions for the exploitation of timber and mineral resources¹⁵. The law was made to certify as valid a concession, granted by the persons having authority to do so and which protect the customary rights of the people living in the area. The concession rent was to be paid to a treasurer appointed by the Governor and distributed to the entitled individuals.¹⁶ It thus meant that, the revenue from these lands, derived from local taxes on farmers, land and concession sales as well as from royalties on timber from the forest and minerals, which was the ancient basis of chiefly inheritance, was to be collected by the newly created local councils, as one element of local revenue. Chiefs were no longer at liberty to alienate stool lands without the assent of local councils.

8.2.1.4 From these reforms, the revenue accruing from stool lands and from native courts went directly to the treasuries of local councils, and they appropriated the

¹³ Boahen, A A , Ghana: Evolution and Growth in the 19th and 20th Centuries, London, Longman, 1975, p.60.

¹⁴ See Richard Rathbone, op cit.

¹⁵ Ordinance No 14 of 1900 as amended, Cap.27. Laws of the Gold Coast Colony 1928, p 260.

¹⁶ Ibid Sections 12 14 and 32.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 8

annual grants to chiefs for their administration and for the maintenance of their retinues.

8.2.1.5 Although the NJO met with the resistance and protests from chiefs, it was the protest over land that was to channel all such dissidents into a single protest movement in the late 1890s, led by the Aborigines' Rights Protection Society (ARPS). The ARPS protest against the Land Bills of 1894-1897, centred on the contention that there was no waste land or public land which could justifiably be taken over by the government; and secondly the claim that the bill would reduce all the chiefs to mere squatters and lead to the abrogation of their ancestral rights.¹⁷ In view of this, the ARPS appeared to be right to assist the chiefs, and successfully, they protested against the Land Bills that would have vested all vacant lands in the Crown. From then on to the late 1950s, governments have invigorated their effort to acquire lands through series of legislations

8.3.0 Post-Independence Governments

8.3.1 Like the colonial governments before them, post-colonial governments of Ghana also recognised the importance of chiefs in the mobilization of their subjects. The post-colonial governments, however, sought through legislation to control the chieftaincy institution and the personalities that occupied those offices. Post-Independence governments made development projects dependent on loyalty to government. Chiefs were in effect, forced to do the will of government in order to attract development projects to their traditional area, otherwise, the chiefs risked facing the displeasure of their subjects for the absence of such projects.

8.4. 6TH MARCH, 1957 -- 23RD FEBRUARY, 1966:
CONVENTION PEOPLE'S PARTY

8.4.1 Nkrumah And The Chiefs

8.4.1.1 One scholar has said: "Dr. Kwame Nkrumah rode partly on the back of discontent against chiefs to gain political victory in 1951 and subsequently through all pre-independence elections until independence was attained in 1957". This discontent of Dr. Nkrumah and his followers was directed against chiefs, because they were perceived as "agents of the colonial government."¹⁸ Nana Ofori Atta II observed that in victory, and after independence, Dr. Nkrumah and his supporters waged war against chiefs, and in some instances, he openly taunted chiefs saying that those of them who refused to conform and would not do business with the CPP Government "would run away and leave their sandals behind."¹⁹

¹⁷ A A Boahen, Ghana: Evolution and Growth in the 19th and 20th Centuries, Longman, London, 1975, p.62.

¹⁸ See Kofi Baku, supra.

¹⁹ Ibid.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 8

8.4.1.2 The CPP Government realized the need to take a firmer control over the chieftaincy institution. It therefore devised a way of ensuring that only people whose support it could count on, could become chiefs. The first Chieftaincy Act of the Parliament of Ghana, the Chieftaincy Act, 1961 (Act 81), stipulated that government recognition was required to validate the enstoolment/enskinment and destoolment/deskinment of chiefs. The clear result of this was that persons who did not support the government were never given the necessary recognition, notwithstanding the fact that they had been customarily nominated, selected and enstooled/enskinned as chiefs. This Act thus compelled loyalty of those chiefs who did not wish to fall foul of government and excluded from office, those who did not support the government.²⁰

8.4.1.3 By operation of Act 81, the Government of Dr. Nkrumah was able to give recognition to supporters and sympathisers, while it removed from office those chiefs, who identified themselves with the opposition. In the Ashanti Region where the CPP had the biggest opposition, it was reported that the Government considered the position of 27 chiefs, who were to be officially recognised through a publication in the Government Gazette.²¹ In a similar situation, the government withdrew its recognition of the Okyenhene, Nana Ofori Atta II, Chief of Akyem Abuakwa. This was on the grounds that the Okyenhene was a staunch supporter of the National Liberation Movement (NLM)²², which was then the opposition party. In fact, in August of 1958, the Okyenhene was destooled. A Ghana Gazette notice declared the Okyenhene, Nana Ofori Atta II, as destooled with effect from June 13, 1958²³. Following the report in the Daily Graphic, Nana Ofori Atta II was evicted from his palace²⁴.

8.4.1.4 Soon after independence, the government mounted an assault on some of the structures through which the chiefs were exercising power under colonial rule. Dr. Nkrumah was reported to have said: “The Chiefs’ Regional Officers had had their day.” He further claimed, that the chiefs “often found themselves in the difficult

²⁰ The Chieftaincy Act (Act 81) of the 1961 gave power to the executive to grant recognition to chiefs. Section 1 of the Act provided: A chief is an individual who has been nominated, elected and installed as a chief in accordance with customary law, and

(a) recognised as a chief by the Minister.

The section went on that: (2) The Minister may by executive instrument at anytime withdraw recognition from a chief, if (a) the chiefs have been destooled and his appeal against the destoolment has been dismissed or the period allowed for appealing has elapsed without an appeal having been brought or

(b) the Minister considers it to be in the interest to withdraw recognition.

²¹ Daily Graphic, Vol.2,082 Monday, 3rd June 1957, p12.

²² Daily Graphic, Vol. 2,200 Thursday, 17th October, 1957, p1.

²³ Daily Graphic, Vol. 2452 Monday, 11th August, 1958, p1.

²⁴ Daily Graphic, Vol.2,491 Thursday, 25th September, 1958, p1.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 8

position as Civil Servants endeavouring to carry out duties which are really appropriate to a member of government.... it is therefore necessary to abolish the posts of Chiefs Regional Officers.”²⁵ In a memorandum dated 2nd April, 1957, to the Cabinet, Dr. Nkrumah decided to have in each region, political representatives of the government and as Chief Executive Officers of the government.²⁶ This immediately deprived the chiefs of revenue that was going to them for the administration of those offices.

8.4.1.5 The role of chiefs came under attack when it was announced that they were going to be restricted to their “local administrative duties.” The Joint Provincial Council, which was then the mouthpiece of the chiefs, formally disapproved of the impending change, and as a result, sent a letter to the then Minister of Local Government. A portion of this letter described the planned change as “an insidious attempt on the part of government to subvert the office of the heads of the regions and place them under an effective control of party interest.”²⁷ The policy pursued by Dr. Nkrumah’s Government was one that tended to treat chiefs with disdain, and this was particularly directed towards chiefs, who either opposed or attempted to oppose government. In the infamous statement that “the chiefs would run away and leave their sandals behind” if they continued to oppose his government, Dr. Nkrumah showed that he meant to get tough with chiefs who were supporting the opposition. The chiefs realised that soon after Independence they had to ensure their own survival. It was reported that the then Ga Mantse, Nii Tackie Kome II, on behalf of the Joint Provincial Council of chiefs, submitted a 29-point memorandum to the government on the “role of chiefs in self-governing Ghana”.²⁸ Earlier on, the council had forwarded a 21-point resolution of protest to the government after meeting at Dodowa in reaction to the government’s plans to appoint or create Regional and District Political Commissioners, to take charge of government programmes. According to the resolution, the government’s decision regarding these appointments was to be regarded as acting “ultra vires.”²⁹ The chiefs viewed the imposition of district political authorities over them as an attempt by the government to usurp their power over these district authorities.

8.4.1.6 The creation of Regional Commissioners led to the reduction of financial aid from central funds to traditional authorities. Subsequently, the then Minister of Local Government, Mr. Kofi Baako was alleged to have made some remarks at Kade saying: “We are only accountable to God and the people and not to those who continue to classify themselves as occupants of this stool or that stool.”³⁰ The chiefs perceived this pronouncement as an indication of the CPP Government’s intention to sideline the chieftaincy institution.³¹ Mr. Kofi Baako was also reported to have said, “A chief is a ²⁵ See Richard Rathbone, Nkrumah and the Chiefs, Accra, Athens, Oxford. 2000.

²⁶ NAG ADM 13/2/37.

²⁷ Daily Graphic, no. 2,090, Wednesday, 12th June, 1957.

²⁸ Daily Graphic, no. 2,523 Saturday, 1st November 1, 1958, p.3.

²⁹ Daily Graphic, no. 2,090 Wednesday 12th June 1957, p.7.

³⁰ Daily Graphic, no. 2,141, Friday, 9th August 1957, p.16.

³¹ See Richard Rathbone, op. cit.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 8

chief, because the government recognised him as such.”³² Sensing danger, the chiefs met on 18th October, 1957, to discuss the position of chiefs in the country.³³ The then President of the Joint Provincial Council, Nene Annorkwei II, lamented that the future looked bleak for the chiefs. Subsequently, the chiefs held discussion with the Prime Minister, Dr. Nkrumah, at his office,³⁴ on a number of issues, concerning the chiefs and the withdrawal of recognition by the government from the Okyenhene.

8.4.1.7 In view of this development, some chiefs saw that continuing to oppose the government was a risk. The majority of the chiefs therefore, began to succumb to or soften their stand when it came to dealing with the CPP Government. The impact of all of this upon vulnerable chiefs was predictable. Many chiefs began their courtship with the CPP Government. For instance, on 29th October, 1957, the Omanhene of Abura, speaking at an emergency meeting of the Abura State Council, decided that it was now his “civic duty to support the government in power.”³⁵ Following this, the Omanhene of Assin Attandansu, Nana Tsibu Asare X, also said, “it is my duty to support the government in power.”³⁶ Since these developments many chiefs have felt obliged not to be critical of the government on issues considered to be political.

8.4.1.8 It could be said therefore, that the situation in Ghana during the administration of the First Republic, was one in which chiefs could not fight against the human rights violations that were perpetrated by the government. Some chiefs were, in fact, themselves victims of human rights abuse, under the recognition clause of Act 81 and the Preventive Detention Act, 1958.

8.4.1.9 In order to streamline the institution of chieftaincy, the CPP Government set up the National House of Chiefs in November, 1958, by an Act of Parliament. This national body replaced the territorial assemblies of chiefs namely, the Asanteman Council, the Joint Provincial Council, and the Northern Territories Council. The first President of the National House of Chiefs was Nana Kwafo Akoto III, who was then the Omanhene of Akwamu Traditional Area. In his maiden address, he admonished all chiefs to refrain from politics, and cooperate with the government³⁷. The Omanhene of Western Nzema, Nana Amakye III, described those who opposed the Prime Minister, Dr. Nkrumah and his CPP as no more than “tittle-tattle.”³⁸ The term “doing politics” became a phrase synonymous with expressing opposition to government policy, whilst expressing support for the government was viewed as responsible leadership.

8.4.1.10 These changes in attitude were precipitated by the fear of the government’s power to recognize and/or withdraw its recognition of a particular chief. Throughout ³² Daily Graphic no. 2,143, Monday, 12th August 1957, p.12.

³³ Ashanti Pioneer, no.5598, Friday, 18th October 1957, p.1.

³⁴ Ashanti Pioneer, no. 5,599, Saturday, 19th October 19,1957.

³⁵ See Richard Rathbone, op. cit.

³⁶ See Richard Rathbone, op. cit.

³⁷ Daily Graphic, no. 2526 Wednesday, 5th November, 1958, p.3.

³⁸ Daily Graphic, no. 2542 Monday, 26th November, 1957, p.5.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 8

Dr. Nkrumah's era, rumour persisted that chieftaincy would be abolished, and this went a long way to cause many chiefs to sway allegiance and focus their interest on the CPP Government. Chiefs who were regarded as "good boys" were promoted to the status of paramountcy. In like manner, some sub-chiefs were also made paramount chiefs, thus making them equal in status to their traditional overlords.

8.4.1.11 The carving out of Brong-Ahafo Region from Ashanti for administrative purposes without affecting customary allegiances, also created a situation where chiefs in the Brong Ahafo Regional House of Chiefs owed allegiance to Asantehene in Ashanti Region, thus creating split loyalties. This has left a legacy of conflict within that Region.

8.4.11. 12 It could be said that Dr. Nkrumah and the CPP dealt a heavier blow to chiefs and chieftaincy by the introduction of Regional Political Representatives, Reduction of funds, the recognition clause, and the introduction of Preventive Detention Act, than any acts of the colonial government. The only way for the chiefs to survive was for them to openly support the government in power or to keep silent, even in the face of human rights abuses and violations.

8.5 24TH FEBRUARY, 1966 – 30TH SEPTEMBER, 1969 NATIONAL LIBERATION COUNCIL (NLC)

8.5.1 Chieftaincy And NLC

8.5.1.1 The treatment meted out to chiefs during the Nkrumah regime was to focus the attention of Ghanaians on the proper role that must be assigned to the chiefs in our society when the regime was overthrown in 1966³⁹. Legislation was passed by the NLC Government, ostensibly to correct the problems afflicting the chieftaincy institution. The NLC therefore promulgated the Chieftaincy (Amendment) Decree, 1966 (NLCD 112), Chieftaincy Decree, 1967 (NLCD 136), Chieftaincy Decree, 1967 (NLCD 203), and Chieftaincy Decree, 1968 (NLCD 287).

8.5.1.2 In passing these Decrees, it was hoped that the chieftaincy institution would be healed of the abuses committed against it by the CPP Government. In other words, the aim was to restore tradition to its correct and respectable place. Under these Decrees, people who had become chiefs, apparently because they were party faithfuls were removed; and those who had been raised were also to be reverted to their former positions. A newspaper report categorically stated: "All chiefs who were elevated to the status of paramount chiefs during the Nkrumah's regime were to be restored to their original status by the N.L.C Decree."⁴⁰ The newspaper report went further to state that all those who were enstooled/enskinning in place of non-CPP chiefs were also to lose government recognition. In the report, it was stated that the NLC could not rectify illegal acts of removal with proper judicial process that was why recognition was to be withdrawn from all chiefs, who were made chiefs in place of those removed without proper judicial process. Subsequently, there was another newspaper publication, which carried the caption: “133 Nkrumah Chiefs sacked.”⁴¹ The report stated that the NLC had withdrawn recognition from 133 persons who were made chiefs by the Nkrumah regime in place of those who were lawfully and customarily elected by their people and were opposed to the previous government. The newspaper also carried the list of sacked and demoted chiefs as provided under the Second Schedule of NLCD 112.⁴² The regional breakdown was as follows:

³⁹ See Kumado, op cit.

⁴⁰ Daily Graphic, vol. 5,031 Thursday, 1st December, 1966, p.1.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 8

- Eastern Region - 42;
- Central Region - 3;
- Western Region - 1;
- Ashanti – 35;
- Brong Ahafo – 18;
- Northern – 1;
- Upper Region – 25; and
- Volta - 9.

8.5.1.3 The Decree was not without its own difficulties. According to Kumado:

the Schedule to the Decree which was to effect the NLC policy made the Kukuom (located in the Brong Ahafo Region) chief, a sub-chief to the Asantehene. But the chief refused and he was prosecuted. The Kukuom chief argued that by custom, he was independent chief of the Asantehene and therefore refused to pay customary allegiance to him. The battle between the customary constitutional position as it was claimed under the Kukuom Constitution and Statutory scheme of things contained in NLCD 112, was resolved interestingly in favour of the Kukuom Constitution.⁴³

8.5.1.4 Some chiefs and traditional councils in the country joined in the public condemnation of the wrong done by the deposed CPP Government. These condemnations were largely done through newspapers, of which one of the captions read: “Chiefs back the big revolution.” This particular quote is attributed to the Eastern Regional House of Chiefs, during an emergency meeting of the House, held at Dodowa. At this same meeting the Eastern Regional House of Chiefs also expressed its profound gratitude to the Ghana Armed Forces and the Police for delivering Ghana from the tyrannical rule of Dr. Nkrumah and his henchmen. Nana Kwafo Akoto III, then the Omanhene of the Akwamu Traditional Area and the President of the House, said chiefs had been deprived of their resources and subjected to indignities, which were shameful to recount. He said that chieftaincy, which was entrenched in the Constitution of Ghana, was actually being abrogated step by step. Recounting the

⁴¹ Daily Graphic, vol. 5,035 Tuesday, 6th December, 1966, p.1.

⁴² Daily Graphic, no. 5,035, Tuesday, 6th December, 1966, pp. 6-7.

⁴³ See CEK Kumado, supra.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 8

numerous hardships chiefs had experienced under Dr. Nkrumah, Nana Akoto said that after Dr. Nkrumah had come to power, he amended the Constitution, removed heads of regions and replaced them with Regional Commissioners. He further complained that laws were made to take over proceeds on stool lands and this rendered the chiefs very poor; and chiefs who spoke against these actions of the CPP Government were threatened with removal and detention. Subsequently, the House passed a resolution pledging its wholehearted support to the NLC.⁴⁴

8.5.1.5 The Ashanti Regional House of Chiefs on its part, sent a congratulatory message to the NLC for appointing various Commissions of Enquiry to look into the malpractices of the deposed regime of Dr. Nkrumah. The Asantehene, Otumfuo Sir Osei Agyeman Prempeh II, declared the wholehearted support of the Ashanti Regional House of Chiefs for the overthrow of Dr. Nkrumah and his regime.⁴⁵ This stance of the Asantehene also revealed that he had to sacrifice his linguist, Baffour Osei Akoto, to save the Ashanti Kingdom from being destroyed by Dr. Nkrumah and his CPP Government.⁴⁶ According to the Asantehene, Dr. Nkrumah threatened to put him in detention if he failed to renounce Baffour Akoto. In view of this, he had no alternative, but to give up Akoto to save the Ashanti nation from destruction, because Dr. Nkrumah had the power to destroy the Ashanti nation.

8.5.1.6 All over the country, chiefs expressed their support for the overthrow of the CPP Government. In the Volta Region, Togbe Adedza II, Awomefia of Anlo, who was also then President of the Volta Regional House of Chiefs was reported to have led about eight thousand jubilant supporters, including chiefs, to a mock burial of two officials of the deposed CPP Government.⁴⁷ Nana Kwaku Kwaah II, Omanhene of the Atebubu Traditional Area and the President of Brong Ahafo Regional House of Chiefs, on behalf of his people congratulated the NLC Regime. The Omanhene, together with the chiefs and people of Brong Ahafo pledged their total co-operation and full support for the efforts being made by the NLC Government to restore to Ghana, true liberty and democratic freedom.⁴⁸ In addition, the Brong Ahafo Regional House of Chiefs sent a 26-point petition, which was signed by twelve paramount chiefs of the House to the NLC Government to allow the Brong Ahafo Region to continue to remain autonomous. The Chiefs supported the NLC because they believed the NLC Government was the surest means to retain the dignity of chiefs and preserve the chieftaincy institution. In the petition, were allegations that Brong Ahafo Region had been neglected in the award of scholarships and in the provision of development projects. They also complained that paramount chiefs had been placed under sub-chiefs in Ashanti.⁴⁹

⁴⁴ Daily Graphic, no. 4,809 Wednesday, 16th March, 1966, pp. 3, 6-7.

⁴⁵ Daily Graphic, no. 4,810 Thursday, 17th March, 1966, pp.1&3.

⁴⁶ Daily Graphic, no. 5,005 Tuesday, 1st November, 1966, p.1.

⁴⁷ Daily Graphic, no. 4,807 Monday 14th March, 1966, p.1.

⁴⁸ Daily Graphic, no. 4,992 Thursday 24th February, 1966, p.1.

⁴⁹ Daily Graphic, no. 5,062 Monday, 9th January, 1967, p.3.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 8

8.5.1.7 The chiefs and people of the Ga Traditional Area, in a message signed by the Ga Mantse and President of the Ga Traditional Area, Nii Amugi II, pledged that they would do everything possible to assist the NLC to right the wrongs, which the former government had for fifteen years, inflicted on the people of Ghana.⁵⁰

8.5.1.8 The views expressed by these traditional councils, showed that they wholeheartedly supported the NLC Regime. There was thus no room for them to criticize the undemocratic means by which the NLC Government had taken over power from a constitutional government. Indeed, most of the reports criticized the previous CPP Government and not the existing government of the NLC. The negative feelings the chiefs had towards the CPP made it impossible for them to even condemn detentions without trial in the form of protective custody as well as the ill treatment that CPP activists suffered at the hands of the Government of the NLC.

8.5.1.9 This support also manifested itself in the condemnation that greeted the coup attempt of 17th April, 1967, in which Lt Gen Emmanuel Kwasi Kotoka was killed. After the failed coup attempt, several newspaper publications and reports showed that the chiefs were in full support of the NLC Government. Some chiefs called for action to be taken against all persons, be they military or civilian, who were involved in the coup act against the NLC. To this end, the Eastern Regional House of Chiefs sent a three-point resolution to the NLC, through Nana Kwafo Akoto III, the Akwamuhene.⁵¹ Several traditional councils and chiefs in the country also made donations to the NLC and signed the Book of Condolence. Among such chiefs were, Nana Akuamoah Acheampong, Omanhene of Kwahu Traditional Area,⁵² and Nana Ofori Atta II, Omanhene of Akyem Abuakwa.⁵³ The Chief of Juaben also donated cash to Kotoka's family,⁵⁴ and when the Asantehene went to the Christianborg Castle to express his condolences upon the death of Lt Gen Kotoka, he made a cash donation to the NLC.⁵⁵

8.5.1.10 Although the NLC had pledged not to meddle in chieftaincy affairs, it however got involved in the Yendi Skin Affairs. In November, 1968, the NLC supervised the enskinment of Mion-Lana as Ya-Na Andani III. This move of the NLC was approved and supported by the District and Regional Administration, and by local units of the Army and Police.⁵⁶ The Abudulai family, however, protested against this to the NLC Government, and a committee was appointed under the chairmanship of Nene Azu Mate Kole, Konor of Manya Krobo to investigate the Yendi Skin affairs. The terms of reference for the committee was for it to ascertain the customary procedure for the selection and installation of a Ya Na, and also to determine if Ya-Na Andani III had been properly selected and installed or not. The committee was also to

⁵⁰ Daily Graphic, no. 4,996, Tuesday, 1st March, 1966, p.1.

⁵¹ Ghanaian Times, no. 2,743 Saturday, 26th January, 1967 p.3

⁵² Daily Graphic, no. 5,134 Tuesday, 4th April, 1967 p.4.

⁵³ Daily Graphic, no. 5,150 Saturday, 22nd April, 1967 p.1.

⁵⁴ Daily Graphic, no. 5,165 Wednesday, 10th May, 1967 back page.

⁵⁵ Ghanaian Times no. 2,845 Monday, 8th May, 1967 p.3.

⁵⁶ Paul Ladouceur, "The Yendi Chieftaincy Dispute and Ghanaian Politics", The Canadian Journal of African Studies VII (1972), 97-115.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 8

determine whether or not, if the said installation was unduly influenced by the presence of armed soldiers and policemen as well as the District Administrative Officers in the area.⁵⁷

8.5.1.11 While the committee was at its work, the NLC Government concurrently gave Ya-Na Andani III de facto recognition. As a follow up to this action, representative of the government paid a courtesy call on the Ya Na in early December 1968, and Ya-Na Andani III also received the salary of a Ya Na.⁵⁸ This move clearly prejudiced the outcome of the committee's investigations and led to a protest by fourteen chiefs of Dagbon.⁵⁹ It, however, won for the NLC some influence with the Ya Na.

8.5.1.12 The committee eventually declared the installation of Ya Na Andani III null and void but by this time Ya Na Andani III had died. Members of the Andani family occupied the palace of the Ya Na and refused to leave. Government troops sent to evict the occupants, fired on them, and in the ensuing melee, 23 members of the Andani family were killed and about 40 of them wounded.⁶⁰ Members of the Andani Family put the number of their dead at 36. On account of the fact that there was no judicial inquiry into the killing of at least 23 citizens, it is impossible to know for certain how many really died in that incident. This event has left a legacy of bitter feuding between the two Gates of the royal family.

8.6 1ST OCTOBER, 1969-12TH JANUARY 1972: THE SECOND REPUBLIC (PP GOVERNMENT)

8.6.1 Aliens Compliance Order And “Apollo 568”

8.6.1.1 The main issues of controversy during the time that the Progress Party (PP) was in power under the leadership of Dr. Kofi Abrefa Busia were the government's policy on the Aliens Compliance Order; and the dismissal of 568 public servants now known as “Apollo 568”. Perhaps the silence of chiefs on human right abuses during the Progress Party government might have emanated from the fact that it was an era of democratic governance, and for which reason, the affected persons had many avenues and the opportunity to seek redress for their grievances. This notwithstanding, there were no opposing views from the chiefs, especially on the Apollo 568, which definitely affected some of their own subjects.

⁵⁷ Local Government Bulletin No 55, 14th December, 1968.

⁵⁸ Daily Graphic vol. 5656, Thursday, 5th December, 1968, p9.

⁵⁹ Daily Graphic vol. 5663, Friday, 13th December 1968 p.1.

⁶⁰ Evening Standard vol. I No 160, Wednesday, 10th September, 1969, p.1.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 88.6.2 The New Chieftaincy Act

8.6.2.1 In 1971, a new Chieftaincy Act, Chieftaincy Act, 1971 (Act 370), removed the recognition clause from the definition of “Who is a chief.” The removal insulated chiefs from having to court government support.

8.7 13TH JANUARY, 1972 – 3RD JUNE, 1979 NATIONAL REDEMPTION COUNCIL / SUPREME MILITARY COUNCIL (SMC) 1&II

8.7.1 Chiefs and NRC policies

8.7.1.1 The Military Government of the National Redemption Council (NRC), which later evolved into the Supreme Military Council (SMC) I & II, overthrew the PP Government on 13th January, 1972. In spite of the initial lukewarm attitude to the coup, the NRC received public acceptance as it gave redress to the various interest groups that were in dispute with the PP Government. The new government announced a war on hunger with the new policy ‘Operation Feed Yourself’. Chiefs all over the country openly expressed support to the NRC. The Asantehene, Nana Opoku Ware II, for instance, paid the new Military Government of the NRC a visit at the Castle, where he expressed support for the government and its policy of “Operation Feed Yourself”, and pledged the readiness of his chiefs to make lands available for farming to ensure the success of the “Operation Feed Yourself” programme.⁶¹ Just as in the past, messages of support for the NRC came from chiefs throughout the country.

8.7.1.2 Several other chiefs also paid visits to the Chairman of the NRC. The Ga Mantse met the NRC Chairman and pledged the support of the Ga Traditional Area to the NRC.⁶² The National House of Chiefs, then headed by Nene Annorkwei II, the Paramount Chief of Prampram and President of the Eastern Regional House of Chiefs, presented a resolution, which the House had adopted in support of the NRC. The Chairman of the NRC⁶³ at an emergency meeting held in Kumasi received the resolution of the House.

8.7.1.3 In order to win the favour of the chiefs in Ghana, the NRC issued a statement that the NRC Government would not meddle in chieftaincy affairs.⁶⁴ The Chairman of the NRC, Col Ignatius Kutu Acheampong, re-affirmed the government’s position when he addressed a delegation of eighteen chiefs from the National House of Chiefs at the Burma Hall in Accra, in July, 1972. The Chairman also told the chiefs that the action taken by the Armed Forces on 13th January, was not against chieftaincy. The chiefs were so delighted by the NRC Chairman’s statement that they also registered

⁶¹ Ghanaian Times, no. 4,456, Friday 24th March, 1972, p.1.

⁶² Daily Graphic, no. 6634, Thursday 3rd February, 1972, p.9.

⁶³ Ghanaian Times, no. 4409, Saturday, 29th January, 1972, back page.

⁶⁴ Ghanaian Times, no. 4410 Monday, 31st January, 1972, p.1.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 8

their unflinching support for the NRC government and wished it well. The chiefs further asked the NRC to deal ruthlessly with those involved in an alleged coup plot that had just been announced. After this meeting between the NRC Chairman and representatives of the National House of Chiefs at Burma Hall, the Central Regional House of Chiefs condemned the plot to unseat the NRC. Nana Akyin IV, Omanhene of Ekumfi Traditional Area also accused Dr. Busia, the deposed Prime Minister of the PP government, of masterminding an alleged coup plot to overthrow the NRC. This statement was followed by similar ones from Nana Kwaku Boateng II, Omanhene of New Juaben in Koforidua and Togbe Adom II, Chief of Akoefe Zorko in the Volta Region.⁶⁵ In all these messages, the chiefs called on the NRC government to request the British government to extradite Dr. Busia to Ghana to stand trial for treason.

8.7.1.4 In order for the NRC to win complete allegiance of the chiefs, the government adopted the bulk of the 1971 Chieftaincy Act and re-enacted it in a Decree. Under the Decree, chiefs in the Traditional Councils, the Regional House of Chiefs and the National House of Chiefs were assigned the following statutory functions:

- a. The settlement of chieftaincy disputes with final appeals, not to the political authorities but to the Court of Appeal; and
- b. Advising the Central Government on, and helping the revision of customary laws.

This Decree appeared to have gone down well with the chiefs, perhaps that is why the NRC had support from the National House of Chiefs. However, contrary to the NRC's declared policy of not meddling in chieftaincy affairs, the chiefs of Akyem Kotoku and Wenchi were removed by Decree by the NRC regime.⁶⁶

8.7.1.5 In 1975, the NRC was transformed into the Supreme Military Council (SMC). During the campaign for Union Government (UNIGOV), the SMC committed a series of human rights violations. In all these instances of human rights abuses, the chiefs were silent. On the contrary, they trooped to the Castle and pledged "unflinching support" to Gen Acheampong and praised Unigov as a divinely inspired concept to cure the ills of partisan politics.

8.7.1.6 Gen Acheampong was overthrown in a palace coup by his colleagues, and the Supreme Military Council II was formed under the chairmanship of Gen Frederick W K Akuffo.

⁶⁵ Ghanaian Times, no. 4,555, Friday 21st July, 1972, back page.

⁶⁶ Wenchi Paramount Stool Affairs Decree, 1976 (SMCD 64); Wenchi Stool Property (Restoration) Decree, 1976 (SMCD 68); Wenchi Queenmothers Stool Property (Seizure) Decree, 1977 (SMCD 74) See also Kwame Arhin, Traditional Rule in Ghana, Past and Present, Sedco Publishing Ltd, Accra, 1985.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 88.8 4TH JUNE, 1979 – 23RD SEPTEMBER, 1979 ARMED FORCES EVOLUTIONARY COUNCIL (AFRC)*8.8.1 Chiefs And AFRC Policies

8.8.1.1 On 4th June, 1979 a section of the Ghana Armed Forces, mutinied and the Government of SMC II fell. The AFRC was formed under the chairmanship of Flight Lieutenant Jerry John Rawlings of the Air Force.

8.8.1.2 The AFRC Government under the policy of “house-cleaning” perpetrated and permitted the perpetration of serious of human rights violations and abuses, during its short tenure of office. Notable among such acts were: the execution of eight senior military officers including three former Heads of State; killings; the public flogging of Ghanaian citizens, some of whom were stripped naked; seizure and the destruction of property; the demolition of houses, markets and market stalls; rampant searches of citizens for acts of hoarding; and detentions without due process. All these acts of human rights violations and abuses, demanded public or institutional protests or at least criticism, but there was none.

8.8.1.3 Newspaper reports of the period show several appeals made by chiefs to their subjects, requesting them to adhere to the “control price” policy. The chiefs, however, failed to say anything concerning the atrocities that were meted out to their subjects by the AFRC Government. Apart from declaring their support, some of the chiefs also asked the AFRC Government to extend the “house cleaning” exercise to all manner of people.

8.8.1.4 In reaction to the price control enforcement exercise, farmers and market women refused to sell food items in the urban areas. The chiefs stepped in to encourage their subjects to take their wares to the market centres and sell them at control prices. Some of the chiefs supervised the sale of foodstuffs at the Kwahu District in the Eastern Region.⁶⁷ In the Central Region, Nana Mbrah V, Omanhene of the Oguuaa Traditional Area, visited a number of villages to educate the farmers and market women on the need to send their goods to the market and sell at reasonable prices.⁶⁸ In Accra, the Ga Mantse, Nii Amugi II, also appealed to market women in Accra and its environs to forget about any molestation they might have suffered soon after the 4th June Uprising, and bring out their wares for sale at control prices.⁶⁹

8.8.1.5 Other chiefs expressed support for the aims of the 4th June Uprising, because they saw the event as the panacea to Ghana’s problems. The then Kadehene, Barima Appiawia II, was reported to have called on the village development committees in his area to mobilise the rural people for them to give their best towards the success of the new regime. In like manner, Nana Osei Kwadwo II, Omanhene of Bekwai, told his

⁶⁷ Ghanaian Times, no. 6,730 Monday, 30th July, 1979, p.1.

⁶⁸ Ghanaian Times no. 6,724 Monday, 23rd July, 1979, p.5.

⁶⁹ Daily Graphic, no. 8953, Saturday, 4th August, 1979, back page.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 8

people that no traditional ruler would go to the aid of any person who fell foul of the new regime, if that person made himself a stumbling block in the way of the revolutionary process.⁷⁰

8.8.1.6 In support of the new regime, Otumfuo Opoku Ware II, the Asantehene, stressed that civilians could not escape blame for the harassment and molestation allegedly meted out to them by some soldiers, and he proceeded to ban sixteen traders from selling in any market in Kumasi. These traders had been brought before the Kumasi Traditional Council for allegedly selling foodstuffs at prohibitive prices. Otumfuo also warned traders that anyone of them found selling at unapproved prices would forfeit his or her stalls, be banned from selling in any market and would then be handed over to the military.⁷¹

8.8.1.7 Admittedly, the short stay in power by the AFRC Government was full of apprehensions; yet the chiefs did not speak out, except to urge their subjects to respect the price control laws.

8.9 24TH SEPTEMBER, 1979- 30TH DECEMBER, 1981: THE THIRD REPUBLIC

8.9.1 Chiefs and the Third Republic Constitution

8.9.1.1 The 1979 Constitution guaranteed the institution of chieftaincy, as it exists under customary law. Further, article 205 (6) entrenched the clause by providing that it could not be amended except by referendum. This constitutional provision was of great advantage to the chiefs, because it removed the power of governments to interfere in chieftaincy affairs. During the previous regimes the lack of acknowledgement of chiefs prevented even the best of them from being independent arbiters between government, or senior statesmen and the people in times of conflicts.

8.10. 31ST DECEMBER, 1981 – 6TH JANUARY, 1993: PROVISIONAL NATIONAL DEFENCE COUNCIL (PNDC)

8.10.1 Chiefs And PNDC Policies

8.10.1 The 31st December 1981 coup d'état brought into power the Provisional National Defence Council Government, headed again by Flt Lt Jerry John Rawlings. The PNDC, like any of the previous military regimes, sought to establish a good relationship with chiefs. One of the steps it took to realize this goal was to reinstate some chiefs, who had been removed by the NLC, under NLCD 112. To this end, the ⁷⁰ Ghanaian Times, no. 6,734 Friday, 3rd August, 1979, p.5.

⁷¹ Ghanaian Times, vol. 6,743 Tuesday, 14th August, 1979, p.1.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 8

PNDC passed the Chieftaincy (Restoration of Status of Chiefs) Law, 1983(PNDCL 75). The preamble to this law states in part:

...And Whereas the Provisional National Defence Council having considered the circumstances of the withdrawal of recognition by the then Government of the National Liberation Council of the persons named in Part I of the Schedule to this Law as chiefs is satisfied that the said person having been lawfully enstooled or enskinned as chiefs should be restored to the original status as chiefs of the places specified respectively in relation to them....

On the basis of this law therefore, the PNDC Government purported to restore to their respective stools and skins, those chiefs that the NLC had removed.

8.10.1.2 The PNDC abrogated the 1979 Constitution, but retained the definition of chief contained in article 181 of the 1979 Constitution⁷². Despite this retention, the early sign was very disturbing. There was the Osu Stool Property (Seizure) Law authorised the Accra City Mayor, to take possession of Osu Stool Property.⁷³ Other legislative instruments were laid down to affect places like Nungua and Winneba Traditional Areas.

8.10. 1.3 PNDCL 75 appears to have been an attempt by the government to restore some chiefs to the status quo ante NLCD 112. However, the exercise failed to do so for all as it was limited to only sixteen of such chiefs, all from the Upper East Region, out of the 133 chiefs that were removed under NLCD 112. It is unclear what criteria the PNDC government used to reinstate the 16 chiefs. What is clear, however, is that it marked a return to the old way of doing things, and was bound to have a ripple effect on the chiefs since it encouraged them to foster closer links with the government of the day.

8.10.1.4 Upon assuming power, the PNDC Government declared a “Holy War” to clamp down on kalabule,⁷⁴ and in the process, perpetrated widespread human rights violations and abuses. These violations included killings, disappearances, the violent seizure and occupation of private and public property respectively, the beating up and harassment of citizens, the detention of political opponents, torture of suspects and the wrongful dismissal of hundreds of people from their employment. Notable among the human rights abuses of the period was the kidnap and murder of three High Court Judges and a retired Army Officer. In all these cases, soldiers and/or other agents of the PNDC Government were to a large extent, the perpetrators of these violations.

8.10.1.5 As had happened during previous military takeovers, chiefs openly expressed support for the PNDC coup. For this reason, the chiefs were not able to speak against the myriad of human rights abuses that occurred during the era of the PNDC Government. There is no evidence that chiefs complained about the numerous human rights violations that took place during PNDC era.

⁷² The Provisional National Defence Council (Establishment) Proclamation, 1981 as amended by PNDC Law 42, section 53 (2).

⁷³ PNDCL 38.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 8

8.10.1.6 The few chiefs who spoke out, concerned themselves only with the criticism of kalabule traders, the establishment of community farms and expressions of support for the cocoa evacuation exercise. Chiefs were exhorted by some of their own colleagues not to sit on the fence, but to mobilise their subjects to play an effective role in the PNDC Revolution. One of the chiefs who made such a call was Nana Kyei Baffour, the Omanhene of Twifo Hemang Traditional Area in the Central Region. According to him, the “Holy War” declared by Flt Lt Rawlings was to be seen as Ghana’s salvation from her economic and social woes.⁷⁵ The chiefs and people of Abura Dunkwa in the Abura Traditional Area also declared their unflinching support for the PNDC and charged the PNDC to uproot kalabule once and for all, from the Ghanaian society.⁷⁶ Some of the chiefs concerned themselves with the cocoa evacuation exercise that took place during the era. For instance, the Omanhene of the Akyem Kotoku Traditional Area, Okofrobuo Agyeman Attafuah IV, together with his elders, led a team of about 200 young men to give a helping hand to the Student Task Force, to evacuate tons of cocoa from Akim Oda in the Eastern Region.⁷⁷

8.10.1.7 Some of the chiefs did not urge only their subjects, but indeed, all Ghanaians to embrace the 31st December Revolution. Nana Kusi Appiah, Omanhene of Manso Nkwanta in the Ashanti Region, urged Ghanaians to accept the December 31st Revolution and make it work. He summed up his call as follows: “If we have been sitting on the fence, let us now remove ourselves from that position. After all the gains of the revolution will be for us all.” Nana Kusi Appiah delivered this message after he had led his people to clear a 300-acre land earmarked for a local community farm.⁷⁸ The Asantehene, Otumfuo Opoku Ware II, also pledged support to the PNDC. He assured the PNDC Government of the readiness of all the chiefs under him to assist in making the revolution a success. Consequently, he urged chiefs to freely release land for the establishment of community farms.⁷⁹

8.10.1.8 It is to be noted that the activities for which the chiefs supported the PNDC Government were not bad in themselves. Indeed, it was morally binding on them to help the government of the day succeed. What was regrettable, however, was that they all appeared to be interested in championing the cause of the new government, to the neglect of the human rights abuses suffered, both by themselves and some of their subjects at the hands of the very government to whom they had made pledges of support. Even though the chiefs appeared to be acting in favour of national

⁷⁵ Daily Graphic, vol. 9704, Wednesday, 13th January, 1982, p.8 back page.

⁷⁶ Daily Graphic, vol. 9717, Friday, 29th January, 1982, p.1.

⁷⁷ Daily Graphic, vol. 9712 Saturday, 23rd January, 1982, p.1.

⁷⁸ Daily Graphic, vol. 9752 Thursday, 11th March 1982, p.1.

⁷⁹ Daily Graphic, vol. 9760 Saturday, 20th March, 1982, p.1 & 4.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 8

development and aspirations, they failed to speak up for those who were undergoing abusive treatment.

8.11 Chiefs And Land8.11.1 Post-Independence 1957-1993

8.11.1.1 In the late 1950s, and during the First Republic (early 1960s), Dr. Nkrumah in his haste to develop the newly independent nation socio-economically and industrially, embarked on massive projects including the construction of new roads and bridges, and improvement/upgrading of existing ones, schools, colleges, hospitals and clinics. Others were irrigation and hydro-electric dam, large housing estates, manufacturing (import substitutions) and industrial estates, and the establishment of state farms which demanded large tracts of land.

8.11.1.2 The newly acquired independent State with powers and new conception of the nature and role of the Ghanaian State resulted in massive compulsory acquisition of land, sometimes for purposes which were not demonstrably public. Governments have controlled land use throughout the country, and have manifested the control by the promulgation of a number legislation, each of which reduced the level of the chiefs' control over their lands.

8.11.1.3 Most of the lands that were "acquired" by the state, for the purposes outlined above, were taken from skin/stool, families or private land owners. The state at that time, in taken the land, took the position that land acquired (for public use) was in the public interest. The State Land Act, 1962 (Act 125)⁸⁰, provided the power for the government to acquire land compulsorily and thereby control its use as owner. In some cases, the government declared the state land or stool land, to be a selected area for a specific purpose,⁸¹ such as the Accra International Airport, Achiase Jungle Warfare training sites, etc.

8.11.1.4 Some traditional rulers have also entrusted stool lands in the care of the government, for the stools concerned and directed that the whole community be beneficiary of the revenue accruing thereof. Such moves marked the first bold attempt by governments to assert power over the management and administration of the customary proprietorship.⁸² Beside, the government can take over the ownership of concessions created on stool lands in trust for the stool concern⁸³. Again, for the consolidation of laws relating to land administration and to introduce uniformity in the system throughout the country, an Act was passed on 1962, which sought to split ownership such that legal ownership in vested land passed on to the state, while the

⁸⁰ State Lands Act, 1962 (Act 125).

⁸¹ The Public Conveyancing Act, 1965 (Act 302).

⁸² The Ashanti Stool Land Act, 1958, and Akim Abuakwa (Stool Revenue) Act, 1958.

⁸³ The Concessions Act, 1962 (Act 124).

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 8

beneficial ownership remained in the stool⁸⁴. More so, the ownership and control of lands endowed with mineral deposits, has been vested in the care of the President in trust for the people of Ghana⁸⁵. All these were done to control land use by governments towards an effective and efficient sustainable land management and administration in Ghana.

8.11.1.5 The problems associated with these acquisitions of land are many and these leave much to be desired. In some cases, little or no effort was made by the state agencies effecting such acquisition, to follow the legal procedures, and properly register the lands. There were instances where no compensation at all was paid. In others, what was paid to the land owners was grossly inadequate. It must be admitted that in some instances, no compensation was paid largely because, there were disputes as to ownership, over who were to the rightful recipients of compensation. There were instances where site plans for acquired areas were found to be inaccurate, due to mistakes in surveying or other technical difficulties.

8.11.1.6 This has led to delays in payment of compensation and commencement of development projects, as disputes have had to be litigated in court, and over very long periods of time. Such unfortunate situations have often resulted in the extensive encroachment on these lands by individuals, families and groups who felt that the land belonged to them, because they were never paid the appropriate or adequate compensation.

8.11.1.7 Some individuals, families and chiefs in their bid to protect their lands, have engaged land guards, to whom they paid huge sums of monies (sometimes they also sold plots of land), to drive away prospective investors and developers, on their acquired lands. The land guards have many times destroyed building structures, and even, maimed and sometimes killed innocent people who they perceived to be encroaching on the lands that belonged to their bosses.

8.12 CONCLUSION

8.12.1 Various governments have ruled Ghana since 1957. Through the promulgation of Decrees and Acts, these governments made it impossible for chiefs to be independent of central government control. The dependence of chiefs on the central government was also partly due to the relative powerlessness of the chiefs themselves, as they were not able to exert themselves enough to protect their independence. The situation was such that while chiefs were supposed to be independent from government control, they had no power of their own to be so. This was the dilemma in which chiefs found themselves, during both constitutional governments and military regimes, starting from 6th March, 1957 to 6th January, 1993.

⁸⁴ The Administration of Land Act, 1962, (Act 123).

⁸⁵ The Mineral Act 1962 (Act 126).

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 8

8.12.2 The CPP Government, led by Dr. Nkrumah, was able to get its supporters to become chiefs by means of the recognition clause in Act 81, as this clause enabled the government to give or withdraw official recognition to the claimants of stools or skins at will. Consequently, after the overthrow of the First Republic in 1966, the new military government, the NLC purported to correct the situation by enacting legislation such as NLCD 112, NLCD 136, NLCD 203 and NLCD 287 designed to remove chiefs who were described as “CPP Chiefs”, and also to restore stools and skins to their proper customary positions.

8.12.3 Part of the chieftaincy dilemma in Ghana during the period under review (from 6th March, 1957, to 6th January, 1993), was that, chiefs were permitted to engage in partisan politics. Thus, it was not at all easy to keep politicians and chiefs in two separate worlds. The problem was exacerbated during periods of military rule.

8.12.4 During the mandate period, the governments, especially the military ones, courted chiefs for support, and chiefs courted government for development projects.⁸⁶ Many chiefs sought partnerships with the government of the day with the hope of using their contacts to secure projects for their respective traditional areas.⁸⁷ Accordingly, chiefs usually expressed full support for a government as soon as the old government was overthrown. They thus rendered themselves liable to the tag of collaborators of whatever human rights abuses were perpetrated by the various governments.⁸⁸

8.12.5 Another consequence of such act of collaboration was that it weakened the independence of the chieftaincy institution, and created a situation where the individual chiefs could not be critical of sitting governments, and therefore could not offer their subjects any protection when it came to government-sponsored human rights violations and abuse.

8.12.6 The chiefs, families and individual land owners have constantly protected their land since colonial days and continue till date. However, where it matters most legislation by successive governments have rendered such protection ineffective, and some of these land acquisitions cases have also been battled in the corridors of the judiciary. More over, seeking legal action against families, individuals, chiefs or the state has not always been successful, since none of them seeking the relief may have proper title to the lands in question.

8.12.7 Within the mandate period, chiefs did not exert their collective influence to protest against any of the violence and excesses that emanated from military regimes

⁸⁶ Dr. Henry Seidu Daannaa “Ghanaian Chieftaincy In Retrospect – An Examination of Chieftaincy Since Independence” (Unpublished paper) Chieftaincy Secretariat, Accra

⁸⁷ Interview with Odencho Gyapong Ababio II, President of the National House of Chiefs, 13th August, 2003 West Fijai Ridge, Takoradi.

⁸⁸ Professor George Hagan, “Chieftaincy and the Abuse of Human Rights In Ghana.” (Unpublished) Paper presented to National Reconciliation Commission by the Chairman, National Commission on Culture, 14th July, 2003.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 8

nor did they confront civilian governments on issues of human rights violations. The Regional and National Houses of Chiefs still remain an untapped asset for strengthening the influence of chiefs in the governance of the country.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 9CHAPTER NINE*THE ROLE OF RELIGIOUS BODIES –
COMPLICITY OR RESISTANCE TO HUMAN RIGHTS ABUSES*9.0 INTRODUCTION

9.0.1 The interventions of religious bodies on matters of social concern, especially socio-political issues, have always carried weight. Therefore, the protest or silence by these bodies or institutions, on human rights violations and abuses influences the perceptions of many people in Ghana. To facilitate the assessment of the role, if any, of religious bodies regarding the complicity or resistance to human rights violations from 6th March, 1957 to 6th January, 1993, the Commission focused its work on the Churches¹ in Ghana, the Islamic religion, both the Orthodox and the Ahmadiyya Muslim Mission, the Traditional Religious groups with reference, particularly, to the Afrikania Mission.

9.0.2 The religious bodies are the conscience of the nation. In this regard, they are expected to be able to point out abuses, and work to protect and defend the rights of all Ghanaians, with a view to bringing about improvement and progress in socio-political life. religious bodies can transform individuals in society, and bring about social change that prevent human rights violations and abuses. Consequently, the following roles are expected of them

- to provide prophetic witnessing;
- to oppose human rights abuses in society;
- to build awareness on morality and human rights issues;
- to provide moral education;
- to seek moral transformation through advocacy;
- to speak clearly and without equivocation and provide moral direction on important moral issues; and
- to counsel, exhort, warn or commend the leaders and general citizenry, as and when the occasion demands.

It is expected that these roles would be performed through constant prayer regular calls for prayers, positive use of their moral authority and effective social actions.

¹ The Churches were grouped mainly as follows: Christian Council of Ghana with fourteen member churches mainly orthodox and missionary established, the Catholic Bishops' Conference with three Archdioceses and sixteen Dioceses; the Ghana Pentecostal Council with one hundred and thirty nine churches and several hundreds of churches most of whom were independent and of African origin.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 9

9.0.3 The focus of this chapter is to examine the role of religious bodies in spearheading resistance to human rights abuses, contributing to the promotion of respect for human rights, as well as the impact that these activities had on the human rights landscape during the mandate period. The chapter also highlights the significance of statements, communiqués, pastoral letters, Press releases etc, from these religious bodies, at the critical times when they were issued. It is hoped that the religious bodies would be strengthened to keep up with their advocacy role and continue to provide moral guidance to the nation.

9.0.4 The chapter is divided into three parts, based on the three main religions represented in Ghana, namely Traditional Religion, Islam and Christian religion. The discussion is organised in the chronological order of the various political eras within the mandate period.

9.1 ABOUT THE THREE MAIN RELIGIONS IN GHANA

9.1.1 THE TRADITIONAL RELIGIOUS GROUP

9.1.1 History

9.1.1.1 Traditional Religion is the oldest religion in Ghana. It is not organized in the manner of Christian or Islamic religions. The nature and history of the Traditional Religious group is quite different from other religious groups. It has no organised hierarchy or association to spearhead its activities at the national level and so its influence on national politics has been minimal. In 1985, the late Osofo Okomfo Damuah, a Roman Catholic Priest, left the Catholic Faith to establish the Afrikania Mission² of Ghana. This Mission, for the first time, provided a mouthpiece for the various traditional religious groups that had come together to form the Mission.

9.1.1.2 The practice of Traditional Religion has different cults that deal with specific issues or aspect of life. For example, there are fertility cults, healing or medicine cults, war cults, protective cults, prosperity cult, witchcraft cults, etc. Secondly, Traditional Religion is the belief system underlying the Ghanaian culture, and could be described as the belief or spiritual substructure of Ghanaian culture.³ This is because some aspects of this religion are practised at the sub-conscious level, such that even though the average Ghanaian might not be an adherent of the practices of Traditional Religion, its belief system pervades the entire culture as reflected in the use of language, names, naming and burial systems, etc.

² A religious sect that practises and believes in combining values of Traditional Religion and Christian worship.

³ Memorandum to the National Reconciliation Commission.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 9

9.1.1.3 The role that traditional religion played in human rights abuse was an indirect one. Rumours of rituals for protection have become part of our socio-political culture. The phenomenon of ritual murder has been part of the Ghanaian system of cultural beliefs, and has, in fact, gained prominence in legends and folktales. This phenomenon has also served as explanation for strange or extraordinary homicide cases in the country.

9.1.1.4 There was also an Akan belief that a messenger must accompany a dead chief on his last journey to the land of his ancestors. Someone therefore had to be killed to serve that purpose. The murder of Akyea Mensa (Apedwahene), a case popularly referred to as “Kyebi Murder Trial” was purported to have served as a ritual sacrifice, to accompany a dead paramount chief of Kyebi. The deceased was killed and buried on a riverbed, after the murderers had diverted the course of the brook and redirected the same brook to conceal the grave⁴.

9.1.1.5 Another belief system relates to the acquisition of power through the use of juju. This involves rituals performed with human blood or body parts. On 23th February, 1988, Nana Twene, Krontihene of Abesim, and his wife, Susana Ameyaa, together with four others at Abesim near Sunyani, in the Brong Ahafo Region⁵, kidnapped and murdered a 38-year old housewife, Madam Lamley Sampah. During the trial by the tribunal sitting in Sunyani in the Brong-Ahafo Region of Ghana, it was revealed, inter alia that, the Krontihene wanted the blood and some body parts of the named victim to enable him secure power, so that, no one could challenge him⁶ when he spoke.

9.1.2 Traditional Religion In Relation To Ritual Killing For Political Power

9.1.2.1 In the 1960s, rumour was rife, that office holders carried out ritual killings to consolidate their political power. In 1967, for example, during the abortive coup in which Lt-Gen Emmanuel K Kotoka lost his life, it was widely rumoured that the fetish priests who made juju for his successful coup the previous year, were the same ones whom the coup makers from Ho Mortar Regiment approached. This therefore accounted for the ability of the coup makers to overcome Lt-Gen Kotoka. Whether these rumours were true or not, they are alleged to have been the basis for the elimination of some fetish priests many years later. A case in point is the killing of the popular fetish priest, Akakpovi Ahiaku, a.k.a Yeye Boye of Atidzive near Abor⁷. There was evidence before the Commission that the fetish priest was arrested by soldiers at his village in March, 1982, and taken to the Residency of the Volta

⁴ West Africa Court of Appeal Volume 11, February 15, 1945 – This was a murder case involving the Abontendomhene Asare Apietu, Kwasi Pipim, Kwame Kagya, Kwaku Amoako Atta, Opoku Afwennee, Kwadjo Amoako, Aaron Eugene Boakye alias Yaw Boakye and Owusu Akyem Tenteng, tried in court.

⁵ Ghanaian Times, vol.9,628, Saturday, 6th August, 1988, p.3.

⁶ Memorandum to the National Reconciliation Commission.

⁷ News Bulletin, Association of Recognised Professional Bodies, Vol.2 No. 2; July 1982.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 9

Regional Administration at Ho, ostensibly to be transported to Accra to meet with the political authorities. He was later found dead, with his body partially burnt. His home containing his shrine was vandalised and burnt to ashes, as were also the homes of the elders of the cult.

9.1.2.2 Traditional Priests were also believed to have power to assist persons plotting to destabilize governments of the day, through the use of magico-religious powers. They therefore featured in every allegation of coup plot in the mandate period.

9.1.3 Traditional Religion In Relation To Killing For Ritual Purposes

9.1.3.1 Traditional religion has also been linked to human rights abuse on account of the widely-held belief that through the use of human parts, rituals could be performed to affect the material circumstances of the individual making the request. Consequently, some individuals were killed for purposes that must have been related to the performance of rituals. The circumstances surrounding certain killings that occurred, and the way the dead bodies were found, lent credence to the suspicion that they were not ordinary murders. Very often the bodies were found mutilated with some vital parts missing. A number of murder cases reported in some parts of Ghana in the 1980s fall into this category. For instance, in January, 1981, the body of Kingsley Ackaah, alias Kwame Kaya, a fifteen-year-old schoolboy and native of Baakrom near Sefwi Bekwai, was found without his head⁸. Again, in November, 1981, the body of nine-year old Kwasi Gyimah was found at the outskirts of Sefwi Bekwai without his head⁹. Similarly, in November, 1984, Kwaku Nkrumah, a sixty five-year old palm wine tapper of Sefwi Bekwai, was found dead in the bush without his head.¹⁰ Also, in May, 1986, thirteen-year old Akwasi Ampomaning, a schoolboy from Sukusuku near Sefwi Bekwai was found dead with his arms missing¹¹. Again, Kumade Mensah Zormelo was killed for a sacrifice that is required annually, in accordance with traditional practices, to enable the fishermen of Kedzi, to have bumper fishing season.¹² All these killings are believed to have been committed to serve ritual purposes.

9.1.3.2 There is also the quest for wealth. For this reason, there are some people who believe that through the use of juju, their state of poverty can change for the better. Thus, with the hope of becoming rich overnight, the drive to commit ritual murder has been noted among certain categories of persons. In one murder case, which took place in Sefwi Bekwai in the Western Region of Ghana, the killers were the victim's uncle and three other men, who were promised a reward of an amount of c3 million as "contract fee". Similarly, the Chief, Nana Agyei who was charged together with the

⁸ Joy Ride Magazine Vol. 93, November, 1988, pp.3-14.

⁹ Ibid.

¹⁰ Ibid.

¹¹ Ibid.

¹² Azametsi v The Republic [1974] GLR 228, CA at pp394-402

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 9

killers, was said to have been the one who requested a human head, to send to a shrine located along the Ghana - Côte d'Ivoire border in the Western Region for it to be changed into cash¹³.

9.1.4 The Perpetrators Of Ritual Murder

9.1.4.1 There are two main categories of perpetrators – namely, those who hire the services of others to do the killing on their behalf, and those who do the killing themselves. Many a time, the people who are arrested or charged on murder cases appear to be poor people, struggling to make ends meet. They are hired by the well-to-do in society to do the killing on their behalf, such as the case of the Sefwi Bekwai murder case. Nana Agyei, one of the culprits, was said to have engaged the services of the four others charged, in return for a certain amount of money, if the plan was well executed. In other instances, the well-to-do actually took part in the ritual killing.

9.1.4.2 Some fetish priests and herbalists are also believed to be involved in ritual murder. Some fetish priests have been accused of using human body parts and blood to prepare juju for their clients. Where these body parts and blood were secured from, is yet to be ascertained. However, one of the rumoured charges against some traditional priests tortured and killed in the Volta Region, was the allegation of murder against them. In April, 1982, for instance, soldiers arrested Avorga Ahiagba of Wlite near Akatsi, for possessing human skulls. He was alleged to have pleaded that the skulls were ancestral property. Possessing no other evidence to the contrary, the court fined him ₵700.00. Subsequently, Ahiagba mysteriously disappeared, after his release from prison-custody, but was later found dead with his body partially burnt, near the Ho stadium.¹⁴

9.1.4.3 In all the known ritual murders tried in the courts, women have been conspicuously missing in the list of alleged perpetrators. There was, however, one instance in which a woman was involved, and in which the victim was a woman.¹⁵

9.1.4.4 One other fact that also needs to be mentioned is that some of the perpetrators either know their victims or have close blood relations with them. In the case of Kofi Kyinto in the Sefwi Bekwai murder case, it was his uncle, Benjamin Affi, a 28-year old farmer, who lured him to be killed. Benjamin Affi witnessed the actual execution of his nephew.

9.1.5 Trokosi

9.1.5.1 Trokosi is a traditional religious practice, which evolved among the Ewes and Dangmes and which prevails in shrines where there are deities. In the past, the essence

¹³ Daily Graphic Tuesday, 10th November, 1987, No 11504 p:4

¹⁴ Ibid.

¹⁵ Ghanaian Times, no 9,628 Saturday 6th August, 1988, p.3.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 9

of the deity was to protect the community, and the fundamental problems and questions of everyday life were also addressed to these deities. In those societies, it is to the shrines that a large number of people turn for resolution of life's problems – be they physical, mental or spiritual.¹⁶ The exact period when the Trokosi system began is unknown. Oral tradition estimates that the practice could have started in the 17th century.¹⁷ The first original Trokosis in Eweland were, Torgbui Adzima, Tornui, and Sui.¹⁸ The practice of giving up of vestal virgins by families as payment to the shrines for an infraction committed by one of its members evolved from these original Trokosis. A Trokosi is also sometimes called Fiasidi,¹⁹ meaning “a marriageable King's initiate.” Many reasons have been put forward to explain why young girls and occasionally young boys, are committed to the gods. Foremost among these reasons is that it forms part of the administration of justice and maintenance of law and order within the particular society. The practice also involves pledges made to the gods in time of war to ensure victory.

9.1.5.2. Trokosi practice is now mainly regarded as a means of averting the wrath of the gods. This is done by invoking the gods for mercy, in cases where an offence has been reported to the shrine. It is also a traditional judicial system, but one fraught with serious human rights violations, as the practice involves the incarceration and abuse of innocent young women. The practice of Trokosi is now recognized to be akin to slavery. The predominant modern view is that the Trokosi system is obnoxious, inhuman and a violation of the human rights of the persons involved, and therefore must be stopped.²⁰

9.1.5.3 There are 51 known shrines where the practice of Trokosi still goes on in the country. The composition and the geographical spread of the practice in Ghana show that the Volta Region accounts for forty three out of the fifty one shrines, Greater Accra Region, five and Eastern Region, three. In the Eastern and Greater Accra Regions, the shrines are concentrated in the Dangme East and Dangme West Districts. The 3 shrines in the Eastern Region seem to be related to those in the other regions. There are three shrines in the Yilo Krobo area, three in the Dangme West, and 2 in Dangme East²¹. The victims of the practice are mostly female, although on rare occasions, males are also involved. It was estimated that by 1998, there were about four thousand and forty two Trokosi in bondage, out of whom only about ten were male.²² There are both priests and priestesses who administer the various cults.

¹⁶ Report of the National Workshop on Trokosi System in Ghana, International Needs, Ghana, April 27-28, 1998.

¹⁷ Ibid.

¹⁸ Ibid.

¹⁹ The Spectator, no 1416 Saturday 15th July, 1995, p. 5.

²⁰ Three –Day Workshop on Trokosi (April 27-29, 1998), organised by International Needs, Ghana, Sponsored by the British Council.

²¹ Report of the National Workshop on Trokosi System in Ghana, International Needs, Ghana, April 27-28, 1998. International Needs, an NGO in Ghana dedicated to the eradication of the practice.

²² Ibid.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 99.1.6 Witches' Camps

Belief in witchcraft is widespread in Ghana. People are sent to shrines to be “de-witched” after being accused of being witches, often by their close relations. Sometimes, the formal “outing” of a witch is done by a fetish priest(ess) of a shrine in the locality. The practice of ostracising such persons from their community, and confining them in hopes of eliminating their evil influence, has been identified as a cultural practice in parts of northern Ghana. In Gambaga and Gnaani in the Northern Region, the site of two major Witches' Camps, there are to be found, people, mostly women, who have been chased out of their communities for practising witchcraft. On arrival at the camp, they are sent to the chief or the elder, who performs rituals on them to “de-witch” them. Thereafter, they are absorbed into the community, and although permitted to return to their original homes if they so desire, the hostile social milieu and stigmatisation, discourage such re-entry. Most of these women are poor and elderly women, and the practice removes them from the support, financial and material that old age requires. This therefore violates their right to a peaceful old age and the right to live with their families.

9.1.7 Summary

9.1.7.1 Traditional religious practices have been labelled as being obsolete, thus, crimes such as the serial killing of women, which took place in Ghana in the later part of 1999, have been explained away by some people as ritual killings.

9.1.7.2 Again, so long as it is believed that the acquisition of power and wealth accords one instant respect and the best treatment wherever one finds oneself, and the fact that this can be achieved through the use of juju, the drive to commit ritual murder may continue to persist.

9.1.7.3 The impact of legends and folktales on the belief systems and motives of traditional religion may drive some people to resort to such practices that invariably trample upon peoples rights.

9.2 THE ISLAMIC RELIGIOUS GROUP9.2.1 Historical Background

9.2.1.1 There are two main branches of Islam in Ghana, namely, the Orthodox Islam, and the Ahmadiyya Muslim Mission. The inception of Islam in the country was through the efforts of traders and itinerant Islamic clerics and teachers. There are many Orders in Orthodox Islam.²³ The two best known in Ghana are the Qadiriyya, founded by Abdal Qadir,²⁴ and the Tijaniyya, founded by Ahmad Tijani in Algeria.²⁵

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 9

9.2.1.2 In 1921, a movement was introduced into the Gold Coast, known as the Ahmadiyya Movement. This movement originated from the Indian sub-continent, and was founded by Mirza Ghulam Ahmad in the nineteenth century; it began as a reform movement within Islam.²⁶

9.2.2 Government-Muslim Relations

9.2.2.1 Successive governments since the colonial era have tried to influence the leadership and organizational structure of the Muslim community. They did so either in the name of uniting the Muslims or soliciting their loyalty in the implementation of their programmes.

9.2.2.2 Since the inception of multi-party politics in Ghana, various Muslim communities have allied themselves with different political parties that they believed would best protect their interests.²⁷

9.2.2.3 Prior to agitations towards Independence, the Muslim community was apprehensive that its right to exist might not be recognized. In view of this, the only way for the community's existence to be guaranteed was to come together as a unified body. This, they did by forming the Moslem Association Party (MAP) in 1954, that assumed a violent anti-CPP stance.²⁸ The MAP was later banned, when the CPP government promulgated the Avoidance of Discrimination Act²⁹ in 1957.

9.2.2.4 The Gold Coast Moslem Association (GCMA) was among the early Muslim organizations to emerge. Its leaders were Imam Abass (Chief Imam) and Alhaji Amadu Baba (Zongo Chief of Kumasi). GCMA's objectives were to harness the material resources of the Muslims, and also to cater for the social and religious needs of the Gold Coast Moslems. The GCMA departed from its social objectives to actively participate in politics in 1939, after the earthquake in Accra. The Muslims felt that ²³ A Religious Order is a group that is centred around the teachings of a leader, whose path the believers follow.

²⁴ Geoffrey Parrinder "The Religions of Africa" in Africa South of the Sahara, (20th Edition) Epworth Press, 1991, p.91.

²⁵ A Religious Order is a group that is centred around the teachings of a leader, whose path the believers follow.

²⁶ Official publication of Ahmadiyya Muslim Mission, Ghana, p.1; Mohammed Affum, "The Ahmadiyya Movement" Daily Graphic vol. 9278 25th August, 1980, p.3.

²⁷ Interview with Hon Alhaji Bin Salih, on 3rd February, 2003.

²⁸ J.H. Price, 'The role of Islam in Gold Coast Politics' In West African Institute of Social and Economic Research proceedings of Third annual Conference 1954 (Ibadan).

²⁹ Avoidance of Discriminating Bill (December 1957), forbade the existence of parties on regional, tribal or religious basis.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 9

there was unfair distribution of building materials to the affected Muslim communities. Thus, it was GCMA's social concern for Muslims that pushed it into politics. When it turned to politics, an Accra lawyer, Mustapha Awoonor Renner, and a Kumasi lawyer, Cobbina Kessie, became its leaders. The GCMA later metamorphosed into the MAP in the early 1950s.

9.2.2.5 The Nkrumah administration saw the emergence of this party as a threat to his effort to win more Muslim support, and to increase CPP membership. Consequently, Dr. Nkrumah established the Moslem Youth Congress (MYC) of Ghana to serve as the mouthpiece of Muslims. It was believed that the formation of the MYC was intended to undermine the leadership of the GCMA, and to limit its political influence in the country. In addition, Muslim leaders considered the establishment of the MYC as an imposition, since the government handpicked the leaders. The MYC was therefore not only seen to be opposed to the GCMA, but also a wing of the CPP.

9.2.2.6 The leadership of the MYC gradually gained prominence and political influence. For example, Z B Shardow, who was the co-Chairman of the Muslim Youth Congress, became the National Organiser of the Ghana Young Pioneer movement (GYP).³⁰ In the same way, Mallam Futa was made the Imam of Accra, after Dr. Nkrumah had removed Mohammed Abass from that office in 1959. Both the MYC and the GCMA became ineffective and lost their prominence after the overthrow of the CPP Government in 1966.

9.2.2.7 In reality both the GCMA and the MAP were anti-CPP, because they thought the policies of CPP were a threat to the people they represented. By adopting this anti-government position, the leaders of these two Muslim groups lost some rights and privileges. In addition to these, the deportations of some of their leaders and the removal of the Imam from office, coupled with detentions under the Preventive Detention Act silenced them and reduced their influence in national affairs.

9.2.3 6TH MARCH, 1957- 23RD FEBRUARY, 1966 : CONVENTION PEOPLE'S PARTY (CPP)

9.2.3.1 The MAP

9.2.3.1.1 In the late 1950s the MAP, was dismembered by a series of Deportation Orders made by the government, as the leaders were alleged to be of Northern Nigerian extraction. Over a period of time the number of people within the leadership of the MAP who were deported was as follows: 68 in 1957, 62 in 1958, 75 in 1959, and 54 in 1960³¹. The issue of the deportations raised some moral questions in their application. There were allegations of riots among the various Muslim groups, that ³⁰ Daily Graphic, vol. 4522 Tuesday, 13th April, 1965, p.12.

³¹ Geoffrey Bing, Reap the Whirlwind; Annual Report on the Treatment of Offenders 1962, Accra, 1965.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 9

made them liable to the charge of violence, and the CPP Government resorted to the deportation of some of the Muslim leaders. Those who were deported were known allies of the National Liberation Movement (NLM).³²

9.2.3.1 2 Later, the MAP merged with others to form the United Party, when the Avoidance of Discrimination Act, 1957 (CA 38) prohibited the existence of religious-based political parties.

9.2.4 24TH FEBRUARY, 1966 – 30TH SEPTEMBER, 1969:
NATIONAL LIBERATION COUNCIL (NLC)

9.2.4.1 The National Liberation Council (NLC), which toppled the CPP Government on February 24, 1966, banned the GCMA and the MYC of Ghana, due to their anti-CPP and pro-CPP rivalry.

9.2.4.2 The issue of human rights abuses during the NLC against certain individuals that raised public concerns were the public ridicule of Boye Moses, one of Dr. Nkrumah's security aides, who was paraded in a cage on the streets of Accra³³, the strike involving the mine workers of Ashanti Goldfields in Obuasi, during which three of the workers were shot dead by the police³⁴, and the decision of the government to ban most of the leading members of the former CPP from contesting the 1969 general elections.³⁵ All these violations did not elicit any comment from the Muslim communities and their leaders at the time. In short nothing much can be said about the activities of Muslim Organizations under this regime.

9.2.5 1ST OCTOBER, 1969 – 12TH JANUARY, 1972
THE SECOND REPUBLIC

9.2.5.1 In 1969, the efforts of the Busia Government to unite the Ghana Muslim Mission and the Ghana Muslim Community led to the creation of the Supreme Council for Islamic Affairs. Some Ga Muslims and Muslims in the northern part of Ghana formed the council. Alhaji Haruna Attah, then a Minister in the Second Republic, inaugurated the council in April 1970 at Tamale. In his inaugural speech, Alhaji Attah praised Muslims for coming together to form the council to deal with Islamic Affairs. He urged them to render genuine services, adding that by their unity, they would be laying a firm foundation for a better administration of the affairs of Muslims.

³² John Pobee, Kwame Nkrumah and the Church in Ghana 1946-1966, Asempa Publishers, Ghana 1988, p.161.

³³ Daily Graphic, Vol.5075 Tuesday, 24th January, 1967, p.1.

³⁴ Ninsin, K.A. and Drah, F.K. Political Parties and Democracy in Ghana's Fourth Republic, Woeli Publishing Services, Accra, 1993.

³⁵ Buah, F.K. A History of Ghana Macmillan Education Ltd, London and Oxford, 1998.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 9

9.2.5.2 One of the most significant landmarks of this regime was the enforcement of the Aliens Compliance Order.³⁶ Many Muslim immigrants were affected by this Order. The implementation caused great suffering, and there were many pathetic scenes as the deportees scrambled for transport to locations that were completely foreign to some of them. For instance, according to an eye-witness account, a man committed suicide by slashing his throat on the steps of a bus, while he and others were being transported to Upper Volta (now Burkina Faso), because he had no idea where he would stay in Upper Volta, having been born and bred in Ghana.³⁷

9.2.5.3 There was also the dismissal of 568 civil servants that became known as ‘Apollo 568’³⁸ and caused unease in the era. This too might have affected some families of the Muslim community. There were no such petitions or protests from the Muslim groups or their leaders.

9.2.6 13TH JANUARY, 1972 – 3RD JUNE, 1979:
NATIONAL REDEMPTION COUNCIL (NRC) AND
SUPREME MILITARY COUNCIL (SMC) I & II

9.2.6.1 Ghana Muslim Representative Council (GMRC).

9.2.6.1.1 Colonel Ignatius Kutu Acheampong came to power on 13th January, 1972, as Chairman of the NRC and Head of State. He received pledges of support from the Muslim leadership. In the same year the NRC set up the National Islamic Committee to settle all disputes among Islamic organizations in the country and to ensure unity among Muslims. The NRC was of the view that, it was only reconciliation and unity of purpose that would restore to the Islamic groups the influence that they had lost³⁹.

9.2.6.1.2 On 10th October, 1972, Alhaji Mahmoud Lampitey, an Imam of the Armed Forces who was the chairman of the committee presented to the NRC Government, a report on the proposals for a Muslim organisation in the country. The Report was received on behalf of the government by Major Roger J A Felli, who congratulated the Committee for a good work done and said it was the aim of government to unite all Islamic organisations in the country⁴⁰.

³⁶ Aliens Compliance Order was a government policy to compel foreigners to regularise their stay in accordance with the Immigration law within 14 days, or leave Ghana.

³⁷ Memorandum to the National Reconciliation Commission .

³⁸ “Apollo” is a reference to the nickname given conjunctival infection that affected some people after the successful space mission, Apollo 11 in 1969. Most of the people affected were quarantined to avoid the spread of the disease. The term was applied to the 568 Civil Servants, who were sacked during the era of the Second Republic.

³⁹ Daily Graphic, vol. 6765 Friday, 7th July, 1972, back page.

⁴⁰ Daily Graphic, vol. 6847 Wednesday, 11th October, 1972, p.11.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 9

9.2.6.1.3 The efforts of the NRC Government in ensuring peace and harmony among Muslim bodies gave birth to the Ghana Muslim Representative Council (GMRC). It was inaugurated on 23rd March, 1973, at the Accra Community Centre by the Commissioner for Information, Lt Col Chumogo D Benni. In a special message to Muslims on the occasion, the Head of State, expressed his happiness for the country, that a distinct body had succeeded in settling amicably, all disputes among Muslims.⁴¹ On the Muslim front, Alhaji Dauda Otoo praised the government for its contribution to the unity of the Ghana Muslim Community, the Ghana Muslim Mission and the Supreme Council for Islamic Affairs, a goal that had been impossible to achieve over a period of 20 years by previous governments⁴².

9.2.6.1.4 Indeed, the GMRC after its formation became the mouthpiece of all Muslims in national politics. The council was very instrumental in the campaign for the adoption of the Union Government (UNIGOV) concept, which was proposed by the SMC in the late 1970s. Alhaji Mohammed Alhassan, who was of the GMRC declared in a seminar that: “it will be suicidal for the country to return once more to the game of party politics which has no respect for old age and which had sowed seeds of dissension in the country”⁴³. The GMRC also represented the Muslim Community in the 1979 Constituent Assembly, which drafted the 1979 Republican Constitution. Alhaji Bashiru Futa, a legal practitioner, represented the Council.

9.2.6.1.5 On 6th February, 1979, a press conference was held in Accra by a number of Muslims, who claimed to represent the entire Muslim community. At the press conference, they rejected the idea of party politics, which “once divided the Islamic religion by the formation of the erstwhile Muslim Association Party.” Therefore they embraced the idea of UNIGOV. In a statement read on behalf of the Muslim chiefs by their secretary, Alhaji Ramadan Ibrahim, they said:

We overwhelmingly embrace the proposed Union Government, which is in line with the basic principles of the Islamic concept that all men are equal and united.⁴⁴

9.2.6.1.6 In another development, Sheikh Ibrahim Amartey of the council urged Ghanaians to eschew their apathetic attitude to the proposal of UNIGOV and unite to support the government in the search for a suitable government for the nation.⁴⁵

9.2.6.1.7 The statement was typical of the several statements that came from various Muslim groups between January and March, 1978. For instance, a nine-member committee led by Chief Adama Damaley, head of the Sabon Zongo community in ⁴¹ Daily Graphic, vol. 6986 Saturday, 24th March, 1973, p.2.

⁴² Daily Graphic, vol. 7397 Wednesday, 24th July, 1974, p.1.

⁴³ Daily Graphic, vol.8104, Monday, 8th November, 1976, p.6

⁴⁴ Ghanaian Times, vol. 6706 Monday, 7th February, 1979, p.1.

⁴⁵ Daily Graphic, vol. Monday ,3rd December, 1979, p.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 9

Accra, urged all religious people to vote ‘Yes’ at the 30th March, 1978 Referendum, to ensure progress and stability⁴⁶. Also, Alhaji Yakubu Tetteh, founder and National Organiser of the Muslim Association asked an audience at Zenith Hall, Sekondi, to support UNIGOV, because Islam and the Holy Quran stressed, in essence, unity.⁴⁷

9.2.6.1.8 A fact worthy of note is that some of the Muslim chiefs were also politicians. For example, Alhaji Salihu Maikankan was the Chairman of the Darkuman branch of the Ghana Peace and Solidarity Council.⁴⁸ That body was a political wing of General Acheampong’s Unigov campaign. Therefore, suggestions that some of them were involved in politics in the name of religion, cannot be ruled out of discussions on this issue.

9.2.6.1.9 Having openly declared their support for UNIGOV, they were not in a position to criticise the human rights abuses that the regime indulged in, during the campaign for the referendum on Unigov.

9.2.7 4TH JUNE 1979 – 23RD SEPTEMBER 1979:
ARMED FORCES REVOLUTIONARY COUNCIL (AFRC),

9.2.7.1 The AFRC under the chairmanship of Flt Lt Jerry John Rawlings. replaced the ruling Supreme Military Council government on 4th June, 1979. The government proceeded to deal ruthlessly with people it perceived to have committed various offences. These atrocious actions of the AFRC government included public caning, especially of market women stripped to near-nakedness, arbitrary dismissals, seizure of property and indiscriminate killings by soldiers men.

9.2.7.2 Such actions of the military government elicited public outcry from civil society, religious bodies and other organisations. However, the GMRC, under the leadership of Alhaji Dauda Otoo commended the AFRC’s decision to despatch those found guilty by revolutionary courts⁴⁹.

9.2.7.3 The Ahmadiyya Muslim Mission in Wa suffered abuse of its rights, when soldiers seized many bags of grains meant for the poor in the area.⁵⁰ It was thus only the Ahmadiyya group that spoke vehemently against the arbitrary seizure of property of which it had fallen victim.

⁴⁶ Ghanaian Times, vol. 6303 Monday, 13th March, 1978, p.8.

⁴⁷ Ghanaian Times, vol. 6316 Wednesday, 29th March, 1978, back page.

⁴⁸ Ghanaian Times, vol. 6268 Tuesday, 31st January, 1978 p.1.

⁴⁹ Ghanaian Times, Vol. 6706 Monday, 2nd July, 1979, p.1.

⁵⁰ Ghanaian Times, no. 6742 Monday, 13th August, 1979, p.1.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 99.2.8 24TH SEPTEMBER, 1979 – 30TH DECEMBER, 1981:
THE THIRD REPUBLIC

9.2.8.1 The political influence of Hajia Amina Baby Ocansey, the National Women's Organiser of the People's National Party (PNP), brought about the formation of the National Assembly of Muslim Women in 1981. This Assembly was established to organise and co-ordinate the activities of Muslim women. Although, the GMRC was still the official mouthpiece of the Muslims, it was not vibrant.

9.29 31ST DECEMBER, 1981 – 6TH JANUARY, 1993:
PROVISIONAL NATIONAL DEFENCE COUNCIL (PNDC)

9.2.9.1 The GMRC continued to champion the cause of Muslims and constituted the official mouthpiece of all Muslims until the 31st December, 1981 coup. This coup brought into power the PNDC, again under the chairmanship of Flt Lt Jerry John Rawlings. A number of Islamic associations such as the United Ghana Muslim Representative Council (UGMRC) and the National Muslim Task Force, emerged after the coup. The National Muslim Task Force was under the leadership of Alhaji T.B. Damba, and it aimed at mobilizing Muslims towards the National Economic Recovery Programme of 1982.

9.2.9.2 Attempts by the PNDC Government to unite the GMRC and the UGMRC led to the establishment of the National Islamic Secretariat in 1985. Again, when Colonel Muammar-al-Qathafi of Libya paid a visit to Ghana in 1985, he made a call for Muslim unity. This brought about the formation of the Federation of Muslim Councils in 1987. In response to PNDC Law 221, to monitor the activities of religious bodies in the country, *Din-il-Islam*⁵¹ was also established in Ghana in 1989, to register under this law, "as the superstructure" for all orthodox Islamic associations, as one religious body in the country.

9.2.9.3 The way and manner, these organizations were set up, coupled with the fact that, the initiatives were not generally from the Muslim masses, limited their activities. The new organisations failed to receive the mandate of the general Muslim body, and this situation led to the manipulation of the organisations by a few, in the name of all Muslims, particularly in its dealings with the central government.

9.2.9.4 Thus, rivalry developed between the GMRC and the UGMRC in championing the destiny of Islam and Muslims in the country and this situation led to calls from individuals, Islamic institutions, Islamic and Arab Missions and government for peace and unity in the Muslim community. Among these were personalities such as Hajia Amina Baby Ocansey, National Assembly Women's Organiser, Sgt Muhammed Alidu

⁵¹ Din-il-Islam meaning Association of Islam.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 9

Upper East Regional Organising Assistant of Police, in-charge of Committee for the Defence of the Revolution (CDR), and the Royal Embassy of Saudi Arabia.

9.2.9.5 Ultimately an accord between the GMRC and the UGMRC was signed on 7th July, 1985, in Accra, and led to the formation of the National Islamic Secretariat as an umbrella body for all Muslim organizations (Sunni) in the country. Each of the two bodies had five representatives on the National Islamic Secretariat with Alhaji Dauda Otoo and Alhaji B A R Braimah, as the first two National Co-ordinators.

9.2.9.6 Colonel Muammar-al-Qathafi's call for Muslim unity as a means of promoting the advancement of the 31st December Revolution was accompanied by his pledge of Libya's preparedness to provide financial support to the Islamic Council. The pledge was redeemed in January, 1987, when a Libyan delegation participating in the 5th Anniversary of the 31st December Revolution, made a presentation of items worth ₵22 million to the National Islamic Secretariat. The delegation also extended an invitation to the leadership of the National Islamic Secretariat to attend an International Islamic Conference to be held in Tripoli⁵².

9.2.9.7 Thereafter in 1987, the National Islamic Secretariat sent a high-ranking delegation of over 30 Muslim leaders, to participate in the 3rd National Islamic Conference of West African Countries held in Tripoli, Libya. The Ghanaian delegation held a series of discussions with the World Islamic Call Society (WICS). These discussions led to the signing of the Tripoli Accord between the two parties. One of the issues contained in the "Tripoli Accord" was that the National Islamic Secretariat, be replaced with the Federation of Muslim Councils. This was to serve as the General Secretariat, and it was to be run by the heads of the various Islamic Councils in the ten regions of Ghana.

9.2.9.8 On the 4th April, 1987, Chairman Rawlings inaugurated the Federation of Muslim Councils in Accra. In his inaugural speech, Flt Lt Rawlings made it clear that the Federation of Muslim Councils would not by itself guarantee the hopes and aspirations which led to its formation, unless Muslims, as individuals, and as a group, were prepared to support the Federation to achieve its goals, with singleness of purpose, understanding and tolerance.⁵³

9.2.9.9 Alhaji Dauda Otoo, again, served as the first National Co-ordinator of the Federation of Muslim Councils. The structure of the Federation of Muslim Councils was not different from that of National Islamic Secretariat, thus constituting a departure from the Tripoli Accord.

⁵² Daily Graphic, vol.11264 Monday, 2nd February, 1987, p.5.

⁵³ Daily Graphic, Vol. 11318, Monday, 6th April, 1987.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 99.2.10 Summary

9.2.10.1 Looking at the facts presented above, it can be seen that, since Independence, various Muslim communities have allied themselves with different governments, which they considered would best protect their interests. Political parties in government have also used Muslim communities to further their own sectoral goals.

9.2.10.2 By and large, there have been many attempts to institute a Muslim council, which would act as the umbrella organization for all Muslims, but the attempts have not always been successful. There is now in existence the Office of the National Chief Imam and the Head of Ahmadiyya Muslim Mission. These are all attempts to establish an identifiable national identity and give Muslims a voice in national affairs.

9.2.10.3 Generally, the Muslim communities feared that colonial rule would impose Christianity on them. This led the Muslim communities in Ghana to isolate themselves from active participation as a group to react to issues, which bordered on human rights abuses against either them or other people in society.

9.2.10.4 It could therefore be said that Muslims in Ghana had, never as a group, championed any cause, when it came to issues of public agitation against human rights violations and abuses. During military takeovers in Ghana, people were maltreated, maimed, whipped, killed and some properties were seized, but none of these produced official comment from the Muslim Community. This is not surprising since at most times the leaders of the new Muslim unity organizations were handpicked by the government of the day. The result of this silence has been the marginalization of Muslims in issues relating to the protection of human rights. Apart from a few Muslims in politics, the Muslim communities have not been politically active in terms of formal protests or endorsement of government policies and directives. The Ghana Muslim Mission was not in favour of the Preventive Detention Act, yet because of its non-political stance, the Mission could not officially and openly condemn the Act, although some of its members suffered under it.⁵⁴

9.2.10.5 The Ghana Muslim Mission has stated that because of its non-political stance, it did not make any official protest against the effects of the PDA. It is unclear what “non-political” means, because the refusal to comment on the arrest and deportation of its own members on account of non-political stance would appear to be an abdication of the organization’s social responsibility to its own members. It is fair to conclude that the organization did not get involved for fear of reprisals.

⁵⁴ Memorandum to National Reconciliation.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 9

9.2.10.6 The implementation the Deportation Act to get rid of prominent leaders of the Muslim community⁵⁵ during the CPP regime, helped to silence the Muslim community.

9.2.10.7 Neither the Ahmadiyya Muslim Mission nor the Orthodox Muslims supported brutalities, killings, seizure of property and other related human rights violation. However, although they frowned on human rights violations such as flogging in public, detention without trial and the parading of human beings in iron-cage, they did not openly protest those atrocities.

9.3 THE CHRISTIAN RELIGIOUS GROUP9.3.1 Historical Background

9.3.1.1 Christianity came to Ghana, then Gold Coast, through Christian Missionary work in Elmina. It all started with the arrival of the Portuguese in 1471, and from that time to date, a lot of churches have sprung up. Notable among them are the Presbyterian Church, the Methodist Church, the Anglican Church, the Roman Catholic Church, and several Pentecostal and Charismatic Churches.⁵⁶

9.3.1.2 The Christian Church has had a great impact on the Ghanaian society and has shaped a number of our modern national institutions. This is as a result of the nature of the missionary activity, such as formal education, that brought Christianity to Ghana. Although in principle, the colonial government practised the modern theory of separation between church and state, its modus operandi inadvertently propagated and infused Christian ideals and values into national institutions. Ghana was therefore regarded as a Christian nation, not by virtue of numbers, but by institutional affinity and residual Christian ideals and values in our society. The close relationship between the Christian church and colonialism, whether by default or design, gave the Christian Church a great social recognition in the socio-political life of this country.

9.3.1.3 In Ghana, some leaders of the various Christian religious groups have been vocal in drawing government's attention to what is seen as human rights violations abuses in Ghana's political life. Christian religious bodies and successive governments have sometimes collaborated in various areas, especially on issues of socio-culture interest, because in Ghana there has not been a clear distinction between the sacred and the secular.

⁵⁵ Deportation Act of 1957 enabled the government of CPP to deport people perceived as opposition to the government.

⁵⁶ Asiedu M.K. Thomas, (1993), State and Church Relation under Provisional National Defence Council (Unpublished) Long Essay submitted to the Department for the Study of Religions, Univ. of Ghana.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 9

9.3.1.4 The rapid socio-cultural and political transformation of Ghana, made it necessary for adjustments to be made in such collaborations between Church and State in the post-Independence Ghana. Consequently, when Christian religious bodies got involved in politics, they did so not as a matter of civic duty, but mainly on the basis of certain ideologies, laws, and pronouncements by certain personalities, which were perceived as blasphemies and in contravention of international human rights laws.

9.3.2 6TH MARCH, 1957 – 23RD FEBRUARY, 1966:
CONVENTION PEOPLE’S PARTY (CPP)

9.3.2.1 From the time of Independence, ie from 6th March, 1957 up to at least 1962, it was clear that majority of the people of Ghana supported Dr. Kwame Nkrumah; the reason being that he had created order, after the chaotic campaign for independence. Through this feat also, he won respect for Ghana from the international community. For many Ghanaians, Dr. Nkrumah had saved them from unemployment, personal degradation and humiliation. Even, foreign powers saw him as a force to be reckoned with.

9.3.2.2 The first sharp conflict between the State and the Christian Church occurred, when Bishop Reginald Richard Roseveare, the Anglican Bishop of Accra, criticized the formation of the Ghana Young Pioneer movement (GYP). Bishop Roseveare was subsequently deported after having been vilified in the press. Although he was later allowed to return, the church had been sufficiently cowed. Rev Fr Vincent K. Damuah of the Catholic Church, was also briefly detained for criticising the government over Bishop Roseveare’s deportation and other church-related issues. It took the personal protest of Archbishop John Kodwo Amissah, Catholic Archbishop of Cape Coast, to secure his release.

9.3.2.3 Again, some of the heads of educational institutions owned by the Christian religious groups displeased the government when they failed to show support for the formation of the GYP movement in their institutions. For example, the Headmaster of Mfantshipim School in Cape Coast was dismissed, and the Headmistress of St Monica’s Girls Secondary School Mampong, Ashanti, came under official pressure, when they would both not support the formation of the GYP in their respective schools.⁵⁷

9.3.2.4 In general, the relationship between Christian religious bodies and governments has been fairly respectful and cordial. Since Independence, Christian religious leaders have been accorded a high position in the Ghanaian socio-political context, and they have been influential in various areas, particularly in the provision of schools and the moral formation of the citizenry.

⁵⁷ Pobee, supra, p.131.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 9

9.3.2.5 There were a few occasions when the churches openly protested actions that they believed to be blasphemous, during President Nkrumah's administration. In particular, the churches were unhappy with the messianic ascriptions that were used in adulation of the President. After his statue of about 20 feet had been erected in front of the Old Parliament House in Accra, with the inscription, "Seek ye first the political kingdom and all other things shall be added unto you", the Christian Council, found it necessary to challenge this. This was because the inscription was an adaptation of the biblical quotation, "But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you."⁵⁸ The Christian Council of Ghana sent a letter, dated 28th April, 1958, to the Minister for Works, E. K. Bensah, asking him to remove the quotation from the statue of Dr Nkrumah and substitute it with a non-biblical inscription. Threats were issued from the government that such an action from the Christian Council was an offence against the provisions of the Avoidance of Discrimination Act. The government further tried to silence the Christian Council by accusing it of carrying out a political agenda.

9.3.2.6 On 1st July, 1960, the programme for the celebration of Republic Day included the pouring of libation to solicit spiritual protection. The Christian Churches considered this as idolatry and unacceptable and therefore protested against it, even though Ghana was a secular State. The churches felt that if spiritual protection had to be sought, then it had to be according to Christian practice and teachings.

9.3.2.7 There were many instances in which people sought to deify Dr. Nkrumah. In fact, there emerged a cult of President Nkrumah that was nurtured by the CPP. Part of the practices of this cult in its deification of Dr. Nkrumah was to ascribe several appellations to Nkrumah. Such appellations included "Osagyefo"⁵⁹, "Kantamanto"⁶⁰, "Oyeadeeyie"⁶¹, "Kasapreko"⁶², "Asuo'dumgya"⁶³, and even "The Messiah." The churches frowned on these appellations, which seemed to elevate President Nkrumah above other mortals.

9.3.2.8 The people of Ghana were subjected to propaganda that suggested that President Nkrumah's emergence was more extraordinary than the emergence of Buddha, Jesus Christ and the Prophet Mohammed. In an editorial of the *Evening News*⁶⁴ was the inscription, "All day, all night we are reinforced in our belief that the whole phenomena [sic] of Dr. Nkrumah's emergence is second to none in the long history of the world messiah from Buddha, Mohammed and Christ." To enhance that image, there were continued appellations in the media and on various platforms. For example, Dr. Nkrumah was alleged to have gone to the wilderness for spiritual ⁵⁸ The Holy Bible (King James Version) Matthew Chapter 6 verse 33.

⁵⁹ 'Conqueror in battle'.

⁶⁰ 'One who does not go back on his word'.

⁶¹ 'One who sets right what is wrong'.

⁶² 'One whose word is final'.

⁶³ 'Water that is powerful enough to quench a raging fire'.

⁶⁴ Evening News, vol. III, no 636, Monday 21st March, 1960, p.2.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 9

exercise just as Jesus Christ did. Again, according to the Evening News, just as John the Baptist heralded the Mission of Christ on earth, Dr. Nkrumah's emergence was also said to have been foretold by Dr. Kwegyir Aggrey. The Evening News in a report captioned: "The Seven Days in the Wilderness", and "Nkrumah in the Hour of Transfiguration"⁶⁵, graphically compared Dr. Nkrumah and Christ. Dr. Nkrumah was also considered martyr par excellence by J R P Marutle in the following poem:

For your sake he was imprisoned;
 For your sake he deliberately plunged himself into supreme sacrifice by declaring Positive Action at a time he knew fully well the imperialists would hit back;
 For your sake he suffered shame and degradation;
 For your sake he abandoned law and came at the call of the UGCC;
 For your sake he has incurred the hatred of imperialist hypocrites and all who do not want the common man to have a place under the sun;
 For your sake he was tortured, suffered persecution, libel cases, contempt of court and all sorts and manners of injustices;
 For your sake his residence at New Town was bombarded by an executive officer... of the opposition.⁶⁶

This poem is just an extended parody of the biblical exhortation, "For your sake, he was crucified." Some began to sing Dr. Nkrumah's praises by substituting some words of the Canticum "Te Deum Laudamus". All these acts of deification offended the churches.

9.3.2.9 On 24th May, 1961, the CPP Member of Parliament for East Nzema, J A Kinnah, announced that a "shrine" should be built to the name of President Nkrumah, in Nkroful, President Nkrumah's hometown, in the Western Region of Ghana. These ideas did not sit well with the Christian Council of Ghana⁶⁷, especially as P K K Quaidoo, CPP Member of Parliament for Amenfi Aowin, who spoke against the erection as being premature was described as a "Catholic slave and hypocrite". The shrine received visits from many people who believed they were on a pilgrimage.⁶⁸ In 1962, about 100 members of the GY P from all the regions of Ghana went on pilgrimage to the shrine where they kept an all-night vigil, and organised a route march.⁶⁹ The Christian Council felt that the adulation of the President had gone too far and was becoming idolatry. The last straw that broke the camel's back was when President Nkrumah was called "The Messiah" and children of the GYP were seen as being indoctrinated into a cult that upheld the immortality and infallibility of the President.

⁶⁵ Parliamentary Debates, First Series, National Assembly Official Report, 1960-61 session, 18th April-23rd June, 1961, pp877-882, 891-898; Evening News vol. III, no. 637, Tuesday, 22nd March, 1960, p.1.

⁶⁶ Pobee, op. cit.

⁶⁷ Ibid.

⁶⁸ Ibid.

⁶⁹ Evening News, vol.V, no.1396, Saturday, 1st September, 1962, p.1.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 9

9.3.2.10 Between 1957 and up to the overthrow of the CPP Government in 1966, the Christian religious bodies mainly played a human rights advocacy role under the name of the Christian Council of Ghana. The Catholic Church also later joined in this crusade. During this era, the issues of concern included the introduction of the Preventive Detention Act (PDA), the Deportation Act and the bomb-throwing outrages that resulted in many deaths, especially those of GYP, in the 1960s.

9.3.2.11 The Christian Council put in a lot of effort to stop Parliament from passing the Preventive Detention Bill, but the Bill was rushed through Parliament in July and passed. Later, in a letter dated 7th January, 1960, Rev G Thackray Eddy, the retiring Chairman of both the Christian Council of Ghana and of The Methodist Church, Ghana, wrote to the Prime Minister, Dr. Nkrumah, indicating the council's concern over the PDA. Indeed, later that month of January, 1960, Reverend Eddy wrote another letter stating the following:

The council believed the bill to be contrary to natural justice, which requires that any accused person should be given an opportunity to defend himself face to face with his accusers. The letter further indicated that the bill would discourage free and honest criticism and that it would cause people to live in apprehension.

The Prime Minister in response stated:

I am satisfied that my party and government have taken their stand in this matter from a realistic point, and I am unable to advise them to shift their ground. I think that if the Christian Council and the churches want the Preventive Detention Act to be withdrawn, it should be their duty first of all to take positive steps to remove the causes, which led to the passing of the Act. As long as they have not done so, my colleagues and I cannot see that you and your colleagues have any right at all, moral, or otherwise, to intervene in this matter.

Dr. Nkrumah thus rejected the concern expressed by the Christian Council.

9.3.2.12 In 1962, the Christian Council expressed the concern of its members on the assassination attempt made on President Nkrumah. A press release by the council after he escaped assassination at Kulungugu read in part as follows:

The Christian Council of Ghana meeting at Accra on the September 14, 1962, reaffirms the Majesty and the Lordship of Jesus Christ, realizing that he is still in control. The Council rejoices in the President's escape from assassination. The Council strongly condemns the recent acts of violence and has shown their sympathy in a practical way by giving the sum of (£G150) One Hundred and Fifty Ghanaian Pounds towards the relief of those who suffered. The Christian Council recognizes the right of the churches to affirm its conviction that the church has its duty to speak on any issue, which affects the spiritual and moral welfare of its members and the nation in general.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 9

9.3.2.13 The Christian Council followed up with a personal letter to the President on his lucky escape, and the following response was received a few days later:

Donation for the relief of Kulungugu victims: I am directed by Osagyefo to acknowledge on his behalf receipt of your letter dated September 15, 1962. Osagyefo also wishes me to convey through you the Christian Council of Ghana an expression of his deep gratitude for its very handsome contribution towards the relief of the Kulungugu victims.

9.3.2.14 In the early part of 1960, Bishop Andrew van den Bronk, the Catholic Bishop of Kumasi, fell foul of some people due to his utterances, perceived to be anti-government. He was attacked in the press as indulging in “crook politics”. In a write-up captioned “Bishop Bronk Must Go,”⁷⁰ Rev V G Kobina-Mensah, of the Church of Africa, Accra, urged his expulsion from Ghana. It is also believed that some people, even of the Catholic Church, wanted an indigene as bishop of Kumasi, were therefore behind the political situation of the time, to compel his departure. His house was actually attacked with dynamite on one occasion. He eventually became a victim of the Deportation Act. There is no evidence that the Christian Council offered any visible support to the beleaguered Bishop.

9.3.2.15 However, when in October, 1962, the Deportation Act was used against Rt Rev Roseveare, the Christian Council took up the matter. A letter was sent to President Nkrumah pleading for Roseveare’s return. The result was his return to Ghana in November, 1962, upon which the Christian Council sent the following telegram of gratitude:

On behalf of Ghana Christian Council, we request you to kindly convey to Osagyefo the President warmest gratitude for graciously granting council’s humble petition and permitting Bishop Roseveare’s return. This most generous gesture will rejoice the heart of multitudes of Christians throughout Ghana and in many other Lands. We pray for the Almighty God’s continued guidance, support and blessing for Osagyefo.⁷¹

9.3.2.16 The Christian Council of Ghana, in collaboration with the Joint Provincial Council and the Asanteman Council, also protested the deportation of some Muslims leaders including Alhaji Amadu Baba, Lardan Lalemie⁷², Salami Lagos, Aliu Allao, Musa Derikikiyi, Idris Braimah and Sam Moshie⁷³.

⁷⁰ Ghanaian Times, Vol. 1182 Friday, 22nd December, 1961, p.7.

⁷¹ Memorandum to the National Reconciliation Commission.

⁷² Daily Graphic Vol.2154 Saturday, 24th August, 1957, p.8.

⁷³ Richard Rathbone, Nkrumah and the Chiefs, the Politics of Chieftaincy in Ghana 1951-1960, Reimmer-Accra; Ohio University Press-Athens, 2000, p.105.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 9

9.3.3 24TH FEBRUARY, 1966 - 30TH SEPTEMBER, 1969
NATIONAL LIBERATION COUNCIL (NLC)

9.3.3.1 In March, 1966, the Christian Council of Ghana held a non-denominational service at the Accra Sports Stadium, following the overthrow of the CPP Government by the NLC. It was a Thanksgiving Service to thank God for liberating the country from the one-party rule of the CPP Government. This gesture and the accompanying message of the Christian Council was, undoubtedly, a show of support for the coming into power of the NLC.

9.3.3.2 Following the overthrow, CPP office holders and other government functionaries were detained without trial. Indeed, one of the security men of President Nkrumah, Boye Moses, was put in a cage and paraded through the principal streets of Accra, amidst public ridicule. The security apparatus of the President had been so feared and hated, that no one gave a thought as to what ill-treatment was being meted out to those who constituted it; and so no one, not even the Churches, condemned this undignified treatment of a human being, and the violation of Boye Moses' human rights, in particular.⁷⁴

9.3.3.3 On 17th April, 1967, there was an attempt to overthrow the Government of NLC and as result Lt-Gen Kotoka , Capt Cephas Y. Borkloe, Capt Anthony Avevor and Sgt Osei Grushie, the personal Orderly of Lt-Gen Kotoka, were killed. The leaders of the attempted coup, Lt Samuel B Arthur and Lt Moses Yeboah, were subsequently executed in public on 9th May, 1967. This was the first public execution to be carried out in Ghana. The Christian Council protested against the public execution of Lt Arthur and Lt Yeboah. An excerpt of the letter of protest sent by the Christian Council to the NLC read as follows:

Sir,

Holding of Executions in Public: At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Christian Council, on May 16,1967, the subject was discussed and we were made aware that many members of the churches and of the general public, were profoundly distressed that the public should have been involved to witness the execution of the Lieutenants Arthur and Yeboah on May 9. There was no questioning of the verdicts and sentences on these men, but the Executive agreed with the view that holding the executions in public encourage crude demonstrations of hatred and excites morbid curiosity in the on-lookers and in the public at large.

⁷⁴ Daily Graphic, Vol.5075 Tuesday, 24th January, 1967, p.1.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 9

9.3.3.4 In view of the possibility of other executions, the Executive Committee asked that these views should be made known to the NLC in a letter to be presented by a delegation of church leaders. In reply to the above, the NLC sent the following:

Dear Sir,
I am directed to acknowledge with thanks, the receipt of your memorandum on the above subject dated 30th May 1967, and to assure you that the council has no intention of carrying out, in the near future, any execution in public.

There were no further public executions during the NLC regime.

9.3.4 1ST OCTOBER, 1969 – 12TH JANUARY, 1972:
THE SECOND REPUBLIC PROGRESS PARTY (PP) GOVERNMENT

9.3.4.1 The leaders of the Christian religious bodies did not approve the overthrow of the Government of the Progress Party under Dr. Busia. This was because Dr. Busia was generally considered to be a good Christian and a God-fearing leader. However, a few incidents occurred which called for critical comment from the churches, such as the mode of implementation of the Aliens Compliance Order, and the dismissal of the 568 senior civil and public servants. There is no evidence of the churches' official protest to these events that caused such human suffering.

9.3.5 13TH JANUARY, 1972 – 3RD JUNE, 1979:
NATIONAL REDEMPTION COUNCIL (NRC) /
SUPREME MILITARY COUNCIL (SMC) I & II

9.3.5.1 Soon after Col Acheampong seized power from the government of the Second Republic in 1972, his style of administration became suspect in the eyes of the leaders of the Christian religious bodies. The government launched the "Operation Feed Yourself" programme which was very popular with the entire citizenry. Members of the NRC also embarked on a programme of instilling discipline in the Ghanaian body politics. Although this entailed the use of force and unorthodox methods, such as military-style drills, the churches did not disapprove because falling standards of discipline within the Ghanaian social life had been one of their constant themes since 1966.

9.3.5.2 As the same economic problems that led to the overthrow of the Progress Party re-emerged, opposition to the continued stay in office by the Military began also began to coalesce. In addition, to the economic mismanagement, the growth of kalabule and the attendant degeneration in moral standards roused the Christian religious bodies to action. They began to send Memoranda and Joint Pastoral Letters to the government, expressing concern over the emerging social problems. They also began to preach against the immoral lifestyles that were emerging and the social consequences of such immorality.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 9

9.3.5.3 The change in structure of National Redemption Council to Supreme Military Council merely changed the membership but not the policies or the lifestyles of which the churches had been so critical. The Chairman of NRC and the new SMC, now General Acheampong, began to court the disfavour of the Orthodox Churches.

9.3.5.4 The Christian Council of Ghana, and the Ghana Catholic Bishops' Conference opposed Gen Acheampong's proposal for the formation of a Union Government (Unigov). This was to be a constitutional government, which was to have representation of the Armed Forces, the Police and civilians. The two religious bodies saw it as an attempt to perpetuate military rule in the country. As time went by, anti-military sentiments of the church leaders became more vehement, because of serious human rights abuses then being perpetrated by the government.

9.3.5.5 As wanton arrests and beatings continued, heads of the Christian Council and the Catholic Bishops' Conference issued a joint memorandum of protest, after a meeting with Gen Acheampong in which they protested against acts of arbitrary arrests. They specifically, protested the arrest and detention of K Addai-Mensah, National Secretary of the Ghana Bar Association, in Kumasi on 21st February, 1978; the brutal beating up of Peter Owusu Donkor, Headmaster of Opoku Ware Secondary School, as well as the Assistant Headmaster and students of Opoku Ware Secondary School; and students of Mfantipim School in Cape Coast respectively, by supporters of the concept of Unigov. The Memorandum also protested the denial of such basic human rights as the freedom of speech and of association to the citizenry.

9.3.5.6 A pastoral letter by the Catholic Bishops' Conference condemned the human rights violations perpetrated by members of the security forces;⁷⁵ and more particularly, complained about the denial of freedom of expression to such civil society organization as the People's Movement for Freedom and Justice (PMFJ) during the months preceding the referendum on the Unigov concept. The repression of the PMFJ was criticised as being the antithesis of government pronouncements on public education on the concept of Unigov, since the law-enforcement agencies should have been the ones to give protection to the PMFJ, and not the ones to lead in the molestation of citizens expressing their dissent. The pastoral letter also protested against the biased nature of the campaign, which was supposed to educate people on the impending referendum, as evidenced by the fact that members of the government and other personalities were either openly campaigning on behalf of Unigov or the so-called National Government.

9.3.5.7 In order to promote the concept of Unigov and to give it some spiritual backing in order to hoodwink the ordinary citizen of its divine origin, Elizabeth Clare Prophet, also known as Mother Prophet, of the Summit Lighthouse of the Keepers of the Flame Fraternity of Southern California, was invited to Ghana by Gen Acheampong's

⁷⁵ See Ghana Bishops Speak supra, pp. 20-24.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 9

government in January, 1978. She re-defined and expounded the Christian doctrine of the Trinity in terms of Unigov. She urged that the Unigov was to be accepted, because it demonstrated the Christian doctrine of the Trinity. The Armed Forces represented God the Father, the Police represented God the Son, and the Civilians represented God the Holy Spirit, leading people to confer the nickname 'APC' ⁷⁶ on her version of the Unigov concept.⁷⁷ She even discovered a "fourth person of the Trinity" in the Mother of God, represented by the Women of Ghana⁷⁸. She therefore exploited the Christian religion to support the new political concept of governance of General Acheampong. The Christian Council vehemently expressed disagreement with Mrs. Clare Prophet and on 14th February, 1978, issued the following statement:

The Christian Council wishes to express its disagreement with the religious and constitutional opinions of Mrs. Clare Prophet ...She was ill-advised to make a statement about Christian belief which has no basis in the Bible and in the tradition...We deplore that whereas the place of the army and the police in any future government is a controversial issue, Mrs. Clare Prophet took the opportunity to claim on behalf of the soldiers and police among others a "divine right", no less, to participate in government. The Christian Council wishes to declare that no individual or section of the public has any divine or other right to participate in government except by the choice of the electorate freely expressed through the ballot box.

In the light of this, the orthodox churches boycotted all activities of Mrs. Clare Prophet's two-day seminar⁷⁹.

9.3.5.8 The role of the Christian Council of Ghana and the Ghana Catholic Bishops' Conference, established the Orthodox Churches also as credible reconcilers of warring factions in society as was evident during Gen Acheampong's regime. For example, their mediatory role in the clash between the Ghana Registered Nurses Association and the government, and between university students and the government,⁸⁰ showed them in a positive light. They, on many occasions, established themselves as the voice of the voiceless, pleading for the cause of political detainees, and in this role earned the wrath of Gen Acheampong. According to the Christian organisations, "the church's task is to protect and defend the rights of every human being and to protest against the violation of these rights by any fellow man or woman."⁸¹ It is possible to conclude from the events of those days that during the Acheampong regime, the orthodox churches were by virtue of circumstances, dragged into the political life of the country⁸². In a nutshell, when the orthodox churches opposed General

⁷⁶ APC is a common analgesic in Ghana.

⁷⁷ Mike Oquaye, Politics in Ghana 1972-1979, Tornado Publications, Accra, 1980, p.86.

⁷⁸ Ghanaian Times, Vol. 6,256, Tuesday, 17th January, 1978, pp.1&3.

⁷⁹ Ghanaian Times, Vol. 6,250 Tuesday, 10th January, 1978, pp.1.

⁸⁰ Pobee, op cit supra.

⁸¹ See Ghana Bishops Speak, pp. 20-24.

⁸² Memorandum sent to the Government by the Christian Council of Ghana and the National Catholic Secretariat on 7th March, 1978.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 9

Acheampong's regime, they were accused of meddling in politics. The same accusation was, however, not heard when the orthodox churches intervened on behalf of the government in disputes.

9.3.6 GEN ACHEAMPONG'S RELATIONSHIP WITH THE NEW PENTECOSTAL CHURCHES

9.3.6.1 It was impossible for General Acheampong to influence and win the support of the leadership of the Orthodox Churches of Ghana, during his campaign to popularize the Unigov idea. He therefore turned his attention to the new Pentecostal Churches. He found ready allies in the leaders of the "spiritual churches." He went as far as attending their church services and this gave him the opportunity to launch his campaign on the Unigov either personally from the pulpits of these churches, or through the church leaders⁸³.

9.3. 6.2 As a result, some individual religious leaders were driven by personal ambition to seek public office. In view of this, some of the spiritual church leaders were placed in high positions and this enabled them to campaign for General Acheampong's Unigov. For example Rev Dr Blankson Amankwa, leader and founder of the Bethany Church of Ghana, and Presiding Director of the National Christian Ministers' Union, also belonged to The Friends, one of the pro- Unigov political organs of Gen Acheampong,⁸⁴ was appointed Chairman of the University Council of the University of Science and Technology, Kumasi. When in 1974, Bishop Peter Kwasi Sarpong, Catholic Bishop of Kumasi, declined to serve on the Charter of Redemption Committee, it was Rev Charles Yeboah-Koree, founder and leader of F'Eden Church, and an ardent supporter of Unigov, who was appointed in his stead⁸⁵ as a member of the National Committee of the Charter of Redemption. Rev Yeboah-Koree at the Easter Convention of his church at the Jackson Park in Koforidua, asked his congregation to endorse Unigov, since it was divinely inspired. They were also to use divine wisdom and power to influence the next constitutional committee⁸⁶. He went on to say:

To balance the moral and political imbalance of the present and the past, Ghanaians must be committed to the search for God's divine plans, for, in it alone can one enjoy lasting peace.

9.3.6.3 On several other occasions, Rev. Yeboah Koree went on national television to proclaim Unigov during his televised sermons. There were many others in the pentecostal churches, who saw Unigov as a revelation from God. Examples of these were Rev Dr KO Thompson, one of the leaders of the Cherubim and Seraphim Church

⁸³ The Pioneer, March, 1977.

⁸⁴ Ghanaian Times, vol.6250, Tuesday, 10th January, 1978, p.1.

⁸⁵ Pobee, op cit supra.

⁸⁶ Ghanaian Times, vol. 6315, 28th March, 1978, p.16.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 9

of Ghana, Takoradi⁸⁷, and Rev Francis Walters of the African Religious Congress.⁸⁸ Some also joined secular groups to campaign for the concept of Unigov.

9.3.7 4TH JUNE, 1979 – 23RD SEPTEMBER, 1979:
ARMED FORCES REVOLUTIONARY COUNCIL

9.3.7.1 The 4th June, 1979 coup brought untold hardship to many Ghanaians for the first time in the annals of Ghana's political life. The AFRC regime lasted for only three-and-a-half months, but it perpetrated widespread human rights violations dubbed 'house cleaning', in the nature of killings, beatings, flogging in public, seizure of property and detentions. Some religious leaders pledged open support for the "house cleaning" exercise by the AFRC Government, and even called for its extension to other social sectors.

9.3.7.2 However, the Catholic Bishops' Conference and the Christian Council of Ghana hoped that the AFRC would not resort to unreasonable force in the execution of the 'house cleaning' campaign. Other individual church leaders such as Bishop Dominic Andoh showed concern about the acts of atrocities committed by the AFRC. The Catholic Church denounced violence of all kinds and protested vehemently to the arbitrary killings that took place. There was also a strong affirmation that each Ghanaian had the right to security of life and legitimate prosperity. Each Ghanaian was bound by the divine commandment, "Thou Shall Not Kill." In a joint memorandum, submitted to the AFRC in July, 1979, however, the Catholic Bishops' Conference and the Christian Council merely expressed the hope that the 'house cleaning' exercise embarked upon by the AFRC would be pursued without recourse to acts of vengeance and violence.

9.3.7.3 The AFRC executed eight Senior Military Officers, including three former Heads of State, in two batches. After the second batch of executions, the leaders of the Christian Council and the National Catholic Secretariat were among the other civil society groups that appealed for justice to be tempered with mercy. However, there were other members of the clergy, who supported the execution. Such supporters included priests such as Rev Fr Dr. Vincent Kwabena Damuah of the Catholic Church, who wrote:

We do not love those executed less but we love our country more. Why all the fuss about execution? I believe that the A.F.R.C has the right to exact capital punishment for the common good of the country. We hope and pray that the number is not too large. Christ died on the cross to save mankind. We hope and pray that those who have to die, accept the challenge courageously and prayerfully to save Ghana.⁸⁹

⁸⁷ Ghanaian Times, vol. 6247 Friday, 6th January, 1978, p.2.

⁸⁸ Ghanaian Times, vol. 6249 Monday, 9th January, 1978, p.3.

⁸⁹ The Standard, Sunday 29th July, 1979, p.3.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 9

9.3.7.4 The Standard, a Catholic Weekly, also expressed similar views on the executions as a way of ensuring social justice in the future. In an editorial under the heading: “The Great Lesson,” it stated the following with reference to the executions at the Teshie Range

:

The sordid history surrounding the notorious second military regime, which put itself in power in 1972, has come to a close. The disciplinary action has been taken by the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council in public to serve as deterrent to anybody who goes about clinging on to power to amass illegal wealth and put Ghanaians into the economic predicament in which we find ourselves today.⁹⁰

9.3.7.5 The seizure of assets of a large number of people, the demolition of private houses and the establishment of “People’s Courts” to try people in secret for various alleged crimes against the state, received public support. Although there was very little information on the operations of these “People’s Courts,” no one demanded an open trial for the supposed offenders.

9.3.7.6 The AFRC Government had the shortest life-span in the annals of governance of this country. However, the atrocities perpetrated under this regime were phenomenal. The killing of the Senior Military Officers, the public flogging of people, some of whom were stripped naked, the seizure and destruction of people’s property, were enough instances of human rights violations that caused great concern in the country. In the main, the Christian Religious Bodies protested against such acts of inhumanity.

9.3.8 24TH SEPTEMBER, 1979 – 30TH DECEMBER, 1981:
PEOPLE’S NATIONAL PARTY (PNP) GOVERNMENT

9.3.8.1 There were very few occasions on which the churches had cause to protest against government action. One of those occasions was when the government mounted overt surveillance Capt Kojo Tsikata. The Standard criticised the flagrant violation of the rights of Capt Tsikata.

9.3.9.0 31ST DECEMBER, 1981- 6TH JANUARY, 1993
PROVISIONAL NATIONAL DEFENCE COUNCIL

9.3.9.1 The Government of PNDC under Flt Lt Rawlings initiated what he described as “Holy War” on vices. The spate of violence, terror, arbitrary imprisonment and ⁹⁰ The Standard, Sunday, 24th June 1979, p.4.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 9

torture that characterized the early stages of the revolution attracted sharp criticism from various quarters, notably, the Christian Council of Ghana and the Catholic Bishops' Conference.

9.3.9.2 Early in the life of the PNDC, certain events occurred that caused the religious leaders to express disagreement with the government. The Catholic Church's unequivocal stand against human rights abuses was contained in a joint pastoral letter of the Catholic Hierarchy of Ghana on "Moral Conversion and National Reconstruction," issued on the occasion of the 1982 Easter celebration. This was to serve as the church's reaction to the political situation in the country at that time⁹¹. The Catholic Church denounced violence of all kinds, including the arbitrary killings that were going on, emphasizing that each Ghanaian has the right to security of life and legitimate prosperity. The church, once again affirmed that each Ghanaian is bound by the divine commandment: "Thou Shalt Not Kill".

9.3.9.3 In separate memoranda, the Christian Council of Ghana and the Catholic Bishops' Conference called on the PNDC Government to publish the interim report submitted to the Attorney General by the Special Investigation Board, which investigated the kidnap and murder of three High Court Judges, and a retired Army Officer on 30th June, 1982. They also urged the government to consider the immediate possibility of handing over power to a representative government.

9.3.9.4 It was clear, during the PNDC period that the terror unleashed by the regime was such that only established bodies such as the Christian Council of Ghana, the Catholic Bishops' Conference and Association of Professional Bodies were capable of collectively expressing condemnation of the regime's excesses. One Christian leader has remarked that, "It was a miracle that the leaders of the Christian Council of Ghana and the Ghana Catholic Bishops' Conference were able to exhibit such courage during the early 1980s and to survive the fury of Rawlings' regime." This, according to him, was due to the grace of God.⁹²

9.3.9.5 Rev Dr Vincent Kwabena Damuah, a Catholic Priest, became a member of the PNDC and took active part in most of the decisions during that time.⁹³ A few Ghanaian priests spoke against the membership of Rev. Damuah on the PNDC, such that social commentators were divided on the issue of the involvement of religious leaders in politics. While some believed that priests should eschew politics, others were convinced that the appropriate role for the clergy was in the advisory capacity.⁹⁴ Rev. Dr. Joseph Osei-Bonsu, then a lecturer at the University of Ghana, Legon,

⁹¹ See Ghana Catholic Bishops Speak, p.59.

⁹² Memorandum to National Reconciliation Commission.

⁹³ The Standard, Sunday, 24th January, 1982, p.3.

⁹⁴ The Standard, Sunday, 31st January, 1982, p.1.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 9

indicated that although the inclusion of a Catholic priest on the PNDC was indicative of the regime's recognition of the important contribution which the church could make to the development of the country, it would have been better if he had been appointed to an advisory role, as such participation in the government could cause a rift in his congregation. The official position of the Catholic Church was to suspend him from priestly duties.

9.3.9.6 In November, 1982, the Catholic Bishops' Conference in its Statement on the State of the Nation, condemned the "cold-blooded, cowardly murder" of the three High Court Judges and a retired Officer of the Ghana Army, and also expressed the hope that those found guilty of the savage act would be punished.⁹⁵ The Statement further expressed concern about the lawlessness in the country and recklessness of the People's Defence Committees in sowing seeds of discord and bitterness in the country; the unrestrained violence of the security forces that had claimed many lives and maimed others; and the situation of insecurity created for every one⁹⁶ in the country.

9.3.9.7 In a Memorandum from the member Churches of the Christian Council of Ghana to the PNDC, the churches entreated the government, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, to listen and pay attention to the cries of the people. The memorandum mentioned the following atrocities:

...the numerous kidnappings, confiscation of properties, buildings, and cars without adequate enquiry or even any investigation at all...Detentions without trial of politicians and other citizens and increasing violence by progressive organizations...

9.3.9.8 In a document entitled, "20 Points for Study," The Christian Council of Ghana mentioned other concerns including the following:

Never before in our history have so many Ghanaians disappeared in suspicious circumstances as in the period since December 31, 1981. The cases of the three judges and a retired major are typical of the other incidents including two hundred listed on the 28 July 1982 by the Association of Recognised Professional Bodies.⁹⁷

These criticisms did not go down well with the government.

9.3.9.9 The Standard also consistently criticised the government on the atrocities of the time. The government took umbrage at these criticisms and expressed its displeasure by banning the newspaper on 13th December, 1985.⁹⁸

⁹⁵ See Ghana Bishops Speak, p.75.

⁹⁶ See Ghana Bishops Speak, p.74.

⁹⁷ "The Christian Council and the Revolution," Christian Council press releases dated 25th November, and 1st December, 1982.

⁹⁸ See Ghana Bishops Speak, pp. 115-116.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 9

9.3.9.10 In 1989, the government sought to control religious bodies by requiring that all religious bodies should be registered under the Religious Bodies Registration Law, 1989 (PNDCL 221). The Catholic Bishops' Conference and the Christian Council informed the Chairman of PNDC, by a joint memorandum on 11th August, 1989, of their displeasure at that law and refused to register under the Law. The message explained to the Chairman and members of the PNDC that the law constituted an infringement on the fundamental human rights of the basic freedom of worship as stated by article 18 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. The message further alleged that the Law also contravened article 8 of the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights, and even the government's own enabling Law, the Provisional National Defence Council (Establishment) Proclamation (Supplementary and Consequential Provisions) Law 1982, (PNDCL 42). Section 1(b) of PNDCL 42 which provided as follows: "Respect for fundamental human rights and for the dignity of human persons are to be cultivated among all sections of the society and established as part of the basis of social justice." The religious bodies believed that the registration requirement was the first step in a bid to deny legal existence to those bodies that the PNDC might not favour. The Christian Religious Bodies in keeping with the ethics of rendering "service to mankind" protested against all the above-mentioned incidents of human rights abuses.

9.3.9.11 In the same year of 1989, four religious groups made up of the "Jehovah's Witnesses", "The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints", "The Lord is My Shepherd" Church, Kumasi and Prophet Ekwam's Church at Gomoa Budumburam were proscribed. The Orthodox Churches protested in meetings with the government, on their behalf. In particular, the ban on those groups demonstrated the importance of resisting the registration requirements being introduced, since that would have given power to governments to determine questions of doctrine and religious orthodoxy.

9.4 CONCLUSION

9.4.1 The CPP Government was generally regarded as dictatorial. The NLC Government was therefore described as a "liberator," when it overthrew the CPP Government. Even though it was an unlawful take-over of power by force of arms, the Christian religious organizations supported it.⁹⁹

9.4.2 Even though numerous acts of brutality took place during the initial period of the NLC regime, public protests against such acts were minimal. Furthermore, a number of laws were promulgated to disqualify some people from contesting or holding public office. Notable among these laws were the Elections and Public Officers Disqualification Decree, 1968 (NLCD 223), and the Public Officers Disqualification Decree of 1969 (NLCD 332), which disqualified 152 CPP

⁹⁹ Christian Messenger March, 1966.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 9

functionaries from holding public office for ten years, and prevented them from contesting elections to public office. The failure of Ghanaians in general, and Christian Religious Bodies in particular, to protest against these discriminatory and unduly punitive laws gave the impression that these laws were justified.

9.4.3 During this period, a number of laws were made that took retrospective effect, but this did not elicit any protest.

9.4.4 The religious bodies did not have open clashes with the Governments of the Second and Third Republics. There was, however, at various times, tension between the Christian Religious Bodies notably, the Ghana Catholic Bishops' Conference and the Christian Council of Ghana on the one hand and on the other, the Governments of NRC, SMC, AFRC and the PNDC.

9.4.5 From the facts outlined above, it is clear that Christian religious bodies have clashed with various governments that ruled Ghana. This was because of the particular stance that they took on certain human rights abuses perpetrated by these governments. In pursuance of their advocacy role, the religious bodies have engaged in activities in the form of issuing protest letters, communiqués, memoranda, pastoral letters etc. For example, the Christian Council of Ghana, and the Ghana National Catholic Secretariat have often spoken with one voice on matters that they considered worthy of such joint action.¹⁰⁰ It is worth noting that, not much has been heard from the Islamic Religious groups in an advocacy capacity, and the Traditional Religious groups have played no advocacy role at all.

9.4.6 Religious bodies have members in every stratum of society. Consequently, the opinions and actions of the leaders of these bodies shape public morality and behaviour. The 'culture of silence' that pervaded the political fabric of Ghana during the days of the PNDC, had a serious impact on the advocacy role of the Christian religious bodies. All the same, the Christian religious bodies especially, the Christian Council of Ghana and the Catholic Bishops' Conference were always persistent and consistent in criticizing governments on human rights issues.

9.4.7 Instances of religious groups seriously engaging governments in terms of protests and other actions on human rights issues have been commendable, even though on a few occasion such protests fell short of expectation. On issues such as the Preventive Detention Act, the bomb outrages of the 1960s, the killing of the Senior Military Officers, the flogging of citizens in public, the demolition of public properties, the disappearance of certain individuals, and the abduction and gruesome murder of the three High Court Judges and a retired Officer of the Ghana Army, have all elicited protest from them.

¹⁰⁰ See Ghana Bishops Speak, Department of Social Communications (DEPSOCOM) of the National Catholic Secretariat from 1968-1990, 1999), pp. 43.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 9

9.4.8 It is hoped that now that some of the traditional religious groups are organized under the Afrikania Mission, they would be more vocal in speaking out on national issues as well as reforming some of their practices that constitute human rights abuse.

9.4.9 The Muslim groups should also be heard more on matters of human rights, so that the task of infusing morality into our governance would not be left to the Christian groups only. Already there are hopeful signs that the need to ingratiate themselves with ruling government has become a thing of the past, and so this should enable them to criticize the government whenever the need arises.

VOLUME 4 CHAPTER 9LIST OF ABBREVIATIONS

NRC	–	National Reconciliation Commission
MAP	–	Muslim Association Party
CPP	–	Convention peoples Party
GCMA	–	Gold Coast Muslim Association
NRC/SMC	–	National Redemption Council/Supreme Military Council
GMRC	–	Ghana Muslim Representative Council
UGMRC	–	United Ghana Muslim Representative Council
UNIGOV	–	Union Government
PNP	–	Peoples National Party
AFRC	–	Armed Forces Revolutionary Council
WISC	–	World Islamic Call Society
PDA	–	Preventive Detention Act
NLC	–	National Liberation Council
NLCD	--	National Liberation Council Decree
PMFJ	–	Peoples Movement for Freedom and Justice
NPP	–	Northern Peoples Party
PNDCL	–	Provisional National Defence Council Law

CHAPTER 1

RECOMMENDATIONS FOR RECONCILIATION AND INSTITUTIONAL REFORM

3.0.1 International law as well as domestic law oblige government to protect its citizens, and provide redress for those whose human rights are abused, impose sanctions on those whose conduct caused the violation, and prevent a re-occurrence of the conditions that produced the violation.

3.0.2 To this end, the Parliament of Ghana passed an Act, the National Reconciliation Commission Act 2002 (Act 611), to establish a National Reconciliation Commission.. The main function of the Commission was to investigate abuses and violations that occurred particularly during periods of unconstitutional rule, and to seek and promote national reconciliation among the people of the country by recommending appropriate redress for persons who have suffered any injury, hurt, damage, grievance or who in any other manner have been adversely affected by the violations and abuses of their human rights arising from the activities or inactivities of public institutions and persons holding public office during periods of unconstitutional government. The Commission was also to make recommendations that would ensure the non-repetition of the conduct that produced the injury or violation.

3.0.3 The Commission is expected to do the following:

- Produce proper documentation establishing the nature and causes of serious violations and abuses of human rights;
- Provide an accurate historical record of matters investigated by the Commission;
- Identify victims of violations and abuses of human rights;
- Recommend the specific needs of each victim or group of victims;
- Suggest measures to prevent and avoid the repetition of such violations and abuses;
- Recommend reforms and other measures whether legal, political, administrative or otherwise needed to achieve the objects of the Commission;
- Promote healing and reconciliation; and
- Recommend the setting up of a Reparation and Rehabilitation Fund.

3.0.4 The Commission investigated the social background of the human rights abuses under the following sectoral themes:

- The Security Services;
- The Legal Profession (including the Judiciary);
- The Media (both print and electronic);
- The Labour and Students Movement;
- The Professional Bodies (other than Legal) and civil society groups; and
- The Religious Bodies and Chieftaincy Institution.

3.0.5 These thematic researches provided a kaleidoscopic view of the human rights terrain since Ghana attained Independence, and the information obtained has formed the basis of the recommendations made.

3.0.6 The recommendations for healing and reconciliation are set out first, followed by the institution-specific recommendations for reform, and then the general recommendations. The institution-specific recommendations for reform are also arranged in the order in which the Commission has published the reports in Vol. IV of the Commission's Report

3.1 RECOMMENDATIONS TO PROMOTE HEALING AND RECONCILIATION

3.1.1 All Ghanaians are obliged to seek and promote the good of Ghana, whatever our particular circumstances. We must recognise and accept that nation-building requires effort, sacrifice, self-sacrifice, time and patience. For the sake of our nation's future, we must endeavour to make our individual contributions to the nation-building effort so that we shall leave "footprints in the sands of time".

3.1.2 Many Ghanaians have suffered great wrongs at the hands of fellow citizens as well as the State itself through its office-holders at various points in time. The record of the Commission's work has told a miserable tale of the grievous wrongs and heinous crimes that have been perpetrated on Ghanaians by fellow Ghanaians. Office-holders have wielded the power of the State with little compassion, with the result that a lot of harm has been done to many Ghanaians. Many have suffered and many homes have been destroyed. Some Ghanaians have been killed with impunity, some have disappeared and families, to date, do not know whether they are dead or alive. Some Ghanaians have suffered severe tortures, both physical and psychological, from which they died, or have emerged with serious physical disabilities or mental illness. Some Ghanaians have suffered detention without trial, some for many years, for no just cause. Women, the mothers of the nation, have been humiliated in public and suffered acts of indignity that disgraced womanhood, and many prosperous businesses have collapsed, leaving their owners with debts from which they have been unable to recover. "Might makes right" has been the dominant philosophy of the leaders, "Keep yourself out of trouble" has been that of those who were in a position to make a difference to the victims of the atrocities. The recital of past woes could go on, until it drowned out hopes of a brighter future.

3.1.3 We must not be tied down to our past mistakes or misfortunes. Doing so would produce nothing but further suffering. Instead, we have to make serious efforts to put all the pains behind us, and help to build a new Ghana where the conditions that produced such pain and suffering would not be permitted to recur. Every Ghanaian must make a personal pledge that 'NEVER AGAIN!' shall such wrongs be a feature of governance or a feature of life in this beautiful land of our birth.

3.1.4 The State of Ghana must acknowledge the wrongs perpetrated against some of its citizens in its name, and in a spirit of true reconciliation, take steps to right the wrongs, however late or inadequate such measures might be. "It is never too late to mend" must be our nation's guiding principle as we seek to lay the ghosts of the past to rest.

3.1.5 The Commission therefore makes the following recommendations, fully mindful of the difficulties ahead, but assured that Ghanaians appreciate the need to make reparation for what has been suffered, and to initiate reforms that would enhance the sense of well-being and citizenship that many Ghanaians have lost.

3.1.6 Certain events have traumatised the spirit of the nation and have produced shocks within the system whose impact transcend the time and place of their occurrence, as well as even the generations of Ghanaians affected by them. The effects of the Preventive Detention Act of the early years of Independence, the Protective Custody Decrees and Protective Custody Law of NLC, NRC, SMC I, SMC II and PNDC eras, will take a long time to wear off. So also would be the effects of the cataclysmic events of the 112 days of AFRC rule as well as the abduction and murder of many citizens including three Judges of the High Court of Ghana, and a retired Military Officer on 30th June, 1982.

3.2 Specific Recommendations

3.2.1 The President, as Head of the Executive and Commander-in-Chief of the Ghana Armed Forces, should make a formal apology to all victims of violations and abuses perpetrated by holders of public office from 6th March, 1957 to 6th January, 1993.

3.2.2 Proposals for reparation to be made and those requiring medical treatment or institutional care have also been made, in the hope that the apology would be made real in the lives of the affected persons.

3.2.3 The three High Court Judges and the retired Army Officer were murdered on 30th June, 1982, on the orders of the highest Executive authority in the land. The Executive branch must make a full and unqualified apology to the families of the murdered Judges and the retired Army Officer.

3.2.4 An apology is owed to the families of all those who were killed, as well as those who have disappeared and whose whereabouts, to date, are unknown.

3.2.5 The Police Investigation Team that investigated the incident swiftly and thoroughly must be given national Honours for their persistence in carrying out the investigations to the end, in the face of official harassment and intimidation.

3.2.6 Members of the Police Investigative Team who suffered victimisation must be rehabilitated. Those still in exile must be assisted to return home and resettled. This would send clear signals to the Police that the State of Ghana expects, and appreciates professionalism and dedicated service from its Service men and women.

3.2.7 RECOGNITION OF MERITORIOUS SERVICE

3.2.7.1 Reactions of the Ghana Armed Forces to take-overs of constitutionally elected Governments by groups of Servicemen have been reprehensible:

- (a) On 13th January, 1972, there was no resistance against the coup;
- (b) On 4th June 1979, the Army Commander, Maj-Gen Neville Odattey-Wellington put in a respectable resistance but lacked support and was killed-in-action;
- (c) On 31st December 1981, 2Bn from Takoradi mobilised and moved to Accra, on the initiative of the Commanding Officer, Lt Col Samuel Ofori-Appiah, to fight the insurrection in the effort to defend the Constitution of Ghana and the lawfully constituted Government of the day.

3.2.7.2 It is significant to note that no other Unit from 1 Brigade in the Accra- Tema Garrison could be mobilised to resist the insurrection.

However, in both the 1979 and 1981 coups, a few Officers and Men demonstrated acts of leadership, bravery and loyalty in fighting the insurrections.

RECOMMENDATIONS FOR NATIONAL HONOURS AND AWARDS

3.2.7.3 The Commission deems it appropriate to accord recognition to these Officers and Men for their meritorious services and hereby recommends that they should be appropriately honoured with State Awards.

3.2.7.4 Citation – 1979 Loyal Officers and Men

3.2.7.4.1 The Late Maj-Gen Odattey Wellington: Then Army Commander, he displayed daring leadership, when leadership was urgently needed and got killed in action during the June 4th operations.

3.2.7.4.2 Major Abubakar Sulemana: As the Commanding Officer, Recce, he proved his worth as a brave and loyal Commander when he led the Recce Regiment to resist the June 4th rebellion, barely two weeks after he had bravely led a similar operation to quell the 15th May, 1979 uprising.

3.2.7.4.3 Major Abraham Reida: Then of Recce Regiment, he showed courage and dedication to duty during the June 4th operation. At the time when the other ranks were calling for the killing of all senior Officers, he stayed and fought bravely alongside the Recce troops.

3.2.7.4.4 Captain Ben Duah: An officer of Field Engineers, he showed loyalty and dedication to duty when as a Lieutenant, he decided during the June 4th revolt to fight alongside the loyal forces in defence of the established order against his own peers. He bravely fought and saved the lives of many senior Officers during that operation. He again showed loyalty to the State when he tried to resist the 31st December revolt. This act cost him his career in the Ghana Army.

3.2.7.4.5 Major Mahmoud Sita: An Officer Commanding a Recce Squadron, he displayed loyalty and total dedication to duty during the 4th June 1979 operations. He fought bravely to save the lives of many of his superiors at Recce Regiment.

3.2.7.4.6 WO I Joseph Mensah: Was the RSM, Recce Regiment at the time of the June 4th uprising. He remained loyal and totally committed to the profession. He fought bravely alongside Major Sulemana's loyal troops. He suffered greatly in the hands of the PNDC.

3.2.8 Citation – 1981 Loyal Unit, Officers and Men

3.2.8.1 The 2nd Battalion of Infantry must be recognised for:

- a. The conduct of the Officers and Men of the unit, from the moment the Warning Order for the operations in Accra was given at 07:30 hours, up to the time battle was joined in Accra at about 1900 Hours;
- b. The high standard of discipline shown by the Men in following their Officers into the operation without questioning, as trained soldiers must always maintain. Normally this would not have been unusual. However, this was the period when the Men in other units refused to take orders from their Officers. Some units did not fight back because the Officers knew the men would not follow them if they ordered them to fight; and
- c. Their unflinching loyalty to the State and the government of the day.

3.2.8.2 Lt Col Samuel Ofosu-Appiah: As the Commanding Officer, 2Bn, he showed courage, extreme loyalty and extraordinary dedication to duty when he led his battalion, the 2Bn from Takoradi to Accra to resist the 31st December revolt.

3.2.8.3 The late Major Omani Collison: Then OC 1 Recce Regiment, he displayed extreme courage and dedication to duty when in the heat of battle, he decided to brace all odds and run into the enemy arc of fire to pick an armoured car to resist the 31st December 1981 revolt. He unfortunately got killed-in-action.

3.2.8.4 Late Major Dassana S. Nantogma: Then the Brigade Major, 1 Bde HQ was picked up and cruelly murdered some days after he had resisted the 31st December revolt.

3.2.8.5 Captain Atta Mahmoud: Though a non-combatant from Base Ordinance Depot, he showed rare leadership and bravery when he led a band of soldiers to resist the 31st December 1981 revolt. It cost him his career and forced him into exile.

3.2.8.6 Capt. Charles Doughan to be honoured for the role he played in leading the force that was to attack the Gondar Barracks in 2Bn in the effort to foil the coup. Even though he did not reach his target because he was ambushed at the 37 Military Hospital roundabout, he managed to reorganise his troops again and planned for their successful escape from the ambush area, thus avoiding further casualties to his men.

3.2.8.7 Lt. Col J. M. Nyande: A Lieutenant of 2Bn to be honoured for leading his troops in an effort to capture the Ghana Broadcasting House that night. He showed bravery and great loyalty.

Inadequate forces and lack of timely support however made it impossible for him to defend the place when it was counter-attacked by armoured cars from Gondar Barracks.

3.2.8.8 WO I Kingsley Sarpong to be honoured posthumously for:

- a. His dedication to the service
- b. His loyalty to command
- c. His professionalism

3.2.8.9 R.S.M. Sarpong contributed greatly to build the 2nd Battalion into what made it rise to the occasion when it mattered most, i.e. the defence of the legitimate government of the country. He was shot in cold blood at the Barracks in Takoradi by one of the coup plotters from 2Bn, after he (the plotter) had been released from Nsawam Prisons on the success of the 31st December 1981 coup.

3.2.8.10 The Late Sgt. Seidu Azar: Then of the MI, he was gunned down in the early hours of the 31st December 1981 revolt by the mutineers while trying to gather intelligence for the loyal forces.

3.2.8.11 The Late Sgt. Kwaku Addai: Was one of the first soldiers to be contacted by Flt Lt Rawlings while planning the revolt, which had originally been scheduled for 24th December 1981. He showed loyalty by reporting the coup plot by Flt Lt Rawlings to the authorities. This led to the arrest of the conspirators in 2Bn. He further joined Lt Col Ofosu-Appiah to Accra to fight Flt Lt Rawlings and his band of mutineers. He was indeed a brave and loyal soldier. He ended up in exile and shortly after he had appeared before the NRC, he died.

3.2.9 AWARDS

3.2.9.1 It is recommended that

- a) A commemorative Statue be erected at 2Bn Barracks in Aprembo, Takoradi; and
- b) Appropriate National Awards be presented to these officers, WOs and SNCOs.

3.2.9.2 The existence of indemnity clauses under the Transitional Provisions to the 1992 Constitution has remained a sore point with many whose rights were abused by the PNDC government and its appointees. These clauses were not permitted to be debated by the Consultative Assembly in 1992 before insertion into the Draft Constitution. Although the Draft Constitution was later subjected to a referendum, the mode of its handling made it impossible for those who wished for a return to constitutional government, but who disapproved of the clauses, from expressing that preference. A stable constitutional order cannot be founded on injustice and impunity on the part of wrong-doers, matched by a deep sense of grievance by many citizens. The indemnity clauses must be subjected to a referendum once again, so that the democratic mechanisms might assist the nation to resolve this matter for all time.

3.2.9.3 The Commission strongly recommends the establishment of a Trauma and Counselling Centre in every Regional and District Hospital.

INSTITUTIONAL REFORMS

3.3 THE SECURITY SERVICES

THE GHANA ARMED FORCES

3.3.1 Working Relationship between Political and Military Authorities

It is imperative that the working relationship between the Political and Military authorities at the top echelon of Command and Control should be cordial at all times. It is important that there is mutual understanding and respect between

- a) The Commander-in- Chief and the military High Command
- b) The Minister of Defence and the Chief of Defence Staff (CDS); and
- c) The CDS and his Service Commanders.

To this end, it is recommended that orientation and training be given to the Commander-in-Chief and Ministers on the one hand and the CDS and his Service/Unit Commanders on the other. Joint training sessions should be encouraged to enable each group appreciate the mode of working of the other.

3.3.2 Upholding Military Chain of Command

It is important that Political Authority, in the exercise of control over the Armed Forces and should know, respect and uphold the Military Chain of Command to avoid undermining Command Authority, and avoid undue interference. The Minister of Defence should appreciate the necessity of dealing with the Military through the established Command Structure, and discourage contacts with other levels of the Military Hierarchy, except as prescribed by the Chain of Command.

3.3. 3. Cohesion of the Command Structure and the Officer Corps

3.3.3.1 Breakdown of discipline in the Armed Forces resulting from the collapse of the Command Structure and the Officer Corps generated a reign of terror and the many acts of brutalities that the civilian population was made to suffer at the hands Junior Ranks, during periods of military regimes.

3.3.3.2 Collapse of Command and Control was also evident in the insecurity that was bred when allegations of coup plotting were made in such a fashion that trust and confidence among troops were undermined, with severe consequences for morale.

3.3.3.3 It is extremely important that in the supreme interest of the nation, cohesion of the Command Structure and the Officer Corps should be guarded in all circumstances to provide leadership and maintain discipline.

3.3.4 Operational Imperatives

3.3.4.1 It is imperative that appropriate measures are taken by the CDS and his Service Commanders to ensure that under no circumstance; in particular, in times of operational crises and emergencies, such as the situation of 31st December, 1981, should the command structure be allowed to disintegrate, to the extent that the CDS loses complete contact with his Service Commanders.

3.3.4.2 Contingencies to militarily contain or oppose, by the use of force, any attempt to destabilize the State by a coup, should be well planned and instituted. Procedures for activating these contingencies should be fully detailed and understood and rehearsed by appropriate Commanders and Principal Staff Officers who ought to know about the existence of such contingencies and the procedures to activate them.

3.3.5 Use Of Intelligence

3.3.5.1 The success of an attack on the system, as happened on the 31st December, 1981, would be determined largely by the absence of effective coordination among the political authorities, security establishments and the Military High Command. Intelligence is supposed to provide the necessary information to produce coordinated action. Therefore use of intelligence should be given top-most priority.

3.3.5.2 Systems should be instituted to enable intelligence to be shared by all parties requiring same, for action to be taken. It is important that all Intelligence Reports, especially those that affect the security of the State, be thoroughly investigated and the results shared with the relevant security institutions, to enable appropriate and coordinated action to be taken. No Intelligence Report pertaining to threats to State security should remain un-investigated, however apparently trivial. Failure to handle Intelligence information with despatch, should be treated as a major dereliction of duty, and sanctioned accordingly.

3.3.6 Political Education

3.3.6.1 Officers, Men and Women in the Armed Forces require political education as part of their training. They should be educated to understand that the Armed Forces operate under civilian political authority as represented by the President of the Republic as the Commander-in-Chief, and the Minister of Defence as the Government's political representative in the Armed Forces.

3.3.6.2 Training Curricula should be developed to effect a re-orientation. Such Training should aim at educating them on the role of the Military in constitutional governance; inculcate in them respect for the Constitution; emphasize traditional Military values of loyalty to the State; and cultivate respect for civilian authority.

3.3.6.3 In designing the Curricula and training, use should be made of the expertise of experienced retired Military personnel and resources in existing educational institutions.

3.3.7 Discipline

3.3.7.1 Members of the Armed Forces should be made to appreciate the value of the existing Military Regulations against non-participation in partisan politics. These Regulations should be strictly enforced by the Military High Command. Service personnel should be constantly reminded that those interested in holding political office, must resign from Service.

3.3.7.2 Military personnel should be educated to understand that they are subject to the civil law and so must conduct themselves in an orderly manner outside barracks. Military Police should perform their policing duties with diligence, to control behaviour of Service personnel, especially outside barracks.

3.3.7.3 Commanders at all levels should enforce Military Discipline in barracks in order to maintain the image of the Ghana Armed Forces as a disciplined Institution.

3.3.7.4 Misuse Of Military Personnel By Civilians

3.3.7.4.1 Service personnel involved in irregular interventions in civilian matters should be severely disciplined.

3.3.8. Communication

3.3.8.1 It is important that good channels of communication are established within the Security Institutions to promote better understanding between the High Command which constitutes the decision-making echelon and the rest who implement the decisions. The holding of Durbars by Commanders with their Officers, Men and Women should be made an administrative imperative and practised regularly.

3.3.8.2 Mechanisms for providing redress for grievances should be respected and implemented.

3.3.8.3 It is equally important that the Parliamentary Oversight Committee responsible for Defence interact more often with the Armed Forces to promote better understanding and to enable Parliament to have better knowledge of the operations of the Ghana Armed Forces.

3.3.8.4 In the same vein the Armed Forces, Police and Prison Councils should establish procedures to enable them have better information on the workings and state of affairs of the Security Institutions over which they have oversight responsibilities.

3.3.9. Recruitment

3.3.9.1 Detailed vetting of prospective soldiers should be conducted in all recruitment exercises to ensure that only the best are recruited. Positive vetting, as practised in the Police Service, should be carried out in the Armed Forces during recruitment. Candidates selected for training as Service personnel, should be subjected to serious high level security screening before commencement of Recruit Training.

3.3.9.2 Selection of candidates for training as Officers should take into account moral quality, as well as a thorough screening and verification of individual's character before being accepted for training as Commissioned Officers.

3.3.10 The Need To Maintain Ethnic And Regional Balance

3.3.10.1 To ensure the maintenance of ethnic balance in the GAF, regional quota system for recruitment of Officers, Men and Women should be implemented. This is best facilitated by recruitment undertaken at the regional centres.

3.3.10.2 There should be a conscious policy to address issues of ethnicity and nationhood to improve the "national aspects" of military personnel. Educational programmes to address the dangers of ethnic biases and prejudices in a national army, should be developed to build morale better esprit de corps and patriotism within the institution..

3.3.11 Training

3.3.11.1 It is the duty of the Armed Forces to have good training schools with efficient instructors. Adequate training facilities should be made available to train Armed Forces personnel. Training schools should be equipped with modern gadgets to enable trainees benefit from their training. Advantage should be taken of advanced technology, to bring soldiers up to world-class standards. Anything short of this will spell disaster for the Armed Forces, as there is no shortcut to efficiency.

3.3.11.2 Training of Officers should inculcate into them good leadership, qualities of courage, competence and ability to exercise initiative, make decisions, and to take responsibility for them.

3.3.11.3 A policy of continuous character assessment should be pursued throughout the training period. An Officer Cadet assessed to have a questionable character should be withdrawn from training at the Military Academy.

3.3.11.4 Continuation or in-service training should go on for as long as the Officer, Men and Women continue to serve. This is vital to help him/her cope with his or her assignment as he or she progresses in the service and assumes more weightier responsibilities.

3.3.11.5 Training for Officers, Men and Women should cover the sensitive but important issues of Lawful Order. Other Ranks, in particular, should be educated enough to appreciate what order is lawful or unlawful and be capable of differentiating between the two.

3.3.11.6 The culture of bullying and abuse of the vulnerable in military training institutions should be discontinued.

3.3.11.7 Training should reflect humanitarian values and therefore include courses on the Geneva Conventions on Humanitarian Law as well as Rules of War regarding the treatment of civilians and Prisoners of War. Early introduction to certain aspects of Military Law, Criminal Law and Civics would be beneficial.

3.3.12 Service Conditions

3.3.12.1 Salary

3.3.12.1.1 It is important that in view of the enormous risks that service personnel face in the performance of their duties, they should be adequately remunerated, relative to prevailing salaries in the country. Discontent over salary and other conditions of service open service personnel up to temptation.

3.3.12.1.2 Service personnel are not permitted to unionise. Therefore, a mechanism for periodic review should be put in place to ensure that there is no room for agitation occasioned by stagnation in salary levels.

3.3.12.2 Accommodation

3.3.12.2.1 Suitable accommodation in barracks should be provided to all service personnel. This is to ensure that service personnel are reasonably settled and that the burden of running around to settle their families is eliminated to enable them to concentrate on the official duties.

Accommodating service personnel in barracks would also facilitate general mobilization in times of emergencies.

3.3.12.3 Counselling

3.3.12.3.1 The risks to which Service personnel are exposed on a daily basis, require the intervention of counsellors. Counselling services, especially trauma counselling, should be instituted to address the mental health of Service personnel.

3.3.12.3.2 Specialised career-guidance services within the Service should be made available to enable personnel pursue fulfilling careers and thus eliminate career-related frustration, and burnouts that produce substance-abuse.

3.3.12.4 Promotions

3.3.12.4.1 Regulations on promotions should be strictly adhered to, in order not to create disaffection within the Service.

3.3.12.5 Compensation For Deaths And Injuries

3.3.12.5.1 To motivate Armed Forces personnel to perform their duties conscientiously, and with total loyalty and commitment, compensations paid to them and their beneficiaries when death occurs and when serious injuries are sustained on national duties should be adequate. Regulations governing such compensations should be regularly reviewed to ensure that they retain realistic values.

3.3.12.6 Release

3.3.12.6.1 Armed Forces Regulations make provision for releasing from service, those who cannot pass their promotions examinations, and those who have been overtaken in rank by their subordinates. The Regulations should be strictly enforced such that those who are required to be released, would be so released without delay. This will prevent those who are frustrated on account of lack of promotion from continuing to remain in the service, and adversely affecting morale. Such service personnel also constitute a danger as they become open to negative external influences.

3.3.12.6.2 All officers and men who display incompetence, or exhibit frustration, disaffection or discontentment, must, in accordance with the Armed Forces Regulations, be released immediately from the Armed Forces.

3.3.12.6.3 Commanding Officers should appreciate the value of Discharge Books, and should complete the documentation with due sense of responsibility. Discharge books should accurately reflect the reasons and circumstances for the premature release of service personnel.

3.3.12.7 Resettlement And Rehabilitation

3.3.12.7.1 Pre-release counselling should be instituted as an integral part of release and resettlement procedures.

3.3.12.7.2 The existing policy of resettlement and rehabilitation of officers, men and women should be implemented with consistency. In this regard, it is absolutely essential that those who lack employable skills be re-trained and thereby offered the opportunity for easy re-integration into civil life.

3.3.12.8 Messes And Canteens

3.3.12.8.1 It is strongly recommended that life in the officers' messes and the WOs, SNCOs and Other Ranks (ORs) canteens should be reactivated. This will help bring the service men and women together and thereby strengthen the esprit de corps within the Units, Bases and Stations. Service Commanders and Commanding Officers should ensure their reactivation, and encourage patronage.

3.3.12.9 Schools For The Children Of Service Personnel

3.3.12.9.1 To a very large extent, there are good facilities for the education of children and dependents of Service personnel, but there is plenty of room for improvement. When children of service personnel have good schools to attend in barracks, parents are free to concentrate on their job of defending the nation.

3.3.13 Secondment To Civil Institutions

3.3.13.1 The practice of seconding officers and SNCOs to civilian organizations should be discouraged. The bearing and orientation of military personnel tend to be adversely affected when they are placed in civilian establishments which have different work culture and orientation.

3.3.13.2 The enjoyment of the perquisites of civilian office had adverse effects on their fellow soldiers who did not have access to such facilities. This bred envy and destroyed morale in the Service.

3.3.15 Human Resource Issues And Logistics

3.3.15.1 It is the responsibility of Government to ensure that the GAF have adequate manpower and logistic support, especially transportation, communication, engineering, and medical equipment, maintenance facilities, clothing and other important operational stores to professionally execute their functions as enshrined in the Constitution and prescribed in National Defence Policy.

3.3.16 Officer-Man Relationship

3.3.16.1 Officers should ensure that their relationship with Other Ranks is good. The Men and Women constituting the Other Ranks must first and foremost be treated humanely. The officer should ensure that the welfare of the service personnel and their families is well taken care of.

3.3.17 Use Of Intelligence

3.3.17.1 Intelligence gathering organizations of the Security Services in the country should critically and meticulously check information received and when found to be fabricated, the originators of such false information should be severely dealt with. Training of Personnel for Intelligence duties should emphasise the need to treat information with circumspection until its veracity has been confirmed.

3.3.18 Military–Civilian Relations

3.3.18.1 The military as an institution should intensify its efforts in improving relations between it and the civilian population. Open days should be held more often to afford civilians an opportunity to experience life in the Armed Forces and to better appreciate their role as their protectors and not their oppressors.

3.3.18.2 Seconded military personnel also undermined the work the culture of the civilian organisations into which they were introduced, with the result that they became the objects of hatred. These negative feelings were this extended to the military institution as a whole

THE POLICE SERVICE

3.3.19 Modernisation Of The Police Service-Justice Archer Commission

3.3.19.1 Since Independence, the Police Service has not undergone any major transformation. It is imperative that the Report of the Justice Archer Commission on the structure, organization and operation of the Ghana Police Service be reviewed and the recommendations implemented.

3.3.20 Decentralisation Of Police Command

3.3.20.1 The Police Service is over centralized with over-concentration of power in the hands of the Inspector General of Police (IGP). This must be reviewed and decentralisation embarked upon with power, authority and responsibility devolving on the Regional Commanders to police their own regions. The Police Headquarters should become the centre for policy formulation and analysis and monitoring of the Regional Commands.

3.3.20.2 Decentralisation must impact on the decision-making mechanism and sharing of responsibility with local and administrative authorities at the Regional and District levels.

3.3.20.3 Decentralisation of operational Command must be pursued. For instance, the situation on 31st December 1981 when the Armoured Car Unit of the Police Service could not be mobilized to fight in support of Government because the IGP was not available is strategically and operationally unacceptable. The command structure should be reviewed and decentralized to make it possible for one of his deputies to assume Operational Command responsibility.

3.3.20.4 The inclusion of the IGP on the Advisory Board which also considers promotions creates concentration of power in one person's hand. This should be reviewed.

3.3.20.5 The promotion of Junior Ranks in the Police Service should not involve the IGP directly although he may remain the authority to whom complaints of unfair dealings and appeals in respect of promotions may be made.

3.3.21 Recruitment

3.3.21.1 A National Police Service

3.3.21.1.1 Efforts must be made to ensure that the Police Service has representation from every ethnic group in the country, as policing involves every community. Marginalised groups should be identified and given special encouragement to provide suitable candidates for enlistment.

3.3.21.2 Vetting Of Candidates

3.3.21.2.1 All persons entering the Police Service must undergo Positive Vetting to ensure their moral integrity.

3.3.22 Training And Education

3.3.22.1 With the rapid social transformation and democratic governance in our contemporary times, the Police Service must be aware of the necessity to provide good, qualitative and professional training and awareness programmes, if the personnel are to properly fulfil their mission. Training should educate Police Officers, Men and Women that he or she is the custodian of the law and not above it and it is expected of them to conduct themselves within the law.

3.3.22.2 The training curriculum must be redesigned to include intelligence gathering, awareness and training modules more closely linked to social realities, such as ethnic relations, human rights, common local problems of chronic lawlessness, street delinquency, domestic violence and youth problems.

3.3.22.3 The existing poor training infrastructure and facilities must be replaced with modern and up-to-date equipment to provide for a healthy training environment.

3.3.22.4 Re-training and other forms of in-service training should be instituted to ensure that all serving personnel are equipped with skills and up-to date information on modern policing.

3.3.22.5 Training For Senior Police Officers

3.3.22.5.1 There is the requirement for a senior training institution to provide Senior Police Officers with the requisite professional skills and knowledge which will prepare them to effectively and efficiently assume Senior Command and Staff Appointment in the Police Service. It is important to review the social content within Police Training Institutions, which inculcate the culture of abuse of power in service personnel.

3.3.23 Service Conditions

3.3.23.1 Salary

3.3.23.1.1 Police personnel are not permitted to unionise, nor to embark on industrial action. Therefore, a mechanism for periodic review of salaries allowances and other emoluments should be put in place to ensure that they keep pace with economic trends in the country.

3.3.23.2 Accommodation

3.3.23.2.1 The state of police accommodation in this country is deplorable. Efforts must be made to provide suitable accommodation, and also keep maintained, premises for the use of Police personnel. This is to ensure that Police personnel are reasonably settled, particularly in rural areas or other difficult locations. There should be more construction of barracks, as living within the community provides too many opportunities for corruption and poor enforcement of the law.

3.3.23.3 Counselling

3.3.23.3.1 The risks to which Service personnel are exposed on a daily basis, require the intervention of counsellors. Counselling services, especially trauma counselling, should be instituted to address the mental health of Service personnel, and reduce the incidence of substance-abuse.

3.3.23.4 Promotions

3.3.23.4.1 Regulations on promotions should be strictly adhered to, in order not to create disaffection within the Service.

3.3.23.5 Compensation For Deaths And Injuries

3.3.23.5.1 To motivate Police personnel to perform their duties with diligence and commitment, compensations payable to them and their beneficiaries when death occurs and when serious injuries are sustained on national duties should be reviewed to ensure that the provisions of the Workmen's compensation Law adequately respond to the emerging needs of the Service.

3.3.23.6 Discharge

3.3.23.6.1 The Regulations governing discharges should be strictly adhered to, in order to prevent abuse of the system and other forms of victimisation being perpetrated against personnel.

3.3.23.6.2 Superior Officers should appreciate the value of Discharge Books, and should complete the documentation with due sense of responsibility. Discharge books should accurately reflect the reasons and circumstances for the discharge of personnel.

3.3.23.7 Resettlement And Rehabilitation

3.3.23.7.1 A policy of resettlement should be designed for serving personnel. Arrangements should be made to enable those who are unsuitable for active service to be discharged and resettled. Counselling should be instituted as an integral part of life in the Police Service, to reduce the number of burnt out personnel whose activities bring dishonour to the Service.

3.3.24 Professionalism And Police Ethics

3.3.24.1 Identification of role of the Police Service as a public service, in accordance with democratic values, must transcend all organizational levels and demonstrate a professional ethic based on accountability, impartiality, Police dignity and recognition of the value of their work.

3.3.24.2 Abuse of power continues to be a problem. The training of officers should emphasise the importance of respecting the bounds of their authority and using the power conferred on them by the State responsibly.

3.3.24.3 The raising of unauthorised barriers for the purpose of extorting money from drivers and passengers as well as the use of Police vehicles to facilitate the commission of crime are problems that must be tackled by the Police administration in earnest. Officers-in-charge of areas where unauthorised barriers are found must receive official censure for inadequate supervision of subordinate staff.

3.3.25 Corruption

3.3.25.1 Corruption in the Police Service is a major obstacle that must be overcome in working towards an efficient and responsive Police Service. The inefficacy of laws are traceable to poor enforcement occasioned by corruption. Strenuous efforts must be made to tackle this problem. Police authorities must devise mechanisms for monitoring the lifestyles and conduct of Police personnel to ensure that the transaction costs of corruption would be raised to levels that would discourage corrupt practices.

3.3.25.2 A new Code of Conduct must be formulated to check corruption. The Police administration must establish an office of Internal Policing. This office, whose existence should be widely publicised, should be tasked to receive complaints of corruption and extortion from the general public, and act on them.

3.3.25.2 It is further recommended that regular spot-checks must be instituted by the Police Administration at the various barriers to check extortion and corruption.

3.3.25.3 Service personnel must be motivated with improved conditions of service, including provision of adequate equipment and emoluments, to improve their self-respect and institutional loyalty.

3.3.26 Standing Orders

3.3.26.1 The Police Standing Orders must be reviewed in the light of the history of Human Rights violations and abuses in Ghana and the need to nurture democratic culture.

3.3.26.2 Modern techniques on crowd control and conduct of Police Investigations should be studied and incorporated into the reviewed Standing Orders.

3.3.26.3 Live ammunition should not be used to control crowds, and the Standing Orders must prohibit this.

3.3.27 Community Partnership

3.3.27.1 New community and problem-solving approaches to policing, based on closer contact and co-operation with society, through institutions, community organizations or the citizens themselves, must be encouraged and sustained.

3.3.27.2 The Police Service should open to the public to improve police-public relations, and thereby improve policing in general.

PRISON SERVICE

3.3.28 Human Rights Education For Prison Officers

3.3.28.1 Prison Officers should be given human rights education to enable them to appreciate the rights of prisoners. They should also be trained to perform their duties in a humane manner.

3.3.29 Enhancing Career Prospects For Prison Officers

3.3.29.1 The Prison Service has enough well-trained personnel to run the institution at its highest level. Care should therefore be taken in introducing into the Service, persons from other institutions who block the career progression of professional Prison Officers, and thereby affect institutional morale.

3.3.29.2 Persons introduced into the Service from other institutions tend to bring with them orientations different from those of the Prisons Service, as well as a lack of appreciation of the essence of the Prison system.

3.3.30 Advanced Training For Senior Prison Officers

3.3.30.1 Facilities should be developed for the training of the senior core of the Prison Service and the practice of sending Senior Prison Officers to train with the Military in the Senior Staff Course should be discouraged in order to enhance institutional self-confidence and identity.

3.3.30.2 Home grown programmes for the formation of the Senior Command should be developed to facilitate the managerial competence of the Superior Officers.

3.3.31 Service Conditions

3.3.31.1 Salary

3.3.31.1.1 As all persons in the Security Services, Prison Service personnel are not permitted to unionise. Consequently, there should be a mechanism for periodic review of salaries allowances and other emoluments to ensure that they keep pace with economic trends and with those of the other Security Services in the country.

3.3.31.2 Accommodation

3.3.31.2.1 Accommodation for Prison Officers must receive attention as the nature of the job requires that they live close to the prison facility. Existing accommodation facilities are in a poor state and must be refurbished to improve morale in the Service.

3.3.32.3 Counselling

3.3.32.3.1 The risks to which Prison Service personnel are exposed as a result of the now more sophisticated nature of the prison population, require the intervention of counsellors. Counselling services should be instituted to address the mental health of personnel, and thereby reduce the incidence of substance-abuse.

3.3.32.3.2 The modern system and philosophy of Prisons would require that Prison Officers be properly equipped with the necessary counselling skills to be able to help in the reform and rehabilitation of prisoners in their care.

3.3.32.4 Promotions

3.3.32.4.1 Regulations on promotions should be strictly adhered to, in order not to create disaffection within the Service.

3.3.32.5 Compensation For Deaths And Injuries

3.3.32.5.1 An appropriate compensation system should be designed for Prison Officers who get injured on duty, such as injury resulting from handling prison riots, jailbreaks and dealing with violent inmates.

3.3.32.6 Discharge

3.3.32.6.1 The Regulations governing discharges should be strictly adhered to, in order to prevent abuse of the system and other forms of victimisation being perpetrated against personnel.

3.3.32.7 Resettlement And Rehabilitation

3.3.32.7.1 A policy of resettlement should be designed for serving personnel. Arrangements should be made to enable those who are unsuitable for active service to be discharged and resettled.

3.3.32.7.2 The provision of trade skills training should not be limited to prisoners, but be open to Officers as part of a resettlement scheme to enable those who ought to be discharged from the service, to take advantage of existing facilities. There is the need for more re-training resources.

3.3.32.8 Transportation

3.3.32.8.1 There is a need to provide adequate transportation facilities for all Prison establishments. Reliance on private taxis for transporting prisoners to court, opens up Prison Officers to unnecessary risk.

3.3.32.8.2 Lack of transportation in prison Establishments for conveying Service personnel as well as prisoners to hospitals must be urgently addressed.

3.3.33 Medical Facilities

3.3.33.1 Facilities in prisons do not create atmosphere for good and quick medical response. Provision of adequate transportation facilities and manpower to cater for the medical needs of prison inmates, including prisoners, detainees and those on remand, especially for their movement to and from hospitals should be addressed as a matter of utmost urgency.

3.3.33.2 Clinics attached to various Prison establishments should be re-activated to offer health services to both Officers and prisoners. The State should revisit the idea of providing a full complement of Medical Staff at the major Prison Clinics, which have all the necessary basic structures such as Out Patient Department, Laboratory, Dispensary, Consulting Rooms, Theatre and Wards.

3.3.33.3 Joint medical and judicial teams should be put in place and charged with the sole responsibility of moving around all the prisons, and police cells, within the country, once or twice a year, not only to ascertain the health condition of inmates, but also to survey the facilities.

3.3.33.4 Visits To Prisons

3.3.33.4.1 The Prison-Visiting Committee programme must be re-activated to enable judicial oversight of prisoners and prison conditions to ensure humane conditions in the Prisons. Visits of this Committee also enable longstanding, sometimes even forgotten, cases of remand prisoners, to be brought to the attention of appropriate authorities.

3.3.35 Burial Of Executed Persons

3.3.35.1 Until capital punishment is formally abolished in Ghana, specific rules and regulations should be observed to make the execution of death sentences by hanging or execution by firing squad, as humane as possible. These regulations must be in conformity with the United Nations Minimum Standards on Treatment of Prisoners.

3.3.35.2 Even in death, those executed deserve the ultimate respect and dignity required in burial rites forms; i.e. burial in coffins, in properly marked graves and according to properly accepted customs and religious sensitivity.

3.4 LEGAL PROFESSION (INCLUDING THE JUDICIARY)

3.4.1 Human Rights education should form part of Continuing Judicial Education to make them more sensitive to human rights issues.

3.4.2 Judges need to appreciate the role of the courts in a new nation so that they would be able to maintain the necessary balance between the government and the citizen.

3.4.3 Judges need to appreciate their role in maintenance of constitutional government. They should not swear any usurper into office. The usurpation of State power must remain an illegitimate act for all time.

3.4.4 Lawyers need to appreciate the role of the courts in governance so that they do not lead the way in ousting the jurisdiction of the courts.

3.4.5 The Ghana Bar Association (GBA), and its leaders deserve commendation for remaining steadfast in pointing out the need to respect the human rights of the citizenry, and for helping to defend those rights, particularly for the indigent.

3.4.6 The GBA deserves commendation for instituting the Martyr's Day celebration, and maintaining it in the face of official harassment and intimidation.

3.4.7 Lawyers, particularly ambitious young lawyers, have often been the ones who flocked to the banner of usurpers and lent them the image of legitimacy. In turn, such young lawyers also attained prominence out of proportion with their personal achievements in the profession. Accepting an appointment to serve in a usurper government must be condemned as an immoral act, and an affront to the Ethics of the profession. All such persons must be sanctioned when constitutional government is restored.

3.4.8 Lawyers, in particular the GBA, should be encouraged to make their voices heard even during periods of constitutional rule, so that the government would receive necessary direction and dispassionate criticism in its conduct of governance, and its respect for human rights.

3.4.9 Discipline from within an independent arm of government, is better for the maintenance of institutional independence, than discipline from outside the institution. The Office of the Chief Justice should institute effective mechanisms for policing the conduct of Judges and Magistrates and instituting disciplinary measures. This is necessary in order not to make the discipline of Judges and Magistrates an item on the political agenda of any government.

3.4.10 Judges, especially Judges of the Superior Courts, should live above reproach to prevent putting themselves in the power of the Executive, and so being open to improper influences by the Executive.

3.4.11 Appointments to the Judiciary must involve a good and objective system of assessment of character, as the requirements of fair adjudication demand a high degree of personal integrity.

3.4.12 The convention regarding assumption of positions in the Judiciary by seniority, should be respected and adhered to, as far as the requirements of efficiency would permit, as such conventions remove the incentive for ambitious juniors to jockey for positions by currying favour with the Executive.

3.4.13 The Law Reporting systems should be overhauled to enable judgments to be available for comment and criticism within a reasonable time. Reporting judgments within a reasonable time provides an invaluable mechanism for learning by Judges as well as for self-criticism in pursuing the difficult task of adjudication.

3.4.14 Merit should be the means for upward progression and not political patronage. To this end, mechanisms for fair assessment of output should be devised, instituted and applied in a transparent manner. In like manner, those found to be consistently below standard should be removed or permitted to take early retirement. This would ensure the maintenance of standards that retain the respect of the citizenry.

3.4.15 Continuing judicial education involving emerging socio-economic trends, should be instituted to improve the knowledge-base, intellectual approach of Judges and familiarity with emerging social issues and socio-economic trends in the country. This is necessary as many Judges tend to live secluded lives that are shielded from the realities of the lives of ordinary citizens.

3.4.16 Respect for Law should be cultivated in the legal profession, through legal education.

3.4.17 Speedy gazetting of new legislation serves a useful function, and should not be abandoned as a means of publicizing the effective date of application of new legislation. It is difficult to believe that a Law purportedly made on 3rd December, 1991 would be gazetted only on 12th February, 1993.

3.4.18 Access to justice is a basic right in a democracy, and so all facilities needed to reduce the length of delay that cases suffer should be instituted as a measure to improve Judiciary-citizen relationship.

3.4.19 There should be better accountability within the Office of Attorney-General, for the use of ministerial discretionary such as the decision to prosecute or not prosecute a case, as well as the use of nolle prosequi to discontinue prosecutions. Some of these powers have been abused, usually for personal profit, and caused disaffection for the legal system in general, and the system of criminal justice in particular.

3.4.20 The Parliament that re-enacted the PDA deserves censure for failing to keep a check on the Executive, when it became clear that the PDA was a dangerous weapon in the hands of the Executive.

3.4.21 The exercise of the Prerogative of Mercy should be done with circumspection so as not to feed notions of impunity among members of the Security Services.

3.4.22 The rights of accused persons should be respected at all times. The maxim "It is better for ninety-nine guilty persons to escape, than for one innocent person to suffer" should be remembered at all times, and therefore securing a conviction at all costs must not be seen as a virtue, as this encourages the resort to unorthodox methods to secure same.

3.4.23 Torture in all its manifestations must be outlawed within the legal system by specific municipal legislation as Ghana is signatory to the United Nations Convention Against Torture.

3.4.24 The use of torture to extract confessions must be seen as a means that is unworthy of a civilized legal system. The rules on admissibility of voluntary confessions should be strictly upheld and applied, in order to remove the incentive for investigators to use unorthodox methods to extract confessions.

3.4.25 There should be more accountability of the BNI for the suspects processed by the institution. To this end, there must be a system of reporting between the BNI and the courts, to ensure that anyone processed but not charged, would feature on the Returns that must be made to the courts, in much the same way as the Police are required to do under the Criminal procedure Code, 1960 (Act 30). This would reduce the extent of abuse of the BNI's powers of detention

3.4.26 In making laws, lawmakers should observe the tradition and practices in existence and ensure that all legislation, particularly penal legislation, is prospective. Although Article 107 of the Constitution, 1992, prohibits retroactive legislation, the importance of it must be generally accepted and appreciated by the citizenry, that justice requires that laws do not take retrospective effect. Such acceptance would ensure that the constitutional provision is respected in its letter and spirit.

3.4.27 Laws have to be given their own numbers instead of being tagged onto others. For instance PNDCL 305 is the Illegal Seizure of Ivorian and Ghanaian Farms (Abatement of Proceedings) Law, 1992; PNDCL 305A is Patents Law, 1992; PNDCL 305B is Food and Drugs Law, 1992; PNDCL 305C is Veterinary Surgeons Law, 1992 and 305D is Refugees Law. These Laws have nothing in common and should have been dignified with numbers of their own. Such practice would also preserve the appearance of orderliness in the drafting of legislation.

3.4.28 Laws have to be numbered serially, according to the chronological order of when they were made. This would ensure the appearance, again, of orderliness in the drafting of legislation. It should never happen for an earlier enactment to take a number subsequent to one that was purportedly made later, as in the case of PNDCL 315 purportedly made on 3rd December, 1991 whilst all the preceding ones were made in 1992 or early 1993. Nor should it be the case that a later law would bear an earlier number as in the case of Trustees Incorporation (Amendment) Law, 1993 (PNDCL 311), made on 6th January, 1993 but, Council for Indigenous Business Association Law, 1993 (PNDCL 312) purportedly made on 5th January, 1993 and Ghana Institute of Management and Public Administration Law, 1993 (PNDCL 318) also made on 5th January, 1993.

3.4.29 Laws targeted at particular individuals, i.e ad hominem legislation should not be the feature of a civilised legal system. The governments of NLC, SMC and PNDC passed too many such Decrees and Laws. They are a blot on the statute-books.

3.5 RECOMMENDATIONS/ REFORMS – MEDIA (BOTH PRINT AND ELECTRONIC)

3.5.0.1 The Media is known as the 'Fourth Estate of the realm'. This means that it has a role in governance just as the Executive, Legislature and the Judiciary. It is the platform on which and through which the citizenry express approval or otherwise of how it is being governed; it is the means through which the populace can make known to politicians and to each other its concerns and convictions in matters of the common good in democratic governance; it is the political estate which informs the public of its rights and responsibilities; and above all; it is charged with the constitutional mandate to hold government accountable.

3.5.0.2 It therefore requires safeguards of its rights and tutelage of its responsibilities. It also, therefore, requires actors – media women and men – who know these human and social rights and responsibilities and are prepared to uphold them at all costs.

3.5.0.3 On the current media landscape, thanks to the existence of the National Media Commission and the repeal of the Criminal Libel law, the media are safe from threats of human rights violations and abuse that past practitioners suffered, in the course of executing their professional duties. and to the imminent enactment of the Freedom of Information Bill,

3.5.0.4 What remains to be done is how to help the media make responsible use of the various freedoms, rights and means given them towards upholding the common good of the citizenry and enhancing democratic governance. The enactment of the Freedom of Information Bill should also advance this cause.

Recommendations/ Reforms

3.5.1 The passage of the Freedom of Information Bill (FOI) be hastened to give journalists access to official information to disseminate to the public because government business is public business and the public have a right to know.

3.5.2 Courts should appreciate the work of journalists so as not to issue orders that may have the effect of gagging editors and preventing them from publishing information aimed at exposing corruption or human rights violations by officialdom.

3.5.3 The UN Declaration of Human Rights that allows persons to receive and disseminate information must be respected. People must be encouraged to provide accurate information to journalists, whilst at the same time discouraging false and malicious information, in order to facilitate the performance of their role in holding government to account.

3.5.4 The government, as the dominant player in the economy, should not use advertisement as a tool to intimidate editors of independent media houses either by refusing to place advertisement in their media or stop placing them in a bid to influence their editorial policy.

3.5.5 The government, as the dominant player in the economy, should also be seen to be supporting the development of the privately-owned media as they provide alternative perspectives to government and to governance issues

3.5.6 To prevent vilification and de-legitimization of constitutional governments in power, it is suggested that journalism training institutions intensify teaching of constitutional principles and the importance of constitutional governance and its processes.

3.5.7 The Management of Media Organisations must be seen providing support to journalists who offend the government in the course of their work. Leaving journalists alone to face the might of the Executive can offer no incentive to good investigative journalism, or the exhibition of courageous journalism.

3.5.8 The teaching of media social responsibility must be strengthened to produce journalists, conscious of the need to exercise discretion and responsibility in the publication of news items that can undermine national stability in a young and developing democracy. Ultimately, however, the sense of ownership and patriotism should inform the exercise of the media's social responsibility.

3.5.9 The curricula of journalism training institutions should be reviewed to include human rights education, as well as the value of a free and independent press.

3.6 RECOMMENDATIONS /REFORMS ON LABOUR

3.6.1 Trade Union leaders must recognize that they function better under constitutional rule as there is little effort to emasculate or undermine them. Consequently they should be slow to encourage disruptions in the due political procedures in their fight for their rights, as Labour Unions form an indispensable part of civil society in a developing country.

3.6.2 Workers in dispute with the government should be encouraged to respect the rules relating to strikes, sit-down actions, etc.

3.6.3 Trade Union leadership must strive to maintain their independence from government, and be mindful of co-optation strategies that governments might adopt to neutralize their activities. Co-optation by governments undermine their ability to properly represent their constituency.

3.6.4 Trade Union leaders must ensure that they do not lose touch with their constituency, as they represent the hope of workers that they have protection against employer-mistreatment and Executive-high-handedness.

3.6.5 Court cases involving public and civil servants should be speeded up as delays in adjudication tend to cause hardship to persons on interdiction on account of the trial, and so embarrass administrative procedures on discipline.

3.6.6 The government should improve its mechanism for consultation with Trades Unions on major economic policies to secure their understanding and cooperation.

3.6.7 Schemes such as the Workers Brigade and National Reconstruction Corps concept have value in providing opportunities for employment of unskilled persons. However, such schemes have ended up being a mere drain on the national coffers, and have therefore been avenues for pursuing partisan and parochial interests. A properly designed scheme would augment food production, and offer opportunities for skills training

3.6.8 Rampant strikes to pressurise government for salary increases have been blamed for undermining the economy at critical periods, such as the pre-referendum period in 1978 and the pre-election period in 1992.

3.6.9 The process of referring labour disputes and grievances to arbitration or conciliation should be made more efficient to avoid unnecessary labour unrest. In this respect, rules regarding the handling of labour disputes and grievances must be adhered to as provided under the relevant labour laws and Collective Bargaining Agreements.

3.6.10 Dismissals by government by radio and television announcements should be a thing of the past. This mode of removing persons from public office undermines loyalty to the State, creates insecurity in every public officer and destroys reputations that individuals concerned have built over time. Proper procedures for accountability in office and for disciplining senior public officers should be developed if the existing ones are inadequate, and they must be evenly applied to avoid destroying careers without just cause.

3.6.11 The Management in Public institutions should respect procedures for discharge of inefficient employees to ensure that there would be no opportunity for victimisation.

3.7 RECOMMENDATIONS/REFORMS - PROFESSIONAL BODIES (OTHER THAN THE LEGAL PROFESSION) AND CIVIL SOCIETY ORGANISATIONS

3.7.1 Professional bodies should not confine themselves to the pecuniary interests of their respective associations only, but also avail themselves of the opportunity to make human rights interventions whenever necessary. Professional bodies should make human rights education and protection an integral part of their professional responsibility and ethics.

3.7.2 Engineers, particularly those employed by the State, must supervise the work of contractors properly. The country has not always derived value for money for construction projects undertaken, thus rendering governments unpopular for the poor state of infrastructure and impoverishing the country further.

3.7.3 Professionals and technicians in the control room in utility companies have also been cited as deliberately sabotaging governments by cutting power and supplies at critical times to make the governments unpopular. Persons with such responsibilities must appreciate the national security implications of such sabotage.

3.7.4 Human Rights education should be made mandatory at all levels of the country's educational system, both civilian and military, from primary to the highest level, with a view to entrenching in generations of Ghanaians deep respect for human life and all other fundamental rights of the person.

3.7.5 The findings of the Commission should be used as teaching materials and scripts for drama, film-making, etc., to educate the nation to avoid similar human rights abuses in the future.

3.7.6 Evidence before the Commission testifies to the fact that there is a general lack of knowledge and consciousness and respect for human rights in the country. This defect should be remedied by a sustained programme of public education by Commission on Human Rights and Administrative Justice (CHRAJ) and National Commission for Civic Education (NCCE).

3.7.7 The CHRAJ which has a human rights advocacy function, should not only be adequately resourced to uphold human rights and fight human rights abuses, but also empowered through legislation to effect expeditious redress whenever and wherever human rights violations occur in Ghana.

3.7.8 The NCCE under the 1992 Constitution should give human rights education priority attention. Its mandate should be properly defined to focus purposefully on human rights education.

3.7.9 There is the need for institutional reform in the Political Parties to reduce corruption and other types of conduct that produce public disaffection towards political activists.

3.7.10 There must be intensive public education so that the importance of Political Parties in governance would be appreciated by all. Evidence before the Commission showed that some communities were, in the past devastated by partisan politics. Consequently, it is no surprise that partisan politics and Political Parties are perceived as destructive forces. This perception must be altered to encourage more citizens to participate in governance and competitive politics.

3.7.11 Practitioners of party politics also need serious education and training in order to know, respect, uphold and defend human rights in the art and practice of Party politics for the development of the citizenry.

3.7.12 Parties should be compelled to provide appropriate structures for achieving internal democracy, as intra-party fighting increases public disaffection for politicians and partisan politics in general.

3.8 RECOMMENDATIONS ON STUDENTS, STUDENT MOVEMENTS AND TERTIARY INSTITUTIONS

3.8.1 Policies that impact upon student/government relations are usually the cause of unrest. Lack of institutional facilities that government is expected to provide creates tension between students on the one part, and government on the other. Absence of services which government is supposed to provide, makes students begin to compare what they get to what they perceive members of government to be enjoying, and this leads to disaffection towards the government and produces public protests. Governments must strive to provide basic facilities necessary for the efficient running of the institutions.

3.8.2 Policies on education that increase the pressure on students such as changes in syllabuses, etc, are bound to be resisted because the younger generation is always suspicious that the older generations do not want them to achieve the same heights that they achieved. Academic Boards of tertiary institutions should be sensitive to this reality in making changes to existing academic programmes and the formulation and design of new programmes.

3.8.3 Policies deemed to attack future job outlets and opportunities, such as the placement of products of new programmes on the job market, create unhappiness and resentment. In the global village, any attempt to reduce stature on the international market will produce resistance. Consequently care must be taken in formulating policies whose net effect would be to lower the prestige associated with particular academic qualifications, especially those that eventually affect international marketability. Therefore the eventual use to which new programmes would be put on the job market, must be thought through and worked out before the introduction of the programme so that expectations are not unjustifiably raised.

3.8.4 Students act as the informed mouthpiece of the youth in general, because they consider themselves as spokespersons for the rights of the future prospects of the youth. Consequently, students tend to associate themselves with labour issues because upon completing their programmes, they would become new entrants on the labour market.

Policy makers should be conscious of this fact and involve the student movements in broad consultations on policies that could affect the prospect of future generations.

3.8.5 Each of the student leaders interviewed admitted that with the benefit of hindsight, their actions were often born of inexperience, and that given the chance again, they would do things differently. Student leaders also expressed amazement about how much older persons who ought to have known better deferred to them on important national issues even when they were wrong. Student leaders also conceded that opposition politicians often used them to achieve their political ends, particularly during unconstitutional periods when the opposition could not operate legally. Students and their leaders should be aware of the potential for politicians (both civilian and military) and both in government and in the opposition, to use them for their own political ends, rather than the national interest.

3.8.6 There does not appear to have been sufficient democracy within the student movements. Consequently it was easy for particular interest groups to hijack the movements and implement their own political agenda. Institutions should ensure that the student movements develop and maintain intra-movement democratic structures and processes to enable them offer appropriate representation to the entire student-body.

3.8.7 There should be more transparency and accountability within the set-up of the student movement. Student leaders should learn good habits of probity and respect for ethics in public office, because their stint in office as student leaders often becomes the training ground for their participation in national governance.

3.8.8 The various stakeholders in education would need to be proactive especially in revision of conditions of service for staff of educational institutions to forestall unnecessary agitation as these tend to disrupt the academic year and affect national progress and development.

3.8.9 Students are entitled to free expression and activity. However, such expression and activity should be in conformity with the rules and regulations of the universities and other tertiary institutions, and within the limits allowed by the law. The universities and other tertiary institutions should not compromise on disciplining those who flout their rules and regulations. Effective ways of communicating and disseminating information on the campuses of institutions, should be put in place so as to improve information-flow and so minimize the exploitation of student-ignorance by disgruntled persons.

3.8.10 During student riots, the Police should be more restrained when invited to restore order so that fatal accidents do not occur. The principle of minimum use of force in crowd control should always be observed.

3.8.11 Students need to appreciate the importance of using negotiations as the primary tool for resolving disputes. Demonstrations should be used as a last resort, as its potency as a weapon is higher when threatened, than when resorted to, without much effect.

3.8.12 Student-demonstrations must respect rules of public order, and must be peaceful. Violent demonstrations can lead to unnecessary destruction of property, and even loss of life.

3.8.13 The universities should not allow their campuses to be used as a safe haven for subversionists, and persons who are a threat to national security.

3.8.14 In the past the involvement of academics in treasonable activities on campuses were camouflaged as the exercise of academic freedom. Governments adopted the practice of planting informants on the campuses and in the lecture rooms, to engage in surveillance on lecturers and students. To avoid the recurrence of such practices, there is the need for academics to appreciate the value of academic freedom and to strive to preserve it. They should initiate discussion on issues pertaining to the legitimate exercise of academic freedom and so develop standards that enhance the enjoyment of academic freedom for all.

3.8.15 The development of an independent press has narrowed the space that student leaders had when they were regarded as the alternative voices in the political space. Public space for alternative voices should be preserved so as to reduce the impact of student leaders who concede, years after the fact, that they did not really know what they were playing at when they took a stand against the government.

3.9 YOUTH

3.9.1 Politically-inclined Youth groups are capable of being exploited as a support-base for subversion of the State. The State must show more interest in its youth. Efforts must be made to tackle the problems of out of school youth, so that they would not be available for easy manipulation and exploitation, as unemployed and under-employed youth form a ready source of support for agitators who promise utopia.

3.9.2 NCCE should design appropriate civic education materials for use by youth organisations registered with the National Youth Council. The programmes should help the youth to develop into responsible and patriotic citizens. However, care must be taken in the design, not to lift partisan objectives above national interests.

3.9.3 All youth organisations that handle out-of-school-youth must provide opportunity for such youth to receive civic education. The National Anthem and the National Pledge must be taught to the out-of-school youth

3.9.4 The National Youth Council should be appropriately resourced provided with appropriate direction to enable it serve the purposes for which it was established.

3.10 RECOMMENDATIONS/REFORMS – THE INSTITUTION OF CHIEFTAINCY

3.10.1 It is observed that through legislation, governments interfered with the independence of Chiefs. In spite of this negative history, it is still necessary for Chiefs as the custodians of our cultural heritage, to regain and sustain their political influence as neutral actors in the political domain. Chiefs must be empowered to play their role effectively through education, especially on the Chieftaincy Act, the rights and responsibilities of Chiefs, land administration as well as well basic management skills.

3.10.2 Chiefs, who are regarded as opinion leaders, should be more vocal on issues of human rights violations in the country.

3.10.3 Chiefs should refrain from inordinate lobbying of politicians, particularly those in government, for projects to be sited in their communities. Such lobbying renders the institution vulnerable to manipulation by the politicians, particularly those in Government.

3.10.4 The Regional Houses of Chiefs should strengthen their capacity to handle chieftaincy litigation more effectively. It is desirable for the National House of Chiefs to be proactive in handling matters likely to get Chiefs locked in prolonged and expensive stool and land litigation.

3.10.5 The Traditional Councils should ensure that the selection and enstoolment or enskinment procedures are simplified to avoid litigation and also enable the Chiefs to save resources for the development of their respective communities.

3.10.6 Traditional rulers must ensure that their communities enjoy the benefits of revenue accruing from stool lands.

3.10.7 District Assemblies must honour their financial obligations to the Traditional Councils.

3.10.8 Partisan politics have caused a great deal of pain to royal lineages as some persons have used their political influence at particular times to obtain stools and skins. This bred litigation and destoolment or deskinment when the political atmosphere changed. It must be remembered at all times that chieftaincy is an institution that is traditional in nature; therefore its norms of nomination/election as well as the status of the stool or skin must be determined by cultural norms and usages.

3.10.9 Chiefs should not call upon the government to create paramountcies for them. Chieftaincy is by customary usages, therefore elevation to paramountcy status should not be the work of central government as this renders the status an artificial one dependent upon the will of politicians in power, and makes the occupant beholden to the government that granted such elevation. The National House of Chiefs should work out modalities for elevation of those whose customary usages make no such provision.

3.10.10 The recognition clause must never be re-instituted as it undermines the ability of the Chiefs to represent their people.

There is an urgent need for the lineages of all stools/skins to be published by the Traditional Councils and the Regional Houses to reduce conflict and litigation when vacancies occur.

3.10.11 The issues of land and access to land have not been fully explored. There is the need for a formal national project on land and ownership of land in the various areas. This would minimise litigation arising out of wrongful assumption of ownership over land by chiefs. Chiefs must ensure that all lands under their control are surveyed by properly by qualified surveyors registered with the Ghana Institution of Surveyors.

3.10.12 There must be clear guidelines particularly to the public about the requirements of land acquisition in each traditional area.

3.10.13 Land compulsorily acquired must be promptly paid for to prevent dealings in the land with unsuspecting members of the general public.

3.10.14 The system of land administration must be overhauled. Processes of compulsory acquisition must be made to involve the wider community to prevent unscrupulous persons being able to dispose of the lands after they have been compulsorily acquired.

3.10.15 The Houses of Chiefs should determine for themselves what would be appropriate interaction with the Party in power and with the ruling government so as to curtail the propensity of those who would under the guise of 'hospitality', court favour with politicians. Such actions tend to create disaffection for the Chiefs and encourage detractors to initiate destoolment actions when that particular administration leaves office.

3.10.16 Land problems in Northern Ghana require special study so as to end the inter-ethnic conflicts that erupt frequently, seemingly over trifles. The State should initiate action on this matter as soon as practicable.

3.10.17 Chiefs must remain barred from participation in partisan politics so that they can maintain the dignity of the institution and sustain the unity of his community.

3.11 RECOMMENDATIONS - RELIGIOUS BODIES

3.11.1 Religion and partisan politics must be kept apart as each of them has a capacity for generating conflict. It is therefore advisable that religion, religious bodies and religious leaders do not allow themselves to be used in partisan politics.

3.11.2 Religion and politics have a lot in common, in that they both aim at serving humanity in the attainment of peace and well-being of the individual as well as of the society. They therefore have to work hand in hand. This calls for religion to know the art of politics and politics to know the philosophy of religion.

3.11.3 Religion and religious bodies have a duty towards the body politic, namely to be the conscience of society and the moral guide of the State, lest the good of the individual as well as that of the society be sacrificed on the altar of political expediency.

3.11.4 Human and civil rights are fundamental values of humanity, and so in the context of religion, they are God-given. They must therefore be protected, defended and upheld at all times. This is one of the roles that religion and religious bodies are called upon to play in society vis-à-vis politics.

3.11.5 Religion and religious bodies should guard against being used to give legitimacy to illegitimate regimes and governments.

Religious Bodies have a duty to teach respect for human rights and freedoms, and to be the prophetic voice as well as the voice of the voiceless, when these rights are at risk particularly in the art of governance. It therefore behoves religion and religious bodies to know these human rights and freedoms in order to be able to hand them down to their members and to the general citizenry.

3.11.6 The various religious traditions in the country should educate their membership with regards to the past human rights abuses and violations with a view to helping forestall their re-occurrence in the future.

3.11.7 Religious leaders must be discouraged from seeking political office within a particular administration as this undermines their standing in the eyes of non-adherents, thus creating division among members in that religious body.

3.11.8 Religious leadership should be very circumspect in its involvement in matters of politics, and avoid the pitfalls of being manipulated to condone or even support human rights violations and abuses as happened in the past.

3.11.9 In the name of freedom of religion and freedom of association, religion should not be used to discriminate against sections of the citizenry, nor to oppress as well as deprive certain persons of their fundamental human rights and freedoms.

3.11.10 The Forum for Religious Bodies (FORB) and Ghana Conference on Religion for Peace (GCRP) should be strengthened and made into a strong coalition through which religion can effectively contribute to the tutelage of the fundamental human rights and freedoms of the citizenry.

3.12 GENERAL RECOMMENDATIONS

3.12.1 Formation Of Private Army

3.12.1.1 Any military establishment, such as the defunct Presidential Detail Department (PDD) in particular, the President's Own Guard Regiment (POGR) and the Commando Units, which does not operate under the command of the traditional Security Services, is to be considered a private army. The formation of such an army is against the spirit and letter of the national Constitution, and should, under no circumstance, be tolerated in the country.

3.12.2 Politicisation Of The Security Services (Including the Military Institution)

3.12.2.1 Under no circumstance should the Armed Forces, the Police Service and other Security Institutions be politicized.

3.12.2.2 Service personnel, both in the Armed Forces and the Police Service should be made to understand that if they are interested in holding political office, they can resign and go into politics.

3.12.3 Ideological Indoctrination Of Soldiers

3.12.3.1 The Military High Command should be conscious of the danger of certain ideas in the hands of the untutored. Ideological indoctrination of troops should neither be tolerated nor countenanced.

3.12.3.2 The Officer Corps should be continually monitored and screened and when necessary, released and helped to settle into civilian life. This is desirable as the retention of disgruntled service personnel could negatively influence the morale of troops.

3.12.4 Misuse Of Military Personnel By Civilians

3.12.4.1 Military personnel must know the areas of their competence, and not allow themselves to be used for other purposes, and outside their assigned military duties. The use of military personnel to intervene in purely personal and civilian matters, sometimes resulting in people being subjected to assault and other brutal acts of harassment is unlawful. Civilians should refrain from reporting cases to the military rather than to the police, as maintenance of law and order is the responsibility of the police.

3.12.4.2 The civilian population should be educated and sensitized not to lend their support to military take-overs. Sensitisation programmes should be effected nationwide. The media have an invaluable role to play in this exercise.

3.12.5 Reliable Contact Addresses

3.12.5.1 There should be a definite programme for providing proper residential addresses to facilitate contacts within the country. Reliance on postal addresses is no longer sufficient for purposes of establishing identification and tracing persons or locations.

3.12.6 Creating And Maintaining Institutional Memory

3.12.6.1 The mechanisms for storage of official documents are poor and inimical to the maintenance of proper institutional memory. Public agencies must design appropriate systems for storing documents to enable these to be traced in the future.

3.12.6.2 Every public officer must provide formal handing over notes before moving from any schedule. The repetition of institutional mistakes occasioned by loss of institutional memory must be tackled by proper modes of succession to offices.

3.12.7 Recognition For Meritorious Service

3.12.7.1 Service personnel, who distinguish themselves by demonstrating bravery, loyalty and leadership in the course of their national and service duties should be recognised for such meritorious services and be presented with National Honours and Awards. Such Honours should be awarded on National Days, in particular, on Independence Day.

3.12.7.2 The practice of awarding every service personnel a medal when the military has successfully seized power, is highly deprecated. Medals should be won for activities that bring honour to the country, or to the institution, and on merit, and not as a wholesale measure to buy the loyalty of service personnel.

Distinguished service to the country must be rewarded with National Honours to maintain the principle of meritocracy and engender the spirit of patriotism and public-spiritedness.

3.12.8 Tolerance Of Dissent

3.12.8.1 A culture of tolerance should be developed in this country. Ghanaians should learn that it is acceptable for people, even friends, to disagree. Dissent on issues should be encouraged and there should be space for alternative voices to be heard.

3.12.9 Re-presenting Ghana's History

3.12.9.1 The correct facts of Ghana's history must be taught in schools. To this end, school textbooks should be re-written, to ensure that all the patriots of Ghana's Independence get their rightful place in the nation's history. Historical accounts that glorify only those who attained political power at particular points in time do a disservice to dissenters, and those who sought to fight dictatorship and other evils in governance.

3.12.9.2 NCCE should design appropriate civic education materials for use in schools to inculcate patriotism and voluntarism among pupils and students. The National Anthem and the National Pledge must be taught and used in all schools on a daily basis.

3.12.10 Standards Of Decency

3.12.10.1 Ghanaians must strive to develop common standards of morality and decency. These standards would guide the behaviour of citizens in general, as well as holders of public office.

3.12.10.2 Public institutions charged with the protection of Human Rights as well as societal watchdogs such as the press, should not in their turn perpetrate human rights abuses by abusing their power. In a situation of poverty, some persons within these bodies yield to the temptation to abuse their power for personal profit.

3.12.11 Dealing with Ethnocentrism

3.12.11.1 The maintenance of national cohesion is a subject that should engage the attention of all well-meaning Ghanaians. Persistent denials of the existence of Ethnocentrism in the country in general and in public life in particular, will not make the problems disappear. Ethnocentrism must be acknowledged for the great evil that it is, and the dangers it presents to our nationhood, national cohesion and the equitable distribution of national resources must be constantly attacked. The benefits of our national diversity must be celebrated.

3.12.11.2 Specific policies and programmes targeted at addressing issues generated by ethnic animosities, ethnic stereotypes and ethnocentrism as a basis for discrimination must be vigorously confronted. Anti-discrimination legislation must be adopted to give people a remedy whenever they can prove discrimination on any of the grounds set down in Article 17 of the Constitution of 1992. Some countries have achieved a measure of success in combating such problems, not by pious injunctions and exhortations, but by legislation and the conversion of such conduct into wrongful conduct, entitling a wronged person to damages. Ghana must adopt such methods, for nothing short of frontal assault would be effective in tackling ethnocentrism.

REPARATIONS LIST

NAME
1SGT Adu Godfried

MONETARY (US Dollars)
To be verified

NON-MONETARY

2SGT Paul Frempong	To be verified
3SGT Mensah C.K	1,938.00
4EX-CPL Joseph Mawuyome-Adukpo	1,183.00
5CPL Joseph Mawuyome-Adukpo	1,183.00
6 SGT Robert Ahene Quarcoo	1,167.00
7S/SGT Kofi Adu	1,038.00
8SGT Ofosu Asare	1,026.00
9WOII Issaka	1,020.00
10SGT Salifu William	1,020.00
11S/SGT Kwaku Frimpong Adom	1,014.00
12CPL Joseph Mensah	1,014.00
13CPL Emmanuel Mensah	1,008.00
14EX-CPL Joseph Mensah	994.70
15CPL Edward Bulley	987.40
16S/Sgt Kwaku Frimpong	980.00
17S/SGT Ofei Akwetey	972.00
18S/SGT Job Arthur	946.00
19CPL Antwi Eric K.	928.20
20SGT Yaw Boateng	901.00
21SGT Quartey Paul	900.00
22SGT Paul Quartey	900.00
23CPL Adika Chris	846.00
24CPL Atinga Tongo	823.00
25CPL Dankwa Simon	790.00
26SGT Benfi Peter	774.00
27WOI John Ernest Acheampong	765.00
28W O I Jomo Ghanattah	684.00
29CPL Owusu Ebenezer	682.00
30CPL Ebenezer Owusu	682.00
31SGT Oduro-Fosu K.

	665.00
32L/CPL Godson Dey	654.80
33W O II (Juliana Mensah for) Samuel Abina	649.00
34CPL Dwira Samuel	646.00
35WOI Buabeng PM	638.00
36CPL Joseph Narh	635.00
37W O II David Asante	621.00
38S/SGT Manu D.	615.50
39S/SGT Martin Otchere	583.80
40SGT Martin Sarfo	576.00
41BDR John Nai-Ako	568.00
42SGT Obedie B.K	540.00
43SGT Mahama Ali	540.00
44SGT Wiredu A.	425.00
45SGT Abraham Wiredu	425.00
46WO I John Owusu-Afriyie	424.00
47S/SGT Okpoti Koney	420.00
48PTE Tabi L.K.	417.00
49W O II Joseph Tetteh	414.20
50WOII Tetteh Joseph	414.00
51SGT Kwesi Pentsil	408.00
52 CAPT M.K. Adama	406.00
53EX-WOI Okwam Samuel	386.00
54EX-WOI William Oduro	376.00
55RQM William Oduro	375.00
56SGT Ali Mahama	360.00
57CPL Summary A. Zabrama	360.00
58CPL Thomas Aryeetey	339.00
59SGT Charles Shiamatey	324.00
60SGT Anthony Dzenyo

	324.00
61S/SGT Moses Torto Laryea	315.00
62CPL Henry Kwame	313.00
63EX-SGT Ali Mohammed Bawah	309.00
64WO II George Asiedu Ofori	304.00
65SGT Peter Kukubor	252.00
66S/SGT Kofi Hene	252.00
67CPL Samuel Adjei Mensah	210.00
68WOI Gershon Kwame	180.00
69L/CPL Anum Yarboi	175.00
70 EX-SGT Brandeford Addai	165.00
71SGT Evans Poh	65.00
72S/SGT Asafoa Amoah	36.00
TOTAL	44,271.60

NAME	MONETARY (Cedis)	NON-MONETARY
73Boama Panyin	30,000,000
74Charles Koomson	30,000,000
75Kyeremeh Djan	30,000,000
76Mawuli Drah Goka	30,000,000
77Samuel Charles Aforo	30,000,000
78Yaw Brefo Berko	30,000,000
79Cecilia Koranteng Addow	25,000,000
80Fred Poku Sarkodee	25,000,000
81Kwadwo Agyei Agyapong	25,000,000
82Alhassan Aturnab Atuilik	20,000,000
83Anthony Kwaku Boakye	20,000,000
84B B Bismark	20,000,000
85CPO George Kwesi Hughes	20,000,000
86Ernest Kojo Nyan	20,000,000
87Ft. Lt. Samuel Asiedu	20,000,000
88Ft. Lt. William Kofie Domie	20,000,000	Fresh investigation should be conducted after death
89Harrison Boniface Ankrah	20,000,000

90Joana Essien	20,000,000
91John Kow Tay	20,000,000
92John Ofori Wilson	20,000,000
93John Tei Kugblenu	20,000,000
94Joseph Kesson	20,000,000
95Kwabena Amoah	20,000,000
96Kwaw Tei	20,000,000
97Major Collison	20,000,000
99Major Nantogma	20,000,000
100Meshach Lord Manteaw	20,000,000
104Odame Kissi	20,000,000
105Odiyifo Asare	20,000,000
106Osei Kwame	20,000,000
107Paul Kofi Korang	20,000,000
108Robert Kwasi Ackon	20,000,000
109S. O. Afriyie	20,000,000
110S/Sgt. Seidu Azaar	20,000,000
111Sampson Daniel Quao	20,000,000
112Sgt Nyamekye	20,000,000
114T. T. Anafo	20,000,000
115Torgbui Akakpo Ahiaku	20,000,000
116Torgbui Kpe of Tsiamé	20,000,000
117WOI Kingsley Sarpong	20,000,000
118Alfred Avorgah	15,000,000
119Abu da Costa	15,000,000
120Abdulrahmani	15,000,000
121Amarkei Laryea Amarteifio	15,000,000
122Albert Kpakpo Allotey	15,000,000
123Odartey Lamptey	15,000,000
124Akwasí Acheampong	15,000,000
125Akusaki Azumah	15,000,000
126Kofi Sedefia	15,000,000
127Attah Ahenesa	15,000,000
128Cpl. Samuel Gyimah	15,000,000
129Cpl. Edward Ofei	15,000,000
130Cpl. James Ankomah	15,000,000
131Daniel Emmanuel Abedi Addae	15,000,000
132Daniel Kumasi Dumoga	15,000,000
133Dansuruma	15,000,000
134Diana Konadu	15,000,000

135	Ekow Pete	15,000,000
136	Eku Cobbinah	15,000,000
137	Ekua Bentil	15,000,000
138	Elizabeth Asantewaa	15,000,000
139	Elizabeth Hammond	15,000,000
140	Elizabeth Mensah	15,000,000
141	Emmanuel Asiedu	15,000,000
142	Emmanuel Kofi Dumoga	15,000,000
143	Emmanuel Odartey France	15,000,000
144	Fuseini Ayarka	15,000,000
145	George Bartels (Jnr)	15,000,000
146	George Kobina Okai Grant	15,000,000
147	Gerald Kofi Yawotse	15,000,000
148	Gifti Abla Amegbletor	15,000,000
149	Godfred Achaw	15,000,000
150	Grace Akua Darkoa	15,000,000
151	Grace Lamiokor Adjebu	15,000,000
152	Harrison Tetteh Mensah	15,000,000
153	Ibrahim Mahamadu	15,000,000
154	Isaac Kweku Johnson	15,000,000
155	Ishahaka Halida	15,000,000
156	J. J. Yidana	15,000,000To be promoted to next higher
157	Jackson Kofi Mireku	15,000,000
158	Jacqueline Acquaye	15,000,000
159	Jasper Amoah Owusu	15,000,000
160	John Adjebu Blankson	15,000,000
161	Joseph Ayithey Korkor Quartey	15,000,000
162	Joseph Kwaku Addai	15,000,000
163	Joseph Kwao Larrie	15,000,000
164	Joseph Ocansey Numo	15,000,000
165	Kodwo Damoah	15,000,000
166	Kofi Amponsah	15,000,000
167	Kofi Appiah	15,000,000
168	Kofi Bugaya	15,000,000
169	Kofi Juantuah	15,000,000
170	Kofi Osei	15,000,000
171	Kofi Yentumi	15,000,000
172	Kwabena Adubofour	15,000,000
173	Kwabena Adjei	15,000,000
174	Kwabena Boateng	15,000,000
175	Kwabena Dapaa	15,000,000

176	Kwabena Owusu Ansah	15,000,000
177	Kwabla Danquah	15,000,000
178	Kwadwo Boadi	15,000,000
179	Kwadwo Boahen Fosu	15,000,000
180	Kwadwo Gare	15,000,000
181	Kwadwo Kyei	15,000,000
182	Kwadwo Obeng	15,000,000
183	Kwaku Boah	15,000,000
184	Kwaku Oppong	15,000,000
185	Kwame Agyare	15,000,000
186	Kwame Amevor Korpedo	15,000,000
187	Kwame Boafo	15,000,000
188	Kwame Agbavor	15,000,000
189	Kwame Kumi	15,000,000
190	Kwame Nkrumah	15,000,000
191	Kwame Nsonyameye	15,000,000
192	Kwasi Krobi	15,000,000
193	Kweku Prah	15,000,000
194	L/Cpl. Abbas Sinah	15,000,000
195	L/S Joseph Gyekye	15,000,000
196	Major John Ocran	15,000,000
197	Major. Samuel Okyere Boateng	15,000,000
198	Malone MacStephen Boateng	15,000,000
199	Margaret Kuwornu	15,000,000
200	Mary Ansong's brother Kofi Nkrumah	15,000,000
201	Mary Ansong's son Matthew	15,000,000
202	Michael Hammond	15,000,000
203	Michael Kwadwo Asante	15,000,000
204	Mohammed Ali	15,000,000
205	Mohammed Salisu	15,000,000
206	Moses Kofi Asase	15,000,000
207	Josephine Enninful (Wife of Col Enninful)	15,000,000
208	Nana Owusu Yeboah	15,000,000
209	Napoleon Kofi Kyei	15,000,000
210	Nii Noi Hammond	15,000,000
211	Note Hammond	15,000,000
212	Obimpe(Kwasi Nyarko's brother)	15,000,000
213	Okyeame Kwabena Mensah	15,000,000
214	Patrick Kodzo Dzakpasu	15,000,000
215	Patrick Kwadwo Panti	15,000,000

216	Paul Mpiani	15,000,000
217	Peace Hammond	15,000,000
218	Peter Bimpong alias Kwasi Gyasi	15,000,000
219	Peter Nda Cobbold	15,000,000
220	Provost Sgt. Joe Issaka	15,000,000
221	Pte Henry Obeng	15,000,000
222	Rockson Manu	15,000,000
223	Roger Agbomadzi	15,000,000
224	S. K. Larbi	15,000,000
225	S. K. Nyamebekyere	15,000,000
226	S.K. Boakye	15,000,000
227	Sabina Cobbinah's husband	15,000,000
228	Salifu Bawku	15,000,000
229	Sam Gatro Antor	15,000,000
230	Samuel Atuahene	15,000,000
231	Samuel Kofi Lateef	15,000,000
232	Samuel Kwabena Ntaamah	15,000,000
233	Samuel Tettehfiio Tettey	15,000,000
234	Seidu Salifu	15,000,000
235	Sgt. Edmund Peprah	15,000,000
236	Col Joseph Enninful	15,000,000
237	Andrews Sampana Sominomah	15,000,000
238	Benjamin Obeng	15,000,000
239	Cpl Robert Alhassan Konyibo	15,000,000
240	Sgt. Emmanuel Arthur	15,000,000
241	Anthony Kofi Yeboah	15,000,000
242	Alex Apana	15,000,000
243	Abdul Rahman	15,000,000
244	Alex Aggrey	15,000,000
245	Alhaji Iddrissu	15,000,000
246	Anthony Gyan	15,000,000
247	Awuku Adodoadzi	15,000,000
248	Kwabena Nyamekye	15,000,000
249	Abdulai Mosi	15,000,000
250	Kwaku Prah	15,000,000
251	Charles Namoo	15,000,000
252	Akanpelige	15,000,000
253	Adolikum Asekabta	15,000,000
254	Andrews Kwesi Ampofo	15,000,000
255	Charles Amankrah	15,000,000
256	Agnes Okyere	15,000,000

257	Abdul Samadu Adam	15,000,000
258	Alberta Rockson	15,000,000
259	Akua Badu	15,000,000
260	Sgt. Joseph Aikins	15,000,000
261	Simon Kwame Fetor	15,000,000
262	Solomon Nyarko	15,000,000
263	Stephen Kwame Appiah	15,000,000
264	Stephen Ofori	15,000,000
265	Susan Asaah Mensah	15,000,000
266	Susanna Intsiful	15,000,000
267	Sylvester Tanti Adomogre	15,000,000
268	Theophilus Opare Obuobisa	15,000,000
269	Tom Kuunno	15,000,000
270	William Kpakpo Allotey	15,000,000
271	Wilson Adika	15,000,000
272	Winifred Hagar's son Andrew	15,000,000
273	Yaw Amoako	15,000,000
274	Yaw Asare	15,000,000
275	Yaw Benyin	15,000,000
276	Yaw Gyamra	15,000,000
277	Yinsee	15,000,000
278	A. J. Oppong	10,000,000
279	Abena Tiwaa	10,000,000
280	Abotsi Martei	10,000,000
281	Abu Mahamadu	10,000,000 Medical attention
282	Abubakari O. Hayford	10,000,000 Restore house
283	ACP Michael Kwadwo Adusa	10,000,000 Pension
284	ACP Robert Kwaminga Attipoe	10,000,000 Pension
285	Addai Amoako	10,000,000
286	Adjei Sarpong	10,000,000
287	Adornia Baanaba	10,000,000
288	Adwoa Fordjour	10,000,000
289	Adwoa Nyarko	10,000,000
290	Afia Brago	10,000,000
291	Afuah Serwaah	10,000,000
292	Agibasse Anabila	10,000,000
293	Agnes Welbeck	10,000,000
294	Ahmed Dahamani Gumah	10,000,000

295	Akolgo Akaba	10,000,000
296	Akua Mansah	10,000,000
297	Akua Tiwaa	10,000,000
298	Akwasi Boah	10,000,000
299	Albert Kweku Cudjoe	10,000,000
300	Albert Puma Mambil Lebil	10,000,000
301	Alex Adjei	10,000,000
302	Alex Kwabena Nsiah	10,000,000
303	Alex Kwasi Boye	10,000,000
304	Alexander Con-Nutsugah	10,000,000
305	Alfred Akortor Adjei	10,000,000
306	Alfred Niiquaye Amassah	10,000,000
307	Alhaji A. Sumara	10,000,000	Restore house
308	Alhaji Abubakari Suley	10,000,000
309	Alhaji Ibrahim	10,000,000
310	Alhaji Iddrisu Kpabia-Madugu	10,000,000
311	Alhaji M. Abass Mensah	10,000,000
312	Alhaji Seidu Bogobiri	10,000,000	Release all assets
313	Alhaji Z. Bawa	10,000,000	Restore house
314	Alice Koomson	10,000,000
315	Amarkwor Anim	10,000,000
316	Amepofio Mensah	10,000,000
317	Amiaku's daughter	10,000,000
318	Amissah Nunoo	10,000,000
319	Ampofo Twumasi Ankrah	10,000,000
320	Anthony Kwabena Appiah	10,000,000
321	Augustina Marfo	10,000,000
322	Awudu Alhassan	10,000,000
323	Ayuba Lamptey	10,000,000
324	B.K. Busia	10,000,000
325	Baiden Amissah	10,000,000
326	Barima Twum Apau	10,000,000
327	Beatrice Nkrumah	10,000,000
328	Ben Akoto VI	10,000,000
329	Ben Edmund Duah	10,000,000	Benefits to be calculated at rate applicable at date of payment
330	Ben Ollett Quansah	10,000,000
331	Benard Sylvester Sam	10,000,000
332	Benjamin Kwame Bediako	10,000,000
333	Benny Eshun	10,000,000
334	Capt. Joseph Ampaabeng	10,000,000	Pension

Kyeremeh
335	Catherine Kojo	10,000,000
336	Cdr. Edward Godwin Osei	10,000,000 Pension
337	Cecilia Agyapong	10,000,000
338	Charles Hammond Danso	10,000,000
339	Charles 'Kid' Odumasi	10,000,000
340	Charles N. Opoku-Ware	10,000,000
341	Charles Osah Mills	10,000,000
342	Charles Yeboah	10,000,000
343	Col. Charles Owusu Agyeman	10,000,000 Pension
344	Col. Emmanuel Obeng Nyante	10,000,000 Pension
345	Col. Kobina Quashie	10,000,000 Pension
346	Col. Kofi Abaka Jackson	10,000,000 Pension
347	Col. Paul Nkegbe	10,000,000 Pension
348	Cpl. Timothy Anapalum	10,000,000
349	CSP Hanson Owusu Acheampong	10,000,000
350	CSP Stephen Maxwell Kofi Donkor	10,000,000 Pension
351	Damasus Kwabena Bogee	10,000,000
352	Daniel Bugri Naabu	10,000,000
353	Daniel Emmanuel Ekins	10,000,000
354	Daniel Kwaku Addae Ameyaw	10,000,000
355	Daniel Oheneba Darko	10,000,000
356	Dauda Abubakar	10,000,000
357	De Graft Dapaah	10,000,000
358	Dickson Jeremiah Acheampong	10,000,000
359	Dr. Sylvester Kojo Ankamah	10,000,000
360	Edmund Ocansey	10,000,000
361	Edward Charles Sagoe	10,000,000
362	Edward Nicholas Agyei	10,000,000
363	Edward Somuah Adofo	10,000,000
364	Ekua Kwaayie	10,000,000
365	Elizabeth Boateng	10,000,000
366	Emmanuel Agyekum	10,000,000
367	Emmanuel Asante	10,000,000
368	Emmanuel K. Amissah	10,000,000
369	Emmanuel Kwame Mentor	10,000,000
370	Emmanuel Ofori Sasu	10,000,000
371	Emmanuel Osae Mensah	10,000,000

372	Emmanuel Owired Aboagye	10,000,000
373	Emmanuel Quarcoo Buami	10,000,000
374	Erasmus Densu Ofosu	10,000,000
375	Eric Nanor	10,000,000
376	Evans Akpabli Asempa	10,000,000
377	Evans K. Demordzie	10,000,000
378	Fofo Sasraku	10,000,000
379	Francis Anku	10,000,000
380	Francis Kobina Inkum	10,000,000
381	Francis Oppong Adu	10,000,000
382	Francis Weremfo Adjei	10,000,000
383	Frederick Fafanyo Logah	10,000,000	Letter of apology.
384	Fusena Abukari	10,000,000
385	G/Cpl Edward Yeboah Abrokwa	10,000,000
386	Gbegne	10,000,000
387	George Amuah	10,000,000
388	George Ansah	10,000,000
389	George Kojo Addai	10,000,000
390	George Odai Mensah	10,000,000	Medical attention
391	Gershon Ashie Nikoi	10,000,000
392	Gladys Abla Dogbatse	10,000,000
393	Grace Ama Abartey	10,000,000
394	Gyedebi Asamoah	10,000,000
395	Hassan Jebila Mayaki	10,000,000	Letter of apology.
396	Hayford Ansere Afriyie	10,000,000
397	Henry Kwaku Afake	10,000,000
398	Henry Lomotey	10,000,000
399	Ibrahim Afrifa	10,000,000	To be given employment as Craft Instructor
400	Ibrahim Mahama	10,000,000
401	Ibrahim Sefa	10,000,000
402	Isaac Owusu-Boateng	10,000,000
403	Isaac Torpo	10,000,000
404	Isaiah Kofi Akumiah	10,000,000
405	Isako Koto	10,000,000
406	Issaka Hamidu	10,000,000
407	J. A. Boadu	10,000,000
408	J. A. Tonto	10,000,000
409	Jacob John Atagba	10,000,000
410	James Charles Akosa	10,000,000	Apology

411	James Fred	10,000,000
412	James Nsiah	10,000,000
413	James William Owu	10,000,000
414	Janet H. Bazawule	10,000,000
415	John Andoh	10,000,000
416	John Christian Hagan	10,000,000
417	John Kofi Amankrah	10,000,000
418	John Kofi Asare	10,000,000
419	John Kofi Manu	10,000,000
420	John Kwame Aidoo	10,000,000
421	John Kwabena Adom	10,000,000
422	Jonathan Tettey Padi	10,000,000
423	Jones Kofi Adjei	10,000,000
424	Joseph Achibald Appiah	10,000,000
425	Joseph Ernest Onyinah	10,000,000
426	Joseph Arthur Hayfron	10,000,000
427	Joseph Kodwo Ampah	10,000,000
428	Joseph Kofi Cobbinah	10,000,000
429	Joseph Kofi Osei	10,000,000
430	Joseph Kwadwo Kankam	10,000,000
431	Joseph Larbi	10,000,000
432	Joseph Mensah	10,000,000
433	Joseph Tweneboa Kodua	10,000,000 Pension, if qualified
434	K. A. A. Brempong	10,000,000
435	K. Wiredu	10,000,000
436	Kalibi Quashie	10,000,000
437	Kingsley Ofosu	10,000,000
438	Kwame Kwakye	10,000,000
439	Kodzo Fomevor	10,000,000
440	Kofi Agusa	10,000,000
441	Kofi Antwi	10,000,000 To be provided with a wheelchair
442	Kofi Nantwi	10,000,000
443	Kofi Owusu	10,000,000
444	Kofi Peter	10,000,000
445	Kojo Atta	10,000,000
446	Kojo Ayigwa	10,000,000
447	Kwabena Bosompra	10,000,000
448	Kwadwo Darko	10,000,000
449	Kwabena Kumi	10,000,000
450	Kwabena Minta Ampofo	10,000,000
451	Kwadjo Afora Egbenu	10,000,000

452	Kwadwo Brenya	10,000,000
453	Kwadwo Nsia	10,000,000
454	Kwadwo Ofori	10,000,000
455	Kwadwo Ohemeng	10,000,000
456	Kwadwo Owusu Sekyere (former MP)	10,000,000	Apology
457	Kwadwo Sekyere	10,000,000
458	Kwaku Addai	10,000,000	To be given medical care and benefits paid, loyalty rewarded.
459	Kwaku Attah	10,000,000
460	Kwaku Danso	10,000,000
461	Kwaku Manu	10,000,000
462	Kwaku Nsaakyi	10,000,000
463	Kwame Adjimah	10,000,000
464	Kwame Beteh	10,000,000
465	Kwame Boakye	10,000,000
466	Kwame Gavu	10,000,000
467	Kwame N. Acheampong	10,000,000
468	Kwame Opare	10,000,000
469	Kwasi Sampson	10,000,000
470	Kyei Twumasi	10,000,000
471	L/Cpl. Samuel Amoyaw	10,000,000
472	DSP Lawrence Kwaku Zikpi	10,000,000	Pension
473	Lawrence Tiagbe Kumatse	10,000,000
474	Lord Menasher	10,000,000
475	Lt. Col. Gabriel Amevor	10,000,000	Pension
476	Lt Col. Albert Narh Tetteh	10,000,000	Pension. Gratuity to be calculated as at date of payment
477	Lt Col Emmanuel Joe Dawuni	10,000,000	Pension
478	Mahama Umoru Dumba	10,000,000
479	Major Mohammed Easah	10,000,000	Pension. Gratuity to be calculated as at date of payment
480	Margaret Nimo	10,000,000
481	Mary Botwe	10,000,000
482	Mary Odei Laryea	10,000,000
483	Matthew Kwadwo Poku	10,000,000
484	Matthew Narh Tetteh	10,000,000
485	Maxwell Kwesi Ntiamoah	10,000,000
486	Matthew Narh-Zikpi	10,000,000
487	Michael B. Noble Achana	10,000,000
488	Michael Henry Frimpong	10,000,000
489	Moustapha K. Sangari	10,000,000

490	Musa Yakubu	10,000,000
491	Mustapha Kobina Sangari	10,000,000
492	Nana Abaka	10,000,000
493	Nana Kwasi Adokwabo	10,000,000
494	Nana Awotwe	10,000,000
495	Nana Kwasi Duku Asante	10,000,000
496	Ngonibi Nyande	10,000,000
497	Nicholas Nvidah	10,000,000
498	Nii Ayi Plange	10,000,000
499	Afi Madonunawo Dzamesi	10,000,000
500	Odiyifo Maneh	10,000,000
501	Ofosuaa Komeng	10,000,000
502	Olivia Ako Adjei	10,000,000
503	Oluwole Odeinde	10,000,000
504	Osman Halidu	10,000,000
505	P. K. Fokuo	10,000,000
506	PC Stephen Robert Kwawu	10,000,000
507	Prince Osei-Kofi	10,000,000
508	Prosper Tetteh Fansey	10,000,000
509	Raphael Larbi	10,000,000
510	Rev. Joseph Kwabena Gyimah	10,000,000
511	Richard Boateng	10,000,000
512	Richard Todd-Hackman	10,000,000
513	Robert Annang Quartey	10,000,000
514	Robert O. Nayo	10,000,000
515	Robert Owusu Adu	10,000,000
516	Robert Quarshie	10,000,000
517	Rose Obiri-Kumi Owusu	10,000,000Apology from SHC
518	Ruben Yaw Animdee	10,000,000
519	S. B. Osei-Botwe	10,000,000
520	S. K. Antwi-Boateng	10,000,000
521	S. Obeng Kwakye	10,000,000
522	S. S. Songodzagi	10,000,000
523	Sammy Nassar	10,000,000Assets to be defrozen.
524	Samuel Ahulu Korletey	10,000,000
525	Samuel Atiemo Yirenkyi	10,000,000
526	Samuel George Arthur	10,000,000
527	Samuel Obeng Kwakye	10,000,000
528	Samuel Simple Ocran	10,000,000
529	Samuel Yeboah	10,000,000

530	Seidu Iddrissu	10,000,000
531	Seini Abudulai	10,000,000
532	Selina (Comfort Debra's Petition)	10,000,000
533	Seth Ahadzivia	10,000,000Medical Attention
534	Seth Owusu	10,000,000
535	Silas Ampaw	10,000,000
536	Simpson Kwasi Evenyi	10,000,000
537	Sirikatu Dogbe Ajani	10,000,000
538	Sophia Arthur	10,000,000
539	Sophia Prah	10,000,000
540	Sqr. Ldr. George Tagoe	10,000,000 Pension
541	Sqr. Ldr. Samuel Sarbeng Abebrese	10,000,000 Pension
542	Stella Kriba	10,000,000
543	Stephen Bekoe Agyeman	10,000,000
544	Stephen Kwadwo Obeng	10,000,000
545	Stephen Mensah Asare	10,000,000
546	Stephen Yaw Korang	10,000,000
547	Sumbeida Ibrahim	10,000,000
548	Sylvester Adzroey	10,000,000
549	Tennyson A. K. Ahadzie	10,000,000
550	Thomas Boampong	10,000,000
551	Togbe Aba	10,000,000
552	Togbe Agbe IV	10,000,000
553	Umaru Iddrissu	10,000,000
554	Victor Kapambu Iddissah	10,000,000
555	Vivian Amakye	10,000,000
556	Wahrenfried Nukro	10,000,000
557	William Ameldorim Apambilla	10,000,000
558	William Arnold Decker	10,000,000
559	William Dusu	10,000,000
560	William Nsiah	10,000,000
561	William Oduro	10,000,000
562	WO Martin Bediako Frimpong	10,000,000
563	Yakubu Abdurahmani	10,000,000
564	Yao Dunyo	10,000,000
565	Yaw Gyasi	10,000,000
566	Yeboah Nortey	10,000,000
567	Zakari Bawa	10,000,000
568	Zakari Ibrahim	10,000,000

569	Zara Tia	10,000,000
570	Frank Osei Karikari	10,000,000
571	Kwaku Dua No.2(KSI 981)	10,000,000
572	Kwasi Asare alias Nana Baffour Asare	10,000,000
573	Emmanuel Assah Adumoah	10,000,000
574	Nana Kwadwo Obeng II	10,000,000
575	Adam Baanobi	7,000,000
576	Adwoa Achiawaa	7,000,000
577	Afia Samiah	7,000,000
578	Afriyie Ibrahim	7,000,000
579	Agnes Tabase	7,000,000
580	Aku Sebie	7,000,000
581	Akua Ataa Panyin	7,000,000
582	Kwadwo Adu-Gyamfi	7,000,000
583	Albert Agyekum	7,000,000
584	Alfred Kokuvi Adzobgle	7,000,000
585	Benjamin Kojoe Amissah	7,000,000
586	Claudia Ocran	7,000,000
587	Dr. Martin Maxwell Owusu Ansah	7,000,000
588	Efua Abontoako	7,000,000
589	Ellen Ladzekpo	7,000,000
590	J. Kwaku Awuakye	7,000,000
591	Nii Odai Ayiku VI	7,000,000
592	Esi Baawa	7,000,000
593	Francesca Osei	7,000,000
594	George Darko Akoto	7,000,000
595	J. B. Danquah	7,000,000
596	James Cobbold	7,000,000
597	Janet Manu	7,000,000
598	John K. Agbeko-Dedziafa	7,000,000
599	John Kwame Appiah	7,000,000
600	Johnson Kofi Frimpong	7,000,000
601	Juliana Dogbe	7,000,000
602	Juliana Klu	7,000,000
603	Kofi Mensah	7,000,000
604	Kramo Osmanu	7,000,000
605	Kwabena Badu	7,000,000
606	Kwabena Mesu	7,000,000

Gratuity to be calculated as at date of payment

607	Kwaku Kyei	7,000,000
608	Kwaku Nyame	7,000,000
609	Kwaku Oti	7,000,000
610	Kwame Adu	7,000,000
611	Kwasi Boafo	7,000,000
612	Mariama Rockson	7,000,000
613	Lawrence B. Tabase	7,000,000
614	Frederick Amoako Atta	7,000,000
615	Manu Agyakwa	7,000,000
616	Mariatu Alhassan	7,000,000
617	Martin Adane	7,000,000
618	William Thomas Bruce-Tagoe	7,000,000
619	Mbema Mahama	7,000,000
620	Mohammed Shaibu	7,000,000
621	Naaponsah Dodoo	7,000,000
622	Nana Safo Anwona II	7,000,000
623	Negble	7,000,000
624	Noah Boateng	7,000,000
625	Otuo Acheampong	7,000,000
626	Patrick Moffat Kassar	7,000,000
627	Peter Ofori Wiafe	7,000,000
628	Sampson K. Aidoo	7,000,000
629	Samuel Innocent Danso	7,000,000
630	Joseph Ernest Onyinah	7,000,000
631	Josephine Onyinah	7,000,000
632	Thomas Annang Lanquaye	7,000,000
633	Thomas Owusu Ansah	7,000,000
634	Vidal Quist	7,000,000
635	Yaw Ampofo	7,000,000
636	Yusifu Sackey Lamptey	7,000,000
637	Adwoa Pokua(KSI 647)	7,000,000
638	Solomon Kwabena Owusu	7,000,000
639	Adwoa Achiamaa	7,000,000
640	Akua Akyaa(No.2-Kintampo)	7,000,000
641	A. Baffour-Asare	5,000,000
642	Abankwa Yeboah	5,000,000
643	Abdulai Abdulai	5,000,000
644	Abdul-Samed Musah	5,000,000

645	Abena Asantewaa	5,000,000
646	Abena Eduma	5,000,000
647	Abena Mansah	5,000,000
648	Abena Safoah	5,000,000
649	Abiatekum Akalinkosa	5,000,000
650	Adam Yakubu	5,000,000
651	Adolphus Macauley Essuman	5,000,000
652	Adwoa Dede	5,000,000
653	Adwoa Konsiwaa	5,000,000
654	Adwoa Sanoa	5,000,000
655	Afari Agyei	5,000,000
656	Afia Kumah	5,000,000
657	Afua Boatemaa	5,000,000
658	Agbodzalu Montey	5,000,000
659	Agnes Amori	5,000,000
660	Agnes Tettey	5,000,000
661	Agwasse Anabila	5,000,000
662	Akua Afamea	5,000,000
663	Akua Afriyie	5,000,000
664	Kwaku Nyame	5,000,000
665	Akua Akyaa	5,000,000
666	Akua Boatemaa	5,000,000
667	Akwasi Nsiah	5,000,000
668	Alex Kwame Yeboah	5,000,000
669	Alexander Samuel Abbia Kwakye	5,000,000
670	Alfred Kwame Addo	5,000,000
671	Alhaji A. Mohammed	5,000,000
672	Alhaji A. R. Suberu	5,000,000Restore his money
673	Alhaji Abdulai Abu-Jajah	5,000,000
674	Alhaji Abdulai Yakubu	5,000,000
675	Alhaji Alfa Nuhu	5,000,000
676	Alhaji M. A. Salia	5,000,000
677	Alhaji Salifu Tabsoba	5,000,000
678	Alhaji Sirazu Alhassan	5,000,000
679	Alice Asante	5,000,000
680	Ama Amoa	5,000,000
681	Ama Amponsah	5,000,000
682	Ama Manu	5,000,000
683	Ama Serwaa	5,000,000
684	Amadu Bawa Seidu	5,000,000

685	Amadu Douri	5,000,000	All outstanding properties to be returned to him.
686	Ambrose Eddi	5,000,000
687	Amiaka Anku	5,000,000
688	Amos Yeboah	5,000,000
689	Andrews Kwaku Mensah	5,000,000
690	Andrews Kwame Tre	5,000,000
691	Andrews Kwasi Oppong	5,000,000
692	Anthony Erzuah	5,000,000	To be promoted to Inspector
693	Anthony Kofi Asanti	5,000,000
694	Anthony Osei	5,000,000
695	Apea Bempong	5,000,000
696	Asidaahe Naamey	5,000,000
697	Attu Sakyiamah	5,000,000
698	Augustina Dankwa	5,000,000	To be provided with a wheel chair
699	Awonzoe Boadi	5,000,000
700	Kwasi Ntrakwa Ofori	5,000,000	Return properties
701	Awoyo Puplampu	5,000,000
702	Awubey Quame	5,000,000
703	Ayishetu Adam	5,000,000
704	Beatrice Darkwa Boatemaa	5,000,000
705	Benedict Kwabena Anokye	5,000,000
706	Benjamin Boamah	5,000,000
707	Benjamin Ofosu Apronti	5,000,000
708	Benjamin Samuel Kofi Kwakye	5,000,000
709	Boas Yaw Anto	5,000,000
710	Cecilia Cobbina	5,000,000
711	Charity Koomson	5,000,000
712	Charles Arthur	5,000,000
713	Charles Boateng Sampong	5,000,000
714	Charlotte Rockson	5,000,000
715	Chris Asher Snr.	5,000,000	Property to be returned to Petitioner.
716	Christian Blukoo	5,000,000
717	Christian Kaba	5,000,000
718	Claus Ayitey Tetteh	5,000,000
719	Comfort Akosua Afrah	5,000,000
720	Comfort Dedzo-Dzokoto	5,000,000
721	Comfort Okai	5,000,000
722	Comfort Quayson	5,000,000
723	Crowther Kwashie	5,000,000

Dogbatse
724	D. C. K. Opoku	5,000,000
725	D.C. Agbadzi	5,000,000
726	Daniel Akuafo Otchie	5,000,000
727	Daniel Boateng-Sampong	5,000,000
728	Daniel Dumah Asima	5,000,000
729	Daniel Kaba	5,000,000
730	Daniel Kofi Yankey	5,000,000
731	Daniel Mensah Doamekpor	5,000,000
732	Daniel Nii Oku	5,000,000
733	David Kobina Andam	5,000,000
734	David Kofi Buahin	5,000,000
735	Davidson Dede Kisi Owusu	5,000,000
736	Dennis Yaw Hamelo	5,000,000
737	Donyina Agyei Kantonn	5,000,000
738	Doris Dodua Quartey	5,000,000
739	Doris Osei Tutu	5,000,000
740	Dr. E. V. C. De Graft Johnson	5,000,000
741	Dr. Nyaho Tamakloe	5,000,000
742	Dwomoh(husband of Juliet Serwaah)	5,000,000
743	E. K. Eshun	5,000,000
744	E. Q. Buami	5,000,000
745	Eddy Cocra Ziblim	5,000,000
746	Edmund Korletey	5,000,000
747	Edward Okai Dontoh's father	5,000,000
748	Elias Issahaku	5,000,000
749	Elizabeth Aniniwaa	5,000,000
750	Elizabeth Owoo	5,000,000
751	Ellison Owusu Fordwuoh	5,000,000Property to be restored
752	Emmanuel Agogo	5,000,000
753	Emmanuel Akrofi	5,000,000
754	Emmanuel Amartey Adjaye	5,000,000
755	Emmanuel Appiah-Dwaa	5,000,000
756	Emmanuel Asamoah	5,000,000
757	Emmanuel Asare	5,000,000
758	Emmanuel Assah Adumoah	5,000,000
759	Emmanuel Awuku Yirenkyi	5,000,000
760	Emmanuel K. Titati	5,000,000
761	Emmanuel Kwaku Owusu	5,000,000

762Emmanuel Kid Abaidoo	5,000,000
763Emmanuel Kweku Appiah	5,000,000
764Emmanuel Osei	5,000,000
765Emmanuel Owusu Aninakwa	5,000,000
766Emmanuel Owusu Kodua	5,000,000
767Emmanuel Sewor Awidi	5,000,000
768Eric Kweku Tawiah	5,000,000
769Eric Paditey	5,000,000
770Esther Frimpong	5,000,000
771Eugene Kwame Bosompem	5,000,000
772Faustina Ardua Aryee	5,000,000
773Felix Ofosu Oduro	5,000,000
774Francis Akese	5,000,000
775Francis E. Amihere	5,000,000
776Francis J. Ocran	5,000,000
777Francis Ketibuah	5,000,000
778Francis Kwadwo Donkor	5,000,000
779Francis Kwame Akorlatse	5,000,000
780Francis Yaw Anokye	5,000,000
781Frank Agyei-Baah	5,000,000
782Frank Okyere	5,000,000
783Frank Owusu Nti	5,000,000
784Fuseini Zakari	5,000,000
785G. K. Debrah	5,000,000
786G. M. Naykene	5,000,000
787Gabriel K. Opoku	5,000,000
788Geoffrey Kumfo	5,000,000
789George Ashitey Abbey	5,000,000
790Gladys Botchay	5,000,000
791Godfrey Ametoglo	5,000,000
792Godfrey Yaafi Kodjoe	5,000,000
793Grace Botchway	5,000,000
794Grace Tetteh	5,000,000
795Grace Yomeley	5,000,000
796Gyan Bediako	5,000,000
797Habibata Amadu	5,000,000
798Hackman Kwadwo Boateng	5,000,000
799Hajia Hawawu Mamudu	5,000,000
800Hajia Rahma Amadu	5,000,000
801Hannah Abena Kyerewaa	5,000,000
802Helena Poku	5,000,000

803	Helena Yorke	5,000,000
804	Huseini Osman Suraqa	5,000,000
805	I. K. Yankson	5,000,000
806	Isaac Bediako Poku	5,000,000
807	Isaac Kwesi Oteng	5,000,000
808	Isaac Opare-Addo	5,000,000
809	Isaac Tetteh Quarcoo	5,000,000
810	Issifu Sulemana	5,000,000
811	J.O. Tetteh	5,000,000
812	J.K Manu	5,000,000
813	Jacob Asiedu	5,000,000
814	Jacob Kwao Baiden	5,000,000
815	James Kwamena Afful	5,000,000
816	James Myers	5,000,000
817	James Ofei Akrofi	5,000,000
818	Janet Osei	5,000,000
819	Jeremiah Ekella	5,000,000
820	Jerome Apenu-Doh	5,000,000
821	John Agidi	5,000,000
822	John Bomo Ackah	5,000,000
823	John Cobbina Ndede	5,000,000
824	John Iddi Nindow	5,000,000
825	John Kwabena Adom	5,000,000
826	John Kwasi Owusu	5,000,000
827	John William Opoku	5,000,000
828	Johnson Kwaku Ofori	5,000,000
829	Jones Sarpong	5,000,000
830	Joseph Baiwie Anaman	5,000,000
831	Joseph Davies	5,000,000
832	Joseph Esmond Polley	5,000,000
833	Joseph Hayford Kwame Osei	5,000,000
834	Joseph Kwabena Asamoah	5,000,000
835	Joseph Kwabena Nkrumah	5,000,000
836	Joseph Kwamena Dadzie	5,000,000
837	Joseph Mensah Asante	5,000,000
838	Joseph Narh	5,000,000
839	Joseph Nelson Onyinah	5,000,000
840	Joseph Nyarko	5,000,000
841	Joseph Peter Horney	5,000,000
842	Joseph Sally Kwofie	5,000,000
843	Joseph Techie Menson	5,000,000

844	Joseph Tedan	5,000,000
845	Joseph Wodzidzro Van-Sagodo	5,000,000
846	Joseph Yinye	5,000,000
847	Yaw Amoako	5,000,000
848	Joyce Agyeiwaa	5,000,000
849	Alice Koomson	5,000,000
850	Ibrahim Sefa	5,000,000
851	Sirazu Mahama	5,000,000
852	Albert Kweku Cudjoe	5,000,000
853	Christina Many	5,000,000
854	F. K. Eshun	5,000,000
855	Ampofo Twumasi Ankrah	5,000,000
856	K. E. Bruce	5,000,000
857	K. Obeng Kyere	5,000,000
858	Kate Ocran	5,000,000
859	Kingsley Kwaku Asare	5,000,000
860	Kodwo Anfam	5,000,000
861	Kofi Agyemang	5,000,000
862	Kofi Agyesa Bassaw	5,000,000
863	Kofi Amponsa Kumah	5,000,000
864	Kofi Asenso-Mensah	5,000,000
865	Kofi Bobie-Ansah	5,000,000
866	Kofi Nyarko (No.1)	5,000,000
867	Kofi Nyarko (No. 2)	5,000,000
868	Kofi Oti	5,000,000
869	Kofi Owusu	5,000,000
870	Kramo Musa	5,000,000
871	Kwabena Adu	5,000,000
872	Kwabena Dadieya	5,000,000
873	Kwabena Osei	5,000,000
874	Kwaku Abboah Asamoah	5,000,000
875	Kwaku Duah	5,000,000KMA to pay for the 1000 blocks.
876	Kwaku Nantwi	5,000,000
877	Kweku Tawiah	5,000,000
878	Kwame Adjei	5,000,000
879	Kwame Ampewoyie	5,000,000
880	Kwame Boateng	5,000,000
881	Kwame Krah	5,000,000
882	Kwame Nsiah	5,000,000
883	Kwame Ofori-Yentumi	5,000,000Benefits to be paid.

884Kwame Oppong Asante	5,000,000
885Kwame Serebour	5,000,000
886Kwao Kondo	5,000,000
887Kweku Tawiah	5,000,000
888Kwasi Aboagye	5,000,000
889Kwasi Nkrumah	5,000,000
890Lamisi Apentiik	5,000,000
891Lawrence Aufei Fianko	5,000,000
892Lucy Abla Afram	5,000,000
893M. Shaibu	5,000,000
894Mahamadu Kaleem	5,000,000
895Mahamadu Tamalgu Mahama	5,000,000
896Margaret Adzo Abeasi	5,000,000
897Margaret Kpomli	5,000,000
898Mark Yaw Gyamfi	5,000,000
899Martin Appiah Danquah	5,000,000
900Martin Mutuo Bugu	5,000,000
901Martin Opoku	5,000,000
902Mary Adukwei Allotey	5,000,000
903Mary Dakomesi Gota	5,000,000
904Mary Kwarteng	5,000,000
905Mary Stella Nyamalar	5,000,000
906Mary Yaa Serwaah	5,000,000
907Mathias Komla Anku	5,000,000
908Michael Dumashie	5,000,000
909Mohamadu Kaleen	5,000,000
910Moses Ayornu	5,000,000
911Moses Kofi Mensah	5,000,000
912Moses Mwin	5,000,000
913Muniratu Sulemana	5,000,000
914N. A. R. Frimpong	5,000,000
915Nana Boakye Tromu III	5,000,000
916Nana Frimpong Manso	5,000,000
917Nana Kwaku Agyeman	5,000,000
918Nana Otamakro Adubofour	5,000,000To be placed on pension
919Nana Yeboah Okoli	5,000,000
920Noah Sakyiama	5,000,000
921Norga Moshie	5,000,000
922Osei Manu	5,000,000
923Otilia Fiagbe	5,000,000

924	Owusu Sekyere	5,000,000
925	P. Y. Kumordjie	5,000,000
926	Patrick Tettey Okai	5,000,000
927	Paul King Asimeng	5,000,000
928	Peter K. A. Kakra	5,000,000
929	Peter Obiri Yeboah	5,000,000
930	Philip Dade Armah	5,000,000
931	Philomena Adwoa Quarm	5,000,000	Dental Care
932	Prosper Kojo Siabi	5,000,000
933	R. K. Tay	5,000,000
934	Rachel Ghartey Biney	5,000,000
935	Rebecca Aryee	5,000,000
936	Richard Kwabena Abugamzio	5,000,000
937	Richardson Kwame Kanukwa	5,000,000
938	Robert Akuamoah Boateng	5,000,000
939	Robert Dadson Adams	5,000,000
940	Robert Kwame Bediako	5,000,000
941	Robert Kofi Kwakye	5,000,000
942	Robert Sarkodie Sakyi	5,000,000
943	Robert Yaw Vondi	5,000,000
944	Ruth Aning	5,000,000
945	S. K. Asante	5,000,000
946	Saka Acquaye	5,000,000
947	Salifu Fierdzinu Motey	5,000,000
948	Salome Owusu	5,000,000
949	Sammy Sampson Manu	5,000,000
950	Sampson Peter Anim Danquah	5,000,000
951	Samuel Kwabena Antwi	5,000,000
952	Samuel Kofi Bortei Doku	5,000,000
953	Samuel Kwabena Mensah	5,000,000	Medical attention
954	Samuel Sarpong Miles	5,000,000
955	Samuel Yaw Adu-Nyame	5,000,000
956	Seidu Prince Mahama	5,000,000
957	Severio Termagre	5,000,000
958	Sgt. Isaac Koranteng	5,000,000
959	Shawcross Kenneth Gyebi	5,000,000
960	Siraju Mahama	5,000,000
961	Solomon Nartey	5,000,000
962	Solomon S. Akuamoah	5,000,000
963	Solomon Tulle Atulari	5,000,000

964	Sophia Manteaw	5,000,000
965	Stephen Kwaku Amponsah	5,000,000
966	Stephen Okyere	5,000,000
967	Stephen Opoku Osei	5,000,000
968	Stephen Robert Kwawu	5,000,000
969	Stephen Wilfrid Arthur	5,000,000
970	Sulley Iddrissu	5,000,000
971	Susanna Korletey	5,000,000
972	Sylvester Aleminyah Amoah	5,000,000
973	Tettey Puplampu	5,000,000
974	Theophilus Kwasi Owusu	5,000,000
975	Theresa Krakue	5,000,000
976	Thomas Ekow Halm	5,000,000
977	Thomas Kwasi Appiah	5,000,000
978	Tong Zagskopoya	5,000,000
979	Tonto (Mercy Larbi)	5,000,000
980	Veronica Mensah	5,000,000
981	Victor Hozame	5,000,000
982	Victoria Aso Bamfo	5,000,000
983	Victoria Lankai Aniagyei	5,000,000
984	Victoria Sam	5,000,000
985	Wanye Domo	5,000,000
986	William Addo Mainoo	5,000,000
987	William Emmanuel Agyei	5,000,000
988	William Kwamla Woekpor	5,000,000
989	Yaa Adoma	5,000,000
990	Yaa Anima	5,000,000
991	Yaa Nyarko	5,000,000
992	Yaa Opokua (No.1)	5,000,000
993	Yaa Opokua (No.2)	5,000,000
994	Yaa Serwah	5,000,000
995	Yahaya Kaleo	5,000,000
996	Yaw Bekoe	5,000,000
997	Yussif Laminu	5,000,000
998	Samuel Agyepong Boafo	5,000,000
999	Nana Gyeabour II	5,000,000
1000	Kwadwo Gyamfi	5,000,000
1001	George K. Helu	5,000,000
1002	Cleophas Aditsri	5,000,000
1003	Peter Aditsri	5,000,000
1004	Boni Dunu	5,000,000

1005	Kormla Broni	5,000,000
1006	Alphonse A. Afetor	5,000,000
1007	Benard K. Tuprah	5,000,000
1008	Emil Yao Hia	5,000,000
1009	Manfred Deletsu	5,000,000
1010	Michael Krah	5,000,000
1011	Philip K. Amefodi	5,000,000
1012	Edmond Adzei	5,000,000
1013	Philip Funu	5,000,000
1014	G. K. Agogoe	5,000,000
1015	Kwamla Dzamefe	5,000,000
1016	Kwaku Bouachi	5,000,000
1017	S.K. Adoboe	5,000,000
1018	Christosmos Tsakpah	5,000,000
1019	Moses K. Vegble	5,000,000
1020	B. N. Amey	5,000,000
1021	Paul Azaglo	5,000,000
1022	Angelbert Seeman	5,000,000
1023	Kwasi Atsu	5,000,000
1024	Kwasi Kloyo Kofi	5,000,000
1025	Edward K. Kpeh	5,000,000
1026	Felix Nutsukpor	5,000,000
1027	Eklu Atsordugu V	5,000,000
1028	Godson Akpalu	5,000,000
1029	Andreas Xedzraku	5,000,000
1030	Walter Atamah	5,000,000
1031	Sylvester Tenu	5,000,000
1032	Felix Kokoroko	5,000,000
1033	Anoede Gakogo	5,000,000
1034	Kwamla Ameya	5,000,000
1035	Kumade Denustui	5,000,000
1036	Edward Donpey	5,000,000
1037	George Atikpui	5,000,000
1038	Siegward Pekyi	5,000,000
1039	Charlotte Deletsu	5,000,000
1040	Kwamla Akpalu	5,000,000
1041	Kwasi Akorlor	5,000,000
1042	Kwasi Akligbey	5,000,000
1043	Cornelius Yao Doh	5,000,000
1044	Hyacinth Kofi Goe	5,000,000

1045	Mensah Kwadzo Agbeko	5,000,000
1046	Komendah Afetonu	5,000,000
1047	John Bull	5,000,000
1048	Kofi Yao	5,000,000
1049	Gbetor Abotsi	5,000,000
1050	Mateo Mensah Goe	5,000,000
1051	G. K. Kwasi	5,000,000
1052	T. K. Ameko	5,000,000
1053	Christlieb Foli	5,000,000
1054	Theodore Kwasi	5,000,000
1055	Ben Akoto VI	5,000,000
1056	Stephen Tsedzie	5,000,000
1057	Kwadzo Tsevi	5,000,000
1058	Thomas Akoto VI	5,000,000
1059	William Akli	5,000,000
1060	Kogbe Kwadzo	5,000,000
1061	Korli Kole Yevu	5,000,000
1062	Albert Aborbor	5,000,000
1063	Kwame Aborbor	5,000,000
1064	A. K. Dogbey	5,000,000
1065	Raphael Adzimah	5,000,000
1066	S. K. Agbavor	5,000,000
1067	Silas Hadzi	5,000,000
1068	Christmus Akomani	5,000,000
1069	Kwami Dokpoh	5,000,000
1070	Gliam Mathias Dakpui	5,000,000
1071	Winfred Mottey	5,000,000
1072	Fernand Kudohoe	5,000,000
1073	Kwadzo Abu Dzansi	5,000,000
1074	Ben Ganafu	5,000,000
1075	Jacob Atsui	5,000,000
1076	E. Hrenfried Newell	5,000,000
1077	Siegmond Newell	5,000,000
1078	Godfried Adibai	5,000,000
1079	Siegred Yaodem	5,000,000
1080	Martin Tokpoh	5,000,000
1081	Victor Dzansi	5,000,000
1082	Kwasi Adigbli	5,000,000
1083	Otto Debre	5,000,000
1084	Eugen Hlormatsi	5,000,000
1085	Torgbi Prekese II	5,000,000

1086	Sarfo Heniblafo	5,000,000
1087	Jonas Akoto	5,000,000
1088	Abraham Nani Kwamla	5,000,000
1089	Patrick Yaogah	5,000,000
1090	Togbui Kanfrah VI	5,000,000
1091	Joseph Atakey	5,000,000
1092	Joseph Achem	5,000,000
1093	Marcus Krah	5,000,000
1094	S. K. Donkor	5,000,000
1095	Francis K. Gbezah	5,000,000
1096	Kwadzo-Zu	5,000,000
1097	Henry Yao	5,000,000
1098	Kwadzo Agamah	5,000,000
1099	Martin Agbeko	5,000,000
1100	Gle-Ametorgbeh	5,000,000
1101	Bernard Ahamaka	5,000,000
1102	Raphael Kwasi	5,000,000
1103	Michael Dawoe	5,000,000
1104	Mateo Nyagamagu	5,000,000
1105	Krakani Hini	5,000,000
1106	Yao Asempa	5,000,000
1107	Leonard Yao Sokpoli	5,000,000
1108	Togbui Yao Boankrah III	5,000,000
1109	E.K. Boankrah	5,000,000
1110	Justine Kporvu	5,000,000
1111	Kwamla Morte Tse	5,000,000
1112	Afedzikporsi Amuzu	5,000,000
1113	Kordabatse Adzroe	5,000,000
1114	Patricia Ayiglah	5,000,000
1115	Kofi Yevugah	5,000,000
1116	Kwasikumah Gbortsu	5,000,000
1117	Kwadzo Appiah	5,000,000
1118	Togbui A. Afele	5,000,000
1119	Edegbey Fesi	5,000,000
1120	Fritz Blegheh	5,000,000
1121	Daniel Akpatsi	5,000,000
1122	Stephen Gbena	5,000,000
1123	Vincent Kunkah	5,000,000
1124	Samuel Foli	5,000,000
1125	Alfred Agbenyo	5,000,000
1126	Gawu Kwame	5,000,000

1127	Cephas K. Akpakpla	5,000,000
1128	Atta Kwaku	5,000,000
1129	Henry Fiadoh	5,000,000
1130	Remijius Adzahla	5,000,000
1131	Emmanuel Foli	5,000,000
1132	Alex Foli	5,000,000
1133	Michael Foli	5,000,000
1134	Lawrence A. Dзамah	5,000,000
1135	Jacob Atsui Hlor	5,000,000
1136	Boni Factus Yewu	5,000,000
1137	Amedenyanu Soglo	5,000,000
1138	Daniel S. Numetsu	5,000,000
1139	Kwamla Akortsu	5,000,000
1140	Gedeon Atsui	5,000,000
1141	Mensah Y. Fatumi	5,000,000
1142	Daniel K. Akotoe	5,000,000
1143	Atsorkpe Sarchi	5,000,000
1144	Motteh Kwamla	5,000,000
1145	Gilbert Amedume	5,000,000
1146	John Kluvia	5,000,000
1147	Philip Kwasi	5,000,000
1148	John Akoto	5,000,000
1149	Afua Kluo	5,000,000
1150	Margaret K. Dogbey	5,000,000
1151	Gabriel Adzah Kwasi	5,000,000
1152	Anani Gafah	5,000,000
1153	Kwasikumah Kporyi	5,000,000
1154	Dominic Tekpor	5,000,000
1155	Clemence Tuprah	5,000,000
1156	Hini Sixtus Kwami	5,000,000
1157	Hini Regina	5,000,000
1158	Martha Afedima Adza Kosi	5,000,000
1159	Kwame Kuma Gafa	5,000,000
1160	Woto George Kofi	5,000,000
1161	Hini Henry Yao	5,000,000
1162	Adzoa Dzanku	5,000,000
1163	R.S.K. Okumka	5,000,000
1164	Okumka Noa	5,000,000
1165	Tefe Dente	5,000,000
1166	Foli Kwadzo	5,000,000
1167	Walter Akoto	5,000,000

1168Leonard Agbate	5,000,000
1169Jonathan Agbo-Chief	5,000,000
1170Reinhard Agbo	5,000,000
1171Koku Kodzoe	5,000,000
1172Agnes Agbo	5,000,000
1173Joseph Agbo	5,000,000
1174David Agbo	5,000,000
1175Dora Afua Agbo	5,000,000
1176Robert Adzikum	5,000,000
1177Emmanuel Adzikum	5,000,000
1178Caroline Adzikum	5,000,000
1179Samson Y. Agbo	5,000,000
1180Yao Sokpoe Kodzoe	5,000,000
1181Kpodzro Adei	5,000,000
1182Ferdinand K. A.	5,000,000
1183Yao Amedi	5,000,000
1184Togbe Aba	5,000,000
1185Kofi Ansa	5,000,000
1186Agomor Kormikuma	5,000,000
1187Kwaku Anka	5,000,000
1188Akroku Komla	5,000,000
1189Amegatse Kofi	5,000,000
1190Kumayi Aba	5,000,000
1191Mawusinu Aduama	5,000,000
1192Kodzo Afetor	5,000,000
1193Tatayi Aduama	5,000,000
1194Yoa Bedu	5,000,000
1195Macus Gbedegbe	5,000,000
1196Asembri	5,000,000
1197Asiama Afutu Agormo	5,000,000
1198Kwami Kuma	5,000,000
1199E. K. Bey	5,000,000
1200Josephine Agbo	5,000,000
1201Botsoe Yao Bedu	5,000,000
1202Josephine Ago	5,000,000
1203Botse Yao Badu	5,000,000
1204Philipine Krodo	5,000,000
1205Togbe Teku	5,000,000
1206Afi Somuah	4,000,000
1207Anthony Kwesi Buah	4,000,000

1208	Awusu Issah	4,000,000
1209	Benjamin Bennin Ntorhan	4,000,000
1210	George Amason Atangosigo	4,000,000
1211	Grace Akua Akosah	4,000,000
1212	Hajia Essi Akini	4,000,000
1213	Jonathan Kofi Tambro	4,000,000
1214	Mohammed Hanny Zahabi	4,000,000
1215	Newlove Kwaku Asiedu	4,000,000
1216	Noah Desantos Aggrey	4,000,000
1217	Rebecca Eshun	4,000,000
1218	Sophia Boamah	4,000,000Hearing aid
1219	Abdul-Waham Olani	3,000,000
1220	Abena Aso	3,000,000
1221	Abibata Abdulai	3,000,000
1222	Adjei-Twum	3,000,000
1223	Afi Adisi	3,000,000
1224	Afi M. Dzamesi	3,000,000
1225	Akua Serwaah	3,000,000
1226	Alexander Ani Adjei	3,000,000
1227	Alhaji Abdul Rahman Abubakar	3,000,000
1228	Alhaji Adam Gariba	3,000,000
1229	Alhaji Aminu Mohammed	3,000,000
1230	Alhaji I. Abu	3,000,000
1231	Alhaji Mahama Abudulai	3,000,000
1232	Alhassan Musah	3,000,000
1233	Allhaji Akwasi Ibrahim	3,000,000
1234	Ama Bosuo	3,000,000
1235	Ama Dufie	3,000,000
1236	Ama Owusu	3,000,000
1237	Anna Gidi	3,000,000
1238	Ansah Barnor	3,000,000
1239	Ansu Anane	3,000,000
1240	ASP Patrick Kwashie Adi	3,000,000
1241	Atta Ayibo	3,000,000
1242	Awusi Tika	3,000,000
1243	Ayanga Tindana	3,000,000
1244	Badzo Akey	3,000,000
1245	Barnabas Agyenkwa Mintah	3,000,000
1246	Basie Entsuah	3,000,000

1247	Beatrice Bentil	3,000,000
1248	Bebi Yaa Atigah	3,000,000
1249	Blandford Aduake Sarpei	3,000,000
1250	Kwame Nkrumah	3,000,000
1251	Martin Mutuo Bugu	3,000,000
1252	Mark Yaw Gyamfi	3,000,000
1253	Cecilia Agyapong	3,000,000
1254	Lamisah Busanga	3,000,000
1255	Kofi Mensah	3,000,000
1256	Andrews Kwame Peprah	3,000,000
1257	William K. Woekpor	3,000,000
1258	Togbe Agbe IV	3,000,000
1259	Joseph H. K. Osei	3,000,000
1260	Benjamin K. Owusu	3,000,000
1261	Boniface Salla	3,000,000
1262	Bright K. Amankwah	3,000,000
1263	Cate Tahoe	3,000,000
1264	Cecilia Mensah(Takoradi)	3,000,000
1265	Charity Ahorla	3,000,000
1266	Charity Nuerkie Noi	3,000,000
1267	Charles Aidoo	3,000,000
1268	Charles Akese Koranteng	3,000,000
1269	Christopher Tettey Kpene	3,000,000
1270	Comfort Agyeman	3,000,000
1271	Comfort Awo Agbodo	3,000,000
1272	D. B. Mensah	3,000,000
1273	Daniel A. Asirifi	3,000,000
1274	Daniel Akwasi Prempeh	3,000,000
1275	Daniel Awah	3,000,000
1276	Daniel Baba Mahama	3,000,000
1277	Daniel Kwaku Gbemu	3,000,000
1278	David Akorful	3,000,000
1279	Davidson Kissi Owusu	3,000,000
1280	Dede Christiana Ahunkpo	3,000,000
1281	Dominis Kwashie Edjahmah	3,000,000
1282	Edith Abia Amuzu	3,000,000
1283	Edward Mensah-Brown	3,000,000
1284	Edward Nkansah-Wadieh	3,000,000
1285	Edward Teye Kissieh	3,000,000
1286	Egya Kwesi Bentil	3,000,000

Gratuity to be computed as at time of offer

1287	Elizabeth Buabeng	3,000,000
1288	Elizabeth Habada	3,000,000
1289	Emma Enin	3,000,000
1290	Emmanuel Adjei Acheampong	3,000,000
1291	Emmanuel Bishop Dartey	3,000,000
1292	Emmanuel Kofi Aryeetey	3,000,000	Gratuity to be computed as at time of offer
1293	Emmanuel Kofi Ayebeng	3,000,000
1294	Emmanuel Kofi Frimpong	3,000,000
1295	Emmanuel Kwablah Azumah	3,000,000
1296	Ephraim Yao Akoto	3,000,000
1297	Esi Tawiah	3,000,000
1298	Florence Afuah Agyekumwaah	3,000,000
1299	Francis Adjakey	3,000,000
1300	Francis Adjei-Bannie	3,000,000
1301	Francis Kojo Ackom-Daafo	3,000,000
1302	Fred Kwame Baah	3,000,000
1303	Freeman Ateh Atidogla	3,000,000
1304	Gabriel Kwasi Appiah	3,000,000
1305	George K. Antwi	3,000,000
1306	George Kwabena Antwi	3,000,000
1307	George Obeng Boateng	3,000,000
1308	George Oscar Gray Jnr	3,000,000
1309	George Philip Okine	3,000,000
1310	Georgina Agboku	3,000,000
1311	Gladys Oteng	3,000,000
1312	Godfried Boakye Essim	3,000,000
1313	Grace Enyan	3,000,000
1314	Grace Fiawoyife	3,000,000
1315	Grace Highbayo	3,000,000
1316	Hajia Safia Adam	3,000,000
1317	Hamidu Alhassan	3,000,000
1318	Hannah Nyarko	3,000,000
1319	Helen Awo Baley	3,000,000
1320	Henry Asante Lamptey	3,000,000
1321	Herbert M. Adjei	3,000,000
1322	Ibrahim Bumo Nabubie	3,000,000
1323	Ibrahim Owusu Peprah	3,000,000
1324	Isaac Ahogbagbo	3,000,000
1325	Isaac Mensah	3,000,000

1326	Isaac Tetteh Torgbenu	3,000,000
1327	Isidore Kwame Gyamfi	3,000,000
1328	Ismael B. Sasu-Mensah	3,000,000
1329	Jacob Belba Smith	3,000,000
1330	James Kwasi Tega	3,000,000
1331	Janet Awo Azumah-Apam	3,000,000
1332	Jerry Odei Nyarko	3,000,000
1333	John B. Amissah	3,000,000
1334	John Benyebenwo Anwomeah	3,000,000
1335	John C. Collison	3,000,000
1336	John Teye Agah	3,000,000
1337	Jonathan Apotsi Nuerterey	3,000,000
1338	Mary Dakomasi Gota	3,000,000
1339	Joseph Boadi	3,000,000
1340	Joseph Gampson	3,000,000
1341	Joseph Yaw Manu	3,000,000
1342	Kate Larweh	3,000,000
1343	Kate Ocran	3,000,000
1344	Kingsley Amoah	3,000,000
1345	Kofi Boye	3,000,000
1346	Kofi Mati	3,000,000
1347	Kofi Oware	3,000,000
1348	Kofi Sah	3,000,000
1349	Korkor Akpo	3,000,000
1350	Korleki Obour	3,000,000
1351	Kwabena Ampadu	3,000,000
1352	Kwabena Oppong	3,000,000
1353	Kwaku Ampadu	3,000,000
1354	Kwaku Asante	3,000,000
1355	Kwaku Dua Addai	3,000,000
1356	Kwaku Dotsoo	3,000,000
1357	Kwaku Yaw Afum	3,000,000
1358	Kwame Dartey-Bempong	3,000,000
1359	Kwasi Amankwah	3,000,000
1360	Kwasi Ocran	3,000,000
1361	Kweku Chubby	3,000,000
1362	Kyei Baffour	3,000,000
1363	Lansah	3,000,000
1364	Leticia Ankrah	3,000,000
1365	Lord Imbeah- Ansah	3,000,000

1366	Mabel Ahiafor	3,000,000
1367	Mabel Kaitoo	3,000,000
1368	Malwine Ama Addim	3,000,000
1369	Mama Ankrah	3,000,000
1370	Mama Edze	3,000,000
1371	Margaret Azerevi	3,000,000
1372	Martha Agbozo	3,000,000
1373	Martin Okai	3,000,000
1374	Mary Ansong	3,000,000
1375	Mary Forson	3,000,000
1376	Mathias Narh-Zikpi	3,000,000
1377	Maxwell Yao Gidi – Narh	3,000,000
1378	Micah Osei	3,000,000
1379	Michael Kofi Asamoah	3,000,000
1380	Mike Tetteh Addy	3,000,000
1381	Millicent Abla Fiawoyifi	3,000,000
1382	Moro Alhassan	3,000,000
1383	Moro Nuuri	3,000,000
1384	Moses Arku Amenya Goku	3,000,000
1385	Musa Kramo	3,000,000
1386	Nana Boakye Agyemang	3,000,000
1387	Nana Kojo Yeboah	3,000,000
1388	Nathan Nyamedor	3,000,000
1389	Olivia Ziipe	3,000,000
1390	Omlink Mensah Asigbe	3,000,000
1391	Oteng Awuku	3,000,000
1392	Patrick Akoetey	3,000,000
1393	Paul Kojo Agyekum	3,000,000
1394	Juliana Yawa Bobi	3,000,000
1395	Prosper Larweh	3,000,000
1396	Paulina Gbadago	3,000,000
1397	Peace Abla Baka	3,000,000
1398	Peace Anisi Addim	3,000,000
1399	Peace Mensah	3,000,000
1400	Peter Alex Kwasi Oppong	3,000,000
1401	Philip Yeboah	3,000,000
1402	Regina Ahadzi	3,000,000
1403	Richard Effah	3,000,000
1404	Richard Kwadwo Amoah	3,000,000
1405	Ricky Nelson Atianah	3,000,000
1406	Rockfeller K. Hayford	3,000,000

1407	Rose Apedoe	3,000,000
1408	Rose Dompok	3,000,000
1409	Ruth Yoewie Kari	3,000,000
1410	Salifu Imoro	3,000,000
1411	Salifu Tindogo	3,000,000
1412	Salima Musah	3,000,000
1413	Samuel Emmanuel Percival Oddoye	3,000,000
1414	Samuel Laryea Abbey	3,000,000
1415	Samuel Tete Adimeh	3,000,000
1416	Sarah Nartey	3,000,000
1417	Simon Ohene Peprah	3,000,000
1418	Soge Ganu	3,000,000
1419	Stephen Adu-Donyinah	3,000,000
1420	Stephen Asante	3,000,000
1421	Stephen Fosu Owusu	3,000,000
1422	Stephen Yaw Asiedu	3,000,000
1423	Carl Glover Tay	3,000,000
1424	Tee Anim	3,000,000
1425	Tetteh Addy	3,000,000	Gratuity computed as at the time of payment
1426	Tei Atifa	3,000,000
1427	Teki Agboro	3,000,000
1428	Tete Gbetei	3,000,000
1429	Theresa A. Owusu	3,000,000
1430	Theresa Adomaa	3,000,000
1431	Theresa Nkansah	3,000,000
1432	Thomas Benefo	3,000,000
1433	Thomas K. Maclean	3,000,000
1434	Togbui Mankrado Dzan V	3,000,000
1435	Togo Sonohwe	3,000,000
1436	Victoria Abew	3,000,000
1437	William Kwame Asiedu	3,000,000
1438	Yakubu Dadiukai	3,000,000
1439	Yankson K. Gyamfi	3,000,000
1440	Yaw Appiah	3,000,000
1441	Yaw Barimah	3,000,000
1442	Yaw Koranteng	3,000,000
1443	Yeboah Amoabeng Atta Mensah	3,000,000
1444	Yohanna Adzo Osabu	3,000,000
1445	Zenabubila Saaka	3,000,000

1446A. K. Owusu	2,000,000
1447Abdul Rahmani J. Yakubu	2,000,000
1448Abdul Rahman Zakari	2,000,000
1449Abdulai Ahmed Zakari	2,000,000
1450Abdulai Imoro	2,000,000
1451Abdulai Soti	2,000,000
1452Abdul-Fataw Salifu	2,000,000
1453Abdul-Mumumi Abu	2,000,000
1454Abdul-Rahman Abdulai	2,000,000
1455Abel Teye Korley	2,000,000
1456Abena Atoaba	2,000,000
1457Abena Dwomoh	2,000,000
1458Abiba Mahama	2,000,000
1459Abibata Adam .	2,000,000
1460Abla Negble	2,000,000
1461Abubakari Dauda	2,000,000
1462Abubakari Yakubu	2,000,000
1463Abukari Adam	2,000,000
1464Abukari Amadu	2,000,000
1465Abukari Salifu	2,000,000
1466Aburuwa Mahama	2,000,000
1467Adama Musah	2,000,000
1468Adamu Salifu	2,000,000
1469Adamu Yakubu	2,000,000
1470Addy Augustine Ketorwoko	2,000,000
1471Adisa Abdulai	2,000,000
1472Adisah Alhassan	2,000,000
1473Adisah Dagomba Inusah	2,000,000
1474Adwoa Fosuaa	2,000,000
1475Adwoa Gyaama	2,000,000
1476Adwoa Ntiwaa	2,000,000
1477Adwoa Okyerewa	2,000,000
1478Afia Nyamekye	2,000,000
1479Afua Fofie	2,000,000
1480Agnes Amegashie Quao	2,000,000
1481Agnes Ofori	2,000,000
1482Ahmed Zakari Abdulai	2,000,000
1483Aisha Abdulmananan	2,000,000
1484Akosua Saa	2,000,000
1485Akosua Serwaah Sarkodee	2,000,000

1486	Akua Obimpe	2,000,000
1487	Alabira Zakari	2,000,000
1488	Albert Lawer Ayittah	2,000,000
1489	Albert Osei	2,000,000
1490	Alhaji Yakubu	2,000,000
1491	Alhaji A. Yakubu	2,000,000
1492	Alhaji Abubakri Mensah	2,000,000
1493	Alhaji Bawa Abdulai	2,000,000
1494	Alhaji Moro Baba	2,000,000
1495	Alhaji Seidu Musah	2,000,000
1496	Alhaji Toyibu Mohammed-Saani	2,000,000
1497	Alhaji Yakubu Fuseini	2,000,000
1498	Alhaji Yakubu Sulemanu	2,000,000
1499	Alhassan Imoro	2,000,000
1500	Alhassan Mahmoud	2,000,000
1501	Alhassan Nindow	2,000,000
1502	Alhassan Sulemana	2,000,000
1503	Alhassan Tani	2,000,000
1504	Alhassan Wulana	2,000,000
1505	Alhassan Wumba	2,000,000
1506	Ali Kwesi Ofori	2,000,000
1507	Aliyatu Abdul Rahman	2,000,000
1508	Alice Mensah	2,000,000
1509	Alidu Abubakari	2,000,000
1510	Alidu Moro	2,000,000
1511	Alima Ibrahim	2,000,000
1512	Alima Yakubu	2,000,000
1513	Ama Achiaa	2,000,000
1514	Ama Asantewaa	2,000,000
1515	Amadu Lamusah	2,000,000
1516	Amidu Adam	2,000,000
1517	Amina Grunshi Yakubu	2,000,000
1518	Amina Nabla	2,000,000
1519	Amina Yakubu	2,000,000
1520	Amishetu Adam	2,000,000
1521	Amoh Bediako Acheampong	2,000,000
1522	Amos Rockson Yeboah	2,000,000
1523	Anachie Daboda	2,000,000
1524	Anthony Eshun	2,000,000
1525	Araba Asher	2,000,000

1526	Asampambilla Gandina	2,000,000
1527	Ashietu Saibu	2,000,000
1528	Asia Salifu	2,000,000
1529	ASP Robert Kwaku Antwi	2,000,000
1530	Asukumang Azortah	2,000,000
1531	Atintono Asibiga	2,000,000
1532	Augustine Leo Gyamprah	2,000,000
1533	Augustus Owusu Gyimah	2,000,000
1534	Ayi Haruna	2,000,000
1535	Ayishata Osmanu	2,000,000
1536	Ayishetu Alhassan	2,000,000
1537	Azara Abdulai	2,000,000
1538	Azara Wuni	2,000,000
1539	Azaratu Issahakku de Liman	2,000,000
1540	Baavi	2,000,000
1541	Baba Modi	2,000,000
1542	Badu Dapaa	2,000,000
1543	Bakozie Mwinvi	2,000,000
1544	Banyeale Gandama	2,000,000
1545	Barichisu Mashood	2,000,000
1546	Barichisu Yakubu	2,000,000
1547	Beatrice Boakye	2,000,000
1548	Beatrice Korkor Doku	2,000,000
1549	Benjamin Kojo Amissah	2,000,000
1550	Benjamin Kuffour Oppong	2,000,000
1551	Benjamin Kwabena Oppong	2,000,000
1552	Benjamin Kwadwo Agyare	2,000,000
1553	Benjamin Ntiamoah	2,000,000
1554	Boadi Osei	2,000,000
1555	C. B. Sampong	2,000,000
1556	Catherine Ann Dzilah	2,000,000
1557	Cecilia A. Hoffman	2,000,000
1558	Cecilia Akomea	2,000,000
1559	Charles K. Afum	2,000,000
1560	Charles Kofi Fofie	2,000,000
1561	Chief Issifu Tahiru (Ho Zongo)	2,000,000
1562	Chris Asher	2,000,000
1563	Christian Afaglo	2,000,000
1564	Christian O. Kookulu	2,000,000

1565	Christiana Many	2,000,000
1566	Comfort Akonobea	2,000,000
1567	Comfort Debrah	2,000,000
1568	Comfort Yaa Nudo	2,000,000
1569	Confidence L. Lumor	2,000,000
1570	D. E.K. Ameyibor	2,000,000
1571	D. K. Asante	2,000,000
1572	D. K. Osei	2,000,000
1573	Daniel Adama Solomon	2,000,000
1574	Daniel Asante	2,000,000
1575	Daniel O. Amponsah	2,000,000
1576	Daniel Ohene Adjei	2,000,000
1577	Dasaa Bakyee	2,000,000
1578	Dauda Abubakari	2,000,000
1579	David Akale Ataburu	2,000,000
1580	David Dankwa	2,000,000
1581	Dawaye Klokpah	2,000,000
1582	Dora Kai Kodzo	2,000,000
1583	Dr. Keita Kwaku Kankam	2,000,000
1584	Dr. R. K. Gyamfi	2,000,000
1585	E. B. Sekyi Hughes	2,000,000
1586	E. Y. M. Ofosu-Okyere	2,000,000
1587	Edith Tee Bubu	2,000,000
1588	Edward Asumani Adu	2,000,000
1589	Edward Kumanor Adjartey	2,000,000
1590	Edward Yaw Owusu	2,000,000
1591	Efia Bonsu	2,000,000
1592	Ekua Kakraba	2,000,000
1593	Ekua Sekyiwa	2,000,000
1594	Elizabeth Agbaka	2,000,000
1595	Elizabeth Agbozo	2,000,000
1596	Elizabeth Arthur	2,000,000
1597	Elizabeth Ayensu	2,000,000
1598	Elizabeth Kankam	2,000,000
1599	Elizabeth Karikari	2,000,000
1600	Elizabeth Pedu	2,000,000
1601	Elliot Nsiah Kwadwo Twumasi	2,000,000
1602	Emmanuel Antwi-Barimah	2,000,000
1603	Emmanuel Besa Agbedzofe	2,000,000

1604	Emmanuel Kingsley Anto	2,000,000
1605	Emmanuel Korku Adelayita	2,000,000
1606	Emmanuel Kwabena Baah	2,000,000
1607	Emmanuel Mensah Tabiri	2,000,000
1608	Emmanuel Tannor	2,000,000
1609	Enoch Kpene Anim	2,000,000
1610	Ernest Okai Osei	2,000,000
1611	Esi Mansah	2,000,000
1612	Esther Addo	2,000,000
1613	Evans Kwaku Aggrey	2,000,000
1614	Ezra D. M. Stephens	2,000,000
1615	F. F. Logah	2,000,000
1616	Faith Esi Amegah	2,000,000
1617	Fati Abudulai	2,000,000
1618	Fati Sumani	2,000,000
1619	Fatimah Braimah	2,000,000
1620	Faustina Dadzie	2,000,000
1621	Felix Jones Quarshie	2,000,000
1622	Francis Abeka	2,000,000
1623	Francis Kwakye	2,000,000
1624	Francis Yao Dunyo	2,000,000
1625	Frederick Asafu-Adjei	2,000,000
1626	Frederick Amoako Ofori	2,000,000
1627	Fulera Iddrisu	2,000,000
1628	Fuseini Pauyezi	2,000,000
1629	G. K. Amevia	2,000,000
1630	G. K. Appiah	2,000,000
1631	G. K. Kaledzi	2,000,000
1632	G. Ocansey	2,000,000
1633	G. P. Okine	2,000,000
1634	Gabriel Kwami Adjei	2,000,000
1635	Gado Dagomba	2,000,000
1636	Gambia Akuoko	2,000,000
1637	Genge Kojo Addai	2,000,000
1638	George Eshun	2,000,000
1639	Giftly Adom	2,000,000
1640	Gilbert Atanga	2,000,000
1641	Godbless Amankwa	2,000,000
1642	Grace Nii Moi	2,000,000
1643	Grumpaa Adbul-Rahman	2,000,000

1644	Gyan Bediako	2,000,000
1645	Hajia Abeba Musah	2,000,000
1646	Hajia Adisah Musah	2,000,000
1647	Hajia Afisha Adam	2,000,000
1648	Hajia Ayishetu Muhammed	2,000,000
1649	Hajia Damatu Yamusah	2,000,000
1650	Hajia Hawawu Nawumba Mamudu	2,000,000
1651	Hajia Lamnatu Abdulai	2,000,000
1652	Hajia Memunatu Abu	2,000,000
1653	Hajia Salamatu Issifu	2,000,000
1654	Hajia Saratu Yakubu	2,000,000
1655	Hamidu Soti	2,000,000
1656	Haruna Abdulai Hamidu	2,000,000
1657	Haruna Baba	2,000,000
1658	Hassan Mohammed	2,000,000
1659	Hawa Zakari	2,000,000
1660	Henry Gyebi	2,000,000
1661	Henry Walter Duku	2,000,000
1662	Hosea Kofi Bediako	2,000,000
1663	Huseini Hamidu	2,000,000
1664	Ibrahim Abukari	2,000,000
1665	Ibrahim Akologo	2,000,000
1666	Ibrahim Salifu	2,000,000
1667	Iddrisu Sandow	2,000,000
1668	Ignatius Arizi Blay	2,000,000
1669	Imoro Abudulai	2,000,000
1670	Imoro Alhassan	2,000,000
1671	Imoru Abukari	2,000,000
1672	Isaac Duodu	2,000,000
1673	Isaac H. Nortey	2,000,000
1674	Issah Boateng	2,000,000
1675	Issah Huseini	2,000,000
1676	Issah Mahamadu	2,000,000
1677	Issah Timetey	2,000,000
1678	Issaku Mahama	2,000,000
1679	Issifu Yakubu	2,000,000
1680	J. A. Nuetey	2,000,000
1681	J. B. Kyei	2,000,000
1682	J. K. Aidoo	2,000,000
1683	J. K. Akuoko	2,000,000Benefit to be computed at 2001 rate

1684J. K. Fokuo	2,000,000
1685J.K. Ebouh	2,000,000
1686J.Kwame Prah	2,000,000
1687Jacob Anane-Adjei	2,000,000
1688Jackson Kwame Pipim	2,000,000
1689James Alex Appiah	2,000,000
1690James Kofi Karikari	2,000,000
1691James Kwabena Boakye	2,000,000
1692James Osei	2,000,000
1693Janet Abbah	2,000,000
1694Janet Akua Yeboah	2,000,000
1695John Albert Elephant Ansah	2,000,000
1696John Ben Bekorai	2,000,000
1697John E. Yankey	2,000,000
1698John Koblah Amegbor	2,000,000
1699John Kodzo Xorlali Adorvlo	2,000,000
1700John Nii Nmashi Adjetey	2,000,000
1701John Ohene Nantwi	2,000,000
1702Johnson Mpaba Nyande	2,000,000
1703Joseph Aidoo	2,000,000
1704Joseph Kenneth Addoh	2,000,000
1705Joseph Kankam	2,000,000
1706Joseph Kornor Aziabor	2,000,000
1707Joseph Korku Gbinde	2,000,000
1708Joseph Yaw Mensah	2,000,000
1709Joshua Yaw Oduro	2,000,000
1710Juliana Agyekumwaa Dompseh	2,000,000
1711Juliet Serwaah	2,000,000
1712Kwasi Kutin	2,000,000
1713K. Oppong	2,000,000
1714K. Boakye Yiadom	2,000,000
1715K. Appiah	2,000,000
1716K. Oppong	2,000,000
1717K. Y. Agyemang	2,000,000
1718Kassim Laminu	2,000,000
1719Kenneth Assan Dodzie	2,000,000
1720Kofi Ackon	2,000,000
1721Kofi Agyire Kwakye	2,000,000
1722Kofi Amoateng	2,000,000

1723	Kofi Bonsu	2,000,000
1724	Kofi Duku	2,000,000
1725	Kofi Williamson	2,000,000
1726	Kofi Sedefia	2,000,000
1727	Kojo Agorna	2,000,000
1728	Kwabena Agyeman	2,000,000
1729	Kwabena Anane	2,000,000
1730	Kwabena Boakye Yiadom	2,000,000
1731	Kwabena K. Agyeman	2,000,000
1732	Kwabena Ofosu Agyekum	2,000,000
1733	Kwabena Poku	2,000,000
1734	Kwadwo Gyamfi	2,000,000
1735	Kwadzo View	2,000,000
1736	Kwaku Gyeke	2,000,000
1737	Kwame Ohemeng	2,000,000
1738	Kwame Osei	2,000,000
1739	Kwasi Abora	2,000,000
1740	Kwasi Bio	2,000,000
1741	Kwesi Amiaku	2,000,000
1742	L. Oppong Snr.	2,000,000
1743	Larkyne Mary Tawiah	2,000,000
1744	Lord Sey	2,000,000
1745	M. Arko Amenya Goku	2,000,000
1746	M. Banfo Mensah	2,000,000
1747	M. Hanny Zahabi	2,000,000
1748	M. K. Anang	2,000,000
1749	Margaret Sam	2,000,000
1750	Magnus Nortey Ocquaye	2,000,000
1751	Mahama Idi	2,000,000
1752	Mahamadu Abdulai	2,000,000
1753	Mahamadu Kaleen	2,000,000
1754	Mahamadu Zoon Mumuni	2,000,000
1755	Malam Saka Tika	2,000,000
1756	Malam Salifu Ibrahim	2,000,000
1757	Mallam Abukari Adam	2,000,000
1758	Mallam Ibrahim Mohammed	2,000,000
1759	Mallam Issifu Musa	2,000,000
1760	Mallam Salifu Ibrahim	2,000,000
1761	Mallam Zuberu Alhassan	2,000,000
1762	Mamle Mansa Sebie	2,000,000

1763	Margaret Nketsiaba Cobbinah	2,000,000
1764	Mariama Braimah	2,000,000
1765	Mariama Hamadu	2,000,000
1766	Mariama Haruna	2,000,000
1767	Mariatu Alhassan	2,000,000
1768	Mariama Sayibu	2,000,000
1769	Mark Anthony Koomson	2,000,000
1770	Martha Ibrahim	2,000,000
1771	Martha Teronwee	2,000,000
1772	Mary Abena Dufie	2,000,000
1773	Mary Alhassan	2,000,000
1774	Mary Tweneboa Kodua	2,000,000
1775	Matthew Adams	2,000,000
1776	Matthew Kwasi Owusu	2,000,000
1777	Mathias Wolana Ofori	2,000,000To be paid entitlements, if any.
1778	Matthew Kwesi Dogbey	2,000,000
1779	Memunatu Adam	2,000,000
1780	Memunatu Saibu	2,000,000
1781	Mensah Darko(Snr)	2,000,000
1782	Mercy A. K. Adams	2,000,000
1783	Michael Ayawo Kubunya	2,000,000
1784	Michael Gbemu	2,000,000
1785	Michael Kwao Paditey	2,000,000
1786	M.K Boafo Ntifo	2,000,000
1787	Mohammed Alidu	2,000,000
1788	Mohammed Amaru	2,000,000
1789	Mohammed Issifu	2,000,000
1790	Mohammed Yakubu	2,000,000
1791	Mohammed Zakaria	2,000,000
1792	Moses Quaidoo	2,000,000
1793	Mumuni Yakubu	2,000,000
1794	Musa Mumuni	2,000,000
1795	Musah Alhassan	2,000,000
1796	Musah Ali	2,000,000
1797	N. K. Ashong	2,000,000
1798	N. K. Kraku II	2,000,000
1799	N. Kofi Asante	2,000,000
1800	N. Oppong	2,000,000
1801	N. D. Aggrey	2,000,000
1802	Naa Seidu Yakubu	2,000,000

1803	Nafisah Fuseini	2,000,000
1804	Nana Ayisi Arkoh	2,000,000
1805	Nana Baffour Asase	2,000,000
1806	Nana K. Agyemang	2,000,000
1807	Nan Essankwa Baah	2,000,000
1808	Nana K. Agyemang	2,000,000
1809	Nana Kofi Bentil	2,000,000
1810	Nana Poku	2,000,000
1811	Nana Yaa Achiaa	2,000,000
1812	Nesta Asomah Hawa	2,000,000
1813	Nicholas Nvidah	2,000,000
1814	Nindoo Sanatu	2,000,000
1815	Nuhu Basuglo	2,000,000
1816	Nuonge Awinebuno	2,000,000
1817	O. K. Kuma	2,000,000
1818	Okyere Blankson	2,000,000
1819	Kwame Adjei	2,000,000
1820	Edmund Ocansey	2,000,000
1821	Kofi Antwi	2,000,000
1822	Stephen Opoku Osei	2,000,000
1823	Gladys Ablah Dogbatse	2,000,000
1824	Adwoa Nyarko	2,000,000
1825	Osman Soti	2,000,000
1826	P. B. Awuah Gyawa	2,000,000
1827	P. K. Atta Kakra	2,000,000
1828	Patrick Alhasani Marmah	2,000,000
1829	Paul Amoabeng	2,000,000
1830	Paul Kwame Donkor Ayifli	2,000,000
1831	Paulina Letsa	2,000,000
1832	Peter Ashford Adomako	2,000,000
1833	Peter Kow Nkrumah	2,000,000
1834	Peter Ntow	2,000,000
1835	R. K. Hayford	2,000,000
1836	R. Z. Daker	2,000,000
1837	Rahinatu Issah	2,000,000
1838	Rebecca Ama Bour Nsana	2,000,000
1839	Richard Duho Ofori	2,000,000
1840	Roland Amegbor	2,000,000
1841	Roland Ekow Acquah	2,000,000
1842	Rufai Yakubu	2,000,000

1843S. K. Boye	2,000,000
1844Saadia Abdulai	2,000,000
1845Safana Abdulai	2,000,000
1846Salamat Issah	2,000,000
1847Salifu Adam	2,000,000
1848Salifu Ibrahim	2,000,000
1849Salifu Ousmanu	2,000,000
1850Salmata Yakubu	2,000,000
1851Samata Adam	2,000,000
1852Samata Mutaru	2,000,000
1853Samuel Abboah Asamoah	2,000,000
1854Samuel Addo Yeboah	2,000,000
1855Samuel Adu Fosu	2,000,000
1856Samuel Boamah Denkyi	2,000,000
1857Samuel Kodzo Zogli	2,000,000
1858Samuel Kwabena Boateng	2,000,000
1859Samuel Kwame Morttey	2,000,000
1860Samuel Kwesi Mensah	2,000,000
1861Samuel Kwesi Manu	2,000,000
1862Suigir Mwonzaala	2,000,000
1863Moses Ayornu	2,000,000
1864Samuel Mangertey	2,000,000
1865Sanatu Braimah	2,000,000
1866Sanatu Sulemana.	2,000,000
1867Sarah Aikins	2,000,000
1868Sawdatu Yakubu	2,000,000
1869Sayibu Alhassan	2,000,000
1870Seidu Abubakari	2,000,000
1871Seidu Yussif	2,000,000
1872Seth Letsu	2,000,000
1873Sgt Anthony Kwasi Owusu	2,000,000
1874Sheriff Koetey Gbodey	2,000,000
1875Simon Kwadwo Boateng	2,000,000
1876Sofo Mahama	2,000,000
1877Solomon Tawiah Lomotey	2,000,000
1878Solomon Tei Norbi	2,000,000
1879Sophia Mensah	2,000,000
1880Stella Nyamador	2,000,000
1881Stephen Enimil Amoah	2,000,000
1882Stephen Kwame Adama	2,000,000
1883Steven K. Boamah	2,000,000

1884	Sukena Abdulai	2,000,000
1885	Sulemana Alhassan	2,000,000
1886	Sumani Bin Mani	2,000,000
1887	Susana Amankwah	2,000,000
1888	Susana Koomson	2,000,000
1889	Susana Kumi	2,000,000
1890	Talhatu Mohammed	2,000,000
1891	Talhatu Saibu	2,000,000
1892	Tani Alhassan	2,000,000
1893	Teye Bosumprah	2,000,000
1894	Theophilus Kwabena Asare	2,000,000
1895	Theresa Nyamekye	2,000,000
1896	Togbe Asamoah Nkwanta VI	2,000,000
1897	Togbe Ashiakpor IV	2,000,000
1898	Tuffour Asante	2,000,000
1899	Valisa Yawa	2,000,000
1900	Victoria Amartey	2,000,000
1901	Victor Owusu (Driver)	2,000,000
1902	Victoria Torkonou	2,000,000
1903	Vida Nmonlokie Sappor	2,000,000
1904	Vincent Miah	2,000,000
1905	Vincent Yeboah Asiedu	2,000,000
1906	Wakaso Salifu	2,000,000
1907	Welbeck Okai	2,000,000
1908	Y .A .A. Mensah	2,000,000
1909	Y.Obeng	2,000,000
1910	Yaa Agyapomaa	2,000,000
1911	Yaa Ankoma	2,000,000
1912	Yahaya Abdulai	2,000,000
1913	Yakan Tenni	2,000,000
1914	Yaw Anning Boateng	2,000,000
1915	Yaw Apenteng	2,000,000
1916	Yaw Appiah	2,000,000
1917	Yaw Kwakye	2,000,000
1918	Yaw Kwarteng	2,000,000
1919	Yaw Sarfo	2,000,000
1920	Yaya Issah	2,000,000
1921	Yussif Fato'am	2,000,000
1922	Zaliatu Zakaria	2,000,000
1923	Zeenatu Mizima	2,000,000

1924	Zenabu Saibu	2,000,000
1925	Ziblim Yakubu	2,000,000
1926	Zoona Mahamadu Mumuni	2,000,000
1927	Zuwera Issahaku	2,000,000
1928	Kwabena Anim	2,000,000
1929	Thomas Amankwah	2,000,000
1930	Anna Tawiah	2,000,000
1931	Theresa Ama Owusu	2,000,000
1932	A. Karaa	1,000,000
1933	Abasiga Azuure	1,000,000
1934	Abdul Kadr Saibu	1,000,000
1935	Abdul Rahman Seidu	1,000,000
1936	Abdulai Azara	1,000,000
1937	Abdulai Karim	1,000,000
1938	Abdulai Yakubu	1,000,000
1939	Abena Ampofowaa Hawa	1,000,000
1940	Abena Boatemaa	1,000,000
1941	Abena Dufie	1,000,000
1942	Abraham Bortey	1,000,000
1943	Abuga Far Alhassan	1,000,000
1944	Awoyo Pupulampu	1,000,000
1945	Aku Sebie	1,000,000
1946	Benjamin Ofotsu Apronti	1,000,000
1947	Adakoora Adongo	1,000,000
1948	Adamu Alollo Belgo	1,000,000
1949	Adamu Amoah	1,000,000
1950	Adindaa Nmah	1,000,000
1951	Adongo Atampoka	1,000,000
1952	Aduah Akongne	1,000,000
1953	Afia Serwaa	1,000,000
1954	Afua Baah	1,000,000
1955	Afua Dansoa	1,000,000
1956	Ahmed Addai	1,000,000
1957	Akanyese Azuure	1,000,000
1958	Akosua Manu	1,000,000
1959	Akua Frimpomaa	1,000,000
1960	Akwasi Agyei Num	1,000,000
1961	Albert Kwame Sam	1,000,000
1962	Alhaji Alhassan Iddrisu Kpabia	1,000,000

1963	Alhaji T. Mahama	1,000,000
1964	Alhassan Bagbena	1,000,000
1965	Alice Atuko	1,000,000
1966	Alika Abelingo	1,000,000
1967	Ama Ayemfowa	1,000,000
1968	Ama Kyere Amoako	1,000,000
1969	Amin Shaba	1,000,000
1970	Anamoo Abesaare	1,000,000
1971	Andrew Boakye Yiadom	1,000,000
1972	Aneero Adombire	1,000,000
1973	Anthony Sarfo	1,000,000
1974	Asabila Apabaa	1,000,000
1975	Asubi Anoluski	1,000,000
1976	Asubi Anolusko	1,000,000
1977	Atamate Mma	1,000,000
1978	Atanga Agongo(No.1)	1,000,000
1979	Atanga Ayamga	1,000,000
1980	Atanga Ayeleme	1,000,000
1981	Atango Agongo(No.2)	1,000,000
1982	Augustina Araba Quansah	1,000,000
1983	Awubey Quame	1,000,000
1984	Ayi Mantey	1,000,000
1985	B. K. Donkor	1,000,000
1986	B. S. Addo	1,000,000
1987	B. Siaw-Addo	1,000,000
1988	Baba Amoah Amadu	1,000,000
1989	Barichisu Yussif	1,000,000
1990	Benjamin Nongor	1,000,000
1991	Bingloro Adomolga	1,000,000
1992	Bizoola Koyiri	1,000,000
1993	C.K. Agbanyo	1,000,000
1994	Cecilia Akomaa	1,000,000
1995	Cecilia Buchman	1,000,000
1996	Christian K. Ahadzi	1,000,000
1997	Comfort Osei	1,000,000
1998	Comfort Wiafe	1,000,000
1999	Dr Mohammed Kandem Kanbong	1,000,000
2000	Dramani Raffic Imoro	1,000,000
2001	DSP Lawrence Kwaku Zikpi	1,000,000 Pension
2002	Ebenezer Debrah	1,000,000

2003	Ebenezer Osei-Poku	1,000,000
2004	Edward Kwadwo Fokuo	1,000,000
2005	Edward Yaw Opoku-Badu	1,000,000
2006	Efua Kurantsiwa	1,000,000
2007	Eliasu Ayiriya	1,000,000
2008	Elizabeth Appiah	1,000,000
2009	Elizabeth Brempong	1,000,000
2010	Emmanuel Asante	1,000,000
2011	Emmanuel Duncan	1,000,000
2012	Emmanuel K. Yeboah	1,000,000
2013	Emmanuel Koranteng	1,000,000
2014	Enoch Kumie Addo	1,000,000
2015	Esi Baduwa	1,000,000
2016	F. Srebi	1,000,000
2017	Faustina Paintsil	1,000,000
2018	Faustina Sam	1,000,000
2019	Florence A. Agyekumwaa	1,000,000
2020	Florence Brago	1,000,000
2021	Francis Kwadwo Awuku	1,000,000
2022	George Asante	1,000,000
2023	George Oppong	1,000,000
2024	Hannah Nyamekye	1,000,000
2025	Hannah Quarcoo	1,000,000
2026	Haruna Bibeta(female)	1,000,000
2027	Haruna Fuseini	1,000,000
2028	Ibrahim Azara(female)	1,000,000
2029	Ibrahim Azure	1,000,000
2030	Ibrahim Zenabu(female)	1,000,000
2031	Iddrisu Saibu	1,000,000
2032	Isaac Yandor	1,000,000
2033	J.Chris Amenatey	1,000,000
2034	J.Y. Mensah	1,000,000
2035	James Fred Eghan	1,000,000
2036	John Nyamitei	1,000,000
2037	Joseph Anamolga	1,000,000
2038	Joseph Awuni	1,000,000
2039	Joseph Berchie	1,000,000
2040	Joseph Stennis Badu	1,000,000
2041	Karim Damata(female)	1,000,000
2042	Karim Zeliatu(female)	1,000,000
2043	Karbo Umar	1,000,000

2044	Kate Abam	1,000,000
2045	Kenneth Akolor	1,000,000
2046	Kennedy Adjei	1,000,000
2047	Kodwo Nyarko	1,000,000
2048	Kofi Darko	1,000,000
2049	Kwabena Kwenu	1,000,000
2050	Kwaku Apau	1,000,000
2051	Kwaku Fokuo	1,000,000
2052	Kwaku Osei	1,000,000
2053	Kwadwo Brenya	1,000,000
2054	Kwaku Yeboah	1,000,000
2055	Kwame Baako	1,000,000
2056	Kwame Kwarteng	1,000,000
2057	Kwesi Mantu	1,000,000
2058	Kwesi Kutin	1,000,000
2059	Lantei Lamptey	1,000,000
2060	Lawrence Kobina Yelpien	1,000,000
2061	Maame Nyarko	1,000,000
2062	Madinatu Appim	1,000,000
2063	Mahama Yahaya	1,000,000
2064	Margaret Yeboah	1,000,000
2065	Mariama Ousmanu	1,000,000
2066	Mary Yaa Serwah	1,000,000
2067	Mary Adams	1,000,000
2068	Mary Nyamekye	1,000,000
2069	Mercy Larbi	1,000,000
2070	Michael Kwadwo Adeti	1,000,000
2071	Mma Sanatu	1,000,000
2072	Mmai Musah	1,000,000
2073	Mohammed Bawa Ali	1,000,000
2074	Morcoma Hamadu	1,000,000
2075	Mosby Bamfo-Manuh	1,000,000
2076	Nai Marley	1,000,000
2077	Nana Kwame Fante Aduamoah II	1,000,000
2078	Nancy Marfo	1,000,000
2079	Nenkentie Bayan	1,000,000
2080	Nsor Anamoo	1,000,000
2081	O. Akwasi Kwasi Appiah	1,000,000
2082	Percy K. Essiagyan	1,000,000
2083	Peter Anderson Sarpong	1,000,000

Dismissal to be commuted into termination and his benefits duly paid.

2084	Philip Tetteh	1,000,000
2085	Rachel A. Biney	1,000,000
2086	Ransford Adjei Mante	1,000,000
2087	Robert Adzikum	1,000,000
2088	Rose Ghansa	1,000,000
2089	Ruth Anamoo	1,000,000
2090	S.T.Asare	1,000,000
2091	Safinatu	1,000,000
2092	Samuel Awuah	1,000,000
2093	Samuel Kwadwo Boateng	1,000,000
2094	Samuel Yaw Asumadu	1,000,000
2095	Samuel Yeboah-Kordie	1,000,000
2096	Sarah Appiah	1,000,000
2097	Sarah Asiedu	1,000,000
2098	Secena Ayanyire	1,000,000
2099	Seidu Bukari	1,000,000
2100	Shetu Mahamadu	1,000,000
2101	Stephen Anin Acheampong	1,000,000
2102	Stephen Gamah	1,000,000
2103	Tanko Sani	1,000,000
2104	Theresa Paintsil	1,000,000
2105	Theresa Yeboah	1,000,000
2106	Thomas Amankwa	1,000,000
2107	Thomas Ayornu	1,000,000
2108	Victoria Oppong	1,000,000
2109	Victoria Tawiah Kotey	1,000,000
2110	Wilson Antwi	1,000,000
2111	Winfred Manfred Asima	1,000,000
2112	Yakubu Agartey	1,000,000
2113	Yaw Osei	1,000,000
2114	Zenabu Amadu	1,000,000
2115	Daniel Akwasi Prempeh	1,000,000
2116	Prince Baffour Awuah Gyawu	1,000,000
2117	Zetu Braimah	1,000,000
	TOTAL	12,211,000,000

P & T EMPLOYEES

2118A. A. Adjetey

Referred to Government to pay them their entitlements

2119A. Bekoe	"
2120A. K. Doku	"
2121A. K. Quansah	"
2122A. Mantey	"
2123A. Q. Aryee	"
2124A. T. Addy	"
2125A. Tagoe	"
2126A. W. Kporvuvu	"
2127A. Welbech	"
2128Adjei Okpoti	"
2129Afua Agyeiwaa	"
2130Agyeman Duah	"
2131Ahmed Sisu	"
2132Akosua Owusuaa	"
2133Albert Dzotor	"
2134Albert Kodjo	"
2135Alfred Amoako	"
2136Alhaji Sowah	"
2137Alice Appiah	"
2138Amegbor-Bates	"
2139Andrews Gyasi	"
2140Andrews O. Yirenkyi	"
2141Anthony Afful	"
2142Awuah-Lartey	"
2143B. A. Marquaye	"
2144B. G. Addo	"
2145B. K. Addo	"
2146B. K. Arthur	"
2147B. K. Baidoo	"
2148Betty Ofosuhene	"
2149C. F. A. Koranteng	"
2150C. K. Amegbe	"
2151C. K. Tamakloe	"
2152C. Opoku	"
2153C. Q. Donkor	"
2154C. S. Amoako	"
2155C. S. Oppong (Miss)	"
2156C. Y. A. Dogbatse	"
2157C. Y. Amable	"
2158Charles Awuah Frimpong	"

2159	Charles E. Biney	"
2160	D. A. Allotey	"
2161	D. A. Badu	"
2162	D. K. Essuman	"
2163	D. K. Krampah	"
2164	D. K. Kwashie	"
2165	D. K. Okrah	"
2166	D. P. Agbavor	"
2167	D. P. Y. Ofosu	"
2168	D. T. Addy	"
2169	Dwamena	"
2170	E. A. Cripman	"
2171	E. A. Kesse	"
2172	E. A. Mensah	"
2173	E. A. Mensah	"
2174	E. A. Tackie	"
2175	E. A. Yirenkyi	"
2176	E. Akyin Monney	"
2177	E. Ayiku	"
2178	E. E. Aban	"
2179	E. K. Adzato	"
2180	E. K. Aihoon	"
2181	E. K. Ampadu	"
2182	E. O. Akuamoah- Boateng	"
2183	E. O. Brown	"
2184	E. Obessey	"
2185	E. Owusu	"
2186	E. T. Commey	"
2187	E. T.C. Lomoko	"
2188	E. Y. Anku	"
2189	E. Y. Anku	"
2190	E. Y. Boakye	"
2191	Eben Kumah	"
2192	Edward Sakyi	"
2193	Ekow Mantey	"
2194	Elizabeth Amponsah	"
2195	Emelia Amoah- Danso	"
2196	Emmanuel Appiah	"
2197	Emmanuel Ofori	"
2198	Emmanuel S. K. Adams	"

2199Eric Kumasi	"
2200Ernest Agyei- Kwakye	"
2201Essel Doomson	"
2202Evans Kwakyir	"
2203F. A. Annan	"
2204F. A. Asiedu	"
2205F. Appiah	"
2206F. Guy Tetteh	"
2207F. K. Ahiabley	"
2208F. K. Assumah	"
2209F. K. Dagadu	"
2210F. K. Gah	"
2211F. N. Buah	"
2212F. S. R. Antobam	"
2213Frances Adu Mante	"
2214Fraser A. Acquaye	"
2215G. A. Arhin	"
2216G. A. Mensah	"
2217G. E. K. Attram	"
2218G. E. Ofori-Addo	"
2219G. K. Brown	"
2220G. K. Yeboah	"
2221G. N. Ankrah	"
2222G. O. Acquah	"
2223G. O. Quartey	"
2224G. Y. Degbatse	"
2225H. A. Quaye	"
2226Hammond	"
2227Hayford Adu Mandoh	"
2228I. F. Amoh	"
2229I. K. Amoah-Odoom	"
2230J. A. Badu	"
2231J. A. Yankson	"
2232J. Akpitipola	"
2233J. B. K. Agudze	"
2234J. C. Boye	"
2235J. D. Bantee	"
2236J. K. Adjei	"
2237J. K. Appiah	"
2238J. K. Mensah	"
2239J. K. Tandoh	"

2240J. L. Abbey	"
2241J. N. Hammond	"
2242J. O. Assibey	"
2243J. O. Opare	"
2244J. O. Robertson	"
2245J. Osei Nkansah	"
2246J. S. Djorbuah	"
2247J. Tetteh	"
2248J. W. Osei	"
2249J.G. Adzaglo	"
2250J.S Monsilver	"
2251J.S.K.Deboley	"
2252Joe Lartey	"
2253Joe Mulley	"
2254Johannes Gameklu	"
2255John Appiah Kusi	"
2256John Appiah Yankson	"
2257John Eduam	"
2258John Kingsley Eduarm	"
2259Johnson Asamoah Opare	"
2260Jori Issa	"
2261Joseph Mensah Quarcoo	"
2262K. A. Kassy	"
2263K. O. Awuku	"
2264K. Opoku-Banful	"
2265K.Agyeman Duah	"
2266K.E Hagan	"
2267Kassum Seidu	"
2268Kodjoe Korsah	"
2269Kwame Mensah	"
2270L. K. Kemetse	"
2271L.K Amassah	"
2272M. A. K. Mensah	"
2273M. A. K. Nyikplorkpor	"
2274M. A. Sule	"
2275M. J. K Kudolo	"
2276M. K. Adetie	"
2277M. K. Selby	"
2278M.D Ackolley	"
2279M.K Clottey	"

2280	Mahama Imoro	"
2281	Miss Cecilia Afenyo	"
2282	Miss Edwina Hazel	"
2283	Miss Engman	"
2284	Miss Florence Boateng	"
2285	Miss Helen N. Tagoe	"
2286	Mr Anderson	"
2287	Mr Atorsah	"
2288	Mr. Amu	"
2289	Mr. Armah	"
2290	Mr. Attuquayefio	"
2291	Mr. Boromah	"
2292	Mr. Godson	"
2293	Mr. Kwao	"
2294	Mr. Obeng	"
2295	Mr. Raman	"
2296	Mr. Sarpong	"
2297	Mr. Sraha	"
2298	Mr. Tettenyo	"
2299	Mr. Nortey	"
2300	Mrs. Ocquaye	"
2301	N. K. Cheetan	"
2302	Nicholas Amartey	"
2303	Nicholas Quartey	"
2304	Osafo Yaw	"
2305	P. A. Akoto	"
2306	P. H. Davoh	"
2307	P. K. Adjei	"
2308	P. K. Brafi	"
2309	P. K. Kwachie	"
2310	P. R. E. Jonah	"
2311	P. T. Nkrumah	"
2312	P. Y. Adu	"
2313	Patrick Mensah	"
2314	Peter Adams	"
2315	Peter Amo-Baah	"
2316	Prince Saxbon Quansah	"
2317	R. A. Osei	"
2318	Reynelds Akuamoah	"
2319	Richard Aseidu Obuobi	"

2320Robert Ankrah	"
2321Rockson	"
2322S. A. Laryea	"
2323S. A. Ntodie	"
2324S. A. Sowah	"
2325S. Antwi	"
2326S. B. Afram	"
2327S. K. Anim	"
2328S. K. Annan	"
2329S. K. Kodjoe	"
2330S. K. Nti	"
2331S. K. Siaw	"
2332S. O. Pagbovi	"
2333S. Odenyame	"
2334S. S. Thompson	"
2335S. T. Adjartey	"
2336S. Y. Kyereko	"
2337Salifu	"
2338Samuel Lanyo	"
2339Stephen Donkor	"
2340Stephen Mensah	"
2341T. A. Frimpong	"
2342T. K. Essuman	"
2343T. K. Quarcoo	"
2344Tei Appronti	"
2345Tommy	"
2346V. K. Safo Abebrese	"
2347W. K. Afutu	"
2348W. K. Wodza	"
2349W. Y. Agbo	"
2350William Nelson Coffie	"

SHAPIC POLICY

2351Alhaji A. Nuhu	TDC to refund deposits
2352Christian K. Owusu	"
2353Clement N. L. Mills	"
2354Ernest K. Agudu	"
2355G. Boateng	"
2356G.C.K.Adzovo	"
2357Hagar Essel	"
2358J. E. Kwakye	"

2359	Josephine Carr	"
2360	K. Osei	"
2361	Lawrence K. Blay	"
2362	R. K. V. Kartey	"
2363	Samuel K. Boateng	"
2364	Frank Quist	TDC to refund deposit on Estate No. AM 8
2365	A. A. Richards	SHC to hand over plot or replace it.
2366	Abena Bruwaa	Cocoa services division of CMB to pay Ex-gratia award to Petitioner.
2367	Abraham Teye Kwao	To be terminated and paid benefits.
2368	Akosua Owusuua	Cocoa services division of CMB to pay Ex-gratia award to Petitioner.
2369	Augustine Vorodam	To be paid ½ salary for 2 years.
2370	Akuamoah Boateng	To be paid his benefits
2371	Albert Dodoo	Dismissal to be converted to termination and benefits paid.
2372	Alfred Sethoafia	To be terminated and paid benefits.
2373	Alex Oppong	To be reinstated or appropriate compensation paid
2374	Alexandra Akuetteh Hammond	Entitlements to be paid if any.
2375	Amadu Douri	All outstanding properties to be returned to him.
2376	Anastas Latevi Mikayan	Petitioner to take steps to claim his benefits.
2377	ASP Abraham Odiko Bortey	Dismissal to be converted to termination and benefits paid.
2378	ASP Cletus Yao Bakah	Dismissal to be converted to termination and benefits paid.
2379	ASP Francis Murphy Anane	To be promoted to the next higher grade and retired with benefits.
2380	Ayana Tindana	Be paid salary arrears and put on pension if any
2381	Ben A. Kulley	If he was retrenched, then his entitlement, if any, should be paid to him
2382	Benjamin Tetteh Buer	Land to be restored to owner
2383	Cecilia O. Kyeremanteng	Confiscated property to be returned.
2384	Cephas Alerboblah	His benefit to be paid.
2385	Charles Aidoo	Next of kin to be paid appropriate entitlements
2386	Charles Okordie	CEPS to pay gratuity if he is entitled
2387	Charles Osei Bonsu	PBC to pay him the value of 1000 bags of cocoa at current rate.
2388	Chief Supt. Samuel Adjepong Okyere	To be promoted to the next higher grade and retired with benefits.
2389	Christian Emmanuel Amaning	He should collect his one month's salary if he has not done so already
2390	Christian Yao Anku	Outstanding leave of 115 days to be converted to cash and paid by GBC.
2391	Christopher Ankuyi Senya	To be terminated and paid benefits.
2392	Clement Oposika-Agudey	To be terminated and paid benefits.
2393	Cdr. Joseph Danso Oppong	Citizenship rights to be restored. Retirement benefits to be paid

2394	Constable Mensah	Dismissal to be commuted into termination and his benefits duly paid
2395	Constable Sogbe	Dismissal to be commuted into termination and his benefits duly paid
2396	Constance Murray Nee Benson Agyei	To be restored to Assistant Director and retired with full benefits
2397	Cpl Amu	Dismissal to be commuted into termination and his benefits duly paid
2398	CSA Nortei	If he was retrenched, then his entitlement, if any, should be paid to him
2399	D/CPL Rockson Symon Agorkpah	To be promoted to the next higher grade and retired and paid their benefits
2400	Dagbon Skin	Apology
2401	Daniel Essah Afari	Dismissal to be converted to termination with full benefits paid.
2402	David Yussif Yobo	He should be paid the balance of his salary that was withheld during interdiction.
2403	Dennis Kwaku Amewuda	He should be paid the balance of his salary
2404	Dr. Kwame Safo-Adu	Letter of apology.
2405	Dr. Matthew Narh Tetteh	Government to surrender lease to SHC
2406	DSP Edmund Oheneansah	To be promoted to the next higher grade and retired and paid their benefits
2407	DSP Emmanuel Yaw Blessie	To be promoted to the next higher grade and retired and paid their benefits
2408	DSP Emmanuel Fiati	To be promoted one step up and retired with full benefits.
2409	Ebenezer Adu Henaku	To be promoted to next higher rank and retired.
2410	Ebenezer Chaiku Armah	Recommendation for pension to be implemented
2411	Elizabeth Amponsah	Cocoa services division of CMB to pay Ex-gratia award to Petitioner.
2412	Emmanuel Aidam	Fresh coroners inquest to be held
2413	Emmanuel Koblah Akpanyah	To receive benefits as at the time they fell due.
2414	Emmanuel Kofi Arkoful	Ombudsman Decision to be implemented
2415	Emmanuel Ofori	Cocoa services division of CMB to pay Ex-gratia award to Petitioner.
2416	Emmanuel Okata Sarpong	To be paid pension
2417	Emmanuel Owusu-Boakye	To be promoted to next higher grade and retired with full benefits.
2418	Emmanuel Owusu Appiah	Cocoa services division of CMB to pay Ex-gratia award to Petitioner.
2419	Emmanuel R. A. Attah	Land Valuation Board to assess compensation
2420	Enoch Boateng	Entitlements to be paid.
2421	Ezra Douglas Martinson Stephen	To be promoted to next higher grade and retired with full benefits.
2422	Francis Addo	He should be released now
2423	Francis Dontoh	Dismissal to be converted to Termination and benefits paid
2424	Francis Dzireku	Dismissal to be commuted into termination and his benefits duly paid
2425	Francis Nsowah	To be terminated with appropriate benefits.

2426	Frank C.A Smith	If he was retrenched, then his entitlement, if any, should be paid to him
2427	Frank Neequaye	Dismissal to be commuted into termination and his benefits duly paid
2428	Frederick Ayeh Okraku	Terminated and paid some benefit if any.
2429	G. Boateng	Refund her deposit.
2430	G/Cpl George Appiah	Dismissal to be commuted into termination and his benefits duly paid
2431	Gale Nyatife-Attipoe	TDC to compensate for loss.
2432	George Elliot Kwasi Oppong	To be paid his entitlements
2433	George Acheampong	To be released
2434	George Tagoe	His entitlements to be paid to him.
2435	Gilly King Osei	Benefit to be recalculated based on 10 years service
2436	Hagar Essel	According to TDC and Sharpic Law.
2437	Harrison Somuah Sasu	Entitlements to be paid.
2438	Haruna Busanga	KMA to pay his entitlements if any
2439	Hawa Magajia	Restore house to her.
2440	Henry Breakspeare Apatu-Plange	To be deemed to have retired at compulsory retiring age and paid gratuity and pension appropriately
2441	Michael Komla Adzovie	" "
2442	Samuel Azu Crabbe	" "
2443	J. Z. Ziebah Iddrisu	CEPS to refund as directed by Public Tribunal.
2444	James Appiah	Benefit to be computed at 2001 rate.
2445	J. A. Tetteh	If he was retrenched, then his entitlement, if any, should be paid to him
2446	James T. Quarcoo	If he was retrenched, then his entitlement, if any, should be paid to him
2447	J. P. K. Bolton	If he was retrenched, then his entitlement, if any, should be paid to him
2448	John Kwame Owusu	Dismissal to be commuted into termination and his benefits duly paid
2449	John Yaw Frimpong	Dismissal to be converted to Termination and benefits paid
2450	Johnson Bonyah Asamoah	Reinstate and/ or appropriate compensation paid.
2451	Johnson Yao Mihesu	To be termination and paid benefits, if any.
2452	Joseph Agyeman	To be promoted one step higher and retired and paid all benefits
2453	Joseph Amankwah	Appropriate compensation for injury sustained during peacekeeping duties to be paid to him and reimbursement claim from UN, as per regulations.
2454	Joseph Armah Boye	If he was retrenched, then his entitlement, if any, should be paid to him
2455	Josephine Armah	If she was retrenched, then her entitlement, if any, should be paid to her.
2456	Joseph Kwasi Nimako	To be paid his entitlements after dismissal converted to termination.

2457	Joseph Yaw Kaba	To be paid retirement awards
2458	Kafui Asem	A.M.A should comply with the decision.
2459	Kenneth Emmanuel Bruce	Removal to be converted to termination with full benefits
2460	Kofi Mensah Addison	Dismissal to be converted to termination with full benefits
2461	Kofi Opoku-Agyeman	£5,800 to be returned.
2462	Kwabena Kobra	Ministry of Agric to fulfil promise
2463	Kwame Ofori-Yentumi	Benefits to be paid
2464	Kwesi Ghapson	Land Valuation Board to assess compensation.
2465	Lamisa Busanga	Be paid pension entitlements, if appropriate.
2466	Lawrence Adikah	Computation of benefits as at the time of offer
2467	Lawrence Bruce Kyei	Termination instead of dismissal. To be put on pension
2468	Linus Atachie	Computation of benefits as at the time of offer
2469	Martin A. Danquah	Deconfiscation of Kumasi property.
2470	Mary Tornugble	Ghana Education Service recommendation should be implemented
2471	Michael Amegadzi Sokpoli	To be paid entitlements in lieu of notice.
2472	Michael Kwao Anang	Converted to termination and paid entitlements.
2473	Mike Tetteh Addy	Claims to be paid,i.e 84 days leave in cash and gratuity.
2474	Nana Kwasi Ketewa IV	Apology
2475	Nyanya	Benefits to be paid according to CHRAJ decision.
2476	Ofoe Ambasaki	Benefits should be paid.
2477	Ohene Kwofie	Property to be returned to Petitioner.
2478	Peter Ernest Kingsley Quaysel	House to be deconfiscated.
2479	Philip T. Kwao	Proper compensation due him to be paid.
2480	Prince Gabriel Kwame	Proper compensation due him to be paid.
2481	Raymond Dzeble	Entitlement to be determined
2482	Rebecca Tagoe	If she was retrenched,then her entitlement, if any, should be paid to her
2483	Richard Tetteh Seglah	His properties to be returned to him.
2484	Roland Yakubu Adams	Dismissal to be converted to termination with fullll benefits paid.
2485	Samuel Adjei Larbi	Cocoa Services Division of CMB to pay Ex-gratia award to Petitioner.
2486	Samuel Anum Okai	Ex gratia award by CSD.
2487	Samuel Anum Osei	Cocoa services division of CMB to pay Ex-gratia award to Petitioner.
2488	Samuel Insane	KMA to pay entitlements if any...
2489	Samuel Larweh-Totimeh	To provide documentation to former employer for his benefits.
2490	Samuel Nimako Frempong	To provide documentation to former employer for his benefits.
2491	Samuel O. Commey	If he was retrenched,then his entitlement , if any, should be paid to him

2492	Samuel Yaw Osei	University of Ghana to investigate his claim and place him on appropriate retirement scheme
2493	Seth Mensah Martey	Reinstate or appropriate compensation paid.
2494	Sgt Kingsley Kwesi Adjei	Dismissal to be commuted into termination and his benefits duly paid
2495	Sgt Kofi Tapari	Dismissal to be commuted into termination and his benefits duly paid
2496	Siaw	Property to be restored and Apology
2497	Simon Kwame Owusu	To be retired as per CHRAJ decision
2498	Sisala Dramani	Terminal benefit if any should be paid by Ghana Highways
2499	Solomon Kwesi Aggrey	Assembly should comply with CHRAJ order.
2500	Sophia Buamah	SHC to refund her money with interest,
2501	Stephen Dickson Kofi Nimoh	Release pension if entitled.
2502	Sumani bin Mani	He should be paid his benefits
2503	Stephen Yaw Simpe	House to be returned to owner.
2504	Supt Gabriel Loveridge Quampah	To be promoted to the next higher grade and retired with benefits.
2505	Susana L. Lartey	AMA to restore her property and pay compensation for its destruction.
2506	Tei-Na-Ansah	Benefits should be paid
2507	Theresa Osei	Procedures for Medical Board should be instituted and her benefits paid.
2508	Thomas Adu Poku	Procedures for medical board
2509	Thomas Apetonu	Refer to Controller and Accountant General.
2510	Thomas B. Dykar	To be released and supported
2511	Victor Imbrah	To be paid compensation for his loss of land by Lands Commission
2512	Wendy Asiamah	Retirement benefits should be calculated at current rate and paid to her.
2513	Yaw Kwakye	Cocoa services division of CMB to pay Ex-gratia award to Petitioner.
2514	John Yaw Frimpong	Pension

Chapter 2 - Reparations

CHAPTER 2

REPARATIONS

2. REPARATION AND REHABILITATION FUND

2.1 Establishment Of Fund

2.1.1 In accordance with section 20 (2) (h) of the National Reconciliation Commission Act, 2002 (Act 611), the Commission recommends the setting up of a Reparation and Rehabilitation Fund from which, among others, monetary compensation will be disbursed.

2.2 Sources Of Funds

2.2.1 The following are recommended as sources of generating cash to build the fund:

1. The government should make provision in the national budget towards paying reparation.
2. In addition some provision can be made as part of poverty alleviation.
3. The government should apply a percentage of the HIPC funds to the reparation.
4. Perpetrators' Contribution - At least one perpetrator has given an indication of his willingness to go beyond an apology to do more to show remorse and work towards healing and reconciliation. The Commission recommends that provision should be made for perpetrators who are willing to contribute to the fund. Perpetrators who wish to make anonymous contributions should be encouraged to do so.
5. Corporate Bodies may be encouraged to make voluntary contributions to the fund. Such contributions should be tax-deductible.
6. Voluntary Contribution from the public - an appeal should be made to the general public for those who are willing to contribute towards an effort to cleanse our past and reconcile the nation.
7. The Commission also recommends that the proceeds from the sale of the Commission's Report and other memorabilia should go into the Reparation Fund.

2.2 LEGAL BASIS FOR REPARATION

2.2.1 The legal bases for the Commission's recommendation on reparation are, first and foremost, derived from the National Reconciliation Act, 2002 (Act 611) section 20(2) specifically:

- 20 (2) (d) recommend the appropriate response to the specific needs of each victim or group of victims;
- (f) recommend reforms and other measures whether legal, political, administrative or otherwise needed to achieve the objectives of the Commission;
- (g) promote healing and reconciliation ; and
- (h) setting up of a reparation and rehabilitation fund.

2.2.2 Even though the Act does not mandate the Commission to disburse reparation, having investigated complaints of human rights violations and abuses and having identified victims in accordance with section 4 of Act 611, it is better suited to recommend appropriate reparations for implementation by any body or bodies that would be established in accordance with section 20 (2)(h).

2.2.3 Secondly, Chapter 15 of the Constitution, 1992, entrenches the fundamental rights and freedoms of every person in Ghana and same shall be respected by the State, its agencies as well as individuals. It also provides specifically for circumstances under which victims of human rights violations shall seek redress as well as provisions for the payment of compensation by violators. Reparation for human rights violation is, therefore, a right the individual is entitled to, and not a favour.

2.2.4 Best practices in international law provide another legal basis for the Commission's recommendation on reparation. Within the framework of international human rights, a consensus is evolving regarding the obligation to protect fundamental human rights and freedoms, and the right to seek redress when these rights are violated. A right to seek redress implies a duty to ensure that appropriate steps (including reparation) are taken to address any violation.

2.2.5 Lastly, Ghana is a party to major international treaties that assert the inviolability of fundamental human rights, the same rights that the Commission was set up to investigate. All of these treaties have provisions regarding the right of victims to remedy, such as compensation.

2.3 OBJECTIVES OF THE COMMISSION'S REPARATION POLICY

2.3.1 The objectives of the Commission's reparation policy are captured in the following:

2.3.1.1 RIGHT

The 1992 Constitution entrenches the fundamental rights and freedoms of the individual, which shall be respected by the State, its agencies and individuals and a corresponding right to seek redress when these rights are violated. A principal objective of this reparations policy is to reinforce the citizen's right to redress as well as the responsibility of the State to conduct itself in a manner based on respect for human rights, the rule of law and democratic accountability.

2.3.1.2 RECOGNITION

Another major objective of the reparations policy is to achieve two forms of recognition: recognition of victimhood and recognition of accountability. The first means acknowledging that the treatment to which the victim was subjected constitutes a serious human rights violation or abuse. The second means that, no matter how long it takes, the

State, and for that matter, responsible actors, shall be called upon to account for their acts of commission and omission.

2.3.1.3 REPAIR AND REHABILITATION

Through reparations, the Commission seeks to, somehow alleviate the suffering of victims (direct or indirect) of human rights violations and to help them carry on with their lives.

2.3.1.4 REFORM

While the award of reparation, by its very nature is backward-looking, it also serves a forward-looking purpose, to the extent that it provides a basis for non-repetition. In that respect it is the objective of the Commission that through the reparations package, the nation will be motivated to resolve that “Never Again” shall the State facilitate or preside over such gross human rights violations.

2.3.1.5 RESPECT

Reparation will be recommended for everyone against whom human rights violations will be established, there will be no distinction between the well-placed in society and the ordinary victim, who is usually voiceless and lacks the means to take on the highly-placed and powerful in society. One of the objectives of the reparations policy is to underscore respect for all individuals, irrespective of their social or economic status.

2.3.1.6 REALISM

In making its recommendations for reparation, the Commission is striving to achieve a balance between the need to redress human rights violations and the resource constraints that confront the nation. As already stated, reparations can never fully repair the damage caused to victims nor restore them to the status quo ante. However, recommendations, which do not take account of the resource limitations of the nation, will make implementation a difficult and a long drawn-out enterprise and therefore exacerbate the pain of victims.

2.4 FORMS OF REPARATION

2.4.1 SYMBOLIC MEASURES

2.4.1.1 The point cannot be over-emphasized that no reparation, monetary or otherwise can restore victims (direct or indirect) to the status quo ante. It is also a fact that some victims find monetary reparation rather offensive, as it appears like payment for their suffering.

2.4.1.2 There are yet some victims, who have managed, somehow, to put their pain behind them, moved on with their lives and have stated expressly that they do not want monetary compensation. For some petitioners, they are only looking for the truth regarding the disappearance or killing of their loved ones. The Commission therefore regards symbolic reparation as probably the most significant of all forms of reparation and should be awarded together with other forms of reparation that are considered appropriate. In the light of the above, the Commission recommends the following symbolic reparations:

2.4.1.3 Apology

Letters of apology signed by the President, couched to reflect the category of violation suffered by specific victims of egregious human rights violations.

Apology (radio and television broadcast) by heads of public institutions that are identified as main actors in the violation of the rights of individuals. For example an apology from the President as the Head of State and Commander-in-Chief of the Ghana Armed Forces.

A special apology from the President to the Ghanaian woman for the indignities and the atrocities she has endured.

2.4.1.4 Monuments And Commemorative Events

A national monument in Accra, in honour of the killed, disappeared (all those who lost their lives as a result of human rights violation) and to the unknown victim of human rights abuse during the Commission's mandate period. On the monument shall be engraved the names of the victims who fall in this category, such as the Generals, the three High Court Judges and retired Army Officer, those executed after sham trials fraught with severe torture and serious procedural irregularities and the unknown victims.

A monument to be erected in honour of the Ghanaian woman.

Monuments in the regional capitals in honour of traders, and other civilians.

A National Reconciliation Day: a one-off commemorative day, not an annual affair, when monuments are unveiled, apology letters delivered and broadcasts made by the President and heads of responsible institutions.

An Annual Remembrance/Thanksgiving Day.

National Reconciliation memorabilia:

- National Reconciliation Stamps
- National Reconciliation coins
- National Reconciliation badges

These could be sold to raise money for the Rehabilitation Fund.

Annual Reconciliation Lectures to foster respect for human rights, rule of law and democratic principles

2.4.1.5 Scholarships

Scholarship for one child (in public school up to SSS level) of the following category of victims

- o Persons who lost their lives as a result of human rights violation
- o The disappeared
- o Persons disabled as a result of human rights violation
- o Traders whose goods were seized

An eligible child is a child born to a victim– petitioner or for whom a petition was made to the Commission. Valid birth certificates to be produced to prove parentage and age.

2.4.1.6 Health Benefits

2.4.1.6.1 For those living with health problems as a result of human rights violation, the NHIS, which is about to take off, should take care of their concerns.

2.4.1.6.2 The Commission also recommends the establishment of a Trauma and Counselling Centre in every Regional and District Hospital.

2.4.1.7 Namoo Market

The Commission recommends the building of a market for Namoo as a kind of community reparation. Namoo is a border town in the Upper East Region, which had a vibrant market. However, following frequent unlawful seizure of goods from the traders and the atrocities meted out to them in the process, the market is now located on the Burkina Faso side of the border, thereby, depriving the people of Namoo in particular, and the Ghanaian economy in general, of much needed income

2.4.2 RESTITUTION

2.4.2.1 Those who suffered unlawful confiscation of property, such as lands and buildings should, in principle, have their properties restored to them.

Where third parties have acquired bona fide interests, it is recommended that the government enters into negotiations with both sides to arrive at a solution without appearing to be confiscating property from the present owners.

SHAPIC Confiscations – these were based on the State Housing Allocation Policy Implementation Committee (SHAPIC) Law, 1984 (PNDCL 83) which, itself, was based on an existing government policy that no one was to own more than one house built by the State, under the State Housing and Tema Development Corporations (Ownership of Houses) Decree, 1979 (AFRCD 50). However, over the years, people with influence and connection had multiple allocations. Those caught by this law had the additional houses confiscated. The Commission endorses this position.

Those who suffered violation based on false charges or accusation should have their good name restored. The Commission recommends a declaration and an apology letter signed by the President.

2.4.2.2 Vehicles

The Commission recommends the payment of a flat sum of money (rather symbolic) to all those who had their vehicles confiscated or seized, irrespective of the make, or number. The reason being, that these vehicles are either not available for restoration or if available, not in a condition that would enable restoration. However, in view of current market trends, any attempt to pay the current market value of the vehicles could jeopardize the overall implementation of monetary reparation.

2.4.3 MONETARY COMPENSATION

2.4.3.1 This is by no means payment for human rights violations because money, like any other form of compensation, can never restore victims to the status quo ante. Besides, it is impossible to quantify in money or money's worth, losses as well as the physical, emotional, mental and psychological agony that victims and/or families have been through.

2.4.3.2 The following general recommendations are made:

A one-off payment for eligible victims.⌘

Monetary compensation⌘ should be available for those willing to access it.

Victims whose⌘ violations fall into more than one category shall not be awarded cumulative compensation. They shall be awarded compensation for the severest of the violations. However, those who suffered multiple violations under different regimes may be considered for a top up of about 2-3 million cedis.

In⌘ proposing the amounts to be paid, the Commission has tried to maintain a balance between assuaging the pain of victims and the reality of the Ghanaian economy (i.e. ability to pay and to do so promptly). This will enable the victims to have closure and carry on with their lives.

Victims who have already⌘ received compensation will not be eligible for further compensation.

⌘ Those who have received partial compensation for the violations suffered will have the amounts of compensation topped up.

2.4.3.3 PROPOSED AMOUNTS

Loss of life resulting from human rights violation – killings⌘ 30m⌘20m – ⌘disappearance etc.

15m -⌘ TORTURE to DEATH ⌘ 30m⌘

15m⌘5m - ⌘ TORTURE ⌘

DISABILITY (physical,⌘ including maiming and mental/ psychological) resulting from:

- o Torture}
- o Shooting}
- o Bomb outrage} 10m⌘5m - ⌘

DETENTION(including being taken Hostage) ⌘ Range

15m-2m - £

15m- Over 5 years

o 2 to 5 10m-years

o 6 months to up to 2 years 5m

2- Up to 6months

EXILE ⌘ 10m-2m - £

o 10m- Over 5 years

o 2 to 5 years 7m

o Up to 2 years 3m

10m- RAPE ⌘

GANG ⌘ 15m-RAPE

Other ⌘ 5m-sexual violations

ILL-TREATMENT ⌘ 5m-1m - £

SEIZURE OF ⌘ 1m - 10m-PROPERTY

o Big time traders – wholesalers,

10m- importers/exporters

o 3m-1m - £ Petty traders

o Vehicles regardless of type or make

3m -£(seizure/confiscation/totally wrecked,) 10m

10m-1m - £ CONFISCATION/DESTRUCTION OF PROPERTY ⌘

o Buildings – Restoration where possible

o Frozen Accounts

o Confiscation of money in frozen Accounts

o Burning

o Bombing of building

o Demolition of building on allegation of hoarding

This is meant to be a symbolic gesture towards cost of renovations as most of such buildings might already have been renovated.

DISMISSALS ⌘

Employers to pay entitlements plus compensation

o Wrongful / arbitrary release from military MOD to pay entitlements plus compensation for those who do not qualify for pension. Those who qualify for pension to be put on pension. All entitlements to be paid at values calculated as at the time of payment.

o Wrongful release from other Security Services, same principle to apply to affected institutions.

PEACE-KEEPING VICTIMS (CIF items) ⌘

MOD to pay dollar equivalent of cost of goods not delivered, since the arrangement with Ofori Electronics was done under the authority of the Officers-in-Charge.

2.5 CATEGORISATION OF VIOLATIONS

2.5.1 KILLINGS

- a) Extra-judicial executions
- b) Death from torture
- c) Death from forced labour --- those who were forced to load cocoa into trucks and died as a result and victims of the cocoa evacuation task forces.
- d) Death from action of Security Services personnel: targeted shooting, stray bullets and those who died from bomb blasts by non-State actors.
- e) Those who were executed following sham trials during which severe torture and other forms of serious irregularities were alleged.

2.5.2 DISAPPEARANCE

The Commission presumes that all the disappeared are dead

2.5.3 TORTURE

- 2.5.3.1 This includes physical and mental torture such as mock executions and the general mental agony of not knowing what next is about to happen

2.5.4 DETENTION

- Up to 6 months
- 6 months – 2 years
- 2 years – 5 years
- Over 5 years

2.5.5 EXILE

- Up to 2 years
- 2 years – 5 years
- Over 5 years

2.5.6 DISABILITY/MAIMING/INJURY FROM ACTION OF SECURITY SERVICE PERSONNEL

2.5.6.1 This includes those who are living with disability as a result of

- Torture
- Shooting
- Bomb outrages

2.5.6.2 This also includes those who sustained injury from targeted shooting or stray bullets as well as bomb blasts.

2.5.7 SEXUAL VIOLATION

2.5.7.1 The Commission believes that this violation deserves special mention because of the loss of self-worth and the emotional and psychological trauma that victims, especially women have to deal with:

- Rape and gang rape
- Interference with genitalia
- Extortion of sexual favours in exchange for visitation rights
- Men forced to simulate sexual intercourse with the ground / forced to push their genitals into holes
- Women to perform oral sex.

2.5.8 ILL-TREATMENT

2.5.8.1 This is when a person is subjected to one or more of the under-mentioned in circumstances where they are not sustained or severe enough to be considered as torture

a). Violation of Dignity

- Stripping people naked or to near nakedness
- Stripping women of their tops
- Shaving of hair with broken bottles / cutting hair in rough patches

b) Cruel and Degrading Forms of Punishment

- Flogging in public
- Slapping / beating
- Parading people through streets
- Rolling on the ground/crawling on gravel
- Drills
- Being forced to lie in a coffin
- Forced labour
- Being forced to perform menial tasks such as scrubbing of toilet with bare hands; being forced to eat/lick faeces or drink urine
- Being forced to drink cement mixed with water
- Forced cannibalism
- Being forced to eat carcass
- Being forced to chew raw salt
- Being forced to slap one's parent/close relation
- Being forced to engage in slapping contest
- Using ear for ash tray
- Singeing

c) Beating

- Beating leading to Disability such as blindness, hearing impairment --- the Commission has heard a lot of witnesses who are blind in one eye or have impairment in one or both ears as a result of having been beaten with belt buckles or from heavy slaps
- Beatings resulting in miscarriages and injury to unborn babies – the Commission has come across quite a bit of this evidence and the Commission thinks they deserve special treatment in reparation

2.5.9 SEIZURE /CONFISCATION OF PROPERTY

2.5.9.1 Those whose goods were seized for allegedly hoarding or selling above the controlled price:

- Village of Namoo (Upper East Region) and Badu (Brong Ahafo Region) Cases
- Seizures of foodstuffs in the Northern Regions, etc.

2.5.9.2 The Commission thinks these two cases require special mention in the report because most of them had their goods seized under very bizarre circumstances such as trucks loaded with foodstuffs which were intercepted on major highways on mere suspicion that the goods being conveyed would be smuggled into neighbouring countries.

2.5.10 CONFISCATION OF PROPERTY

- This implies confiscation of lands and landed property
- Freezing of Accounts
- Confiscation of Monies in Accounts
- Confiscation of cars

2.5.11 DESTRUCTION OF PROPERTY

- Demolition of Makola (No.1) Market
- Burning of Tamale Market
- Burning and Destruction of property
- Bombing: the Teshie case and the resultant destruction in property, bombing of buildings on suspicion of hoarding, Takoradi, Tamale
- Destruction of Ekwamkrom
- Destruction of 'The Lord is my Shepherd Church' and other Churches in Kumasi

2.5.12 DISMISSALS / ARBITRARY RELEASE FROM THE SECURITY SERVICES

- This includes those dismissed over the radio
- Service personnel who were arbitrarily released from the military and other security services

2.5.13 ARREST, HARASSMENT, TORTURE AND DETENTION OF MILITARY INTELLIGENCE PERSONNEL

2.5.14 NON-DELIVERY OF CIF ITEMS FOR PERSONNEL ON PEACE-KEEPING OPERATIONS

2.5.15 ADA SONGHOR LAGOON SALT MINING

2.6 CONCLUSION

Implied in any award of reparation, is an attempt to repair the harm and damage caused to victims. The Commission acknowledges that reparations, no matter how generous or well-intentioned cannot restore the victim to the status quo ante. That is why everything should be done to guard against human rights violation.

Statistical Report

STATISTICAL REPORT

1. Introduction and Facts about Statement Taking

In order to fulfill its mandate, the Commission collected statements from victims, witnesses and alleged perpetrators of human rights violations and abuses committed during the mandate period (i.e., 6th March, 1957 – 6th January, 1992). The collection of statements which began on 3rd September, 2002 officially ended on 13th January, 2004, with about 4,240 statements collected from Ghanaians living in Ghana and abroad.

For the purpose of collecting statements, the country was divided into six locations made up of five Regional Zones and Accra. The number of statements taken from each of the six locations is shown in Table 1. The statements offered detailed insights into the experiences of victims or perpetrators.

Table 1 Distribution of number of statements collected by location

Location	Number of Statements
Accra	1,500
Bolgatanga Zonal Office	164
Ho Zonal Office	375
Kumasi Zonal Office	971
Takoradi Zonal Office	752
Tamale Zonal Office	478
Total	4,240

It was important to extract information from the statements about each of the human rights violations and abuses received, enter this information into a database, and obtain statistics that described the nature and extent of the violations experienced and perpetrated by the statement-makers as a whole.

Sample

Statements were coded as they came in, with the intention of coding all of them and entering them into the database for analysis. Due to time constraints, all the statements taken by the Commission could not be coded and captured into the human right database. By the end of 30th September, 2004, a total number of 3,114 statements had been coded and captured. These represented over 70 percent of the total number of 4,240 statements taken. Out of the number of statement entered into the database, 2,457 (79%) contain violations perpetrated within the mandate period. The patterns and figures discussed in this report are for the mandate period and are representative of the 3,114 statements studied.

Classification and Coding

The main purpose of coding was to facilitate the production of meaningful human rights statistics. This was done by using a controlled vocabulary to transform the information on violations, victims, perpetrators and other relevant information into a quantifiable set of data categories. The main source of information was the written petitions/statements of the statement-makers.

A classification system was developed in order to fulfill the relevant parts of the Commission's mandate, i.e., the violations considered must be representative of those that typically occurred during the periods under investigation. Similarly, for the victims, the data had to capture the aspects of a person that determined whether he or she were targeted for abuse or that determined types of abuse that he or she suffered. These are details such as their age, sex and ethnicity.

The classification system consists of a number of vocabularies. A vocabulary is a controlled list of items. For example, the "sex" vocabulary has items "male" "female" and unknown.

The vocabularies were created and tested under the direction of a field consultant from the Benetech Human Rights Data Analysis Group with initial sponsorship from the Open Society Initiative – West Africa, arranged by the International Center for Transitional Justice (ICTJ). Subsequent assistance was provided by the American Association for the Advancement of Science (AAAS), Science and Human Rights Program (SHR) and Benetech Human Rights Program. To ensure that the vocabularies were appropriate, a variety of sources were used. These included knowledge about the country, the citizenry, local experts and also with reference to the statements gathered by the Commission.

The model adopted by the Commission was based on that proposed in the book, Who Did What to Whom? Planning and Implementing a Large-Scale Human Rights Data Project. It is a model known to produce valid statistical results and has been used extensively by other truth commissions and human rights documentation projects.

The model captures "who did what to whom when and where". That is, who are the perpetrators, what violations did they commit, who are the victims who suffered the violations and when and where did the violations occur? The model allows for multiple victims, violations, perpetrators and roles. In the latter case, a person or group of people may be both victims and perpetrators.

First, a boundary condition is used to indicate what behaviour is considered to be a violation. For example, the violation classified as "BEAT" or assault, covers beating, kicking, punching and whipping.

A second facet of violations is that, with the exception of killing, a victim could suffer a violation more than once. Where, for example, a victim is being punched by one perpetrator and a second perpetrator then joins the attack repeatedly by kicking the victim, the event could be interpreted as either one assault by two perpetrators or as two assaults, with the punching followed by the kicking. With a counting rule that states that one sustained period of abuse counts as one violation, our example would count as one violation. The purpose of boundary conditions and counting rules is to ensure that, given the same statements, the coders will consistently identify the same violations. The example below shows a selection of the Commission's violations with their associated boundary conditions and counting rules.

VIOLATION

DEFINITION

BOUNDARY CONDITION COUNTING RULE

BEATING/ ASSAULT

- Physical harm inflicted on any individual by Another individual or group of individuals. With fists, feet or a butt of a gun or any other object.

- Assault sufficient to cause injury i.e. Bruising or bleeding Or internal injury

- Violation excludes those covered by Head shave violations.
1 Continuous Assault =
1 Violation.

ABDUCTION

- Transfer of a person to detention or some other place. Person is under control of their accompanying perpetrators.

- Includes arrests and kidnapping.

- Excludes abductions implied by a 'Disappearance'

- When a person reports to the detention place voluntarily, no abduction violation is coded. 1 Abduction = 1 Violation.

At most, one abduction per detention across multiple locations

Research Questions

The report seeks to answer the following questions as agreed upon by the commission:

1. What was the overall pattern of violations during the mandate period?
2. To what extent were the violations targeted against men or women?
3. Which perpetrators were responsible for the abuses during the different periods of unconstitutional governments?
4. Did particular institutions practice certain violations in preference to others?
5. Was there evidence to show that the more severe types of torture and physical assault were practised to a greater degree in the North of the country?
6. Was there evidence that the abuse is concentrated in and around Military facilities?
7. Was there evidence that victims of a higher socio-economic status were targeted for abuse?
8. Was there evidence of the Police Force and the Prison Service acting as servants to the Military?
9. Did detentions correspond to the passing of legislation such as the Preventive Detention Act?
10. Why did the statement makers come to the Commission?
11. What have been the long-term effects of the abuses on the statement makers and their families?
12. What were the implements or weapons used by perpetrators for committing violations

Special coding

The initial coding forms did not have all the variables needed to answer all the research questions in the Report. A sub-sample of the coded statements was therefore taken. For this sub-sample, additional coding was done in order to capture the reasons for which the statement makers petitioned the Commission, the long-term effects of the violations and abuses, and the implements or weapons used in the violations and abuses.

Organization of the report

The research questions were answered in the context of the statements received by the Commission. The Report is organized into seven sections to answer, as much as possible, all the research questions.

The first section gives an introduction to the report and discusses some basic facts about the statement taking. The second section discusses the overall pattern and nature of the violations over the mandated period. The third section discusses socio-economic status of the victims. Section Four discusses the weapons and implements used in the violations. The fifth section discusses the reasons why statement makers petitioned the Commission and what the long-term effects of the abuses have been on the victims and their families. The last section draws some conclusion based on the findings from the data. Attached at the end of the report are other tables which were seen to be too large to be placed in this report; these are under the heading “Additional Tables”.

2. Pattern of Violations during the Mandate Period

Overall pattern of violations

According to the statements received by the Commission, violations over the mandate period peaked in different regimes. The pattern of violation is shown in Figure 1. The figure shows that violations are not confined to periods of unconstitutional governments. Counts of violations peaked in the Convention People’s Party (CPP) era (1957 – 1966) in 1960 and, thereafter, were on a downward trend until the National Liberation Council (NLC) era (1966 – 1969) when violations peaked again in 1966. The period 1968 – 1971, covering part of the NLC and Progress Party (PP) eras, recorded relatively very few violations. Another peak in violations was recorded in 1972, and that was in the National Redemption Council (NRC) era of 1972 – 1975. The period of the Supreme Military Council (SMC) I & II (1975 – 1979) recorded a relatively very low number of violations. The count of violations from 1979 to the beginning of 1993 remained high with very high peaks in 1979 (the entry of the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council (AFRC)) and 1982 (the entry of the Provisional National Defence Council (PNDC)). An exception over this period is the period that spanned the rule of the People National Party (PNP), where abuses were relatively low. Violations seemed to have reduced from 1984 with the exception of 1988 when they increased again. Thereafter, violations decreased.

As can be observed from the figure, the trend of peaks in violations is generally upward. This may be explained by factors such as memory lapses, the fact that some of the victims of the violations and abuses in the earlier years of the mandate period were not available to make statements, or violations in the latter years were actually relatively high.

Figure 1 Overall Violations over the period

Abductions

In most cases, abductions normally preceded detention but in a few cases people reported themselves for detention out of fear.

The pattern of abductions as shown in Figure 2 is very similar to that of overall violations (Figure 1) except the height of the peaks. Even though abductions and detentions (Figure 3) peaked in the same years, the peaks of detentions are higher than that of abductions over the years (that is, the number of detentions was always greater than the number of abductions), confirming the fact that not all detained victims were necessarily abducted.

The fact that detentions were greater than abductions could be explained by many factors. Occasionally, victims received request to report themselves for detention. They would do so, fearing the consequences if they did not comply. Hence they were detained without being abducted. Despite this, in the majority of cases, abduction is a pre-requisite for a subsequent detention. However an initial abduction can be followed by a sequence of detentions. For example a victim may initially be held by the police but later transferred to a prison so the initial abduction leads to two detentions.

Figure 2 Abduction Violations over the period

Detentions

Similar to the pattern of overall violations, detentions were not confined to unconstitutional governments even though the numbers are significantly higher under these governments. The first peak in detentions occurred in the CPP era in 1958 followed by another peak in 1960 and thereafter decreased until the 1966 coup when the number of detentions rose sharply again to about 150 counts. The AFRC/PNDC eras recorded very high counts of detention until 1989 when the number began to reduce. It is interesting to note that even on the eve of democratic governance, there were still detention violations.

Did rises in detentions correspond to the passing of legislations such as Preventive Detention Acts? Figure 4 shows that the first peak in detentions occurred in 1958, a year in which the Preventive Detention Act (Act 17) was passed. The 1960 peak could be explained by other factors which were not related to any Act. The 1966 peak corresponded to the Protective Custody Decree (NLCD 2) and the 1972 peak corresponded to the Preventive Custody Decree (NRCD 2). The Preventive Custody Law (PNDCL 4) also explained the peak of detentions in 1982. All the other peaks, except that of the 1960, mark the years where there were coups or attempted coups but not any detention Act. Aside the Detention Acts, 1966 marked the entry of the NLC government, 1972 the NRC and 1975 the palace coup that brought the SMC II into being. The 1979 and 1982 peaks marked the entry of AFRC and PNDC respectively. The other peaks after 1982 might be attributed to suppression of perceived opponents and attempted coups.

Figure 3 Detention Violations over the period

Perpetrator responsibility

Considering all the violations recorded in the statements collected, Figure 4 shows that the Military Forces, the Police Service and the Prison Service stood out as the main perpetrators. The Military, according to the institutional aggregation used for this database, was made up of Army, Navy, Air Force, Military Intelligence, Special Forces – Search and Destroy Team and 64 Commando. The Military had about 53 percent responsibility, the Police Service and the Prison Service had about 17 percent and 9 percent perpetrator responsibility respectively. There was a significant proportion (12%) of violations perpetrated by institutions that were not known to the statement makers or the victims. The percentage of perpetrator responsibility, according to Figure 4, sums up to more than 100 percent. This could be explained by the fact that responsibility for some violations was attributed to more than one institution, since some of these institutions collaborated in perpetrating some of the violations.

Government agents which were made up of Borders Guards/Customs, Immigration Service, National and Local Governments also perpetrated some significant proportion of the violations. Similarly the BNI, civilians and revolutionary organs (Peoples Defense Council (PDC), Committee for the Defense of the Revolution (CDR), Workers Defense Committee (WDC) and, Citizens Vetting Committee (CVC)) perpetrated some significant proportion of the violations.

Figure 4 Perpetrator responsibility for all violations

From Table 2, on average, 48.2 percent of the violations were done by the Military forces and 15.8 percent by the Police Forces. Throughout all the regimes, the Military forces were mostly used to perpetrate the violations except in the CPP regime where the Police Forces and the Prison Service were mostly used.

As high as 79.3 percent of the violations perpetrated in the AFRC era were by the military, and 54.9 percent and 53.2 percent in the NRC and SMC regimes respectively.

Table 2 Perpetrators in the different regimes

In order to answer the question of whether the police force and the prisons service have been subservient to the Military, we need to have a close look at the perpetrator responsibility of these three institutions for abductions and detentions.

Figure 5 shows the perpetrator responsibility of the three institutions for abductions, while Figure 6 shows the same for detentions. The Military have a very high responsibility of 43.6 percent for abductions; the Police Forces have 23.2 percent while the Prison Service has virtually no perpetrator responsibility (0.1%) for the abductions.

The perpetrator responsibility of the Military for detentions reduced to 28.5 percent which is an indication that many of the victims abducted by the military were detained by different perpetrator institutions. The police forces' detention responsibility of 24.4 percent compared to 23.2 percent abductions is an indication that the police virtually abducted and detained their own victims. It can therefore be concluded that the Prison Service, which virtually abducted no victims but detained as much as 29.1 percent, was subservient to the Military.

Figure 5 Perpetrator Responsibility for Abduction violations

Figure 6 Perpetrator Responsibility for Detention violations

Beating violations

Beating violations during the mandate period occurred almost entirely under unconstitutional governments. Remarkably very high number of beating violations happened in 1979 the beginning of AFRC rule, 1982 the beginning of PNDC rule and 1988 which may be due some other disturbances of the military government at the time.

Figure 7 Beating Violations over the period

Seizure violations

Just like the beatings, seizure of properties happened almost entirely in the military governments where the peaks marked the beginning of new unconstitutional governments.

Figure 8 Seizure of Property Violations over the period

Violations in the Regions

There were a significant number of violations for which their regions of occurrence were not known. The presentation in Figure 8 represents the violations for which their regions of occurrence were known. Greater Accra recorded the greatest number (39.6%) of violations followed by Ashanti (13.7%). Upper West was the region where the least number (0.4%) of violations were reported to have occurred. This is to be expected, among other reasons, because Greater Accra is the seat of government and tends to experience the greatest impact of major national political disturbances.

Figure 9 Violations in the Regions

Almost all the execution-style killings (81.8%) and media dismissals (93.8%) were recorded in Greater Accra. Most of the destructions (53.5%), price control (34.5%) and forced sales (20.2%) happened in the North . These are shown in table 8.

Table 3 Violations by Region

Extent to which violations were targeted against men and women

Table 4 shows that 8,686 victims suffered 12,517 violations. This indicates that some victims suffered more than one violation. On average, a victim suffered about 2 violations. The minimum number of violations a victim suffered was 1 and the maximum was 55.

About 79 percent of the victims were males, 19 percent females and the rest were victims whose gender was not specified by the statement makers. The victims of executions in particular were all males. The type of violations in which the female victims were about the same as their male counterparts were forced sale (43.9%), sexual abuse (42.9%), head shaving (33.7%) and psychological torture (30.4%).

Table 4 Victims by gender

In the violations and abuses described in the statements filed with the Commission, over 80% were suffered by male victims. The killing of victims by military-style execution was entirely perpetrated against males. This is consistent with the view that abuse in Ghana was targeted against males.

Table 4 shows the percentages of male and female victims of each type of violation. In all instances, the percentage of male victims is significantly higher than that of the female victims. Looking at the abduction violations, about 83 percent were male victims. There were four of the violations where the percentage of the female victims was significantly comparable to their male counterparts. These are sexual abuse (43.1%), forced sale (41.7%), destruction (36.6%) and head shaving (34.0%). These are shown in Table 4. This supports the view that many women suffered sexual abuse, forced sale of wares at controlled price, destruction of private property and shaving of heads, especially during periods of unconstitutional governments where these violations mainly occurred.

Table 5 Violations by gender

Looking at violations by age group, it is clear that the violations were mainly perpetrated against adults. However, 4% “other killings” were children and 4% of the sexual abuses were children (Table 6). We can therefore say, generally, that the violations were not targeted against children.

Table 6 Violations by age group

In total, 67.6% of the violations recorded in the statements received by the Commission for the mandate period were perpetrated during the PNDC era and 16.9% in the AFRC era. Even though the CPP era was far back into the past, it recorded a significant percentage (5.7%) of the violations. With the exception of controlled prices, where the highest percentage (45.8%) was recorded in the AFRC era, the highest percentage of all violations and abuses was recorded in the PNDC era.

Table 7 Violations in different regimes

Violations in and around military facilities

Figure 11 looks at the violations that happened in and around the Military facilities in the country at the time. As shown in the figure, violations like destruction, disappearances, forced displacement, forced sale, media dismissal and other dismissal did not happen in and around Military facilities. Violations that happened mainly around Military Barracks included head shaving, specified torture, unspecified torture, beatings, executions, sexual abuse and detentions.

About 60 percent of all head shavings happened in and around the Military facilities, 40 percent of specified torture, 38 percent of unspecified torture and about 35 percent of beatings. About 30 percent of executions and 22 percent of detentions also happened in and around the Military facilities.

Figure 10 Violations around military facilities

About 60 percent of all violations happened in unknown places and about 30% in and around Military facilities. A significant percentage (52%) of “other killings” happened in places that were not known to the statement makers. Figure 10 shows these.

Figure 11 Violations in Unknown places

3. Socio-economic Status of Victims

Occupation of victims

The aggregation of occupations was done according to the Coders’ Reference v 1.1. Figure 13 shows that the majority of the violations were against victims in the “general occupations” category (36.5%) and the miscellaneous occupations category (30.9%). There was some significant percentage of the violations against victims of the “owners” (9.5%), Military (8.2%) and profession (5.0%) categories.

The general occupations category included bank managers, office managers and administrators. The owner’s category included business persons and small business owners. And the professions category included judges, lawyers, teachers, academic, religious leaders, engineers, accountants, doctors and nurses. The categories that suffered a greater percentage (about 69% in total) of the violations were, undoubtedly, the wealthy and influential in our society.

There were as high as 8.2 percent of violations against the Military, juxtaposing this with the fact that the Military forces were the main perpetrators of the violations over the period, we can say that there was some internal repression within the Military.

Figure 12 Occupation of victims

Educational levels of victims

Figure 14 shows educational levels of the victims at the time of the violations. At the time of the violations, 37 percent of the victims had Middle/JSS education, 22 percent had no education, 21 percent had either “O” or “A” level and 13 percent had Tertiary education. The rest of 7 percent had primary education.

Table 8 Victim’s level of education

Level of Education Percentage of Victims

Unknown 61

None 9

Primary 3

Middle/JSS 14

O' & A' Le 8

University 5

Total 100

4. Implements and weapons used in the abuses

The main tools used in carrying out the violations were guns, boots, sticks/canes and the hand (refer to Figure 15). In about 11 percent of the cases, guns were indicated as the tool used in the violations. No weapons or implements were indicated, by the statement makers, in 70 percent of the violations. There were other implements like the footwear, water hoses, wires etc. used in violating the rights of the victims. These were used in about 13 percent of the violations.

Figure 13 Tools used in the abuses

5. Reasons for petitioning the Commission

The main reasons why people petitioned the commission were (1) to receive compensation and (2) to set records straight. In all, about 89 percent of the statement makers indicated compensation as one of their reasons for petitioning the Commission. Setting the record straight was one of the reasons for 29.2 percent of the statement makers. A significant proportion (6.4%) also came to demand justice against perpetrators and others. The figures describing the proportion here total more than 100 percent because statement makers typically gave more than one reason for petitioning the Commission. Refer to figure 1.

Figure 14 Reasons for making statements at the Commission

6. Long term effects of the abuses

In about half of the violations, statement makers or the victims did not indicate any long term effects. Economic hardship and bankruptcy accounted for 26 percent of the long term effects of the violations while family disintegration and lack of education for children accounted for about 21 percent of them. A significant percentage (16%) of the long term-effects was also health-related.

Figure 15 Long term effect of the abuses

7. Summary Conclusions

Based on the findings from the data, as discussed above, the following is the summary.

The overall trend of violations revealed that these violations were not confined to unconstitutional governments. However, the entrance of any unconstitutional government always led to sharp rises in violations with peaks at the beginning of the rule of these governments. Similarly, abductions and detentions were not confined to unconstitutional governments but were higher under these governments than under elected governments.

Abductions and detentions remained remarkably high in the AFRC and PNDC regimes compared to other regimes. Enactments on Detention impacted greatly on detention violations as it was found out that all of these Acts and Decrees corresponded to peaks in detention violations.

The Military Services, the Police and the Prison Service were clearly found to be the main perpetrators of the violations over the period. The Military has an overall perpetrator responsibility of 66.3 percent. The Prison Service has been subservient to the Military while the Police Force was not in that victims abducted by the military detained at the prisons but not at the police cells.

Occurrence of the violations concentrated in Greater Accra and Ashanti regions and all the executions happened in Greater Accra. Significant proportions of all the violations happened in and around Military facilities.

The victims of the violations were mainly males but in the case of forced sales and sexual abuse, the proportions of the abuses were about the same for both sexes. Also, the violations were perpetrated mainly against adults but in the cases involving “other killings” and sexual abuse, significant proportions of them were children.

Even though the violations were not confined to unconstitutional governments, about 84 percent of all the violations occurred in the AFRC and PNDC eras. The wealthy people and influential people in society suffered a larger proportion of the violations

Among the implements and weapons used in the abuses were guns, sticks or canes, boots and the hand. Guns were mostly used as compared to the others.

Three main reasons emerged as the main reason why people came to the Commission to make statements. These were to get monetary compensations, material compensations and set records straight. Getting monetary compensations was mentioned by most of the statement makers as their reasons for coming.

Economic hardship/bankruptcy, family disintegration/lack of education for children and health problems were the main long term effects on the victims as mentioned in their statements.

8. Additional tables

Table 9 Count of violations over the period

Table 10 Count of violations in the regions

Table 11 Locations where violations took place

Volume 4 Chapter 4 - The Labour Movement

CHAPTER FOUR

THE LABOUR MOVEMENTS

4.0 PRE-1957

4.0.1 THE TRADES UNIONS

4.0.1.1 The Labour Unions began to gather strength when the economy admitted industries in the post-world war years. There were the various unions such as the Railway Workers Union, the United Gold Coast Miners Union and the Farmers Union. The Convention Peoples Party was founded on the philosophy of mass mobilization. The “masses” of the time were workers, peasants and youth.

4.0.1.2 “Youth” was not necessarily a reference to people of a certain chronological age, but of social standing as well. Consequently, those referred to as “nkwa nkwa” or “youth” were the “commoners” or non-royals, or simply put, the disenfranchised of those days. These were the people from amongst whose ranks workers and also CPP activists tended to be drafted. Thus when the CPP declared at the time of its birth in 1949, that one of its aims was to establish co-operation with the unions to fight for better terms, it was stating not just a mobilization strategy but also defining the social class it was committed to working with to end colonialism. Thus it was positioned as a natural ally of the unions. Subsequently, the political activities dubbed “Positive Action” demonstrated the commitment of the CPP to defend the interests of the workers, and forged a stronger bond between the party and the unions. The CPP maintained its alliance with the unions throughout the struggle for Independence.

4.0.2 THE AFRICAN CIVIL SERVANTS' ASSOCIATION.

4.0.2.1 The Civil Servants' Association originated from the African Civil Servants' Association which was known as such because during that time the junior Civil Servants were wholly African and the senior Civil Servants were almost exclusively European. At that time, the senior positions in the service, known as “European posts”, were collectively regarded as “Management” and therefore holders of those positions could not get involved in the affairs of the association. The association was recognised by the Colonial Government as a result of the establishment of the Civil Service Negotiating Machinery under General Orders 136 and 137 and the Whitely Council. Unfortunately the approval of all final decisions reached at such negotiations with regard to conditions of service were always at the mercy and within the prerogative of the Colonial Government.

4.0.3 THE COCOA FARMERS CO-OPERATIVE MOVEMENT

4.0.3.1 The problems associated with the sale of cocoa by indigenous farmers was a major issue in the British Colonies in the 1930s. Dissatisfaction regarding the price of cocoa led to the refusal of cocoa farmers to sell their produce to the buying companies in the 1930s. Many farmers’ co-operative societies were born out of the dissatisfaction. This was clearly unsatisfactory as the fragmentation led to a weakening of the farmers’ front.

4.0.3.2 The Second World War affected the organization of co-operative societies in Ghana (then Gold Coast) and the rate at which co-operative societies were formed, reduced drastically. However, in November, 1944, the various co-operative societies in the country were amalgamated to form the Gold Coast Federation of Co-operatives with its headquarters in Accra. A bank was established in October, 1946, by the co-operatives, to serve as a clearing house for all co-operative organizations in Ghana, called Cooperative Bank. Its main business was in short-term loans, to cover production and marketing of cocoa, but it also granted long term loans, either for co-operative development or for the redemption of the farms of co-operative members.

4.0.3.3 The activities of the early co-operative organization were confined to the southern part of the country and Ashanti. Apart from cocoa, the societies later dealt in other agricultural commodities such as copra, palm oil, palm kernel and shea butter.

4.0.3.4 As a measure to stabilize prices, the Gold Coast Cocoa Marketing Board (GCMB) was established in 1947 by Ordinance No16 of 1947, to purchase the total production of cocoa in the country, to prescribe prices to be paid to the producers and be responsible for the sale of cocoa abroad. This was a fulfilment of the efforts of personalities such as Gershon Ashie Nikoi who had campaigned relentlessly for an independent body that would enable cocoa farmers to bargain collectively for the sale of their cocoa. In 1949, the name of Federation of Co-operatives was changed to the Ghana Cooperative Marketing Association Limited (GCMA).

4.0.3.5 The Cocoa Purchasing Company (CPC) was incorporated as a limited liability company in June, 1952. Although intended to be a subsidiary company of the Cocoa Marketing Board, it was largely perceived as a rival body to it. CPC granted loans, advances and bonuses to its customers, particularly farmers who were sympathetic to the aspirations of the CPP. During the same period (1953), the United Ghana Farmers' Co-operatives (UGFC) was inaugurated. The UGFC took direct part in the administration of the Loan Section of the CPC by recommending farmers for loans and verifying the securities of the applicants.

4.0.3.6 There were numerous allegations of irregularities in the administration of the company, particularly its inability to collect outstanding loans and advances. The government was therefore obliged to appoint a commission of enquiry in May, 1956, "in relation to the disbursement of funds and financial control and any allegations of irregularity in the conduct of CPC affairs".

4.0.3.7 The commission under the chairmanship of Mr Justice Olumujiwa Jibowu of the Federal Supreme Court of Nigeria, confirmed most of the allegations of irregularities made against the company, and as a result, it was liquidated the same year.

4.1 6TH MARCH, 1957 - 23RD FEBRUARY, 1966 – GOVERNMENT OF THE CONVENTION PEOPLES' PARTY (CPP)

4.1.1 THE TRADES UNION CONGRESS

4.1.1.1 Upon the attainment of Independence, the CPP formed the government, but the union leaders did not appear to have appreciated the fact that they were no longer on the same side fighting a common cause. The CPP Government faced a dilemma: having been elected on the wings of popular agitation, there were unduly high expectations of improvement in economic standing of the citizens of the new country, but the reality was that the economy could not support the achievement of those expectations. Indeed, as early as April, 1957, the Minister of Works, N A Welbeck, warned workers of that Ministry that if they squeezed too much out of the government by way of increased wages, the country would be plunged into economic chaos. Yet while warning workers to moderate their expectations, the leadership of the TUC was being granted privileges. One of the first acts of the new government was to select two union leaders – Joe-Fio Meyer (President of the Trades Union Congress) and SD Dawson (Chairman of the Ghana Workers Educational Association) to attend a three-month course on trade unionism in Belgium. One month later, it was announced that the Deputy General Secretary of the TUC, E A Mettle-Nunoo, and the Press Attaché, J P Addei, would travel to Morocco within a fortnight to represent John Tettegah, the General Secretary of the TUC in Casablanca at the May Day celebrations of the Federation of Labour of Morocco .

4.1.1.2 That early in the day, there was already concern about the independence of the TUC. At a workers rally organized by the Kumasi Trades Council in Kumasi to celebrate May Day, 1957, the President of the Council spoke on the set-backs to trade union movement in Ghana and attributed such setbacks in Ghana to “nationalism, ignorance, untrained leadership and lack of finance.” The workers were also warned by a lecturer in Commerce at the then Kumasi College of Technology – K.K. Antwi - that they were not to introduce partisan politics into the movement because that would spell its doom. The 8th May editorial of the Daily Graphic carried a comment that was also instructive. The paper opined that:

if the labour movement is to continue to play its major role in the progress of the country, the TUC must be allowed to grow and develop its own form of independence whereby it can control its own officers and policy free from political control.

From these three statements, a lot can be gleaned in terms of the direction that trade unionism was beginning to take.

4.1.1.3 Why would “nationalism” be an issue soon after independence unless the need to maintain a healthy distance between itself and the government, now formed by its old party ally, was becoming an issue? The lack of finance was also an issue and yet, when the 5,000-member Union of employees of United Africa Company (UAC) that had seceded from the Gold Coast Trades Union Congress (GCTUC) in 1955 over disagreement in political direction, applied to re-join the Congress, the Executive Board of the Ghana Trades Union Congress (GTUC) refused to re-admit that Union.

4.1.1.4 The GTUC leadership used its closeness to the political leadership to achieve some of its aims, but this eventually proved costly to itself as it lost its independence. It aimed to represent all workers and to improve its financial base. It achieved this by influencing the government to pass the Industrial Relations Act of 1958 (No 56), which re-named the organization Trades Union Congress (TUC). The legislation granted the TUC monopoly over labour affairs by compelling every union to be a member of the TUC and every worker to be represented by the TUC. Union dues were to be paid by deductions at source, unless the worker specifically withdrew his consent, thus giving the unions access to a lot of money by way of dues without the problem of chasing members for them. Dr. Nkrumah referred to the TUC as “the sole representative of the working people of Ghana.”

4.1.1.5 The negative side of this Act was that it also gave power to the Minister to recognize new unions, which meant that no group could call itself a trade union without the approval of the government, as well as the power to de-certify a union. The government also gave itself power to freeze the funds of the union if “it appears to the Governor-General “... that the Congress has taken any action which is not conducive to the public good.” This legislation gave the government total power over the TUC as it was made impossible for any union to exist as such, outside the government-approved structure or to function unless the government approved of the manner in which its affairs were conducted. Thus in one fell swoop, the workers lost their right to freely associate in forming any trade union association of their choice, made workers liable to pay dues to a body they had been compelled to join and made it unnecessary for the leadership to be accountable to the membership or to strive to increase the membership by active recruitment and retention policies.

4.1.1.6 By 1960, the TUC had convincingly lost its independence. When the TUC received a government-built building to house its offices as the “Hall of Trade Unions” it was told that the building was a “present from the Convention People’s Party Government to workers of Ghana”. The building was to “remain for all time a living monument and the outward expression of the government and party’s gratitude to Labour” as well as a tribute to the contribution that Ghana Labour made to the “struggle for liberation”. The public was assured that the TUC was organized under the “protective wing” of the CPP which was committed to a fight for a social order free from economic exploitation.

4.1.1.7 The TUC was eventually made an integral part of the party. As President Nkrumah announced when he took over as Party General Secretary in May, 1961:

Instructions have been issued and all necessary arrangements made for the membership integration of the various wing organisations of the party. All trade union members who hold Trades Union Congress cards should hand in these cards to the branch party secretary, who will give party membership cards in exchange for the Union cards. Those Trade unionists who hold both party and Trades Union Congress cards have been instructed to surrender their Trades Union Congress cards to their union secretaries.

4.1.1.8 This instruction was accompanied by a change in the organizational structure of the party, making the political heads of the regions - Regional Commissioners – the Regional Secretaries of the party whilst the regional secretaries of the organizations affected (including the TUC) were re-designated Assistant Regional Secretaries not of their organizations, but of the Party. It was also announced that from that time onwards, “appointments to those positions would be made by the central committee [of the CPP]”, and that the “membership card of the party will be the only qualification for membership within these organizations”. The offices of the affected organizations in the regions were to be housed in one building, their individual flags were abolished and replaced by the party flag. To make the workers feel better about the new development, the President instructed that uniform union dues of two shillings were to be paid by every worker instead of the four shillings that some were paying.

4.1.1.9 This merger of the TUC with the party in government and the inclusion of the leadership in the formulation of economic policy, was bound to create difficulties for the operation and essence of the body as a union, whose main object was to represent workers, most of whom were employed by the State. Appreciating the incongruous nature of the new political arrangements, President Nkrumah conceded that:

[T]he new economic policy of our country introduces a number of important changes and consequently the role of the Trades Union Congress in public enterprises must be re-examined. In the public sector of the economy the workers must know that they are working for the state and no longer business concerns. The workers are for the state and the state for the workers, and thus they are working for themselves.

4.1.1.10 Since this reality was in consonance with the shared ideology of the TUC and the government, the union could not continue to perform its traditional role of representing the workers' interests in antagonism to those of the employer's. This created an imperative to design a new role for the TUC as was outlined by the President in the following terms:

To achieve maximum results and prove that public enterprise can be successfully run, the Trades Union Congress must assist in increasing productivity and the national consciousness of the workers. In this regard, the Convention People's Party and the government are examining the possibilities of instituting works councils within public enterprises which must draw the trade unions into participating in the planning and execution of public works.

4.1.1.11 Unionists who did not approve of the new role were simply told to change their thinking and that at that stage of the country's development, they were to "discard their colonial mentality and methods and remember that they [were] not struggling against capitalists". Therefore they were to "cease to be impeccable advocates for out-moded conditions", and become advocates of worker-productivity. The President also pointed out to them that they were not to "limit their activities to the education of workers only as regards their rights but also their duties and responsibilities". They were to:

inculcate in our working people the love for labour and increased productivity. If the government is pursuing socialist policies which will be to the ultimate benefit of the workers, the trade union must assist in explaining these measures to the rank and file instead of becoming mere agitators to rights already protected and guaranteed by the State.

4.1.1.12 There seems to be no record of protest by the TUC to these sweeping changes although it was clear that it was a complete emasculation of the labour movement by the government. When these changes were criticized by the international community, the President gave a robust defence of the policy towards the TUC in the following words:

The Ghana Trades Union Congress enjoys complete freedom of action in deciding matters that affect the welfare of the Ghanaian worker. Freedom however does not operate in a vacuum, nor is it irresponsible. Freedom connotes necessity. So our trade unions must relate their freedom of action to the overall needs and welfare of the country. This is in accord with our own way of life and the party therefore gives guidance to all sections... and coordinates our national action in one great united effort for the good of our people. Representatives of the Trades Union Congress therefore sit in our central committee and are part and parcel of the collective leadership of the party it is the central committee that guides all our journey to socialist reconstruction. ...[T]he interest of the workers is therefore well catered for by the State. The trade unions therefore have a different role from that of trade unions in a capitalist society. Indeed the desires and wishes of our working people, farmers and peasants form the basis of our social and economic policy.

Coincidentally, the theme for this First Biennial meeting of the TUC in 1962, was “Towards Nkrumahism – the Role and Tasks of Trade Unions.”

4.1.1.13 In order to fulfil President Nkrumah’s Pan-Africanist agenda, he encouraged the formation of the All-Africa Farmers Union as well as the All-African Trade Unions Federation (AATUF) of which John Tettegah became the Secretary-General. The TUC was exhorted to spend its energies fighting imperialist domination, and the continental unions were urged to make a political union of Africa possible as they were “the surest and only way of rooting out of our continent the remnants of colonialism and exploitation”

4.1.1.14 The Ghana TUC did not protest these drastic changes that integrated it into the CPP and thus compromised its persona as well as its right to exist independently of government. In fact, the leaders had earlier been made part of the Central Committee of the CPP where those decisions must have been taken, and were therefore privy to them. They were thereby transformed from leaders of the trades union into national politicians and cogs in the wheel of the CPP machinery. Co-optation having become complete, the TUC became an integral part of the CPP and the relationship between it and the government was authoritatively described as that of “Siamese twins” by Tettegah Secretary-General of the TUC.

4.1.1.15 On the part of the CPP, this integration meant access to the finances of the TUC since dues paid by all workers automatically went to the party; increase in its membership as membership of the TUC was synonymous with membership of the CPP; the control of the leadership; and the direction of the TUC. President Nkrumah maintained that: “Party guidance at all times and correct leadership of the Trades Union Congress are very essential if [the] trade union movement is to play a positive and decisive role in the present phase of our revolution.” He also espoused the belief that it was the duty of trade unions to “carry out party ideological education within the ranks of the workers in order to identify the masses even more closely with the activities of the party” and urged them to so commit themselves.

4.1.1.16 The TUC thus became the socializing agent of the CPP and a recruiting ground for more members. The leaders sat in cabinet and were a part of everything that the government did. Indeed, the following statement was attributed to the then Prime Minister:

There can be no split of loyalties. Nobody has the right to call himself a true labour fighter if he is not also an honest and loyal member of the Convention People’s Party, because fundamentally, the Convention People’s Party is the political expression of the Trades Union Congress.

4.1.1.17 Such closeness to the government was bound to create a chasm between the leadership and the membership. This was made more manifest when a major strike by railway workers, mainly based in Sekondi-Takoradi, occurred in September, 1961, and paralyzed the system of transportation in the country. In such crisis, the leadership of the TUC was surprisingly on the side of the government to the extent that the Secretary-General, Tettegah, was alleged to have threatened to crush the revolt, whilst the Minister for Presidential Affairs, Tawia Adamafio, called the striking workers “despicable rats”. However, what was lost on the Secretary-General was that the scale of this strike was as much of an indictment of the government as of the leadership of the TUC.

4.1.1.18 On account of the attitude of the TUC leadership, the government felt justified in suspecting that the strike action was the act of the opposition United Party (UP), and consequently the government’s reaction was swift and brutal. The strike-leaders as well as some UP members who were blamed for the unrest, numbering about fifty in all, were detained under the Preventive Detention Act (PDA). The railway workers were dismissed but re-instated on the orders of the President some months later. This was, however, not before an apology had been made on their behalf to the President by the chiefs and people of Sekondi/Takoradi for the strike. When accepting the apology, he spoke to them in paternal tones as follows:

I accept your apology and take note of the firm vows and promises you make today. All I ask is that you should never again break faith with the party. What has past [sic] should be a lesson for us to understand: that a people’s revolution does not thrive on past achievements. It guards the present and pushes on to secure the future against counter-revolution and subversion.

I will cherish the memory of this act of repentance and reconciliation, and I am happy to inform you that I have directed that those of our workers who were dismissed and detained and whom the government recently released should get back their jobs.

What did workers pay Union dues for if it took the intervention of the chiefs of the locality rather than the leadership of the TUC to intervene in a labour-dispute crisis?

4.1.1.19 There was later a purge of TUC by the government. Described as a “clean-up in the trades union” the President lauded it as marking “a new approach to trade unionism in this country”. The Secretary-General, Tettegah, was removed and replaced, but this was read more as a move to undermine the popularity of the trade unionist than a restructuring of the TUC. A frank account of events at the time assigns other reasons for the purge. According to Genoveva Kanu nee Marais, President Nkrumah’s one-time confidante:

If anyone was indiscreet enough to show himself academically wiser than he, he would be suspected, if only vaguely, of trying to show the President as a lesser mortal. When Gbedemah and Tettegah, the latter a most vocal Trade Union Congress leader, appeared to win universal popularity in Ghana, Nkrumah was restless until he had succeeded in dismissing them.

4.1.1.20 The fact that it was possible for the Secretary-General of the Trades Union Congress to be removed by the government, appointed as “Ambassador Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary” and replaced by another government appointee - Magnus-George – who was also later removed and replaced by Kwaw Ampah meant that the TUC was regarded as just one more government department to which persons could be appointed or removed at the whim of the government. Is it not a fundamental right of organized labour to elect its own leaders? That the President would feel threatened by the popularity of a trade unionist was indicative of how powerful the unionist had become, in national politics.

4.1.2 THE JUNIOR CIVIL SERVANTS' ASSOCIATION

4.1.2.1 Upon the attainment of Independence, the Association of Civil Servants became known as "Junior Civil Servants' Association"(JCSA). The promulgation of the Industrial Relations Act, 1958, and the Civil Service Act, 1960 (C A5), made membership of the TUC compulsory for virtually all Civil Servants under section 24 (1) of the Act, which stated as follows:

Regulation shall be made for ensuring that, so far as is practicable and subject to such expectations (if any) as the public interest may require, all Civil Servants are members of the TUC.

4.1.2.2 When the JCSA became a part of the TUC it ceased to be active as the TUC itself became an integral wing of the CPP. The TUC used its power to suppress agitation within the ranks of workers rather than supporting them to press for better conditions of service. In effect, civil servants had no means for protecting their interests.

4.1.3 THE COCOA FARMERS CO-OPERATIVE MOVEMENT

4.1.3.1 With the dissolution of the CPC as a result of the Jibowu Commission’s Report, and with the subsequent attainment of independence by the country in 1957, the government of the day took four major decisions which had a profound effect on the fortunes of cocoa farmers in the country. These decisions included the following:

- (i) The UGFC was recognized as the mouth-piece of the farmers of Ghana
- (ii) The Ghana Cocoa Marketing Board was authorized to pay an annual subvention of £100,000 sterling to the UGFC.
- (iii) The government undertook to build headquarters at a cost of £105,000 sterling for the council in appreciation of the council's support for the CPP in the pre-independence struggle for self-government.
- (iv) The Cocoa Marketing Board was directed to make the United Ghana Farmers' Council one of its Licensed Buying Agents.

4.1.3.2 Following the above decisions, the UGFC, in 1958 registered its marketing section as Ghana Farmers' Marketing Co-operative Limited (GFMC).

4.1.3.3 The competitive market structure of the country's cocoa industry changed when in his dawn broadcast on 8th April, 1961, President Nkrumah, appointed the United Ghana Farmers Co-operative Council (UGFCC) as the sole Licensed Buying Agency (LBA) for the Ghana Cocoa Marketing Board. The Ministry of Agriculture directed that the UGFCC should take over immediately the assets and liabilities of all the old co-operative societies, adding that there was "no need for the old co-operatives to go into liquidation before the take-over." As a result of this measure by the government, during the next six years, the Ghana Cooperative Movement virtually ceased to exist in this country. Its capital and savings deposits were transferred to other uses.

4.1.3.4 At the time of the "Dawn Broadcast" that made the UGFCC an integral wing of the CPP, there were three separate cocoa co-operative organizations marketing cocoa as Licensed Buying Agents of the Cocoa Marketing Board. These were the United Ghana Farmers' Co-operative Council and the Ashanti, Brong-Ahafo and Sefwi Co-operative Organization (ABASCO) which had broken away from its parent organization, the Ghana Co-operative Marketing Association in 1960.

4.1.3.5 The UGFCC monopoly was abolished soon after the 1966 coup which overthrew the CPP Government. This was followed by the de Graft-Johnson Committee of Enquiry on the local purchasing arrangements of cocoa in 1967. With the liquidation of the UGFCC in 1966, the Ghana Cocoa Marketing Board was authorized by the government to take over, as a temporary measure, the assets, liabilities, personnel and buying functions of the UGFC under a newly created purchasing department.

4.1.3.6 The de Graft-Johnson Committee reported that evidence had been given before it to the effect that the buildings, equipment and other assets of the old co-operatives had not been paid for and furthermore that the UGFCC had taken over the assets, and not the liabilities, of the old co-operatives. Further evidence showed that the Ghana Co-operative Bank Limited, the main provider of funds for the old co-operatives, had assets amounting to £1,745,734 at the time it was ordered into liquidation on 16th November, 1970.

4.1.3.7 According to evidence given by the Registrar of Co-operatives before the committee, the old co-operatives, at the time they were absorbed in 1961, held reserves amounting to some £2 million, shares to the value of about £1.5 million and savings and deposits amounting to £1.0 million. The volume of business done by the societies annually was in the order of £10 million. The number of societies stood at 500 and individual membership at 50,000. Petitions and presentations made to post-1966 Governments of Ghana for de-confiscation of these assets to the Cooperative Movement in the country have still not been addressed.

4.1.3.8 The de Graft-Johnson Committee also reported about a number of irregularities in the purchase of cocoa by the UGFCC in the country, especially abuses and malpractices meted out to farmers noted to be opponents and critics of the CPP Government by secretary-receivers (produce clerks). Allegations such as (a) tampering with weighing machines; (b) delays in weighing; (c) collusion between secretary-receivers and produce examiners over grading of cocoa; (d) surplus weights; (e) adulteration of cocoa; (f) outright confiscation of cocoa; (g) the chit system, etc, were made.

4.1.3.9 Many social commentators believe that the activities of the UGFC and the failure of the past governments to grant the requests made by the Co-operative Movement accounts for the lack of interest in co-operative activities among cocoa farmers throughout the country today.

4.1.4 THE BUILDERS'/WORKERS' BRIGADE

4.1.4.1 Soon after Independence, the government declared its intention to establish a new organization to be known as the National Builders' Brigade. This organization was to address the problem of unemployment amongst school leavers, ex-servicemen and other members of the community. According to a Government Briefing Paper:

The government has for some time been perturbed at the growing problem of unemployment amongst the youth. Efforts have been made to meet the problem in a variety of ways by the provision of a Youth Employment Service and the establishment of Vocational Training Centre... both these schemes were useful but it is clear... that they cannot provide more than a palliative to a problem, which becomes more pressing each year. Not only is there a waste of potential skills and education, but also a human problem affecting each individual who fails to find work. The government has therefore decided that the problem must be tackled boldly and fundamentally ... intended not only to provide a new approach to unemployment problems, but at the same time to give constructive activity for unemployed men and women and to train the youth for the development of the country.

4.1.4.2 The establishment of the brigade was initially considered an administrative matter, but later it became clear that it needed statutory backing. In late 1957, the Builders' Brigade Board Act, 1957, (Number 37) was passed in the teeth of bitter parliamentary opposition. It received the Royal Assent on 30th December, 1957, and by Legal Notice Number 76 (the Builders' Brigade Commencement Order, 1958), the Act came into operation on 1st March, 1958 – at the instance of N A Welbeck, then Minister of Labour and Co-operatives. Its scope of operation was described as follows: “the activities of the Brigade shall generally have relation to agricultural undertakings, rural development and other development projects.”

4.1.4.3 The control and management of the brigade was made the responsibility of a seven-member board made up as follows: the National Organizer, the Director of Social Welfare and Community Development and representatives from TUC, the Ex-Servicemen’s Union, the Ghana Farmers’ Council and two experienced Ministerial nominees. Financial administration and supervision was to be done by a Finance Committee consisting of the Chairman of the Board, the National Organizer and two other members of the Board. Brigade units were administered like civil service units: there was an official list of brigaders’ names were correctly described on pay vouchers and there was a scheme of service, which indicated the duties, qualification, and methods of entry into each post. Consideration of qualification, expertise and efficiency were paramount. There were procedures for property sale, stores regulation and strict financial control. The Builders’ Brigade was thus a regular state institution whose operations were based on adherence to time-tested procedure and which did not go beyond the sphere statutorily prescribed by its parent Act.

4.1.4.4 The initial task of reaching the public for the purpose of fulfilling its functions was assigned to the Director of Social Welfare and his staff. Applications were invited from the general public, and so overwhelming was the response that in no time at all, the secretariat had about ten thousand applications. The director explained at a press conference that the secretariat had had to develop objective criteria to select about five hundred persons at the end of the first week. In selecting the candidates, preference was given to ex-servicemen, men with trades needed for the brigade’s work, Middle School leavers as well as those who had been unemployed for more than a year.

BUILDERS’ BRIGADE BECOMES WORKERS’ BRIGADE

4.1.4.5 In October, 1959, dissatisfaction with the brigade’s perceived bureaucratic nature dictated a change in approach as the high rate of unemployment was one of the opposition’s main sources of criticism of the government. Two major events dictated the government’s shift in policy. First, was the result of Municipal Council Elections of 1959 in Accra. Accra Central District had an 11% unemployment rate and this was twice the national average of 6%. Therefore, when the UP was able to win the majority of votes and two out of four seats contested in the 1959 Municipal Council by-election, it became clear that the unemployment problem in Accra had become a political problem for the CPP. Consequently, the need to undermine this source of strength for the opposition party was paramount and it was felt that this problem could be solved if units of the brigade were to be established as a matter of urgency in Accra. However, the need to solve this political problem was not appreciated by the civil servants to whom responsibility for the recruitment into the brigade had been assigned. The conventional civil service attitude of the Director of Social Welfare and his selective method of appointment into the Builders’ Brigade resulted in an inability to achieve more than a bare scratching of the surface of the unemployment problem, which it was claimed the brigade would solve.

4.1.4.6 The second problem was the need to stem the southward flow of labour from Northern Ghana. Cabinet therefore requested the establishment of a brigade unit at Damongo to create employment in the North. The slow manner in which the sector Ministry responded to these urgent demands precipitated the take-over of the brigade by the Office of the Prime Minister with the active support of the Northern Members of Parliament. The Office of the Prime Minister operated to satisfy immediate political demands and thus tended to ignore civil service procedures.

4.1.4.7 The brigade was therefore moved from the control of the civil servants to direct political control by the indefinite suspension of the Board and the changing of its name from the Builders' Brigade to Workers' Brigade. This move resulted in an alteration of the statutory structure without any revision of the parent Act. The statutory structure was altered and the brigade was left thus without effective control and management. The suspension of the board also meant that the Workers' Brigade lost its Finance Committee and consequently the checks and controls intended in matters of finance ceased to exist.

4.1.4.8 The New Structure

The loss of supervision occasioned by the structural changes marked the beginning of the decadence that was to eventually engulf the Workers' Brigade.

Administration, Duality and Militarisation

4.1.4.9 The Builders' Brigade was set up under the aegis of the Ministry of Labour, Co-operatives and Social Welfare. The Office of the Prime Minister took control of it and it became the Workers' Brigade. Brigaders' were no longer recruited, they were "inducted". In 1961, it was placed under the Ministry of Defence.

4.1.4.10 This imposition of control from both the Office of the President and Ministry of Defence, resulted in dual control. The Office of the President (formerly Office of the Prime Minister) took charge of the politics of the brigade and saw to its metamorphosis into an integral part of the CPP whilst the Ministry of Defence dealt with the administrative and state affairs of the brigade. The Armed Forces Act, 1962 (Act 105), was made operational in the brigade's activities, under the Command of Lt Col Musa Kuti.

4.1.4.11 Suffice it to say that the application of Act 105 to the brigade led to increased militarisation of brigade activities. It also became the excuse for egregious human right atrocities to be inflicted on the citizenry. It became a para-military body and gained a dubious reputation as one of the notorious wings of the CPP. It was seen as an intimidation force used to coerce people into doing the CPP's wishes in matters relating to chieftaincy, local government elections and the indoctrination of the youth. It is instructive to note that when the Brigade Board was later reconstituted, all but one of the six members were strong members of the CPP. It is also pertinent to note that the Workers' Brigade had not been constituted by an Act of Parliament as a part of the Public Service, as per article 51 of the 1960 Constitution.

4.1.4.12 At the height of its power, the Workers' Brigade was one of the specialized agencies in the agricultural sector and it employed over twenty-five thousand (25, 000) workers. With its national headquarters at Kanda in Accra, it had camps - both training and work camps - all over the country. It also had vast properties that included farms, a garment factory, a canteen, a band, a football team, a newspaper, The Brigader and an engineering workshop.

4.1.4.13 By 1966, the vision behind the establishment of the Brigade had not been realized. The Workers' Brigade had become a means of rewarding party members and activists with employment at fat salaries for very little work done. Contrary to the original aspirations, the Workers' Brigade could not produce enough food to feed themselves let alone the nation. They had become a constant drain on national coffers.

4.2 24TH FEBRUARY, 1966 -- 30TH SEPTEMBER, 1969 NATIONAL LIBERATION COUNCIL

4.2.1 THE WORKERS' BRIGADE

4.2.1.1 After the overthrow of the CPP Government, the Government of the National Liberation Council (NLC) set up a Commission of Enquiry under the chairmanship of E D Kom, a senior legal practitioner, to probe brigade affairs. This commission uncovered acts of embezzlement, misappropriation, nepotism, cronyism, victimization of brigaders who insisted on the right things, unauthorized increases in wages and salaries and procedural irregularities in acquiring and disposing of property. The Kom Commission also found that top CPP officials such as Kofi Baako and Jones Ababio used Brigade labour free of charge in making extensions to their private residences. Sections of the Brigade, such as the band, had not received any payments for services to CPP officials. The Kom Commission also found that the hierarchy of the brigade was top-heavy with people with criminal record.

4.2.1.2 The Kom Commission recommended the retention of the Workers' Brigade but made far-reaching recommendations for restructuring: it was to return to civil service procedures in its administration as well as a streamlining of its processes; the officers with criminal record were to be removed; and the brigade was to be de-politicized and de-militarized (eg no more wearing of military-style uniforms). The government accepted these recommendations and retained the Workers' Brigade.

4.2.1.3 The restructuring of the organization changed its nature, and appeal. It was clear that the Workers' Brigade had been dealt a death-blow. It became a shadow of itself after 1966, as the fat salaries were no longer available. Indeed, there were complaints that the salaries were not being paid and so there were mass desertions and resignations. The demilitarisation of the organization also meant that the military paraphernalia that gave it luster and made it so attractive to young people, as well as other perks that made it a lucrative avenue for employment of party faithfuls, had all disappeared. Although it continued to exist in its diminished form for a number of years, it was no longer of account as a political movement.

4.2.2 THE TRADES UNION CONGRESS

4.2.2.1 When the National Liberation Council (NLC) seized power in 1966, it found a union that had become so merged with the government's structure, business and ideology that the TUC leadership could not survive the government's overthrow as the government's philosophy was that nobody "has the right to call himself a true labour fighter if he is not also an honest and loyal member of the Convention People's Party." Such philosophy created a leadership vacuum in the TUC when the CPP Government was thrown out of office.

4.2.2.2 The NLC appointed B A Bentum, a veteran trade unionist, to lead the TUC. The very fact of his coming to office by way of appointment by the government, rather than by election by the membership, showed the hold that government had over the TUC. This hold may have accounted for the inability of the leadership to effectively represent the workers. It might also be the case that the new leadership lacked the kind of trade union experience that they were required to have in order to rise to those offices abandoned by the CPP functionaries on account of the many years of emasculation by the CPP Government. Consequently, the TUC was seen as being unable to represent workers because the leadership was ineffective in championing the cause of workers wrongly dismissed. In February, 1969, the Secretary-General of the TUC stated:

The series of divergent opinions and positive steps taken by the TUC on several government policies have been done in the spirit of objectivity and not of bitterness. It would wait until the hand over to civilian government before it would come out with long speeches on what went wrong.

4.2.2.3 This statement sounded as if he was explaining to the country that he was duty-bound to adopt positions on government policies not because of ulterior political motives but because it was important to oppose wrong policies at the right time. This was the reason for the veiled reference to the series of academic lectures held after the 1966 coup d'état to analyse the Government of the Nkrumah regime, titled "What Went Wrong". This need to justify the union's positions was indicative of the political culture in which the unions had to operate after 1966.

4.2.2.4 In 1966, there were many lay-offs as people were declared redundant, and these lay-offs continued in 1967 and 1968. There was thus a lot of industrial unrest as workers did not have a right to strike under the Industrial Relations Act of 1958, and the TUC seemed incapable of fighting their cause.

4.2.2.5 In 1967, the NLC passed the Industrial Relations (Amendment) Decree, 1967. This Decree set up a committee to review industrial awards made before the overthrow of the government and which had not already been implemented because one of the parties was disputing it. It also made it an offence to incite another to go on strike as a result of any review done by the committee. Many workers lost their jobs in 1968, and yet the TUC still appeared unable to work for the welfare of workers.

4.2.2.6 The government treated workers' protests with heavy-handedness. Early in 1969, there was a major strike at Ghana Cargo Handling Company at Tema that ended only after about 2,000 workers had been dismissed. Subsequently, the TUC lodged a formal complaint to the International Labour Organisation (ILO) against the Government of Ghana for its handling of the dispute. It was later in December, after the inauguration of the Second Republic, that the matter was amicably resolved. In March, 1969, there was a major strike by gold miners of the Ashanti Goldfields Corporation (AGC) at Prestea which was so brutally suppressed by the police that three miners were shot and killed. The TUC protested to the then Chairman of the NLC, Lt-Gen Afrifa, about the extent of force used in suppressing workers' protests. The TUC insisted that whatever the nature of the strike – legal or illegal – it did not justify mass dismissals, shootings and killings by the police, and threatened that the occurrence of such events would provoke the TUC to embark on a nationwide strike to protest. The Secretary-General later blamed the government and management of the AGC for the disaster and tried to explain away the inability of the TUC to help with their grievances on the grounds of the "interest of the country's economy."

4.2.2.7 Despite these strong anti-labour activities, the government accepted recommendations of a Committee on the TUC on the state of its finances. In August, 1969, the government then decided to write off a loan of five hundred 500,000) the equivalent of two hundred and fifty thousand thousand cedis (pounds sterling that the TUC owed to the government. This loan had been advanced to the TUC to enable it to restructure itself under the Industrial Relations Act of 1958, and a subsequent restructuring in 1964. In the main, the strikes were over unfair employment terms and the implementation of the recommendations of the Salary Review Commission chaired by Mr. Justice Mills-Odoi. The TUC does not appear to have done enough to satisfy its constituency.

4.2.2.8 In April, 1969, dissatisfaction with the government led to suggestions that the TUC should form a political party to compete for power when the ban on political activity got lifted for political campaigns in the Second Republic. This was on account of the feeling that a TUC-based government would look after Labour's interests better. The statistics for industrial unrest are startling: there were thirty one strikes in 1966 involving fifteen thousand and seventeen workers; twenty seven strikes in 1967 involving six thousand four hundred and thirty seven workers, thirty eight strikes in 1968 and fifty one strikes in 1969 involving twenty eight thousand six hundred and thirty eight workers; No wonder workers felt that their concerns might receive speedier attention if they had a government of their own. A few months later, the matter was put to vote and by a vote of one hundred and eleven to one hundred and eighteen, ie by a slim majority of 3, the TUC voted to remain neutral in politics. The closeness of the vote explains why, ten years later, the TUC went ahead to form a party – the Social Democratic Front (SDF) during the inception of arrangements to usher in the Third Republic, with results that vindicated the position of the majority in 1969.

4.2.3 THE CIVIL SERVANTS' ASSOCIATIONS

4.2.3.1 When the National Liberation Council seized power from the CPP Government, and formed a new government, the TUC ceased to be an integral wing of the ruling party.

One of the reformatory measures adopted towards the creation of an independent Civil Service was the repeal of section 24 (1) of the Civil Service Act, by the Civil Service (Amendment) Decree, 1967 (N.L.C.D. 134), on 12th January, 1967, which removed the Civil Servants from the control of the TUC. However, the repeal of section 24(1), without the provision of an alternative machinery for the conduct of negotiations with government, created a vacuum, as there was no mechanism for effecting periodic review of Civil Service Conditions. Consequently, the question of how to devise a permanent machinery for the automatic periodic review of Service Conditions of Civil Servants, vis-a-vis staff of other sectors of the Public Services, became a burning issue.

4.2.3.2 Between 1966 and 1967, the Government of the NLC sought to find solutions to the problems of the Public Services by appointing various committees/commissions of enquiry. One of such commissions, appointed on 27th January, 1967, was the Mills-Odoi Commission set up to review and make recommendations on the structure and remuneration in the Public Service. During the course of the commission's sitting, the senior Civil Servants revived their Staff Association under the title 'Senior Civil Servants Association' which was intended to be for the welfare of the senior categories of the Civil Service exclusively. At its formal inauguration in April, 1968, an important disclosure made by A O Mills, the then Principal Secretary of the Establishment Secretariat, was to the effect that the government had given official recognition to the association. . No mention or reference was made to the "Junior Civil Servants" in any part of their Constitution, and thus, the new association left the junior Civil Servants "orphaned", without any machinery for the protection of their interests.

4.2.3.3 The Junior Civil Servants had traditionally been more active, more vocal and more militant in the affairs of organised labour, than the Senior Civil Servants whose Staff Association was simply a forum for discussing promotions and protection of interest of persons holding senior positions in the service. There was therefore some discontent created when the Senior Civil Servants' Association (SCSA) gained recognition as a labour movement. As if to emphasise the "orphan" status of the Junior Civil Servants, drastic changes for the better started occurring in the service through circular letters, a few days after the inauguration of the SCSA. However, most of these improvements were exclusively for the Senior Civil Servants, and led to the suspicion that the Senior Civil Servants were taking advantage of their influence on the government to improve their own lot, to the neglect of the junior ones.

4.2.3.4 On 15th May, 1968, the Mills-Odoi Report was released and published with the Government's White Paper thereon, and it confirmed the suspicion of the juniors that the changes initiated in 1967 had in fact anticipated the recommendations of the Mills-Odoi Commission, because the Report reinforced those changes. These developments created an unhealthy atmosphere among the Junior Civil Servants, because it appeared that the Senior Civil Servants had fared very well under the Mills-Odoi Report because they had a group looking out for their interests, whilst the Junior Civil Servants had fared very badly, since they were "orphans". The Junior Civil Servants suffered changes in status that were less favourable than before. For instance, the following recommendations which adversely affected the juniors were made:

a). The abolition of the non-contributory pension scheme in the Civil and the Teaching Services which was granted by virtue of the Pensions Ordinance "Cap 30" and the absorption of all serving officers into the National Social Security Scheme under paragraphs 429-435 of the Report.

b). Serious distortions in the relativities of the salary ranges, as well as other serious omissions on important benefits for Junior Civil Servants.

4.2.3.5 The recommendations of the Mills-Odoi Report were considered distasteful by Junior Civil Servants, and this, coupled with the catalogue of other sources of dissatisfaction, made some outspoken Junior Civil Servants come together, and under the inspiration of a junior accounting officer, T Darko-Ameyaw, formed a group. The group got together and wrote a Constitution for the formation of the Junior Civil Servants' Association (JCSA), and it was inaugurated on 29th June, 1968. After the inauguration of the JCSA, it began to address itself to the following issues:

1. Resumption of Departmental Negotiating Machinery;
2. Industrial Relations and Civil Service Act;
3. Commissions on the Civil Service:
 - i. Lidbury Report. ii. Mills-Odoi Report;
4. Abolition of Pension Rights;
5. The significance of setting up of the Industrial Courts;
6. Mode of award of increments;
7. Rejection of the Confidential Report System;
8. Salary Increase; and
9. Employment of Middle School Leavers.

4.2.3.6 Having expressed grave dissatisfaction at what it considered to be a manipulation of the Civil Service by the changes that preceded the Mills-Odoi Report, the JCSA made fresh proposals for the consideration of government:

1. That the Departmental Negotiating Machinery be reintroduced.
2. That the government should suspend the Mills-Odoi Report until all grievances had been looked into and the Report re-examined.
3. That the non-contributory pension rights scheme should be restored or alternatively the gratuity and pension already contributed prior to the implementation of the Mills-Odoi Report be paid and fresh negotiations opened towards reaching a new agreement with government.
4. That the Report should be given retrospective effect so that the junior Civil Servants would not have to wait till 1969 while the seniors were already enjoying increases in salaries and amenities.
5. That confidential files, other than those connected with high state security, should be abolished.
6. That the government should give consideration to the continued employment of Middle School Leavers into the Public Service and encourage them to improve on their education.

4.2.3.7 At its first meeting held on 29th June, 1968, the executive decided that the government's attention was to be drawn to the rebirth of the JCSA. Accordingly, a copy of the constitution was forwarded to the seat of government, i.e. the Castle, for which a formal letter of acknowledgement and recognition was received. The path was then set for negotiations. The association began to draw the attention of the government, through various memoranda, to glaring anomalies in the Mills-Odoi Report with particular reference to the abolition of the non-contributory pension rights. The contention was that pensions granted under the Ordinance Cap 30 was a contract between the government and its employees. The association therefore found it unacceptable that such a fundamental change in the conditions of service of civil servants was being proposed and requested that the government choose either the restoration of the pension or the payment of all the entitlements under the Ordinance to all contracting officials. In the second situation the government would have to enter into fresh terms of employment and service conditions. The Association also demanded the urgent rectification of the anomalies in the salary relativities.

4.2.3.8 The government and its agencies failed to give serious attention to the demands of the Junior Civil Servants, and between July, 1968, and April, 1969, there were a number of threatened industrial actions by the junior civil servants. The situation became tense especially when the workers demanded the suspension of the implementation of the salary and pension aspects of the Mills-Odoi Report pending a review. On 11th April, 1969, the Chairman of the NLC, then Lt-Gen A A Afrifa, invited the Executive Committee of the Junior Civil Servants' Association to a meeting for discussions on the matter. The meeting agreed to the suspension of the implementation of the salary and Pension/Social Security aspects of the Report and this was later announced by the Chairman. Thereafter, a three-man Committee headed by J H Mensah, an economist and then Commissioner for Finance, was appointed to examine further, the subject matter under discussion and submit its report by end of June, 1969. In order to expedite the work of the committee, various sub-committees were appointed to assist in its work.

4.2.3.9 Soon after the committee's deadline of 30th June, 1969 expired, pressure was brought to bear on both the executive committee and the government by members of the JSCA for the immediate release of the Committee's Report. When this did not happen, the Junior Civil Servants decided to embark on a demonstration to express their disapproval against the government, followed by the withdrawal of their services immediately. In spite of the fact that all these decisions were taken against the advice of the national executive committee to members that urged the exercise of restraint, the members went ahead to execute the threat. Subsequently, the following leaders of the JSCA were arrested and detained for forty-eight hours for questioning: T. Darko-Ameyaw, General Secretary; KB Kwafo, National Vice-Chairman; SBA. Asante, Greater Accra Regional Chairman; and G.N. Okraku, Greater Accra Regional Secretary. This action by the security agencies in arresting the officials of the association rather strengthened the determination to go on strike.

4.2.3.10 On Monday, 6th July, 1969, about six thousand five hundred (6500) of its members staged a two- hour demonstration outside the walls of the Osu Castle, the seat of government. The government promptly proscribed the 200,000-strong JSCA. It took an apology from the leadership, and an undertaking by the membership that they would apply themselves diligently to their work, to get the government to rescind its decision "in the spirit of the new Constitution".

4.2.3.11 The Report was released on 13th July, 1969. Although far-reaching recommendations were made by the committee, the Junior Civil Servants were disappointed, because the Report did not satisfy their expectations in terms of salaries under the Pensions and Social Security Schemes. During the period 1968 and early 1969, the two parallel staff associations, the SCSA and the JSCA co-operated in all efforts to improve conditions of service for civil servants. This was particularly noticeable when four (4) seats were allocated to the two Associations at the Constituent Assembly that wrote the Constitution of Ghana's Second Republic. The four Representatives were FE Boateng, Foreign Affairs and DE Awotwi, Castle, and GY Agbolo, Ministry of Education and DE Dennis, Town and Country Planning, for the Senior Civil Servants and junior Civil Servants respectively.

4.2.3.12 In August, the government published a White Paper in which it announced that it had decided to reduce the number of Principal Secretaries in the Civil Service. This obviously had implications for the Senior Civil Servants as it reduced their opportunities for progression to the highest positions. The SCSA did not react visibly to this White Paper.

4.3 1ST OCTOBER, 1969 -- 12TH JANUARY, 1972 THE SECOND REPUBLIC GOVERNMENT OF THE PROGRESS PARTY (PP)

4.3.1 THE TRADES UNION CONGRESS

4.3.1.1 The policy of the government that came to power under the Second Republic, led by Dr. Kofi Abrefa Busia in 1969, adopted a model of economic management that was completely opposite that of the First Republic's central-planning model. The government believed in the free market approach based on private enterprise and individual freedom of choice. This led to an antagonistic relationship with the TUC as there was no longer any central planning in which the union could participate as they did before. The government embarked on restructuring that resulted in the elimination of thousands of jobs. Indeed, on the basis that every individual was free to join any trade union, a new body, Ghana Confederation of Labour, was permitted to exist and this created a rival body to the TUC. This was not surprising as the government must have wanted to dismantle the TUC which was a bastion of former CPP activism disguised as trade union politics.

4.3.1.2 The economy was not in very good shape and there was rising unemployment as many projects established by the socialist-leaning government of President Nkrumah as avenues for employment, were abandoned or dismantled. In 1970, the Minister of Finance, J.H. Mensah, called for a change in the leadership of the TUC because the leadership did not appear to enjoy the confidence of workers, nor did it enjoy the respect of the government. This was a damning criticism of the leadership, but their inability to help resolve industrial disputes certainly created scope for such criticism. As if things were not bad enough that year, the following year was even worse, for 1971 had 71 strikes! In at least one case, at Samreboi, striking workers of a timber factory were shot at by the police, and there were casualties. The TUC had to send a three-member fact-finding team to investigate the matter. These strike statistics exclude disagreements that did not boil over, nor do they cover acts of symbolic speech, such as the wearing of a badge by the 800,000-strong membership of the Industrial and Commercial Workers Union (ICU) even that carried the inscription “Monkey dey work, baboon de chop”. It was evident that the spate of industrial unrest had the capacity to be used for the creation of political instability, and needed action to be taken by government.

4.3.1.3 The establishment of the Campbell Commission, and the recommendations made by it, marked the turning point for organized labour. The Act that was passed as a result of the recommendations of this commission was the Industrial Relations Act, 1971 (Act 383), passed in record time because the government had heard of a strategy to destabilize it by organizing serial strikes all over the country. This Act was therefore intended to change the persona of the TUC, streamline its funding and thereby reduce its power. The Act therefore recognized the individual union’s right to exist independently of the TUC and the freedom of every union to go into any “association, federation confederation or congress” of its choice. With the TUC’s position as the sole representative of the labour movement in Ghana effectively ended, the Act then dissolved the Congress and liquidated it. To oversee the liquidation, the Act provided for the appointment of a receiver to take charge of the TUC property, and distribute the assets to the unions that contributed to its funds. In addition to these provisions, all the existing unions were given six months to re-register under the new Act or cease to be recognized as a union and one of the stated requirements for registration was that the union had to show that all its officers had been freely elected by the membership. Thus the Act not only struck a blow at the organization itself, but at the leaders themselves since many had become powerful through their association with the CPP. The Act further weakened the financial base of unions by providing that union dues could be deducted at source only if the affected workers gave their consent in writing. In thus losing the automatic source of funding at the same time as the cost of retrieving dues was going to be increased, the unions suffered a great disadvantage.

4.3.1.4 The TUC thus became a shadow of its former self, as the government encouraged the formation of a rival organization – the Confederation of Ghana Labour. The TUC leaders became jobless and plotted ways to bring down the government. The unions met and planned strategy to fight back by causing every union across the country to embark upon a strike in a co-ordinated fashion. This plot leaked to the government and the information was credible since there was at least evidence from the then Secretary-General of the TUC, BA Bentum, in a book he had published earlier about the use of the labour union to subvert the government. It is thus not surprising that such information unwittingly provided, would create an incentive for the government not only to strive to reduce the power of the TUC by dismembering it, but also devise strategy to keep the union front divided. The information found its way into the newspapers on 6th October, 1971, when the Daily Graphic newspaper published the following news item:

One trade union in the Western Region has decided to embark on what has been described as operation zero from October 12 to topple the PP Government. The decision to launch this nationwide strike described by very reliable sources as operation zero hour was arrived at after one of the disgruntled top brass of the dis-established Ghana TUC who is now conducting a whistle-stop tour of the industrial areas of the country had succeeded in convincing the union to launch the strike.

‘Operation zero hour’ will be called under the pretext of urging the government to grant a minimum wage of NC 1.50 per diem and to abolish the Industrial Relations (Amendment) Act 1971 and to form a broad-based government of workers, farmers and politicians opposed to the Progress Party Government. He said he had allegedly secured funds from friendly European countries and some alien firms in Ghana to finance striking Trade Unionists during the period to lay down their tools until the government was completely paralysed. He needs only the would-be strikers ‘unflinching support’ and loyalty to prolong the strike in a final onslaught against the enemies of workers to drill reason into them. Since the Industrial Relations Act was passed some disgruntled jobless leaders of the erstwhile TUC have allegedly been going round the country to incite workers against the government so as to cause chaos and confusion in the country.

4.3.1.5 Later that month, the government announced that it was taking over TUC building in order to house the Department of Labour. Thus, the building given to the TUC as a “gift of the government of the CPP” was taken away from them. In November, there was another announcement:

Certain assets of the dissolved TUC are to be sold by public auction. The Western Region branch of the defunct TUC would have its assets sold on Monday.

4.3.1.6 With all these grievances, organized labour would have had little to do in response to these hostile moves were the economy showing positive signs of recovery. However, this was not the case. The Aliens Compliance Order, 1971, which had been passed in the hope that the aliens who had taken jobs that nationals could do would be eliminated, did not arrest the rising unemployment. Following on the heels of all these difficulties, the currency was also devalued by 43.88% in an “austerity” budget. Workers became completely disillusioned, and it was thus no great surprise that when that government was overthrown, the Labour Movement rejoiced over the downfall of its arch enemy and gave support to the military government.

4.3.2 THE CIVIL SERVANTS' ASSOCIATIONS

4.3.2.1 The JSCA sent a petition to the government to review the provisions of the Local Government (Amendment) Act, 1965, which empowered employers to deduct Local Government Basic Rates at source. They contended that the provisions infringed on the rights of its members as their consent to the deductions had not been sought. The two associations continued to function as separate entities in spite of the success achieved by working together during the strike in July, 1969.

4.3.2.2 Although by now, it had become apparent that both associations were fighting for a common goal. They could not overcome the divisions created by the colonial categorizations in order to work together. The need to work together was forcefully demonstrated when five hundred and sixty eight senior public servants, including many senior civil servants were dismissed by the government. No one was able to raise a finger to fight for them, and even when a Public Servant, EK Sallah, successfully challenged the dismissals, the government refused to re-instate them and openly declared in the now famous speech by the Prime Minister that no court could compel an employer to keep an employee he did not wish to employ. Even though the matter was taken up in Parliament because the Opposition believed the action had been effected against persons viewed as “opposition” by the government, the SCSA could not do anything to help them. The dismissed public servants formed the “Apollo 568 Association” to fight their cause, but nothing much was achieved by them since their ability to pressurize the government to give them back their jobs was non-existent.

4.4 13TH JANUARY, 1972 -- 6TH OCTOBER, 1975
 THE NATIONAL REDEMPTION COUNCIL /
 7TH OCTOBER, 1975 -- 3RD JUNE, 1979
 SUPREME MILITARY COUNCILS I & II

4.4.1 TRADES UNION CONGRESS

4.4.1.1 One of the first Decrees that the new military government of the National Redemption Council (NRC) promulgated within a month of coming into power was to repeal Act 383 by passing the Industrial Relations (Amendment) Decree, 1972 (NRCD 22). During the period of the NRC, the TUC enjoyed a very good relationship with the government. Act 383 was repealed, and the building and other assets of the TUC that had been taken away from it were restored with great fanfare. Maritime and Dock workers who had been dismissed for going on strike were re-engaged. The TUC often apologized for the actions of workers, and failed to intervene on behalf of the workers dismissed en masse. Once the government changed the distribution system and made the TUC a distributor of goods to workers, opposition to it became muted. Indeed Adu-Amankwah comments that:

Greater organisational energies were devoted to consumerist ends while greater chances opened up for corruption among union officials. Allocation of quotas of goods produced in the various factories begun [sic] to emerge as an element of trade union demands.

4.4.1.2 Indeed, so warm were the relations with the government that the TUC issued a statement of support for the Union Government concept at a time when most Civil Society groups were actively campaigning against it.

4.4.1.3 The TUC decided to form a political party to contest for political power. The Social Democratic Front (SDF) that was formed in conjunction with other politicians who espoused the philosophy of social democracy, did not do well at the polls. Indeed, it lost even in the towns with mass concentration of workers. Perhaps it is on account of its sponsorship of a political party and the threat that the 4th June, 1979, revolt posed to the realization of its dream of winning political control of the state apparatus, as well as the warm relations with the government of SMCI/SMCII that explains the TUC's slow response to the government of the AFRC.

4.4.2 THE CIVIL SERVANTS' ASSOCIATIONS

4.4.2.1 After the 1969 strike action, it became apparent that both associations were fighting for a common goal thus demonstrating the potential that one big association could achieve for civil servants. After many years of discussion, an association, known as the "Civil Servants' Association of Ghana" was eventually born in February, 1977.

4.4.2.2 The new Civil Servants' Association promptly took action on all the outstanding positions lodged with the government. Several meetings were held between the government and association but the government did not respond appropriately. The continued silence from the Government's end resulted in another strike by civil servants between 3rd and 8th November, 1978. The striking civil servants were dismissed and asked to re-apply for re-engagement. About three thousand civil servants who failed to re-apply remained dismissed. Three officials of the association namely IK Ameyaw, Nikoi Ashie and Honya were arrested and detained for over two weeks. Eventually, the government decided to re-introduce the Civil Servants' Permanent Negotiating Machinery with J. Obuobi, a retired civil servant, as chairman.

4.5 4TH JUNE, 1979 – 23RD SEPTEMBER, 1979 THE ARMED FORCES REVOLUTIONARY COUNCIL

4.5.1 TRADES UNION CONGRESS

4.5.1.1 Labour was not particularly enthused by the new government that had overthrown its pet government. It took a while before the unions expressed support for the new government. Indeed, it was from the workers of the universities that support for the government was first made manifest. The Daily Graphic reported that the workers numbering about three thousand had taken to the streets of Cape Coast to demonstrate in support of the government. During this demonstration, the workers presented a resolution to the AFRC through the branch secretary of the Teachers and Educational Workers Union (TEWU), Destiny Ewusie-Johnson, calling on AFRC to consider appointing civilian workers to serve on the People's Courts in the various regions. The resolution also asked the AFRC not to bow to pressure from the professional bodies who did not want the revolution to succeed. Workers of Railway Corporation also demonstrated in favour of the AFRC in Sekondi and Takoradi during which they bore placards, some of which read: "Kalabule Stars versus Revolutionary Stars at the Firing Range", "Railways Management wake up". The workers later presented resolutions to the Commander of the Air Force Station for onward transmission to the AFRC.

4.5.1.2 The AFRC reacted by an antagonistic approach to the TUC. Its direct approach to the individual unions that produced the initial demonstration of support, marked attempts by the government to whip up support among the workers by dealing directly with the constituent groups under the TUC rather than the TUC itself.

4.5.1.3 The government's attitude in turn produced more aloofness on the part of the TUC and this was bound to produce difficulties for their mutual co-existence. The government had appealed to the TUC to exercise restraint in respect of wage-demands. The TUC which felt that this was a direct assault on the principles of collective bargaining itself and was cagey about yielding to this appeal. This attitude of the TUC seemed to have support among the workers, as one union, the Timber and Wood Workers Union, had used the opportunity of its quadrennial delegates congress to urge the TUC to continue to protect their collective bargaining rights against interference.

4.5.1.4 Although there was no indication as to who was threatening their rights, it would seem that it was a reflection of contemporary issues. Indeed, a few weeks later, one of the high profile representatives of the AFRC, Pilot Officer Richard Forjoe, described as AFRC Liaison Officer in charge of students and youth affairs, declared that there was a need to have a "viable trade union" since the TUC had failed workers, and complained that "the reaction from the workers in support of the June 4 revolution was unappreciative".

4.5.1.5 Subsequently, at a meeting held between the Chairman of the AFRC and the leadership of the TUC, the sentiments expressed were reminiscent of the views expressed by Pilot Officer Forjoe. Alhaji AM Issifu took the opportunity to explain the aims and objectives of the labour movement and the role it had played in the interest of the revolution. The fact that the Secretary-General of the TUC felt obliged to explain the aims and objectives of the labour union to the Head of State was indicative of the gap between the new leaders and the leadership of labour, such that they felt that the hostile attitudes were dictated by ignorance of the nature of organized labour. A few days later, a newspaper headline "Ashanti TUC Sets The Pace" was instructive of the government's grip with the leadership of the national TUC.

4.5.1.6 The TUC announced its decision to see to the implementation of the Rent Control Decree published by the AFRC as part of "phase two" of its Action Plan supposedly adopted on 1st August, to sustain the revolution. The government also initiated a policy of providing "one square meal" for workers by opening workers' canteens where workers could enjoy heavily-subsidised meals. Three of such canteens were opened, one at the Industrial Area in Accra, one at Ho and the last at Asokwa in Kumasi a few days before the AFRC handed over power to the Government of the PNP. These were moves clearly intended to court workers' affection for the AFRC although there was no indication that it was a sustainable policy.

4.5.1.7 From Koforidua came a protest against the caning of drivers who committed minor traffic offences. The drivers complained that they were being given between twelve and 24 lashes in public for traffic violations. They therefore refused to work and parked their vehicles in protest. Other areas reported incidents where drivers and passengers were made to slap each other if a driver was found to have overcharged the passenger and the passenger was found to have condoned the over-charging – this at a time when owing to fuel shortage, taxi drivers and passengers alike were experiencing great difficulties in finding transportation.

4.5.2 CIVIL SERVANTS' ASSOCIATION

4.5.2.1 The Government of the AFRC made an effort to cultivate workers in general, and was interested in assisting workers to achieve their desires and thereby improve its own support base. Thus, the CSA seized the opportunity to ask the government's assistance to resolve its most pressing problem: the dismissed civil servants.

4.5.2.2 Early in July, 1979, it was reported that the CSA had convened an emergency meeting and asked the government to reinstate the three thousand civil servants who had been dismissed in 1978, and to publish the findings of the committee of enquiry, set up to go into the disturbances, chaired by Mr. Justice Apatu Plange. If it was unclear why the CSA convened an emergency meeting over the issue of the dismissed workers, it soon became clear that they must have been prompted to do so, because the government reacted a few days later by publishing a White Paper on the report of Apatu Plange Committee. The White Paper ordered the re-instatement of the workers with their full benefits, and also accepted the recommendation of the Committee that the CSA be recognized as a bargaining unit on the same lines as the TUC and strengthened to represent civil servants.

4.6 24TH SEPTEMBER, 1979 -- 30TH DECEMBER, 1981 THE THIRD REPUBLIC THE GOVERNMENT OF THE PEOPLE'S NATIONAL PARTY (PNP)

4.6.1 THE TRADES UNION CONGRESS

4.6.1.1 The TUC had competed in the political contest that brought the PNP to power. The decision turned out to be a mistake because its party, the SDF, lost badly even in worker-concentrated areas like Tema. It also made it difficult for the government not to treat the TUC as an opposition party. Following the handing over of the AFRC on 24th September, 1979, the civilian administration inherited an economy in acute decline. There were no consumer goods in stock as the mass auctioning of goods had emptied the warehouses. The new government quickly fell into disfavour and within a short period, many workers embarked upon industrial action. It is on record that there were 43 strikes in 1979, but 66 strikes in 1980, and 51 in 1981. On account of the fact that the TUC competed with the PNP for power as a political party, the government of President Limann was very suspicious of the leadership and treated the TUC as an opposition party. The times marked a very unstable industrial climate as group after group pressed home demands for better conditions of service. Despite these realities, the relationship between the government and labour was very good because the 12.00.¢4.00 to ¢minimum wage moved from

4.6.1.2 However, there were negative sides to this good relationship as demonstrated by the case of Workers of Ghana Industrial Holding Corporation (GIHOC). Led by Joachim Amartey-Kwei, the Divisional Secretary of ICU at GIHOC, these demonstrating workers invaded Parliament and vandalized the premises. They were dismissed by letter signed by the personnel manager of GIHOC – Major Sam Acquah (Rtd) - and subsequent court action against the dismissal also failed. The case was heard by Mrs Justice Cecilia Koranteng-Addow who was later to be murdered together with Major Sam Acquah (Rtd) and two other High Court Judges as a result of a conspiracy in which Amartey-Kwei was implicated and for which he was subsequently executed.

4.6.2 THE VIGILANTE COMMITTEES

4.6.2.1 The regime of President Hilla Limann of the PNP, for all its perceived ineptitude and much-criticised inertia, began its term of office with almost-overwhelming problems when it took over the administration of the country from the AFRC on 24th September, 1979. There were several shortages caused by the 4th June Uprising itself which, in order to solve short-term problems of scarcity, led to the opening of all the warehouses and the momentary flooding of the market with goods. An artificial price system was imposed that reduced prices, but this lasted only as long as the goods that had been retrieved from their hiding places remained available. With the power of the gun it was possible to administer such a market regime, but as soon as the guns were withdrawn, the law of supply and demand led to a return of what had been called the kalabule system of unfair prices, hoarding, other trade malpractices and even higher prices than what previously obtained.

4.6.2.2 The idea of formation of “Vigilante Committees” was mooted by Dr Limann, soon after taking over reigns of government, and announced in a radio and TV broadcast to the nation. He invited people from all political parties, voluntary organisations, ethnic groups and other identifiable groups to join the Vigilante Committees in order to help keep an eye on the supply and distribution of goods to prevent the creation of artificial scarcities on the market.

4.6.2.3 However, it soon became evident that the Vigilante Committees were not going to be the solution to the problem of artificial scarcities, for many of the members turned out to be questionable characters from the PNP camp. There was a lot of unnecessary harassment of people alleged to be indulging in trade malpractices, and on 1st November, 1979, the leader of the largest opposition party, the Popular Front Party (PFP), Victor Owusu, called for “the immediate dissolution of Vigilante Groups to avoid inter-party fights and animosity reminiscent of the pre-independence political era.” This call, coming within two months of the formation of Vigilante Committees, demonstrated the skepticism with which the idea had been greeted.

4.6.2.4 It was observed by many Ghanaians that members of vigilante groups were engaged in the settling of old scores, outright cheating and bullying. For example, it was reported that some vigilante members from Dansoman and Sukura in Accra, trekked all the way to Larteh-Akuapem in the Eastern Region, for “Vigilante” purposes. Questions were asked whether they had finished “being vigilante” about the numerous trade ills in Accra and whether it was because they thought that Accra had been well-served that they had travelled as far as to Larteh and elsewhere, to enforce price control. It was the opinion of many Ghanaians that the reality of the situation was that the goods were just not available and that was the root cause of the trade malpractices. Some people even queried whether whoever initiated the idea of vigilante groups ever thought that he was creating another job opening, or merely a source of income for the lazy man. When it was reported in the newspapers that two vigilante men had been jailed for fraudulent practices and one other had been found dead, the government's critics thought that that should sound enough warning to Dr. Limann that "the boys" had deserted the path of righteousness, and that the "holy" vigilante idea must be more closely examined.

4.6.2.5 On many occasions one heard of the arrest of some members of vigilante groups for fraud and other petty offences, and some were accused of being "more than corrupt", and that it was only when one refused to grease the palms of vigilantes that they became extra active, raising their shoulders high, in threats – "if you fail to act on this case, (usually to any peace officer to whom they report a case) I will send your particulars to the Castle." In the readers' column of the Legon Observer, one Kwasi Ofori Mante of School of Journalism, Legon, wrote the following complaint:

His Excellency, President Limann, if you want your boys to help you, sit them down and give them the boundaries within which they can operate, and the rules and regulations they should follow. They cannot hide behind "vigilantism" and harass villagers and political opponents.

4.6.2.6 In spite of all these complaints and criticisms, the government still did not design proper guidelines for their operations, and the vigilante committees continued to operate unchecked and without appropriate supervision. In fact, in response to the criticisms, the then Acting Ashanti Regional Minister ordered the suspension of activities of vigilantes in the Ashanti Region. Many Ghanaians thought that officials in other regions would follow suit, but this did not happen, and vigilante committees continued to be a source of irritation to many. "If the vigilantes do not change and work above reproach, we'll be compelled to advise ourselves. After all we can be vigilantes ourselves, of course without the desire for some 'cola' passing under the table" was the verdict.

4.6.2.7 The vigilante groups died a natural death when the Limann regime was overthrown on 31st December, 1981. Many of those who participated actively in the vigilante committees soon returned, but this time as members of the Workers/People's Defence Committees of the successor-government.

4.7 31ST DECEMBER, 1982 -- 6TH JANUARY, 1993 THE PROVISIONAL NATIONAL DEFENCE COUNCIL (PNDC)

4.7.1 THE TRADES UNION CONGRESS

4.7.1.1 1982 opened with the TUC under attack from its own members. As early as 4th January, 1982, the Daily Graphic reported that a group of workers and members of June Four Movement numbering about two thousand had demonstrated through the principal streets of Accra in support of the revolution. The demonstrators then went to the offices of the Graphic Corporation. The spokesman for the workers, Kwasi Adu, accused the Daily Graphic of not publishing positive sides of the revolution and that they would “meet the enemies pen for pen and boot for boot”. In the same report, Quaynor-Mettle threatened Daily Graphic not to give adverse coverage to the revolution as the workers were not going to sit down and see the press manipulated against the revolution. Workers of GIHOC followed with a massive demonstration a few days later in support of the “Holy War” asking for the re-instatement of the workers who were dismissed for vandalizing Parliament. The PNDC promptly ordered the reinstatement of the workers.

4.7.1.2 Some of the unions appeared to have been more active in demonstrating support than others. For instance the Teachers and Educational Workers Union (TEWU) appeared to be more in the forefront of revolutionary activities than others. The Leader of the Legon branch of TEWU, Sonny-Ali, was a member of the IMC that was formed to run the affairs of the TEWU. This phenomenon may be accounted for by the fact that TEWU was the workers’ organisation represented on the campuses. The leaders were thus in direct contact with the radical students and radical academicians who were Marxists and therefore believed in organizing workers as the basis for revolution. Since these personalities provided the ideological direction of the revolution in its early days, it was not surprising that their links within the labour movement would be at the forefront of the revolutionary processes.

4.7.1.3 On Thursday, 7th January, a group of workers calling itself “Workers Solidarity Front” attacked and seized the headquarters of the TUC and vandalized the premises. As a result of the confrontation, the Hall of TUC was closed down and sealed off by the police for nearly one week. The same day, some workers converged at Nicholson Stadium after a demonstration in support of the PNDC. When the Secretary-General of the TUC attempted to address them, they assaulted him, and declared him and his executive officers dismissed from office. Later, the Secretary-General returned to work after calm had been restored. However, the writing was on the wall for the leadership of the TUC. Alhaji AM Issifu left the country to go into exile and JR Baiden was elected Acting Secretary-General by the Executive Board.

4.7.1.4 The new political dispensation seemed to be hostile to the leadership of the TUC. On 29th April, the workers stormed the TUC headquarters and sacked the leadership. An Interim Management Committee (IMC) was formed with E K Aboagye as chairman to run the affairs of the TUC. Some of the “dismissed” leaders fled the country, and those who remained were detained in prison for about two weeks, released and then told that they had been dismissed.

4.7.1.5 The ILO protested the appointment of IMC instead of the elected leaders of the movement. The ILO insisted that workers should elect their own leadership in line with ILO Convention 87 on Freedom of Association, and kept up the pressure until normalcy was restored in late 1983. In October, 1983, the national unions were finally able to go to their conferences to elect their own leadership. As the electoral processes showed, the workers roundly rejected the leadership imposed upon them when E K Aboagye, who was then the Chairman of the government-appointed IMC, could not secure a seconding of his candidature as Secretary-General. A new person, Augustus K Yankey, was elected much to the elation of the workers. The life of the IMC thus came to an end.

4.7.1.6 The honeymoon between the workers and the PNDC did not last long. In 1982, even before the Association of Local Unions (ALU) became the IMC, it took exception to the PNDC's abolition of leave allowances, etc. At the May Day Rally of 1983, there were lots of anti-government sentiments expressed. Shortly after the December 1983 Congress, the TUC got into negotiations with the government over minimum wage. The TUC wanted three hundred cedis (¢300) per day. This was a very unrealistic demand considering that the monthly allowance for National Service personnel was about five hundred cedis (¢500). Chairman Rawlings had some sharp words, such as "crazy" "mad" for the workers who were making that demand.

4.7.1.7 In February or April, 1985, the TUC came out with its "Position on the national economy". In this paper, it expressed its opposition to the direction of the economy. The government's reaction to this was quite hostile, and the TUC was subjected to savage attacks in the newspapers. In 1986, the most serious intervention of TUC was a call for a People's Assembly to be organized to promote political accountability. The call for the People's Assembly was an attempt to involve a larger group of people in governance and to promote government's accountability since the government was very hostile to party politics. The Government responded to this call by inviting TUC to a meeting to discuss the issues bothering organized labour. This meeting evolved to become the TUC-government Joint Standing Committee to which many problems were referred thereafter. This forum also provided an avenue for peaceably resolving conflict between government and labour. 1986 was also important in other respects: the government tried to cancel some allowances eg leave allowance, refund of hospital fees, etc. The government beat a retreat upon the protests of the TUC. However, it was also 1986 that saw the government passing a law to indemnify Cocobod which was trying to retrench its staff without paying the proper severance award. When the TUC organized a big meeting, the mounted police was called in to suppress the agitation and disperse the crowd.

4.7.1.8 By 1987 May Day, the union had moved towards openly calling for multi-partyism. The Secretary-General welcomed the District Assembly concept but proposed that the District Assembly election should be held within the context of a Constitution. Two weeks after this, at a board meeting, it was decided that TUC should make a call for multi-partyism, but in order not to give cause to be attacked, a committee was established to go round and canvass the position of multi-partyism before the TUC could come out openly. This did not happen, however, because the Head of Political Education was arrested a few days after that decision had been taken.

4.7.1.9 In 1988, the TUC made a clear statement calling upon government to return the country to constitutional rule. This irritated the government. To make matters worse, thirty-six union leaders and activists of the Ghana Broadcasting Corporation were dismissed and banned from entering the premises. The TUC was unsuccessful in seeking their reinstatement. The cumulative acts of ineffectiveness against high-handed government action led to efforts to unseat the incumbent Secretary-General at that year's Quadrennial Congress to elect new leadership. Many radical persons threw their weight behind a young radical, LGK Ocloo rather than the incumbent, Yankey. It was reported that there was a lot of intimidation by the State Security apparatus. The head of national security, Capt Kojo Tsikata (Rtd), attended and remained throughout the congress. He is alleged to have warned the radicals, or “those who wanted to be more Catholic than the Pope” that “they were on a slow boat to China and those who did not know how to swim had better say their last prayers”. All those acts of intimidation resulted in the re-election of the incumbent, Yankey.

4.7.1.10 The year 1990 saw the TUC re-affirming its call for a return to constitutional rule. It was also the year in which two hundred workers, who went on strike over management malpractices at Ghana Italian Petroleum Company (GHAIP), were dismissed without recourse to law. All these acts went to undermine the confidence of workers in the TUC. Eventually, the call for a return to multi-partyism bore fruit, and the TUC was given ten places on the Consultative Assembly that drafted the 1992 Constitution.

4.7.1.11 The TUC appeared to have learnt lessons from its close association with the government and so it made some resolutions on its future relationship with the government during the Fourth Republic. At the Quadrennial Congress at Cape Coast in 1992, delegates resolved that the TUC was to remain independent and resist governmental control, whilst ensuring peaceful co-existence. It also proposed an amendment to the TUC Constitution to prohibit TUC executive officials from taking positions in any political party, and to ban them from speaking on partisan political platforms.

4.7.1.12 The new leadership that had been elected was tasked to fight for the restoration of End-of-Service Benefits of employees that had been frozen earlier by the government. Workers insisted that since the government was going out of power, the issues had to be resolved, for the amounts owed to be paid with interest. Eventually the TUC was able to negotiate with the government for the amounts to be paid with interest over a three-year period.

4.7.2 WORKERS’/PEOPLE’S DEFENCE COMMITTEES (WDC/PDC) /COMMITTEES FOR THE DEFENCE OF THE REVOLUTION (CDR)

4.7.2.1 The Formation of the Committees

4.7.2.1.1 One of the most influential concepts borrowed from Libya was the formation of Defence Committees at the workplace and in the community, as they were seen to be the means by which the people could maximize their power. In no time at all, Workers’ Defence Committees and the People’s Defence Committees (WDCs/PDCs) sprang up all over the country and in many workplaces, thanks to the support given by the revolutionary government, as well as the activism and enthusiasm of those charged with the formation and organisation of the committees.

4.7.2.1.2 The June Four Movement (JFM) and the New Democratic Movement (NDM) were put in charge of giving direction to the PDC/WDC concept because this was largely a JFM idea. The two groups formed an Interim National Coordinating Council (INCC) to oversee the development of the concept, but no clear direction and proper organisation of the committees was given. Chris Bukari Atim, Member of the PNDC, was instrumental in establishing WDCs all over the country.

4.7.2.1.3 Initially, the guidelines announced for the formation of the WDCs/PDCs indicated that they were to be made up of junior staff at workplaces, and of ordinary people in communities. The philosophy suggested that workers in the lower rungs had to police those of the senior rungs because they were morally-upright whilst management personnel were corrupt, lazy and inefficient. Later, it changed to “all persons who are prepared to uphold and defend the basic objectives of the ongoing revolutionary process and who have a proven record of patriotism, integrity and democratic practice”.

4.7.2.1.4 The aims and objectives of the organization, as published in 1983, were as follows:

- To guarantee that the masses of the people of this country form the basis of power to carry out the 31st December revolution under the leadership of the Provisional National Defence Council (PNDC).
- To mobilize the people to know and defend their rights and to be able to organize the affairs of the nation as to ensure the availability of their basic needs such as work, food, clothing, shelter, health, education etc.
- To guarantee the democratic participation of the people – especially the farmers, fishermen and other working people - in the decision making process in this country and in the running of the affairs of their villages, towns, and cities; their offices, factories, and workplaces and in the nation generally.
- To help expose the internal enemies of the people both in business and in the bureaucratic state machinery, for it is through such internal collaborators that foreigners can dominate our lives and plunder both our human and material resources.
- To educate and mobilize the people to combat any form of domination and exploitation.
- To mobilize the human and material resources of the nation for the rapid all round development of our country and people and to ensure that efforts for our development are based primarily on ourselves.
- To organize the people to achieve a perpetual state of readiness for immediate political response to any political attacks on them and the revolutionary process.
- To foster brotherly cooperation and unity between our struggling people and those of our continent Africa and other parts of the world.

4.7.2.2 Structure

4.7.2.2.1 Structures were developed that created a national framework with the National Defence Committee (NDC) at its apex. In 1983, a proper structure was designed for the committees, beginning from the office level, through the zonal, community, district, and Regional levels, to the National level. The various levels were to have sub-committees or departments with personnel appointed by the NDC, to carry out the following functions:

- Complaints and investigations.
- Monitoring and coordination.
- Education, information and press.
- Administration.
- Projects and programmes.

Other structures were the co-ordinating committees with a co-ordinator and organising assistants and other officers of the WDCs in a locality, district or region.

4.7.2.2.2 The structure was then intertwined with the district political authorities by making a representative of the district secretary, secretary to the District Defence Committee. At the regional level, the following departments were required to be established:

- Education
- Information and Press
- Monitoring and coordination
- Administration
- Complaints and investigations.
- Projects and programmes.

In addition, the Regional Defence Committee was to have a secretary who was a representative of the regional secretary.

4.7.2.2.3 At the National level, there was a two tier system: the NDC secretariat and the NDC itself. The Secretariat had the following departments:

- Education and research
- Information and press
- Monitoring and coordination
- Complaints and investigations
- Projects and programmes.

It was responsible to the inter-departmental committee consisting of the heads of the six departments. The chairman of the committee was also the secretary to the NDC.

4.7.2.2.4 At the apex of the whole structure was the National Defence Committee, consisting of:

- NDC Chairman - PNDC Chairman or his delegate.
- PNDC Coordinating secretary.
- Secretary to the NDC
- National Armed Forces Defence Committee Coordinator/Secretary.

The WDC/PDC system was thus designed to be intertwined with the political structures of the PNDC.

4.7.2.2.5 Subsequently, a new structure was designed that changed the nature and purport of the PDCs/WDCs. They were re-organised, re-named Committees for the Defence of the Revolution (CDRs) and termed “organs of the revolution”. A new breed of official with the title “Organising Assistant” was introduced at the district level. The head of the CDRs was given the rather nebulous designation “The Political Counsellor for the Economic Development of the Committees for the Defence of the Revolution.” The re-structuring was more than cosmetic, for the transformation to CDRs also deprived them of some of their political clout.

4.7.2.2.6 In 1985, the National Secretariat of CDRs was officially opened at the Parliament House by the Political Counsellor. The keys of the building were presented to the CDRs at the ceremony.

4.7.2.3 Functions

4.7.2.3.1 According to the Guidelines, the primary function of the WDC was to do political education of workers, “to give them a clear understanding of the political and economic situation to enable them to participate fully in the national democratic revolution”.

4.7.2.3.2 In order to actualize the slogan “Power to the People”, its other functions were outlined as follows:

WDCs shall participate in the decision making process in their factories, workshops and offices to ensure that such decisions are in the national interest...

WDCs shall work in cooperation with their local trade unions and should not seek to take over the function of the unions.

WDCs shall ensure that the products of their workplaces are distributed according to the national interest as defined by the appropriate bodies.

WDCs shall complement the efforts of and cooperate with the WDCs of the communities in which their workplaces are situated....It shall together with the PNDC and the Ministerial representatives evaluate programmes submitted by PNDC secretaries. These shall then be transmitted through the PDC structure to the people....

...To ensure that the aspirations of the people are attained, the NDC shall through the WDCs educate the people and promote revolutionary discipline. To undertake any other functions as prescribed by law.

4.7.2.4 Activities

4.7.2.4.1 The WDCs were thus expected to keep management in check, report acts of corruption of the management, and ensure improved productivity. In the community, the PDCs were expected to help police the communities, and rid them of anti-social elements. They were also to mobilize the community for self-help activities and other community improvement projects.

4.7.2.4.2 On 9th May, 1983, Accra-Tema Central WDC and workers of University of Ghana took over the university following a Daily Graphic report that the students claimed to have access to arms, and were determined to use petrol bombs against the workers. The universities were closed and the campus of the University of Ghana was occupied by “cadres of the revolution” to undergo a “course” using the university’s lecture rooms and Halls of Residence. The University of Ghana, which suffered the take-over by “occupation forces”, lost a great deal through theft, involving even some of the University’s own employees, rough use of facilities by the cadres” and sheer vandalism. It is officially estimated that this eventually cost the university the equivalent of four million dollars ($4m) because during “the sojourn of the ‘occupation forces’”, a lot of damage was done to public and private property.

4.7.2.4.3 In many offices, managers were chased out as the new breed of leaders, untutored in the ways of the managing class, took over the running of the organizations. Many such organizations forcibly taken over and run by the WDCs, did not increase productivity as promised, but ended up bankrupt within a few years. Some of these enterprises were eventually returned to their owners, emptied of resources and run into the ground.

4.7.2.4.4 On the positive side, some of these persons, called “cadres of the revolution”, did indeed, work to check malpractices such as over-invoicing and under-invoicing, as well as tax-evasion. Some worked hard because they believed in the cause the government was pursuing, but many others joined the bandwagon because it was fashionable to do so. In the main, however, many became a law unto themselves and interfered with the functions of the local branches of the TUC, as well as in management decision-making.

4.7.2.4.5 In the early years of its existence, the unclear mandate of the Committees also created difficulties at the top of the structure. Members of the NDC believed themselves to be higher than the PNDC, and this became a source of political confusion. Some WDC/PDC members undertook shooting training under the tutelage of the military. At Takoradi, part of the premises of the Public Works Department was turned into a major torture centre, as the WDCs imitated the military in abusing citizens, who came into their clutches, for one misdeed or the other. Those premises were nicknamed “Ginger Barracks”, in obvious reference to the terrible ill-treatment, reminiscent of the taste of the spice, ginger, that one would be put through by those who run the “barracks”. Eventually, the government ordered the place to be closed down, when information on the atrocities being committed there, reached the PNDC Headquarters. The leaders of the “WDC gang” were arrested and subjected to ill-treatment by the military, and those “torture offices” dismantled.

4.7.2.4.6 A power struggle occurred between those on the NDC who had been organizing the PDC/WDC, and the Chairman of the PNDC over the direction of the revolution. The failed bid to wrestle power from the Chairman of the PNDC demonstrated the significance of the PDCs/WDCs in the development of a political power base, as those organizers had managed to acquire power all over the country within a short space of time. A few WDC executives, particularly in the factories in the Accra Industrial Area, became casualties of the clash. In at least one case, the WDC leader was reported missing, and is still unaccounted for, after being arrested and taken away in a military vehicle.

4.7.2.5 The End Of WDCs/PDCs

4.7.2.5.1 At the coming into force of the 1992 Constitution, the CDRs were converted into a Non-Governmental Organisation (NGO) and re-named Association of Committees for the Defence of the Revolution (ACDRs). Together with other “revolutionary organs” they were designated Private Voluntary Organizations.

4.7.3 CONCLUSION

4.7.3.1 This chapter has chronicled the activities of organizations formed by workers and farmers, for the protection of their interests, such as the Trades Union Congress, the Civil Servants Association and Farmers’ organizations, such as the Cocoa Farmers Co-operative Movement. In addition, it has examined a state-funded and state-operated organization such as The Workers’ Brigade, since it was a workers’ organization that was prominent in politics in the early part of the mandate period; as well as the Vigilantes and WDCs/PDCs that functioned in work-places and communities.

4.7.3.2 The Workers Brigade idea was a good one, that was perverted by its conversion into a para-military organization, and a wing of the CPP. Formed in order to help tackle the unemployment problem, it ended up as an instrument of oppression by the ruling party. It developed a fearsome reputation for political violence, which ensured its demise when its patron-government fell from power. In addition, the politicization of a good institution for solving the problem of unemployment, opened it up to misuse for political ends, as well as administrative evils such as improper financial supervision, improper financial administration, poor recruitment practices, and eventually, oblivion.

4.7.3.3 On the part of the Farmers Co-operatives, the distortion of the original mission of the co-operatives, as well as the expropriation of their assets without compensation, have been examined. The exploitation of farmers by their leadership for their own political advantage has also received attention. The conversion of the UGFC, the mouth-piece of the farmers of Ghana, into a wing of the CPP dealt a death-blow to the co-operative movement, and the farmers’ trust and confidence in organizing themselves, or attaching themselves to any such organizations. Farmers still remember the compulsory deductions made from their cocoa incomes that went, eventually, to benefit the CPP, and further the political aspirations of their leaders.

4.7.3.4 The successful implementation of the WDC/PDC concept demonstrated the importance of a mass movement, organized from the local level upwards, for purposes of political control of the country. It also made manifest the power that any individual could exercise nationwide, when put in charge of the organization. The structure of the organization ensured that at every village and hamlet, as well as in every town and office, the government was represented, and had “its eyes and ears”.

4.7.3.5 The chapter has also highlighted the mistreatment or otherwise of some of the leaders of these organizations and other prominent activists, either because the patron-governments had been overthrown, or because their activities were a challenge to the sitting government. It has also discussed the nature of the relationship between members and leadership of these movements and government during their period of office, as well as the extent of political patronage that they enjoyed, leading to their being active perpetrators of human rights abuses or violations, against their own membership, as well as against the citizenry at large.

4.7.3.6 Workers’ organizations throughout the mandate period have suffered from governmental interference, as well as manipulation for partisan purposes. Whenever the leaders lost focus or became interested in feathering their own political nests, then a perversion of their mission occurred; however, whenever they insisted on sticking to their mission, the leaders often ended up paying a price, through detentions and even exile. At various points during the mandate period, the leaders either became instruments through which their organizations were emasculated or controlled and misused by the government, or they themselves became involved in the perpetration of human rights abuses.

Volume 4 Chapter 5 - Professional Bodies (Other Than Legal) And Civil Society Groups

CHAPTER FIVE

PROFESSIONAL BODIES (OTHER THAN LEGAL) AND CIVIL SOCIETY GROUPS

5.0. INTRODUCTION

5.0.1 In reporting on the human rights violations and abuses that occurred during the mandate period, the Commission considered whether or not professional associations and other civil society groups had contributed to the violation or the protection of individual human rights. The scope of this chapter is restricted to the activities of the Association of Recognised Professional Bodies (ARPB), as well as those voluntary and/or political associations that had an impact on the human rights landscape. Consequently, the Commission did not study all political parties, nor all civil society groups ever formed in Ghana. The groups concerned are professional bodies (other than legal) and other civil society groups.

5.0.2 The Commission believes that a study of the activities of these movements during the mandate period would enable the nation appreciate their importance in the socio-political history of Ghana; be provided with the reasons for change or continuity in these movements; understand why the movements underwent a transformation or ceased to exist altogether, and above all assess their impact on the development or otherwise of a culture of respect for human rights.

5.0.3 This chapter is in two sections: reflecting the two sectors that were studied under the title of this chapter. Part I covers the activities of the professional bodies as they were grouped under the rubric of the ARPB, and other civil society groups with influence over, or interest in national politics. Part II covers civil society in general, as well as groups that operated in the political arena during the mandate period. These were also of two types: (1) the groups such as political parties, formed for the purpose of securing political power; and (2) the others which were formed for other purposes although they became involved in the political struggles of the country.

5.0.3.1 The Political Parties and Groupings: United Gold Coast Convention (UGCC); Convention Peoples Party (CPP); The Ghana Congress Party (GCP) National Liberation Movement (NLM); Moslem Association Party (MAP); Northern Peoples Party (NPP); Togoland Congress; Anlo Youth Association; Ga Shifimo Kpee; United Party (UP) National Alliance of Liberals (NAL); Progress Party (PP); Peoples Movement for Freedom and Justice (PMFJ); Third Force; Front For The Prevention of Dictatorship; Togoland Liberation Movement and National Liberation Movement of Western Togoland; Movement on National Affairs (MONAS); Peoples Revolutionary League of Ghana (PRLG); Kwame Nkrumah Revolutionary Guards (KNRG); June Fourth Movement (JFM); People's Revolutionary League Of Ghana (PRLG); 31st December Women's Movement (DWM); Movement for Freedom and Justice (MFJ).

5.0.3.2 Legon Society on National Affairs; Trade Associations and Market Women's Associations.

5.0.4 This chapter highlights the mistreatment or otherwise of the groups, their leaders and other prominent activists, either because the patron-governments had been overthrown, or because their activities were a challenge to the sitting government. It also discusses the nature of the relationship between members and leadership of these movements and the governments they worked under, during the mandate period.

PART I

5.1 Introduction

5.1.1 Apart from a few of these bodies such as the Ghana Medical Association (GMA), which was formed in 1958; Ghana Institute of Architects (GIA) formed in 1962; the Ghana Institution of Engineers (GhIE), formed in 1968; and Ghana Institution of Surveyors (GIS) in 1969, most professional associations were formed in the 1970s and later. From the available evidence, professional associations were formed for the primary purpose of promoting the interest of members of their respective professions.

5.1.2 In furtherance of the professional interest, most of them sought and obtained state recognition through appropriate legislation, which in some cases regulated their professional activities, including the maintenance of professional standards and ethics. It was upon the formation of the ARPB in the early 1970s, coupled with the speed and manner in which economic conditions deteriorated in the country, that changed the nature of interaction between the professionals, as organized under their associations, and the government.

5.2 6TH MARCH, 1957–23RD FEBRUARY, 1966:
CONVENTION PEOPLE'S PARTY (CPP) GOVERNMENT

5.2.1 Professional associations were not directly concerned with politics as a civic responsibility requiring them to show keen interest in the political fortunes of the country; and thereby availing themselves of the opportunity to make critical interventions when necessary. For them, any activity associated with political parties, politics and even governance, were not to be mixed with one's professional practice. Therefore, involvement in politics as a civic duty was not considered appropriate for a body of professionals. With the exception of the Ghana Bar Association (GBA), the professional associations that existed prior to the 1970s did not feature much in national affairs. For instance, the most momentous piece of legislation of the time, the Preventive Detention Act (PDA), 1958, that empowered the government to detain without trial, any person suspected of acts that might endanger the security of the state, did not elicit any public response from the registered professional bodies at the time, except for the GBA. Doctors and engineers did not see their vocations as entitling them to meddle in issues of governance, even though other groups outside the opposition parties, such as the churches, criticized the legislation.

5.3 24TH FEBRUARY, 1966 – 30TH SEPTEMBER, 1969:
NATIONAL LIBERATION COUNCIL (NLC)

5.3.1 The Formation Of Legon Society On National Affairs (LSNA)

5.3.1.1 A few days after the 24th February coup d'état, a group of seventeen Ghanaian Senior Members of the University of Ghana were called together to form an organization that would mount guard over our patriotic interests and help preserve the coup. On 1st March, 1966, this body organised themselves in a spirit described above, into the Legon Committee on National Reconstruction. The committee's aims and objectives were simple: to help demolish the Nkrumah myth and to assist the NLC in every way possible, within the competence of the committee both as a body and as individuals:

A few weeks ago, one of the four sub-committees of the LCNR, the political, proposed to the main body the establishment of the committee's own organ, as one of the most practical ways – as well as an urgent one of giving assistance to the NLC. The Legon Observer is the result. We aim, through its columns, first, to give loyal support to the NLC.

5.3.1.2 This group, re-named the Legon Society on National Affairs (LSNA), played a human rights advocacy role through its mouthpiece, The Legon Observer. This was its official platform, although very often, it was individual members of the LSNA who protested human rights abuses by the NLC. During this period the official body of university teachers, University Teachers Association of Ghana (UTAG), confined itself to its trade union functions.

5.3.1.3 The LSNA made a “vow” to the nation that it was resolved “to give loyal support to the NLC” in its drive to consolidate freedom and democracy in the country. Though the LSNA was critical of certain NLC policies, its avowed opposition to the CPP compromised its ability to protest at the serious infringements on the human rights of CPP officials and activists.

5.3.1.4 Public opinion, even of enlightened persons, demanded punishment for the corrupt and “bad CPP officials”. These views supported the detention of CPP activists and functionaries, because such detentions were deemed to be necessary for the protection of society. There was also support for the confiscation of their properties allegedly acquired by corrupt means, in order that they would not be able to buy their way back into political power. The LSNA, as other intellectuals in the country, mounted open opposition to the NLC's policy of not seeking vengeance, and pacifying the nation in order to heal its wounds and unite it. Indeed, the former President of the GBA Victor Owusu, was the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice, when these laws were passed.

5.4 1ST OCTOBER, 1969 – 12TH JANUARY, 1972: THE SECOND REPUBLIC – THE PROGRESS PARTY (PP) GOVERNMENT

5.4.1 There was no appreciable change in the activities of professional associations, although more and more groups began to initiate moves to organize themselves. Politics and issues of governance were still seen as the preserve of those within the professional classes, who had political ambitions.

13TH JANUARY, 1972 – 3RD JUNE, 1979: THE NATIONAL REDEMPTION COUNCIL (NRC)/ SUPREME MILITARY COUNCIL (SMC) I & II

5.5 The NRC and SMC I

5.5.1 Involvement Of Professional Associations In Politics

5.5.1.1 The direct involvement of professional bodies in Ghanaian politics can be dated to the 1970s. In the 1970s, their engagement in politics became pronounced when the economy of the country began to show signs of collapse, as a result of misrule and mismanagement of the military rulers. The return of the country to constitutional or civilian rule became the dominant objective, obscuring any other concerns. Before this time, involvement in Ghanaian politics had been the province of individuals (professional or not) and private (non-professional) associations, who would comment on human rights issues selectively and periodically. In general the professional groups, whose members constituted the cream of Ghanaian society, showed the same attribute as the general population, in terms of the lack of appreciation of the intrinsic value of human rights, and of the need for commitment to defend and promote the enjoyment of human rights for all persons.

5.5.2 The Birth Of The Association Of Recognised Professional Bodies (ARPB)

5.5.2.1 In 1977, SMC I regime, under Gen Acheampong, came under strong pressure to return the country to constitutional rule, and Gen Acheampong then introduced the concept of Union Government (Unigov) to which the professional associations took great exception. The Unigov idea was one in which the country was to be governed by representatives of the civilian population, the military and police. The professional associations came together to form the ARPB. The ARPB was formally incorporated on 20th May, 1981, although it had existed and functioned in the political arena since its birth in 1977.

5.5.3 ARPB Begins To Oppose The Government

5.5.3.1 In June, 1977, the ARPB called on the government to resign and hand over power to an interim body to usher the country to a civilian rule, otherwise its members would resort to a strike action. On 4th July, 1977, the Ghanaian Times in its editorial comment appealed to the GMA to rescind its decision to embark on a strike action:

we had had the occasion to invite the ordinary people of this country to fight against and not to pander to the dangerous attempts by the Professionals to return this country to a class struggle. We now appeal to the Ghana Medical Association not to allow other professionals to hide behind the value of the doctor's service to the society to introduce politics into medical practice.

5.5.3.2 Despite the hostility to the ARPB inherent in the appeal, members of the ARPB embarked on a nationwide withdrawal of services in protest against an inefficient and corrupt government on Monday, 6th July, 1977. The strikers called on the SMC Government to step down and until it did so, their services were to remain withdrawn. On the first day of the strike action, Gen Acheampong repealed the Professional Bodies Registration Decree, 1973 (NRCD 143), froze their assets and bank accounts under Professional Bodies Registration (Repeal) Decree, 1977 (SMCD 103), and put out a public statement to that effect.

5.5.3.3 Prior to the repeal of the Professional Bodies Decree, there was a call by the Ashanti Youth Association (AYA) to repeal the Decree in June 1977. The AYA called on the SMC I Government to widen the scope of the Decree banning political parties to make it unlawful for one professional body to consult, discuss or act in concert with any other professional body, on political issues. In a statement signed by M T K Manu, the secretary, he contended that such measures had become necessary in view of the fact that some professional bodies had demonstrated clearly that they intended to rally together with a view to creating “monolithic professional bodies association” for the purpose of embarking on “general civil disobedience and other notorious political activities.” The newspapers published reports of comments from the general public that were critical of the ARPB, as well as events that showed that some professionals had not joined in the strike.

5.5.4 The ARPB And The Unigov Campaign

5.5.4.1 On 12th October, 1977, the ARPB organized a seminar on the concept of Unigov at the Accra Community Centre. This seminar was broken up by government-sponsored thugs and many persons were assaulted. A Decree, the Union Government (Civil Proceedings) Decree, 1977 (SMCD 139), was passed to protect those who were involved in the assaults. It also prohibited any court from entertaining any civil action against anyone preaching or propagating the concept of Unigov, or for participating in, or attending any debate or discussion of the proposal of Unigov.

5.5.4.2 In 1977, in response to the campaign by the ARPB alleging corruption on the part of the SMC, the Prohibition of Rumours Decree, 1977 (SMCD 92) was passed. This decree provided as follows:

Any person who by print, writing, painting or word of mouth, publishes or reproduces any statement, rumour or report which is false or likely to disturb the public peace or to cause disaffection against the SMC or NRC among the public or among members of the Armed Forces or of the Police Force shall be guilty of an offence.

5.5.4.3 On 5th March, 1977, the Ghanaian Times wrote a scathing editorial, entitled: “The Korle-Bu Professors”, castigating the doctors for believing that they could hold the nation to ransom. On 9th July, 1977, armed soldiers actually stormed the Korle Bu Teaching Hospital in a convoy of trucks and forcibly ejected doctors and their families from their homes. Many were physically assaulted. Some sustained serious injuries while soldiers burnt cars and other properties belonging to the doctors. Other members of the ARPB were harassed, trailed by security forces, and their telephones tapped.

5.5.4.4 Accusing some of the professionals of being agents of foreign powers, the government declared:

... the Supreme Military Council is aware of the activities of some nation wreckers who are doing everything to bring confusion and unrest to our beloved nation. Within the past few weeks, some serious political developments have taken place in our country, which ought to be fully made known to you. The government became aware of the fact that some foreign powers, for reasons known to it, had funnelled huge sums of money to some irresponsible, over-ambitious, disgruntled and unpatriotic power seeking Ghanaians to be used to overthrow the government of the Supreme Military Council and to replace it with its lackeys. In pursuance of this objective, these same persons, using the masks of some lecturers of the nation's universities arrogated to themselves the role of the mouthpiece of the people to dictate terms to the government in the most arrogant and peremptory language.

5.5.4.5 The ARPB later rescinded its decision and resumed work after receiving assurances from the government, giving a guarantee of protection from victimization and molestation of any of the members of the association who might have withheld their services. Many of the most eminent public figures had teamed up with the ARPB, the People's Movement for Freedom and Justice (PMFJ) and the Front for the Prevention of Dictatorship in order to oppose the Unigov proposal, which would have given the military a permanent stake in government.

5.5.4.6 In the crucial referendum of 30th March, 1978, Gen Acheampong was effectively humiliated, although the results that were announced after the Electoral Commissioner had been chased out of his office, indicated that Unigov had received massive endorsement by the citizenry. The results that were announced, did not reflect the real state of affairs, and agitations continued until, four months later, he was ousted in a "palace coup".

5.6 SMC II

5.6.1 On 5th July, 1978, Gen Acheampong was removed from power by his own colleagues on the SMC. He was replaced by General Frederick William Kwasi Akuffo as Chairman of SMC II and Head of State. The SMC II detained Gen Acheampong and also stripped him of his military rank and entitlements, declaring that he had now become a mere "Mr" Acheampong. He was also confined to his hometown, Trabuom in the Ashanti Region.

5.6.2 The announcement declaring Gen Acheampong as "Mr. Acheampong", created strong resentment within civil society. Many people felt that it reflected the lack of respect that the military had for civilians, such that a penalty and a mark of disgrace, was to be a "mere 'Mr.'"

5.6.3 The ARPB issued a statement in which it urged the government to prefer formal charges against "Mr" Acheampong and that he should be put before court without delay. The association also complained, that merely stripping "Mr." Acheampong of the honours he bestowed on himself, and depriving him of his pension rights, were not enough punishment for the gross mismanagement that had taken place under his leadership. The government did nothing about this, until it was itself overthrown on 4th June, 1979.

5.6.4 The ARPB renewed its appeal to the government to restore the Professional Bodies Registration Decree, which was repealed by “Mr”. Acheampong. Consequently, the assets and bank accounts of the ARPB were defrozen by the Professional Bodies Registration (Repeal) (Amendment) Decree, 1978 (SMCD 171).

5.6.5 After some initial procrastination, the SMC set in motion a programme for a full return to civilian rule when the ARPB protested it’s concept of Transitional Interim National Government, arguing that it was just like the Unigov concept that they had opposed. Eventually, the government gave in, and constituted a Constituent Assembly, to draft a new Constitution for Ghana.

5.7 4TH JUNE, 1979 – 23RD SEPTEMBER, 1979: ARMED FORCES REVOLUTIONARY COUNCIL (AFRC)

5.7.1 By 4th June, 1979, when the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council (AFRC) assumed power, a transitional programme to restore constitutional rule in Ghana by the middle of July, 1979 had already been agreed by various political party leaders and the SMC II government, and even, elections had been slated for 18th June, 1979. From the standpoint of the political elite therefore, the coming of the AFRC was an unnecessary interruption of a process that they had already started. Despite initial fears, a sigh of relief greeted the decision of the AFRC to honour the transitional arrangements already put in place.

5.7.2 The Ghanaian establishment was virtually oblivious to the tectonic shift that was taking place beneath its feet. One reason was that the successful campaign to drive the military from office actually appeared to vindicate ARPB leadership position. The ARPB did not, as a body, lend its support to the AFRC, although some of the members of the individual professional bodies participated actively in the governance activities of the AFRC.

5.7.3 During the June-September, 1979, period when the AFRC was in power, a number of atrocities were committed. In a meeting that took place between the political party leaders and the AFRC, the politicians secured from the AFRC a firm promise to continue with the transitional programme to democratic rule, but nothing was said about the atrocities then taking place.

5.7.4 However, some political leaders, some workers groups and university students pledged open support, justified the “house-cleaning” exercise by the AFRC government, and called for its extension to other social sectors. However, there is no indication that the ARPB took a stand on any of the issues at stake.

5.7.5 In fact, what seemed to have happened during the AFRC period, was that the regime had support mostly from students and some members of the general public. From all over the country, individuals issued statements appealing to the general public to support the Revolution. Many members of the ARPB were under fire, as they tended to be in senior positions in the public service. Indeed, there was a spate of resignations which caused the AFRC to issue a warning, and to insist that all letters of resignation were to be channelled through the AFRC for approval to be given, before the resignation would be accepted.

5.7.6 When the AFRC government executed the former Heads of State and a number of Senior Military Officers, the Daily Graphic called it “a significant milestone”. There were no public protests from the ARPB, or any of its constituent bodies, except a statement issued by a group that called itself ‘Society for National Welfare’. The Society had issued a statement urging justice, fair play and the rule of law in the government’s effort to punish corrupt persons. In that statement, the Society also urged the AFRC not to abort the democratic process.

5.7.7 The AFRC government seized the assets of a large number of people; private houses were demolished, and special military tribunals were set up to try people alleged to have committed various crimes. Public opinion regarded the actions of the AFRC, as retribution for bad and corrupt leadership, and so tacitly supported them.

5.7.8 The short AFRC tenure graphically illustrated this lack of human rights culture that would move individuals and groups to struggle in defence of human rights. In other instances, the elites led the entire country to condone human rights violations. The leaders of the registered political parties, then engaged in electoral contest for power, were seemingly concerned more about securing the transition programme so that power would be transferred to one of them. The widespread human rights abuses that were committed by the AFRC appeared not to be their primary concern, until after the first round of the elections, when the top five political parties issued a joint statement expressing concern about the executions. They also urged the government to uphold the rule of law in all cases where a crime was alleged to have been committed.

5.8 24TH SEPTEMBER, 1979 – 30TH DECEMBER, 1981
THE THIRD REPUBLIC PEOPLE’S NATIONAL PARTY
GOVERNMENT (PNP)

5.8.1 The ARPB was functioning at a low level on account of the fact that the 1969 Constitution appeared to provide answers to the problems of governance to which it had committed itself. However, it continued to give advice on technical matters to the government. For instance, in 1980, it sent a memo to the Vice-President on the food situation in the country, and recommended action to be taken to address same.

5.8.2 On 20th May, ARPB Executive Council met with the Council of State on the security situation in the country. At this meeting, it advised the government on its handling of the Transitional Provisions as well as its attitude to the former Chairman of AFRC, advising the government to stop the “attempts to give Flt Lt Rawlings a bad name and allow him to settle down quietly into civilian life”.

5.9 31ST DECEMBER, 1981 – 6TH JANUARY, 1993:
THE PROVISIONAL NATIONAL DEFENCE COUNCIL (PNDC)

5.9.1 The Provisional National Defence Council (PNDC) came to power on 31st December, 1981, after a coup d'état led by Flt Lt Jerry John Rawlings, who became Chairman of PNDC and Head of State. There were human rights abuses during the PNDC era. People were assaulted, brutalized, maimed, imprisoned, abducted and killed. Others had their properties seized, vandalized or confiscated. In fact the PNDC period was a period of lawlessness, when the rule of law had completely broken down in the Ghanaian society, and citizens' rights, freedom and liberties were thus taken away from them.

5.9.2 Under the PNDC, when some of the most heinous crimes were committed against fellow Ghanaians, the lack of a culture of human rights struggle, became very obvious. In 1982, resistance to the PNDC by the GBA and ARPB was driven as much by the demand for the restoration of constitutional rule, as by a commitment to defend human rights, although the struggle was not couched in human rights language. Gross human rights violations took place, and were rampant. The murder of the three High Court Judges and a retired Army Officer, shook the rank and file of Ghanaian citizenry, as much because of the gruesome nature of the killings, as by the fact that Ghanaians deeply valued the sanctity of life. However, those horrendous acts could not ignite a movement to stop further human rights abuses, even though the protests and condemnations by the ARPB, religious and other civic bodies were loud and consistent.

5.9.3 ARPB's Struggles With The PNDC

5.9.3.1 The ARPB began its struggle against the PNDC soon after it came to power. It began to issue statements, critical of various government policies which it felt to be against the interests of the Ghanaian public. On 21st July, 1982, the ARPB held a press conference at which it read a resolution which, among other things, urged the PNDC to hand over power to a "Government of National Unity", while making arrangements to return the country to a constitutionally elected government by 1983. On the state of the nation, the ARPB criticized the PNDC Government on the murder of the three High Court Judges and a retired Army Officer in the following words:

We wish to express our revulsion at the callous manner in which three eminent High Court Judges and a retired Army Officer were abducted from their houses on the night of the 30th of June 1982 and murdered and the attempt made to obliterate the evidence by burning their bodies.

Since the 31st December 1981, the law of the jungle has taken over a once decent and law abiding people of Ghana. Law and order has broken down and there is callous disregard for Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms.

5.9.3.2 The ARPB also called for a lifting of the curfew, because it had become a licence for killings and robbery, and condemned the destruction of the Army hierarchical structure by the introduction of the Defence Committee System into the Ghana Armed Forces. This criticism was promptly denounced by the Daily Graphic, which lambasted the ARPB for those views. The June Fourth Movement (JFM) also condemned the statement as “waging a campaign against the democratic gains that the other ranks have acquired through the PDCs”. The JFM also described the statement as “insulting to the workers of Ghana who are striving to organise themselves to effectively participate in the decision-making process of the country.” This statement elicited a comment from a columnist, perhaps conscious of the futility of press statements to restrain a military government:

This brings to mind a similar demand made of another military regime some five years ago by the same body. In 1977, the military regime “did not mind” the professionals, and there is little chance that the PNDC will hand over just because the professionals say so.

5.9.3.3 In reaction to the demand by the GBA and ARPB for the PNDC Government to hand over power in September, 1983, two groups, the People’s Revolutionary League of Ghana (PRLG) and the JFM issued statements condemning them. The statements were signed by T. Kodjo Ababio Nubuor, the General Secretary of PRLG and Kwasi Adu, President of JFM, accusing the two associations and The Echo newspaper, of making efforts to negate the good intentions of the people’s revolution. The statements further described the call to hand over power as:

one more attempt at the philosophy of restorationism, and they fell neatly into the framework of a well-thought out master plan, and an attempt to overthrow the revolution and restore the anti-people old order.

The most casual study of the demands made by the professionals point out clearly that they are underscored by a philosophy of restoration. We remember that well before the murder of the judges and the retired major, the professionals wrote various articles in “The Echo” claiming that certain revolutionary forces had planned to commit assassination of some people without ever indicating any concrete evidence to support their claims.

5.9.3.4 Following this statement, there was a workers’ demonstration against the ARPB, whose members were described by the demonstrators as “Selfish yet vocal minority who call themselves men of distinction.” Other demonstrations in other parts of the country followed, and soon thereafter, The Echo was suspended from publication. A prominent engineer who was a PNDC appointee, Professor Mawusi Dake, criticized the ARPB in a feature article in the Ghanaian Times accusing the professionals of wanting to further their own political ambitions by calling for a government of National Unity

The professional bodies are asking for a government of national unity, which will take four years to restore the old institutions. But the same intelligent and supposedly efficient people, who obviously will man the government of national unity, have expected the PNDC, which is committed to building new structures in the face of an inherited bankrupt economy to have realized its goal in fifteen months.

Meanwhile, Dake's own GhiE colleagues in the ARPB had been arrested and detained by the new government.

5.9.3.5 On 28th July, 1982, the ARPB held a funeral service at the Supreme Court Buildings, at which the Chief Justice was present. The ARPB issued a list of over 200 names of individuals who had, by that date, been killed by soldiers, and for which acts no prosecution had taken place, or was likely to take place. The effort was a monumental one, as it covered killings that had occurred, region by region. This effort has left a historical record of those who were killed in those heady days of lawlessness.

5.9.3.6 In April, 1983, the PNDC amended its 1981 Proclamation with PNDC Law 42. The ARPB responded to its provisions by pointing out that it "contains essential elements and highlights the point of arbitrariness and dictatorship which have never seen a parallel in the 26-year history of Ghana". The statement further questioned why Ghanaians had not been consulted about the law and queried: "Were Ghanaians not promised that this was the time for them to be involved in the decision-making process. Is this the substitute for the Parliament which the people of Ghana elected their representatives to?" These activities did not please the government and it was not long before reprisals followed.

5.9.3.7 On 12th May, 1983, the ARPB issued a statement alleging that one of the Food and Drugs Aid parcels sent from Libya to Ghana, and sent to Cape Coast from the Tema Central Medical Stores, was found to contain arms, and not drugs. This allegation was promptly denied by a doctor, Dr. Edwin O. Quaynor, Central Regional Medical Officer of Health. Dr. Quaynor stated categorically "there is no truth in the allegation by the Professional Bodies Association".

5.9.3.8 Following a National Union of Ghana Students (NUGS) Congress which he had addressed in May, 1983, the President of ARPB, Sam Okudzeto, was put before the Citizens' Vetting Committee (CVC) to be vetted. He was subsequently ridiculed in the press for responses he gave when being interrogated by that body. Later he was arrested on 26th June, 1983, and detained without charges, from that date, to May, 1984. In July, 1985, he was arrested again and detained for about six months, and then released without charge.

5.9.3.9 In May, 1983, an attempt was made to arrest and prosecute JAN Attoh and HDL Yartey, the Vice President and the Honorary Secretary of the ARPB respectively, for sedition. They were alleged to have printed ARPB material that was seditious, ie material that tended to put the government into disrepute, or that was critical of the PNDC's policies. Fearing for his life, Attoh fled Ghana in May, 1983, and never returned. The two men were prosecuted and convicted. Yartey, who had been in detention until the day the judgment was delivered, was discharged. However, Attoh, who had been tried in Absentia, was sentenced to ten month's imprisonment. The tribunal ordered that his mini-bus, on which some of the material had been found, be confiscated to the State, for use by the National Mobilisation Committee.

5.9.4 The ARPB Loses Steam

5.9.4.1 The ill-treatment of the leaders of the ARPB had an impact on the life of the ARPB. In January, 1990, its President, Sam Okudzeto, made a report to his mother-association, the GBA, that the ARPB existed only in name. He blamed the ARPB's moribund state on the suffering that the leaders had undergone at the hands of the government. Although the GBA encouraged him to try and revive the meetings of the ARPB, it had lost the will to fight and had been intimidated into silence.

5.9.4.2 In 1991, the ARPB was able to revive itself and held a symposium on the Draft 1992 Constitution. However, it was clear that the ARPB had lost steam. It did not feature on the list of bodies allocated places on the Consultative Assembly, although each of its constituent groups had representation.

5.9.5 Conclusion

5.9.5.1 The professionals have asserted a level of influence over national affairs which is generally far more profound than their limited numbers might suggest. The clout of the GBA and the ARPB has always been much greater than that of the business associations. In that sense, the professionals have functioned as the political vanguard of the dominant class in Ghana.

PART II

CIVIL SOCIETY GROUPS

5.10 RE-INDEPENDENCE

5.10.1 Introduction

5.10.1.1 The formation of civil society groups with political orientation began to be a feature of the national landscape as a result of the introduction of the modern political economy, the subsequent urbanization and post World War II social developments that released young people from traditional control without putting in place any measure to include them in the new political arrangements.

THE FORMATION OF POLITICAL PARTIES IN THE GOLD COAST

5.10.2 The United Gold Coast Convention (UGCC)

5.10.2.1 At the end of the Second World War, the war veterans who had gone to fight in other lands for freedom, on behalf of the colonial power returned home with ideas about the quality of life that they ought to have. However, they were not trained in civil life with appropriate income-earning and marketable skills to achieve that standard, nor were they given any financial package to ease their transition into civil life. Their return, coupled with the rapid urbanisation and expansion of social amenities and infrastructure in the urban areas, produced a class of politically-conscious young men and women who began to appreciate the anti-colonial posture of the intelligentsia. It was in the midst of all this social ferment that the first mass party, the United Gold Coast Convention (UGCC), was formed at Saltpond in August, 1947, under the chairmanship and financial sponsorship of George Grant, better known as Paa Grant, a wealthy Nzima businessman.

5.10.2.2 With its slogan of “Self-Government within the shortest possible time”, the UGCC quickly attracted a large following, particularly among the educated persons, chiefs and farmers. The speed with which the party gained numbers made its proper organization somewhat difficult for the leaders who were mostly professionals and therefore only part-time politicians. A member of the UGCC Executive, Ernest Ako Adjei, proposed the employment of an energetic young man he had met in England, Kwame Nkrumah, as General Secretary, to do the work of political mobilization full time. Paa Grant paid the £100 passage for the return of Nkrumah to the Gold Coast.

5.10.2.3 The young Nkrumah arrived at the end of 1947, and soon got down to work, establishing structures through which the party could function effectively. In February, 1948, barely two months after he took office, Kwame Nkrumah and five leaders of the UGCC – Edward Akufo-Addo, Emmanuel Obetsebi Lamprey, William Ofori-Atta, Ernest Ako Adjei and Dr. Joseph Boakye Danquah - were arrested because they were blamed for the rioting and looting that occurred as a result of the killing of some ex-servicemen who had gone on a protest march.

5.10.2.4 The ex-servicemen had gone on the march to protest against high prices of goods and general hardship in their living conditions, exacerbated by the failure of the British Government to honour promises made to them on their demobilization benefits. Whilst on the march, they decided to change course and march to the Osu Christiansborg Castle, the seat of government, instead of remaining on the route for which official approval had previously been obtained. At the Osu crossroads, they were fired on when they would not heed an order to halt. Three ex-servicemen, Sergeant Adjetei, Corporal Attipoe and Private Odartey Lamprey, were killed and many others injured. This incident sparked off riots and looting of European and Syrian/Lebanese owned stores in many of the towns in the Gold Coast. By the end of the day, the death toll had reached 29 with 237 injured and property damage to the tune of £2,000,000 had occurred.

5.10.2.5 Although it was not the UGCC that had organized the march, political responsibility for what had happened was laid at the door of the party. The six leaders of the UGCC, who were arrested, were later affectionately named “The Big Six”. They became national heroes overnight as news of their arrest spread around the country. They were sent to prisons across the country.

5.10.2.6 After the release of the ‘Big Six’, Nkrumah set out to organize in earnest. He linked up with political youth groups and formed the Committee on Youth Organisation (CYO). He also established a newspaper, the Evening News, which he used to great advantage. Conflict over strategy soon developed between him and other leaders of the UGCC. They began to feel that Nkrumah was promoting himself and his personal agenda at the expense of the party that employed him, and he began to feel that they were not ready for his style of organization.

5.10.2.7 A break became inevitable, and on 12th June, 1949, Nkrumah broke away from the UGCC and formed the Convention People's Party (CPP) at Saltpond, taking with him most of the young people he had so successfully mobilised. The period thereafter heralded the nurturing of bad blood between the leaders of the two parties. Attacks in the Evening News on the leaders of the UGCC, especially on Dr. Danquah, as well as a whispering campaign of bribe-taking and allegations of other dubious activities made against the leadership of the UGCC, did a lot to embitter the relationships.

5.10.3 The Convention People's Party (CPP)

5.10.3.1 The CPP under the leadership of Nkrumah grew from strength to strength. During the time when he ran the UGCC, he discovered some very energetic and good organizers who left with him to form the new party. Komla Agbeli Gbedemah and Kojo Botsio were two of these young men who came to be recognized for their organizational abilities as they recruited many other young people to join the fold. Indeed the CPP was virtually a youth movement at its inception, and it had the energy and strategy to match.

5.10.3.2 It adopted a slogan of "Self-Government Now" ("S.G. Now") and this resonated with the youth. In January, 1950, the CPP organized an action of civil disobedience termed 'Positive Action', in order to compel the colonial government to grant immediate self-government. Although planned as a non-violent action, it eventually turned violent and the leadership of the CPP was arrested and imprisoned.

5.10.3.3 Whilst in prison, Nkrumah's party won a majority of seats in the 1951 elections held under the 1951 Constitution (Coussey Constitution). Being the leader of the party that had won majority seats in the elections, he was released from prison to head the government under the title of "Leader of Government Business". The CPP successfully maintained its leadership in the politics of the country, winning majority votes in both the 1954 and 1956 Elections. Ghana attained Independence on 6th March, 1957, under its leadership, after a bitter struggle with some of its opponents.

5.10.3.4 The part played by the youth in the independence movement and the place of the youth in the formation of the CPP, put the youth at the centre of the socio-political arrangements of the country after Independence. A start was made to organize the youth soon after Independence with the formation of the CPP Youth League which was made up of young people with affiliation to the CPP. It functioned as the youth wing of the CPP and it had the same aims as the mother-party. However, it was formally abolished in 1959.

5.10.4 The National Liberation Movement (NLM)

5.10.4.1 In 1954, the National Liberation Movement (NLM) was born. The immediate cause was the agitation for higher prices for cocoa and so it gained popularity in the Ashanti, Akyem Abuakwa and the Krobo areas which had large tracts of cocoa farms. The remote cause was however, the marginalisation of the traditional ruling classes as a result of the rise of the CPP. The chiefs were also suspicious of the centralist policies of the CPP and feared marginalisation in the governance of the country.

5.10.4.2 The NLM's Ashanti base and the obvious support it enjoyed from the Asantehene as well as the fact that its chairman was the senior linguist of the Asantehene, Baffour Osei Akoto, brought to the fore the fear of domination that had existed between Ashanti and the Colony since Ashanti became a part of the Gold Coast. The NLM's proposal of a federal form of government was a reaction to the highly centralized form of government that they feared would lead to dictatorship from Accra.

5.10.4.3 The pitched battles that were fought in Kumasi between the NLM and the CPP and the political murders that were committed by both sides, showed the ugly face of partisan politics. The NLM with its Action Troopers and the CPP with its Action Groupers so terrorised residents of Kumasi that the political scars created took a long time to disappear, and led to many people being unwilling to be associated with partisan politics.

5.10.4.4 By the time the NLM problem was resolved by the amendment of the proposed Independence Constitution to provide for Regional Assemblies, a lot of harm had been done. There was a great deal of bad blood between adherents of the NLM and the CPP especially because many of the NLM leaders were also dissident CPP members; and thus there were personal animosities between the leadership of the two parties.

5.10.5 The Ghana Congress Party (GCP)

5.10.5.1 The remnants of the UGCC suffered other crises as most of its youth had broken away to join the CPP. In 1951, it merged with another party, the National Democratic Party, formed under the leadership of Nii Amaah Ollennu, a barrister. The merged parties came to be known as the Ghana Congress Party with Saki Scheck as the General Secretary.

5.10.5.2 The Ghana Congress Party was bedevilled by a leadership struggle between Nii Amaah Ollennu and Dr. Danquah. Ollennu eventually left politics and joined the Bench. The next stage of the leadership struggle took place between Dr. Kofi Abrefa Busia and Emmanuel Obetsebi-Lamphey. Eventually the party broke up into two when Obetsebi-Lamphey broke away and formed the Nationalist Party. This break greatly reduced the strength of the GCP. In the 1954 Elections Dr. Busia was the only one to win a seat on the ticket of the GCP. The Nationalist Party achieved little prominence as it never really attracted a following outside Accra.

5.10.6 Togoland Congress Party (TC)

5.10.6.1 This party was formed under the leadership of SG Antor, Kojo Ayeke and Emmanuel Dumoga, to champion the cause of separation of the British Trust Territory of Togoland, from the Gold Coast. The basis of this desire for separation lay in the arrangements that were made for German Colonies under the Treaty of Versailles, following the defeat of Germany in the First World War. The German colony of Togoland was split into two and administered under the Mandate of the League of Nations, the immediate predecessor body to the United Nations Organisation, by Britain and France.

5.10.6.2 The ‘Mandated Territories’ (as they came to be known) contained ethnic groups, such as the Ewe, Dagomba, Konkomba, etc., that had been split up by the administrative arrangements of the two powers. When the United Nations Organisation was born, the mandate was changed into a Trust, and therefore the territories became ‘Trust Territories’ and continued to be administered as separate entities. In the mean time, the Ewe people of the southern part of the Trust Territories had, since the end of the Second World War, been campaigning for the two Trust Territories of Britain and France respectively, to merge as one independent country, in order to re-unite the Ewe peoples who had been split up by the Mandate of the League of Nations. They feared that the split would become permanent, should separate arrangements be made for the two Trust Territories.

5.10.6.3 Agitation picked up pace. Leading to the birth of the Togoland Congress when, in 1954, the British Government informed the United Nations that it would not be in a position to administer the Trust Territory after the Gold Coast gained Independence. Ewe nationalists in Trans-Volta Togoland (TVT) as the British Trust Territory was known, believed that their chances of re-unification with their kith and kin would be destroyed, if the British Trust Territory integrated with the Gold Coast upon its Independence, as the French were likely to annex the French-speaking part, leading to a permanent split of the ethnic group. This gave them a reason for wanting the TVT to remain separate, until a decision could be taken about the French portion.

5.10.6.4 The issue was made somewhat more complicated by the fact that the peoples of the northern TVT, preferred integration with the Gold Coast so that they could be with their kith and kin as the split had had tragic results for some of the kingdoms. For instance, the capital of the kingdom of Dagbon, Yendi, was located in the Trust Territory whilst a part of it was in the British-held Northern Territories. Other groups also had blood ties with some of the peoples of the Northern Territories and also felt a closer affinity to them than to those of the northern French Trust Territory. These considerations led the General Assembly of the United Nations to decide in December, 1955, that the peoples of the Trust Territory should be given a chance in a plebiscite, to determine if they wished to be integrated with the Gold Coast upon its attainment of Independence, or to remain separate until a decision was taken in respect of the French-administered part.

5.10.6.5 The plebiscite was held on 9th May, 1956, amidst very vigorous campaigning by the Togoland Congress (or Ablorde group), for a “No to integration” vote. Consequently, the plebiscite registered a 55% majority vote in favour of separation in the South. However, the Northern TVT voted massively in favour of integration, and so the ‘Yes to integration' vote, won by an overall majority of 58%, counting the two parts of the TVT as one whole.

5.10.6.6 The separatists were dissatisfied with the result of the plebiscite and believed that the decision in favour of integration had been procured by manipulation by the CPP. They protested against the vote, and in 1957, there were many disturbances. Efforts to suppress these agitations led to repression of those political activists who refused to accept integration. Many were arrested and detained, and others fled into exile in Togo, and remained there until 1966.

5.10.6.7 Following the passage of the Avoidance of Discrimination Act, 1957 (CA 38), the Togoland Congress joined up with the other opposition groups to become the United Party.

5.10.7 Northern Peoples' Party (NPP)

5.10.7.1 Chief Simon Diedong Dombo and other educated persons from the Northern Territories formed the Northern Peoples' Party (NPP) in 1954. This Party quickly attracted a large following from among the traditional rulers, and it won twelve seats in the 1954 elections. Considering that it had not been formed for very long before the elections took place, it was a remarkable feat. It also showed how attached the people of the North were to their traditional leaders.

5.10.8 The Anlo Youth Organisation

5.10.8.1 The Anlo Youth Organisation was formed by Modesto Apaloo. It operated in the south-eastern corner of the Gold Coast where the Anlo ethnic group is located. It also won one seat in the 1954 elections.

5.10.9 The Moslem Association Party (MAP)

5.10.9.1 The Moslem Association Party was an Islam-based party. Its leadership and followers were drawn largely from the immigrant group of Muslims from neighbouring West African countries. The ranks of its leadership were decimated by a policy of deportations soon after Independence. What was left of it joined up with other political parties and groups to form the United Party.

5.10.10 Ga Shifimo Kpee (Ga Standfast Association)

5.10.10.1 This movement was born as a result of the pressures that urbanization put on lands in Accra in the post- World War II years. These years also coincided with the period when lands were being compulsorily acquired for national projects and when private developers were also acquiring large tracts of land from the Ga Chiefs for private purposes. This created a feeling that Gas were being pushed off their ancestral lands by strangers.

An Act to prohibit organizations using or engaging in tribal, regional, racial and religious propaganda to the detriment of any community, or securing the election of persons on account of their tribal, regional or religious affiliations and for other purpose connected therewith.

5.11.1.2 The formulation of the provisions immediately made it illegal to form a political party with the words “Ga”, “Anlo”, “Northern people”, “Togoland” and “Moslem”, since they referred to “tribe”, “region” or “religion”. The political groups that had participated in the elections and even won seats, found that their continued existence had been rendered illegal. Consequently, in early 1958, at risk of being declared “prohibited organizations” and wound up under the supervision of the High Court, they all came together as one Party, the UP, since they were all in opposition to the CPP. These groups, in the main, were: the National Liberation Movement (NLM); Moslem Association Party (MAP); Northern Peoples’ Party (NPP); Togoland Congress; Anlo Youth Association; and Ga Shifimo Kpee.

5.11.1.3 In November, 1958, 43 of its members, including the entire executive of the Accra branch of the party, still described as members of “Ga Shifimo Kpee”, were arrested, and detained under the Preventive Detention Act of 1958. Some of the persons detained were very young people under 20 years of age and indeed, two of them, Yartey Annan and Oti Ankrah, were only 14 years and 16 years old respectively. They remained in detention until the 1966 overthrow of the CPP Government when they were released. In Ashanti, Volta Region and in Northern Region, similar arrests of activists were made. Some were even arrested and detained for booing at the President whilst he was travelling through their village. By 1962, the leader of the party, Dr. Kofi Abrefa Busia, had fled into exile, and of the 32 Members of Parliament of the UP, three were in detention, one had gone into exile, and twelve had crossed over to the Government-side, leaving only sixteen to sit on the Opposition Bench.

5.11.1.4 There were a number of bomb outrages in Accra, as well as assassination attempts on President, Nkrumah. These outrages caused great suffering, as there were many casualties. The UP was blamed for these outrages, and every such incident resulted in arrests of UP activists. There was a lot of political violence between the two main Parties – the UP and the CPP.

5.11.1.5 The UP, as a legal entity, ceased to exist when the country was declared a One-Party State, in 1964. In reality, the activists had suffered such harassment that the party was all but dead, since its activists were either in detention or in exile in the neighbouring countries.

5.11.2 The CPP

5.11.2.1 On 2nd April, 1960, at the Party Headquarters, Dr. Nkrumah, the Prime Minister, declared:

The Convention People's Party is a powerful force, more powerful indeed, than anything that has yet appeared in the history of Ghana. It is the uniting force that guides and pilots the nation and is the nerve centre of the positive operation in the struggle for Africa irredentism. Its supremacy cannot be challenged. The Convention People's Party is Ghana, and Ghana is the Convention People's Party.

With these views on the CPP, it did not take long for every attempt possible to be made, to actualize the statement that "Convention People's Party is Ghana, and Ghana is the Convention People's Party".

5.11.2.2 On 1st May, 1961, President Nkrumah informed the nation that he had taken over the post of General Secretary of the party, at the request of the Central Committee of the Party. He further announced that as from that date, Regional Commissioners would become the Regional Secretaries of the Party in their respective regions, whilst re-designating the Regional Secretaries of the Trades Union Congress (TUC), United Ghana Farmers' Council (UGFC), National Co-operative Council (NCC), National Council of Ghana Women (NCGW), as Assistant Regional Secretaries. Thus, the named organizations became merged into the party structure, and this was, in turn, merged with the government's structure.

5.11.2.3 In that speech, he outlined the duties and rights of members of the CPP as follows:

Duties of members:

1. To protect the solidarity and unity of the party at all times.
2. To pay dues regularly
3. To protect the good name of the party under all circumstances and to correct wrong views held against the party.
4. To carry out party decisions and directives to the best of his ability and to ensure that any disregard of such decisions or directives is promptly reported to the appropriate party authority.
5. To be the first to obey the laws of the country passed by the government.
6. To defend any action of the party or the government.
7. To try to understand all party government matters and to explain the same to the people.
8. To set an example by working hard, efficiently and honestly and by showing a keen sense of responsibility and duty.
9. To pursue a study of the principles of African Socialism and to endeavour to be guided in action by these [principles].
10. To guard jealously any secrets of the party and to maintain constant vigilance in this respect.
11. To criticize and accept criticism in good faith and spirit and to make frequent self-examination for correction, remembering that all criticism and correction should be made not to destroy, but to build.
12. To be faithful and loyal to the party always and to eschew all qualities of opportunism, nepotism, ostentation, vanity and self-seeking.

13. To remember that the party is supreme and to do everything within his power to uphold this supremacy.

The rights of members are as follows:

1. To take part in all party activities.
2. To attend meetings and freely express views on all matters in discussion, and to vote according to conviction.
3. To elect and be elected to party bodies.
4. To be present in person whenever decisions are taken regarding his activities or conduct.
5. To address any question or statement to any party body including the national executive and the central committee.
6. To appeal against any adverse decision against him from his branch party upwards to the central committee and to the leader of the party in person.
7. To appeal as a last resort to the national delegates' conference.

5.11.3 Ghana As One-Party State

5.11.3.1 In 1964, Ghana officially became a one-party state with the CPP as the national party. This was after a referendum had been held on 24th, 28th and 31st January 1964, to ask the people to approve that step and give the President power to dismiss judges. Following the results of the referendum, variously stated as 99.9 percent and 92.81 percent. The transformation of Ghana into a one-party state was born out of the feeling that the elimination of official opposition would make governance easier as there would be little opposition to government policies. It was also born out of the philosophy, then current, that the need to achieve economic and social rights for people in developing countries necessitated the deferment of enjoyment of civil and political rights. This philosophy, which had a respectable following, particularly in countries inclined towards socialism, suggested that the enjoyment of civil and political rights would be meaningful only if people were well-fed and had shelter as well as other basic necessities of life. Opposition could thus not be tolerated. According to Madam Regina Asamany, Deputy Minister for Labour and Social Welfare, the “No” voters during the referendum, were going to be “mercilessly crushed” because they “thought their display of selfishness and organized assassination could deter us from our progressive course have rather taught us a lesson to reinforce our determination and solidarity...”

5.11.3.2 In reality, Ghana became a de facto one-party state by the end of 1961, when the opposition bench had been virtually emptied by carpet-crossing in Parliament and detentions under the PDA. By the time the one-party status became a legal fact after the referendum of January, 1964, the reality had long been achieved. The farmers, workers and students who, within their unions could have mounted a viable opposition, had all been co-opted to become members of the CPP as the various unions became wings of the CPP. When President Nkrumah charged the students to ensure the “Cippification” of Ghana because “Ghana was the CPP and the CPP was Ghana”, it was clear that it was government policy to exclude all other political organizations or philosophies opposed to that of the CPP.

5.11.3.3 To make the point of the complete “cippification” of Ghana, the colours of the Ghana Flag: red, gold, green, with the Black Star in the middle of the gold band of the Ghana Flag, was changed to the CPP colours, of red, white (with the Black Star in the white band), and green.

5.11.3.4 The perversion of the electoral process, as evidenced by malpractices at many public elections, effectively closed the avenue for ensuring that the government could be compelled to change its style of governance.

5.11.3.5 The declaration of Dr. Nkrumah as the Life President of Ghana effectively put paid to any notions of competitive politics in the country. In 1965, when a date for elections was set down, no elections took place because all parliamentary candidates had been returned unopposed in the general elections. This was because there was a requirement that only candidates approved by the Central Committee would be permitted to compete for office. Since only one candidate per constituency was approved to stand in the elections by the Central Committee of the Party anyway, it was not surprising that all of them were returned unopposed.

5.11.3.6 This mode of giving prior approval to candidates before they could present themselves at elections undermined the notion of parliamentarians being representatives freely chosen by their constituencies to represent them. Effectively, the Members of Parliament were lame ducks from the start, since they were not going to be able to offer any criticism of government or government policy, even if the interests of the constituents demanded it. All these events created their own brand of problems and difficulties that left indelible scars on the national psyche.

5.11.3.7 Corruption began to rear its head early in the government, and President Nkrumah sought to deal with it, even if ineffectively. In May, 1961, he also announced the setting up of a commission to investigate ministers. Consequently on 28th September, 1961, he announced that he had asked six of his ministers to resign:

Komla Agbeli Gbedemah – Health
Ashford E Inkumsah – Interior
Kojo Botsio - Agriculture
Krobo Edusei – Transport
Emmanuel K Bensah – Works and Housing
C. de Graft Dickson – Defence

5.11.3.8 They were also ordered to surrender properties in excess of two houses with a combined value of £ 20, 000, two cars and plots of land valued at more than £500. Gbedemah and Botsio were subsequently expelled from the party on 23rd January 1962.

5.11.3.9 President Nkrumah wrote a fresh will dated 18th February, 1966, in which he willed all his property to the CPP. He also instructed his executors thus:

On my demise, [they shall] cause my body to be embalmed and preserved. But if this cannot be done for any reason then I prefer my body to be cremated and the ashes scattered throughout the African continent, in rivers and streams, deserts, savannas, etc and a few ashes placed in an urn and deposited at a place to be decided upon later. I am not godless but I request on my demise that no religious ceremony shall be performed at my funeral.

It is uncertain whether this will was changed, but it is clear that “Kwame Nkrumah of Africa” (as he described himself in the will), did not envisage a burial in his hometown. Indeed, his wishes for the disposal of his mortal remains as expressed in the 1966 will, were merely a repeat of like provisions in a previous will, dated 26th June, 1965.

5.11 24TH FEBRUARY, 1966 – 30TH SEPTEMBER, 1969: NATIONAL LIBERATION COUNCIL (NLC)

5.12.1 CPP

5.12.1.1 The End Of CPP

5.12.1.1.1 The NLC seized power on 24th February, 1966. Early on the morning of that day, an announcement on Radio Ghana was made by Col Emmanuel Kwasi Kotoka, leader of the troops that seized power, as follows:

Fellow citizens of Ghana, I have come to inform you that the Military in co-operation with the Ghana Police have taken over the government of Ghana today. The myth surrounding Nkrumah has been broken. Parliament is dissolved and Kwame Nkrumah is dismissed from office. All ministers are also dismissed; the Convention People’s Party is disbanded with effect from now. It will be illegal for any person to belong to it...

5.12.1.1.2 The NLC, which was formed under the chairmanship of newly-promoted Lieutenant-General Joseph A. Ankrah, began to dismantle the monolith that the CPP had become. One of the first legislative acts of the NLC was to formalize the dismissal of the President from office, the dismissal of all parliamentarians and the dissolution of Parliament, the banning of the CPP, the only political party at the time, and prohibition of membership of it. The original colours of the Ghana Flag of red, gold, green, with the Black Star in the middle of the gold band of the Ghana Flag, were restored.

5.12.1.1.3 The NLC passed the Protective Custody Decree, 1966 (NLCD 2), under which all ministers, parliamentarians, regional commissioners, district commissioners and senior functionaries of the CPP were detained without trial. The CPP Party and Ghana Young Pioneers’ paraphernalia were banned. Books and publications, related to Dr. Nkrumah and scientific socialism, as well as communist propaganda materials were burnt. Public exhibition of effigies of Dr. Nkrumah, as well as symbols of the CPP, were also prohibited. Persons found with these objects were molested by the security forces.

5.12.1.1.4 The rule of the NLC also saw the freezing of assets and bank accounts of CPP functionaries and CPP-related organisations. The Auditor-General was mandated to audit the accounts of the CPP and CPP-related organisations, and following his findings, the assets were confiscated to the state. Commissions of Enquiry were established to probe the assets of CPP functionaries and assets found to have been acquired by unlawful means were confiscated.

5.12.1.1.5 The NLC banned most of the leading members of the defunct CPP from contesting the 1969 elections. They were also banned from holding public office for ten years. This was applied to members of the CPP after their release from prison.

5.12.1.1.6 Another act of injustice was the enactment of legislation that imposed legal bans on CPP officials and activists for a period of ten years, without a possibility of anyone challenging the ban in a court of law. The NLC enacted two laws, Elections and Public Offices Disqualification Decree, 1968 (NLCD 223), and Elections and Public Offices Disqualification Decree, 1969 (NLCD 332), which disqualified 152 functionaries of the CPP from holding any public office, and disenfranchised them from exercising their democratic rights to choose their representatives.

5.12.1.1.7 This law, which deprived some Ghanaians of the fundamental right of citizenship, was considered justified by the elite of this country, hence its inclusion, even in the 1969 Constitution as article 71. Under this article, Komla Gbedemah was disqualified from taking his seat in the 1969 Parliament, after he had won an election.

5.12.1.1.8 The NLC enacted the Armed Forces Act, 1962 (Amendment) Decree, 1967 (NLCD 131), to enable it to set up military tribunals to try people, including the military, police personnel, and even civilians, charged with sedition. Conviction carried a maximum sentence of 25 years, and there was no right of appeal. It is a principle of the rule of law that a law must not be made retrospective, yet the NLC D 131 of 1967, which took retrospective effect from 24th February, 1966, came into force without public protest as to the unfairness of changing the legal entitlements of citizens, with retrospective effect.

5.12.1.1.9 On 1st October 1966, the NLC enacted the National Liberation Council (Prohibition of Rumours) Decree, 1966 (NLCD 92), and the Criminal Procedure Code (Amendment) Decree, 1966 (NLCD 93). The first dealt with rumour-mongering as a subversive act, while the second gave the police unlimited powers of detention. The oppressive nature of NLCD 93 compelled the Legon Society on National Affairs to describe it as “preventive detention without the Preventive Detention Act of 1958”. There were no other public protests and the law remained on the statute books for two years, before being repealed.

5.12.1.1.10 The NLC enacted the Kwame Nkrumah Property Decree, 1967 (NLCD 154), the Kwame Nkrumah Property Amendment Decree, 1967 (NLCD 180), and the Public Property (Protection) and Corrupt Practices (Prevention) Act, 1962 (Amendment) Decree, 1967 (NLCD 130), and made them retroactive, with from 1962, to cover acts committed in the A.G. Leventis case. By these laws the NLC Government seized the properties of CPP functionaries who were implicated in that case. In the case of Dr. Nkrumah, the properties seized by the State, included those of his wife, children and mother. There was no public protest against such seizure of property.

5.12.2.1 Reaction Of Civil Society

5.12.2.1.1 The CPP Government was generally regarded as dictatorial and corrupt. Therefore when the NLC overthrew it, Ghanaian opinion welcomed the NLC as liberators; their assumption of power, though unconstitutional, was seen as marking the birth of freedom and democracy. These feelings were not lessened by statements from former leading members of the banned CPP, as to the undemocratic nature of leadership within the party. Indeed, a former Minister, Kwaku Boateng, stated that they had all been reduced to 'gaping sychophants' in the affairs of governance. With such national disposition, public opinion welcomed the policies and actions of that government as a sense of liberation and freedom swept all across the country.

5.12.2.1.2 Many serious abuses were perpetrated against members of the CPP by both the government and society at large. CPP activists were arrested and detained. Officials of the party and its wings such as the Ghana Young Pioneer movement (GYP), suffered brutalities at the hands of their neighbours. Their properties were stolen or vandalized and their books and other movement-paraphernalia were set ablaze. The military, the police and prison officials subjected CPP functionaries to a great deal of ill-treatment. Only a few voices were raised in protest. For instance, whilst P.A.V. Ansah, a member of the LSNA, wrote in the Legon Observer decrying the "rough and ready" justice being meted out by military personnel in various parts of the country, others in the same medium were expressing views supportive of the ill-treatment, as their just deserts.

5.12.2.1.3 Public protests were non-existent even to such cruel acts as the public display accorded an aide of President Nkrumah, Boye Moses, who was captured and paraded in the streets of Accra in a metal cage. According to the Daily Graphic, the crowd hooted and shouted, "kill him", "He is now a monkey". This public reaction was not unusual, judging by the treatment to which suspected criminals were, and still are, subjected.

5.12.2.1.4 The public disposition towards a tendency to take advantage of the vulnerable, was affirmed many times when individuals and groups took advantage of the political situation to attack fellow citizens and/or their properties for their alleged association with the CPP Government.

5.12.3 The Abortive Coup Of 1967

5.12.3.1 Following the abortive coup on 17th April, 1967, and the killing of Lt-Gen Kotoka, his personal Orderly, Sgt Osei Grunshie, and two officers, Capt Cephas Y. Borkloe and Capt A. Avevor, the public was outraged. There was loud condemnation of the coup-makers. Many people gave money as donation to the family of Lt-Gen Kotoka, and people hailed the NLC when it decided to name the Accra International Airport after him.

5.12.3.2 The government also established a Trust Fund named the Kotoka Trust, to provide for the families of the fallen soldiers, and many public-spirited persons, as well as chiefs, paid money into the coffers of the Trust. For reasons that are not clear, Brig Afrifa was blamed for the coup attempt, with a whispering campaign that he master-minded the coup in order to become Head of State. This unsubstantiated allegation was to dog his steps in the years that followed, and is rumoured to be the basis for his execution in 1979.

5.12.3.3 A military tribunal tried and sentenced Lt Samuel B Arthur and Lt Moses Yeboah to death by firing squad, for their part in the coup; whilst the third Officer, 2nd Lt Osei-Poku was sentenced to 30 years imprisonment. The two condemned men were executed in public at 9.00 a.m. on 26th May, 1967, and a large crowd of people went to the spot, almost in a carnival mood, to watch the public execution.

5.12.3.4 Many other officers were sentenced to prison terms, whilst five officers and about 200 Other Ranks were placed in Protective Custody. Under about ten Protective Custody Decrees made that year, hundreds of people were put into custody on the accusation of jubilating upon hearing news of the coup, before it was foiled. The public played an active part in causing the arrests of the “jubilants”, who were mostly former activists of the CPP. Those arrests were made upon information supplied by the general public, to the military authorities.

5.12 1ST OCTOBER, 1969 - 12TH JANUARY, 1972:
THE SECOND REPUBLIC -PROGRESS PARTY
(PP) GOVERNMENT

5.13.1 THE PROGRESS PARTY

5.13.1.1 The Progress Party (PP) won the elections of August, 1969, and the government was inaugurated on 1st October, 1969. The elections were marred by a campaign tainted by ethnic tensions.

5.13.1.2 The Aliens Compliance Order And Civil Society Reaction

5.13.1.2.1 Soon after the government came to power, pressure began to mount for firm action to be taken against the influx of aliens into the country. The matter was discussed in Parliament and the government announced that it was going to enforce the provisions of the Aliens Act, 1963 (Act 160) and its accompanying regulations in L.I. 265 as amended by L.I. 553. On 19th November, 1969, the government issued the following statement:

All aliens both African and non-African without residence permits should leave the country within 14 days – not later than December 2, 1969.

government officials, party functionaries and activists to report to the nearest police station. They were subsequently sent to prisons around the country to be detained. Many members of the proscribed PP fled into exile in the neighbouring countries. In May, 1972, many of the detainees were freed from custody.

5.14.1.2 Commissions of Enquiry were established to investigate the assets of PP functionaries, including Dr. Busia, the Prime Minister. Dr. Busia's assets, including those acquired before coming into political office, were confiscated to the State, although he was outside the country at the time and could not be present to defend himself. There was very little public sympathy for the members of the erstwhile PP members as the precedent of ill-treatment of officials of overthrown political parties had already been set.

5.14.2 Trade Organisations' Support For NRC

5.14.2.1 Market women in Accra and Kumasi took to the streets, demonstrating in support of the NRC, chanting anti-PP slogans. The women paraded through the principal streets bearing placards, some of which read: "Busia's Democracy is a sham", "Afrifa must face the Firing Squad", "Down with Busia's Tribalism", "Afrifa must face trial", "Open up more employment avenues", "Busia is a thief" and "Down with capitalism." Other groups such as the Volta Region Association of Gold and Silver Smiths sent a message of congratulations to the Chairman of the NRC, whilst others pledged their support to the NRC. The Ghana Co-operative Cattle Dealers and Butchers Association even congratulated the Chairman of the NRC, the Armed Forces and the Police for "the able manner in which they ousted the Busia Administration". With such messages of support, it was unlikely that anyone would criticize the detention of the PP Government functionaries and activists.

5.14.2.2 This form of sycophancy, often motivated by greed and opportunism, accounts partly for the inability to properly appreciate conduct on the part of rulers, that ought not to be condoned. When the NRC/SMC I rule came under immense pressure to relinquish power, and resorted to violence as an instrument for retaining power, it exposed the nation's culture of sycophancy in its most sadistic form.

5.14.2.3 Before and during the struggle over the Union Government (Unigov) proposal, a cross-section of Ghanaians declared support just to enable them to enter the huge lucrative patronage network that the government had constructed. The groups ranged from chiefs, (including individual paramount chiefs, traditional councils, regional houses of chiefs and the National House of Chiefs), civic associations like the Ashanti Youth Association and the Kumasi Youngsters Club, Volta Development and Youth Association, High Blood, Farmers Association, African Youth Command and the Ghana Peace and Solidarity Council.

5.14.2.4 While the government was under intense pressure to return the country to constitutional rule, a number of leading professionals were accepting Cabinet appointments to serve in it, but civil society did not criticize them for doing so. For example, Dr. RKA Gardiner was appointed Commissioner for Economic Planning; Dr.

AK Appiah, as Commissioner for Finance; E R K Dwemoh, Commissioner for Transport and Communications; A. Karbo, as Commissioner for Health; and C K Tedam, as Commissioner in charge of Local Government.

5.14.2.5 In January, 1977, a Committee on Unigov was established to collate opinions on the concept. The committee, chaired by Dr. Gustav Koranteng-Addow, had the following membership:

- Dr. Modibo Ocran;
- Togbe Adja Tekpor VI;
- Kofi Badu;
- Maj Yaw Larson;
- Joe Appiah;
- DCOP B.S.K. Kwakye;
- Nii Okai Pesemaku III;
- Dr. M.M. Owusu-Ansah;
- Dr. Yaw Manu;
- Dr. A Adda;
- F. Wulff Tagoe; and
- Two other unnamed representatives of the Military Advisory Council and Research Bureau of Ministry of Information.

5.14.2.6 This committee drew up a programme for implementation of the concept, which they preferred to be named “National Government instead of Unigov”. A referendum to determine if Ghanaians wanted that form of government was fixed for 30th March, 1978. Immediately thereafter, many pro-Unigov groups sprang up, as it became clear that the government was willing to spread money around in order to purchase the people’s support. Associations such as “The Friends”, suddenly sprang up and spearheaded the campaign in support of the concept. Everyday, chiefs and opinion leaders from every part of the country made their way to the Castle, to “pledge unflinching support” for Unigov.

5.14.2.7 The symbols representing the “Yes” and “No” vote were eloquent in the images they cultivated in the public mind. The “Yes” vote was represented by two hands in a warm handshake (signifying unity) against a sky-blue background, and the “No” by three heads of two males and one female, all facing different directions in obvious disagreement (signifying discord), against a red background. These pictorial gimmicks notwithstanding, the “No” group had massive support.

5.14.3 THE PEOPLE’S MOVEMENT FOR FREEDOM AND JUSTICE (PMFJ)

5.14.3.1 The PMFJ was formed in the mid-1970s to spearhead opposition to the government of Gen Acheampong, and his idea of Unigov as the most suitable form of government for Ghana. The PMFJ, though made up various personalities attracted a large number of young people. Its leaders were prominent politicians such as Lt-Gen Akwasi Amankwah Afrifa, Professor Albert Adu Boahen, William Ofori-Atta (popularly known as Paa Willie), K A Gbedemah, G W Amarteifio (popularly known as “Mr. No”) and Nana Addo D Akufo-Addo.

5.14.3.2 The PMFJ organized public protests and anti-Unigov demonstrations which were brutally suppressed by the State. On one occasion, a PMFJ rally was broken up with force, resulting in the death of three people, with many injured, including Gbedemah.

5.14.3.3 Subsequently, the government ordered that no police permits were to be issued to the PMFJ, alleging that as people hated them very much, if they held rallies in public places, the public might attack them. The PMFJ was therefore deprived of the opportunity to lawfully assemble to campaign against Unigov. There was even an occasion when a police permit that had been issued was withdrawn, only hours before the publicized event.

5.14.3.4 The PMFJ managed to continue campaigning in the face of serious official threats and intimidation until the referendum was conducted on 30th March, 1978, when in the face of massive rigging, the majority vote was alleged to have been cast in favour of the Unigov concept. Very few people, familiar with the events of the Referendum, and the chasing out of the Electoral Commissioner by soldiers, believed the official results that declared to be genuine. However, one of the prominent supporters of Unigov disputed the good faith of such doubters, querying why the “No” votes were believed to be correct and not the ‘Yes’ votes.

5.14.3.5 Thereafter, by the Voluntary Associations (Prohibition) Decree, 1978 (SMCD 161), passed on 4th April, 1978, the PMFJ, together with two other anti-Unigov associations, Front for the Prevention of Dictatorship and Third Force were prohibited by the government.

5.14.4 NATIONAL LIBERATION MOVEMENT OF WESTERN TOGOLAND AND TOGOLAND LIBERATION MOVEMENT

5.14.4.1 In about 1975, the unabated desire of certain persons to secede from Ghana, based upon the dissatisfaction with the results of the 1956 Plebiscite that incorporated the former Trust Territory of Togoland (also known by the earlier name of “Mandated Territories”) into Ghana, resurfaced. Some people began to organize themselves to push for secession from Ghana, and these two movements were formed, with objects which included “advocating and promoting the secession from Ghana of the former British Mandated territory of Togoland”.

5.14.4.2 These “secessionist organizations” were promptly banned, under the Prohibited Organisations Decree, 1976. The Decree also prohibited membership of the organizations or any other organizations with the same objects, as well as advertising meetings or even putting up notices for such meetings to take place. It also made it an offence for anyone to provide financial support by way of contribution, or granting of a loan or even guarantee of a loan, to such an organization.

5.14.4.3 The government followed the promulgation of the Decree with interaction with chiefs from those areas, and the problem abated to some degree.

5.15 24TH SEPTEMBER, 1979 - 30TH DECEMBER, 1981:
THIRD REPUBLIC -PEOPLE’S NATIONAL PARTY
(PNP) GOVERNMENT

5.15.1 THE PEOPLE’S NATIONAL PARTY (PNP)

5.15.1.1 The Third Republic was ushered in with the formal inauguration at the Parliament House in Accra, on the 24th September, 1979. At the handing over ceremony, Flt Lt Rawlings told President Limann that his government was on probation, but this veiled threat against the constitutional government did not elicit any public disapproval.

5.15.1.2 The PNP itself did not help matters, in the manner in which it conducted its affairs. Very early in the life of the government, the party secured a loan of US $ 1 million from an Italian, Dr. Marino Chiavelli, ostensibly to resettle the members of the AFRC and their associates. A scandal soon broke over the handling of the funds, with allegations of misappropriation of the funds. Such scandals, coming so soon after the era of “house-cleaning”, did not improve the public’s acceptance of, and loyalty to the constitutionally-elected government.

5.15.1.3 In 1981, a member of the PNP, Addae Amoako, sued his party over the disbursement of the Chiavelli loan. The fact of a member of the ruling party suing his own party for an account money involved in a currency-printing contract, caused ripples in the public domain. Whilst some hailed it as a positive mark in the democratic development of the country, others saw it as a weakness in the system; evidence of how corrupt civilian politicians were; and how quickly the new civilian rulers had returned to the “bad old ways”.

5.15.1.4 The factors that made for instability, were enhanced by the impatience of the general populace in the face of constitutionalism and its seemingly slow nature and pace of governance. Against such a background, there were, unfortunately, serious wranglings taking place within the ruling PNP. The PNP appeared to be feeding on itself as factions and groups within it battled the leadership, or harangued it for its inability to articulate and adhere to a leftist ideology.

5.15.1.5 On 31st December, 1981, a band of military personnel, both serving and retired, launched an attack on the State, and succeeded in overthrowing the government. It came as no surprise when, upon the fall of the Limann Government, some members of the youth wing of the PNP took up prominent positions in the new government.

5.15.2 NEW DEMOCRATIC MOVEMENT (NDM)

5.15.2.1 The New Democratic Movement (NDM) was a leftist intellectual organization that shared the ideals of the JFM although it was more in the nature of providing intellectual support for revolutionary change. It was formed in 1980, after the Third Republic had come into being, but its formative period pre-dated 1980.

5.15.2.2 Its roots lay in the mid 1970s, when those who later on formed the NDM operated as part of the group generally known as the “progressive intellectuals” on the various university campuses, but particularly at Legon. By the time the NDM was formed, the members had been operating in about five Study Cells. In 1979, it began to publish a journal called Direction, which was intended to help espouse the views of the progressive intellectuals on national affairs. Although many of its members were supportive of the 4th June Uprising, the group was also critical of attacks on small propertied people because the feeling was that the real culprits of the country’s economic problems were the “big boys” of the economy but they had been left intact. The group also criticized the demolition of the Makola Market, as well as the execution of the Senior Military Officers, including three former Heads of State, even though both events were very attractive to a section of the student movement.

5.15.2.3 After the AFRC handed over, the group examined its options and decided that although the group was close in philosophy to the CPP tradition, it would form a new movement known as the New Democratic Movement (NDM). Not all of the members of the amorphous progressive intellectuals group, made the transition to the NDM. However, many other progressive intellectuals joined the NDM as a natural transition from activism in the student movement. Principal among the original members of the Movement were: Ofei Nkansah, Kwame Karikari, Ms Takyiwaa Manuh, Kwasi Adu-Amankwah, Kwame Mfodwo, Tsatsu Tsikata, Fui Tsikata, Dr. Kwesi Botchwey, Ato Austin, Anthony Akoto Ampaw, Jude Quarshie and Ms Cynthia Aninkora Nuamah. In April, 1980, one Dodoo, a Public Servant, became the chairperson.

5.15.2.4 The NDM was basically leftist in philosophy, and its main purpose was to create a platform for the propagation of socialist ideology through seminars, workshops, etc. It functioned through its study groups and study cells, but did not engage in active field operations as did the JFM. It focused on education because it felt that Self-Rule and Independence had not been meaningful to the people of Ghana since the national economy was still dominated by external forces. Consequently, the need to raise the consciousness of the people in order to ensure that social and political policy would be directed at promoting indigenous Ghanaian enterprise. Such awareness-raising would also ensure that democracy would go beyond the articulation of formal political rights to meaningfully impact on the lives of the people. It also believed that Africa stood a better chance of winning the economic war if it operated on a united front. For this reason, the group was committed to promoting pan-Africanism as well as gender consciousness.

5.15.2.5 When the 31st December, 1981 coup occurred, its members became active in the People’s /Workers Defence Committees (PDCs/WDCs) since the establishment of the Defence Committees was an idea that ran through all popular socialist movements because they were seen to be the means by which the people could maximize their power. The NDM also embarked on a programme to provide the people with political guidance, and were active in both the Student and Labour movements. It was in the light of this commitment to conscientise the people that, in 1982, it was active in holding educational seminars on various national issues.

5.15.2.6 The NDM opposed certain aspects of the exercise of people's power, and it remonstrated with those PDCs which were harassing traders to desist from doing so, as well as with the Greater Accra Regional Secretary, for adopting certain measures against vendors in Accra, arguing that those actions did not advance the revolution in any way since its main aim was to fight imperialism.

5.15.2.7 The intellectual debates within the National Defence Committee (NDC) were not idle intellectual debates, but had significance for the direction of the national economy. This was because at the time of the coup of 31st December, 1981, the economy was in shambles, a major justification for the take-over. Thus, right from the first day, a major challenge to the PNDC Government as well as a major threat to its stability was how it was going to manage the economy.

5.15.2.8 The threat to stability increased with every passing day, but the options seemed to be limited. The economy needed a major infusion of capital, but approaches to socialist economies had not yielded much. Therefore it appeared that the economy could get support only if it would agree to the IMF way, and this ignited a huge debate within the regime. Economists, such as Dr. Joe Abbey, were pushing the orthodox line and the debate was as to whether the currency should be devalued, according to the prescription of the IMF. The extreme leftists who dominated the NDC, were completely opposed to any notion of devaluation. Therefore when the Economic Review Team that had been established to manage the economy did a presentation to the NDC on the new direction of the economy, the NDC rejected it. The NDC then appointed another committee to review the plan and propose more acceptable options.

5.15.2.9 Subsequently, from these ideological clashes, it became clear that "government by ideology" was not going to work, and therefore, a move was made to purge the extreme leftists from the PNDC and NDC. The NDC was reorganized, to make the Chairman of the PNDC its Chairman.

5.15.2.10 The NDM was sidelined, and it moved into opposition by December, 1984. It linked up with a Catholic action group led by Rev Fr Joop Visser, a Dutch Catholic priest, and criticized the government's social commitment. It had thus embarked upon a collision course with the government, and it was only a matter of time before the government mounted an attack on it.

5.15.2.11 The time came, when the government announced a programme of decentralization of government structures. This was in 1986. The NDM and other progressive groups opposed the concept and they protested because they suspected that the government was transforming itself from a "provisional government" to a "permanent government" by using the hierarchical structure of District Assemblies, Regional Assemblies, National Assemblies with Chairman Rawlings at the top. The NDM's protest led to the arrest of its principal activists in 1986. However, they were soon released.

5.15.2.12 In 1987, some leading members of NDM were arrested again for opposing government policies. This time, they were detained without trial, for periods ranging from a few months, up to two years.

5.15.2.13.0 Funding

5.15.2.13.1 Evidence put before the Commission, was to the effect that the NDM had no external funding, and that it was the members themselves who funded everything from their own pockets, because the members were motivated by ideas and a will to achieve social transformation.

5.15.2.14 In 1990, on the initiative of the Kwame Nkrumah Revolutionary Guards (KNRG), many of the groups involved in the struggle for a return to civilian rule agreed to work together in one organization known as Movement for Freedom and Justice (MFJ). This body that included the NDM, was inaugurated in August, 1990, with the avowed aim of fighting for the return to constitutional rule.

5.15.3 KWAME NKUMAH REVOLUTIONARY GUARDS

5.15.3.1 Kwame Nkrumah Revolutionary Guards (KNRG) was conceived, originally, as the left wing of the PNP. It was made up of senior CPP members of the extreme left, such as KSP Jantuah, FA Jantuah, Johnny Hansen, Sonny T Provencal and Emmanuel Owusu Gyimah. Its main concern was the maintenance of ideological purity of the PNP, and to protest the policy of deference to the IMF and World Bank; the government's failure to participate in the Moscow Olympics of 1980; President Limann's statement that he had no ideology, etc. It was also to be instrumental in the attempt to secure leftist unity in the country. The group participated in the Forum of leftist groups at Labone Secondary School, at which a decision was taken that Limann's Government was not a socialist government and so was not to be given support by the socialist groups.

5.15.3.2 The KNRG was the first to issue a statement of support for the PNDC. In the Daily Graphic of 4th January, 1982, the KNRG sent a message of congratulations, signed by Provencal, to the newly-formed PNDC. In the statement, the KNRG complained about the "laissez-faire policies" of the Limann Administration that had destroyed many homes and turned many Ghanaians into economic refugees in foreign lands. This attack on the PNP government by a senior member of the PNP was not really surprising since the Labone Forum had reached a consensus that the PNP Government had abandoned the socialist path. In any case, a number of its members who were also senior members of the PNP, quickly found their way into the new PNDC Government, and took up prominent positions.

5.15.3.3 Within the first year of the PNDC, the KNRG began to have problems with the government. When the murder of the three High Court Judges and the retired Army Officer occurred in June, 1982, the KNRG expressed its disapproval and issued a statement condemning the event, although the organization was perceived to be part of the PNDC.

5.15.3.4 In 1985, new personalities were recruited into the leadership. Kwesi Pratt (Jnr), a journalist with leftist credentials, became its General Secretary. By this time, the leftist credentials of the PNDC were being questioned, and so the programme of the new leadership was to attempt a unification of all the truly left-wing groups.

5.15.3.5 In early 1986, the KNRG built an alliance with the NDM and Africa Youth Command (AYC), all leftist groups, although the AYC did not last long in the alliance. The KNRG, joined a campaign for the release of Victor Owusu, leader of the former rightist Popular Front Party (PFP), who had been arrested on suspicion of involvement in a coup plot. This campaign had an interesting aspect: the leftist groups in the country, had joined up with rightist groups, to work for the release of the leader of a proscribed rightist party.

5.15.3.6 The KNRG was also one of the early advocates of a return to multi-party democracy when in 1986, it published a document rejecting the District Assembly concept and calling for a restoration of multi-party democracy. After this period, some of its activists such as John Ndebugre and Kwesi Pratt (Jnr) were arrested in 1987, and again in 1991, when Owusu Gyimah and Kwesi Pratt (Jnr) were arrested at Kwame Nkrumah Circle for putting up posters advocating a return to multi-party politics in 1991.

5.15.3.7 The KNRG began to disintegrate in 1992, when it became clear from the Report of the National Commission for Democracy (NCD) that multi-partyism was about to be restored, and various possibilities for joining various political parties of Nkrumaist persuasion had opened up. The members joined some of the new political associations they believed best represented the interests of the CPP family.

5.15.3.8 Funding Of The Kwame Nkrumah Revolutionary Guards

5.15.3.8.1 The KNRG was financed mostly by members such as Johnny Hansen, Lord Ocloo of ICU and many other people from the CPP. Ebo Tawiah, member of the PNDC, was also a member and provided some funds until he began to disapprove of the direction of the movement.

5.16 31ST DECEMBER, 1981 - 6TH JANUARY, 1993 PROVISIONAL NATIONAL DEFENCE COUNCIL (PNDC)

5.16.1 The Demise Of PNP Government

5.16.1.1 On 31st December, 1981, Flt Lt J.J. Rawlings took over the administration of the country and declared a “Holy War”. In the usual manner of seizures of power, the 1979 Constitution was suspended, the members of the government were dismissed; Parliament was dissolved; and all political parties were banned. Members of Parliament, the PNP leadership and other functionaries, were ordered to report to the nearest police station, where they were detained, and later sent to prisons around the country. This time round, the detentions were not limited to members of the ruling government, but included

Members of Parliament of the minority parties as well. Some of these persons were thereby forced to go into exile in the neighbouring countries.

5.16.2 THE 31ST DECEMBER WOMEN'S MOVEMENT

5.16.2.1 It has been stated that no “analysis of the relation between the State and Women in Ghana would be complete without a consideration of the 31st December Women's Movement.” This statement is no exaggeration as the role of the movement is wound up with the course of the 31st December “revolution.”

5.16.2.2 On 15th May, 1982, a new women's organization, the 31st December Women's Movement was launched by Flt Lt Rawlings at the Nicholson Stadium in Accra. In his address, Flt Lt Rawlings was reported to have said:

Ghanaians could solve their problems if they would put an end to the habit of making the woman responsible for only bringing up children in the home. This habit, he noted had forced women to turn to ‘kalabule’ and trading because they could not feed their children... Flt Lt Rawlings hoped that with the formation of the movement, there was no doubt that a genuine and real revolution was taking place.

5.16.2.3 Formed to be the “Women's wing of the revolution”, women were advised to join the revolution and fight alongside the men and be prepared to die in defence of the motherland. The logo of the movement was a young woman holding a gun above her head with her left hand. The women wanted to be given military training so that they could shoot just as effectively as men, and so the women called upon the PNDC “to institute military training for them too so they could fight alongside their menfolk to defend and rebuilt [sic] the nation.”

5.16.2.4 The founders of the movement persuaded the wife of the Chairman of the PNDC, Nana Konadu Agyeman Rawlings, to become the president of the movement, and this act lent it the political clout and influence it needed.

5.16.2.5 The Movement (known as the DWM) began to spread across the country, using the network of queenmothers for its membership drive. By 1990, it was represented in every region, district and even locality. This massive drive, was said to be on account of the exposure that the First Lady, Nana Konadu Agyeman Rawlings, the DWM's President had, on a visit to Cuba in 1983 to visit women's organizations. Credited with being the turning point in the life of the DWM, the visit to Cuba exposed the political advantages that an organization of that nature carried when represented at the remotest village level, in the country. Indeed, to mark the 5th anniversary of the 31st December revolution, 18 branches were inaugurated at the same time at Cape Coast. According to Takyiwaa Manuh:

Queenmothers were also asked to put the power and the influence they wielded in the community behind the movement and to help in its mobilising and membership drives. In return for supporting the movement, queenmothers were promised representation with male chiefs on chieftaincy committees of traditional councils a move which boosted their power and influence and also carried some pecuniary advantages.

5.16.2.6 The DWM abandoned its initial militant approach and began to tackle projects aimed at providing income-generating resources for its members. It described itself as “a broad based development oriented Non Governmental Organisation which aspires to achieve these objectives through the effective mobilisation of women.” With its political clout, it soon had tentacles in every facet of economic activity. It became involved in a bakery project at Burma Camp, that had allegedly been begun on the initiative of some soldiers’ wives. The DWM wrestled the project from them, and took over the baking of bread for the Ghana Armed Forces (GAF). Soon a contract for the supply of kenkey with the GAF was also secured.

5.16.2.7 The period 1986-1989 was a busy time for the DWM as it spread rapidly around the country. Various branches were inaugurated in villages around the country and given publicity in national newspapers. At the end of 1989, it was estimated that there were 450 branches of DWM in Ashanti Region alone. The DWM was organized along the lines of the Committees for the Defence of the Revolution (CDRs): it had zonal organizers; district organizers; regional organizers; and national officers. It co-operated with the “other revolutionary organs” and engaged in community clean-up programmes together during the various anniversary celebrations of the 31st December revolution.

5.16.2.8 The DWM also got involved in gari-making, palm oil processing, shea-butter processing, bead-making, pottery, etc. Apart from these businesses, the DWM was also into cultivation of the various crops, shea-nut picking, afforestation, etc. With the onset of HIV/AIDS, health projects also joined the list of the DWM’s projects.

5.16.2.9 With their involvement with women, it rapidly became clear that one of the major concerns and therefore the major obstacle to women’s participation in activities, economic or otherwise, was the welfare of their pre-school children. Therefore, in 1986, the DWM began to open Day-Care Centres all over the country and encouraged their branches to put up structures to serve this purpose. At these day-care centers, pre-school education was subsidized.

5.16.2.10 Many of these centres were not new, or were alleged to belong to private persons, but they were all taken over and branded as the property of the DWM. It is estimated that by 1991, the DWM was financing 500 Day-Care Centres all over the country. However, since there are no independently verifiable statistics of the DWM’s Day-Care Centres, it is impossible to be certain of these figures. For instance, in May, 1990, the estimated figure of what the DWM was reputed to own, stood at 252 Day-Care Centres, but within a space of one year, the estimate stood at 500, making it difficult to give credit to either figure. According to a former member of the DWM:

carved a niche for itself in the gender and development terrain by championing the economic empowerment of women. It also facilitated the participation of women in small-scale income generating activities through the establishment of day nurseries which enabled women to free themselves of childcare to participate in entrepreneurial activities.

5.16.2.11 Relationship With National Council On Women And Development (NCWD)

5.16.2.11.1 In March, 1982, an activity organized by NCWD was picketed by a group of women, calling themselves “Concerned Women of Ghana”. In truth, these young women were activists of the nucleus group that became the DWM. The take-over of NCWD was therefore on the agenda right from its formation, and so it was not surprising that eventually, DWM used its immense political clout to get its members into the leadership of the NCWD.

5.16.2.11.2 The leadership of the DWM, determined that the NCWD, the national institution, set up in 1975 to mobilize women for national development, had gone outside its mandate of policy-making, into project implementation, and that such functions would be better performed by implementing agencies, such as the DWM, working under the oversight of the NCWD. It also criticized the NCWD for not doing enough gender-advocacy, and for losing focus in the execution of its mandate.

5.16.2.11.3 In 1986, the Governing Council of the NCWD, chaired by Prof Florence Dolphyne of the University of Ghana, was dissolved and an Interim Management Committee (IMC), with Mrs. Selina Taylor, a member of DWM, as its chairperson. Later, Mrs. Gertrude Zakaria-Ali, a founding member of the DWM, became the NCWD’s Executive Secretary. Other members of the DWM assumed various roles and ensured that the once-vibrant NCWD became a quiet little government organization, advising the government on women’s issues. By 1989, the NCWD had become completely emasculated by the DWM, and it was probably because of its statutory nature that it was permitted to exist, and not fully absorbed into the structures of the DWM.

5.16.2.11.4 In other aspects of national life, the DWM was equally prominent. According to Shillington:

It is believed that through the organization and its President, members gained the ear of the Head of State. Petitions and appeals against injustice are referred to Mrs. Rawlings in the sure knowledge that if the case is strong enough, and the allegations of injustice or corruption firmly founded, the details will be passed on to her husband. Then woe betide the wrong-doer as the Head of State, with his customary vigour, activates the full process of law. Similarly it is feared that the converse is also true and that the 31 December Women’s Movement is the eyes and ears of the Head of State.

5.16.2.11.5 Indeed, it was even reported in May, 1989, that the Head of State himself and other members of the PNDC attended meetings of the DWM’s executive committee. These acts gave it the aura of a state-sponsored agency.

5.16.2.11.6 The perception of the DWM as the only recognized national women's organization was given form and substance by the appointment of some of its members to district assemblies as government nominees. Wherever there was a requirement of representation for women, the DWM was the body that supplied candidates and so it had representation on many committees and bodies dealing with issues affecting women, children and the community. Prominent members of the DWM usually filled the slot for women on government delegations travelling abroad. The DWM was even reputed to be the official body administering scholarship schemes for women, especially to countries of Eastern Europe and Cuba.

5.16.2.11.7 The DWM also had affiliate bodies. Some of these were:

- Accra Markets Associations;
- Regional Administration Staff;
- Zion Women's Union;
- West E P Church Women;
- Battor Women's Union;
- Murtarmar Women's Association;
- Financial Institutions (Ladies' Clubs) ;
- Police Wives Association;
- Prisons Wives Association;
- Armed Forces Wives Association;
- Fire Service Wives;
- Achimota Brewery Ladies Club;
- GNATLASSs (Ghana National Association of Teachers Ladies' Associations);
- Dzodze Women's Union;
- Tsui Shitoo Alajo GBC;
- Beverages and Dispensers and Shacks [sic] Association (BEDSA);
- Information Ladies Club;
- Departmental Stores (Ladies' Club);
- Nurses Association;
- Media Ladies club;
- Power Queens Club;
- Ghana Hairdressers and Beauticians;
- Accra Zonal Co-operative Bakers Union Ltd; and
- Prison Officers Wives Association

5.16.2.11.8 In 1988 and 1992, a majority of the women who were elected to the District Assemblies and Parliament respectively, were those with strong links to the DWM as the DWM had created opportunities for women's participation in politics at the local level.

5.16.2.12 Funding Of December Women's Movement

5.16.2.12.1 The funding for this massive institutional structure was always a source of speculation. Many people suspected that it was largely state-funded, although this was vigorously denied often. However, it is incontrovertible that state-funding, by way of subsidies for the remuneration of its employees, was what enabled the organization to function to the levels that it operated during the mandate period. Many of its Day-Care Centre staff as well as its Regional Organisers and District Organisers were usually teachers still on the payroll of the Ministry of Education, although working full-time for the DWM.

5.16.2.12.2 The DWM did manage to attract funding from international agencies, such as the United Nations agencies of UNFPA and UNDP, etc. Since the DWM usually developed projects in areas where foreign funding was available, it procured funds for its programmes and projects. “Its influence and access to finance and logistics and resultant power or clout in directing policies was unimaginable”. Diplomatic Missions that wished to have improved relations with the country through social relations also made donations to the DWM.

5.16.2.12.3 Direct funding from national resources was also secured, when the Programme of Action for the Mitigation of the Social Consequences of Adjustment (PAMSCAD) policies was initiated. This made sizeable sums of money available to the DWM for those of its operations that qualified for support.

5.16.3 CIVIL SOCIETY REACTION

5.16.3.1 The Early Years Of PNDC Rule

5.16.3.1.1 Workers, farmers, fishermen, drivers, market women all began to declare their support for the revolution. The Greater Accra Branch of the National Canoe Fishermen Council also organized a demonstration to re-affirm the unflinching loyalty of the fishermen to the PNDC and the People’s Revolution. When as usual, Makola Market Women also went to the Burma Camp too, to demonstrate in support of the revolution but were, ominously, chased out by soldiers. Soon, anger began to mount against the market women for increasing their prices.

5.16.3.1.2 Many “mushroom” groups sprang up, each one trying to outdo the other, in their display of revolutionary favour. However, many did not last.

5.16.3.1.3 Cheered on by chants of “J.J.”, “J.J.” and “Junior Jesus”, the Chairman of the PNDC was very much in the centre of national life, as he cleared choked drains himself; helped to lay rail lines; dived to help clear the Volta Lake of aquatic weeds; and generally showed himself to be “a man of the people”. Consequently, there were expressions of popular support for the Chairman of the PNDC, and even the forces of disorder that had been unleashed on the society, did not appear to dim civil society support and reaction.

5.16.3.1.4 The attempted coup of Sunday, 19th June, 1983 (otherwise known as the Gyimah coup), and the reaction of a part of civil society, was the first obvious display of the extent of disaffection against the PNDC Government in the country. Following the foiling of the attempt, there were mass arrests of persons (termed ‘jubilants’) because they were alleged to have expressed jubilation on hearing the news, as well as those who were accused of having been a part of the plot (termed ‘dissidents’). There was also a crackdown on dissent generally.

5.16.3.2 The Later Years

5.16.3.2.1 The vigorous suppression of dissent, as well as the implementation of strategies for co-optation, produced a general silence in the public domain towards officialdom. Labelled the “culture of silence”, this silence was ominous for the development of the nation because it excluded carefully crafted praise of all official action. A sociologist has lamented on the development thus:

The fact that we applaud certain utterances and behaviour patterns, instead of showing deserved contempt for such conduct, shows the abysmal absence of standards of public decency and decorum in social life, and for reasoned, dispassionate debate in contemporary Ghanaian society. What is even more pitiable is the manner in which people applaud enthusiastically in public, only for the same people to complain bitterly in privacy to confidantes.

5.16.3.2.2 There was mass retrenchment (officially termed “redeployment”) from the public services. This created mass unemployment, as many quickly expended the amounts paid to them as the financial package that went with being “redeployed”. Promises of re-training were not honoured for a vast majority of the labour-force that was shed. Consequently, poverty, particularly in urban areas, as manifested by a rise in female-headed households, began to produce the usual social problems, such as child labour in its modern manifestations, and “streetism”.

5.16.4 MOVEMENT FOR FREEDOM AND JUSTICE (MFJ)

5.16.4.1 This group was inaugurated on 2nd August, 1990, to spearhead the struggle for a return to civilian rule despite attempts by the government through the BNI to scuttle it. Its executive officers were the following:

- Prof. Albert Adu-Boahen - National Chairman;
- Johnny F.S.Hansen - 1st National Vice-Chairman;
- Ray Kakraba-Quarshie - 2nd National Vice-Chairman;
- Dan Lartey - National Treasurer;
- Obeng Manu - National Secretary
- Kwesi Pratt (Jnr) - Deputy National Secretary;
- John Ndebugre - National Organiser;
- Akoto Ampaw - National Executive Member;
- A.Owusu Gyimah - National Executive Member; and
- Dr. T . Darko - National Executive Member.

5.16.4.2 In August, 1990, the MFJ issued a statement condemning the suppression of free speech on account of the existence of “oppressive laws as the Preventive Custody Law”. In 1991, it criticized various aspects of the transition process, such as the composition of the National Commission for Democracy (NCD), charged with devising rules for the transition. The MFJ also took issue with the government over the manner in which the programme for transition was being pursued without due representation of the citizenry.

5.16.5 THE POLITICAL PARTIES OF 1992

5.16.5.1 The country had been under military rule since 31st December, 1981. In the late 1980s, agitation began to be felt for a return to civilian rule. The NCD under the chairmanship of Mr. Justice Annan, a member of the PNDC, was tasked to go around the country and collate views on the form of civilian government that should be adopted. The NCD reported that the generality of Ghanaians favoured a multi-party democracy. A Committee of Experts was therefore commissioned to prepare proposals for a new constitution and they submitted a report in 1991. A Consultative Assembly was established to prepare a draft constitution for approval in a referendum.

5.16.5.2 Civil society organizations began to spring up which bore names that were indicative of their political agenda. The most prominent of these were: the Danquah-Busia Memorial Club, Our Heritage club, Kwame Nkrumah Welfare Society, Kwame Nkrumah Youngsters Club, Great Unity Club, the Ex-CPP Group, etc. In response to the emergence of these groups, the pro-Rawlings groups also formed the following clubs: Eagle Club, Friends of the Progressive Decade, Rawlings Fan Club, New Nation Club, Development Union, Development Club. These clubs eventually formed the nucleus of the political parties that were formed when the ban on political activities by the PNDC was lifted on 18th May, 1992.

5.16.5.3 A Referendum to approve the draft Constitution was held, amid criticisms that it was a waste of money. The GBA had argued that the Consultative Assembly should be given power to promulgate the Constitution. This was not done, nor was the Referendum made the occasion for the promulgation of the Constitution. The question for the Referendum was:

Do you approve of the Draft Constitution presented by the Consultative Assembly to the Provisional National Defence Council on Tuesday, 31st March, 1992 and published in the Gazette as the Constitution of the Republic of Ghana to come into force with effect from the 7th day of January, 1993?

5.16.5.4 The GBA complained that the formulation of the question for the referendum was unfair as it had rolled two questions into one:

namely whether the voter approves of the constitution as a whole, unreasonable though the question is, and secondly, whether the voter agrees that the constitution should come into force on 7th day of January, 1993, instead of immediately. These are two separate ideas and it should be possible to give a 'Yes' answer to the first while giving a 'No' answer to the second. To roll both questions into one question is, therefore, to prevent the people of Ghana from expressing effectively their views as to whether the Constitution should come into force from the moment of approval or whether its coming into force should be postponed for another 8 months after it has been approved.

5.16.5.5 A new Law on political parties was also promulgated to regulate the formation and administration of political parties. The Law set out the conditions and rules for the formation of political parties, as well as who was competent to form a party. The Law also dealt with the registration of political parties and stipulated among other conditions, that no party was to be formed on ethnic, regional, professional or religious basis; or use words, slogans, symbols which could arouse ethnic, regional, professional or religious division, or use the symbols of the proscribed political parties.

5.16.5.6 As soon as the Political Parties Law was passed, and the lifting of the ban on political activities announced, there was a proliferation of parties, all of which announced their intention to contest the 1992 Presidential and Parliamentary Elections. Among the parties which emerged were the National Democratic Congress (NDC), the New Patriotic Party (NPP), the People's National Convention (PNC), the National Independence Party (NIP), the People's Heritage Party (PHP), the Ghana Democratic Republican Party (GDPP), the National Convention Party (NCP), the Egle Party, the New Generation Alliance (NGA), the National Justice Party, Good Citizens Party, Democratic People's Party (DPP), the Nkrumah National Party (NNP), the Concerned Citizens, Redemption Congress, Obaatan Pa Association, People's Party for Democracy and Development (PPDD), Great Consolidated People's Party (GCPP), etc. The manner in which political parties sprang up was criticized as being likely to create a situation in which some parties would end up "being composed of only founding and leading members, without a broad based membership" Many of these did not survive to participate in the election.

5.16.5.7 These Political Parties claimed to be the inheritors of the legacy of Ghana's previous leaders. Those claiming the legacy of Dr. Kwame Nkrumah, President of the First Republic were: the PNC, PHP, NCP, NIP, NNP and PPDD. The NPP also traced its roots to the political tradition founded by Dr. J B Danquah and Dr. K A Busia. The NDC, the DPP and Egle claimed to be a continuation of the PNDC.

5.16.5.8 Some of these parties presented presidential candidates for the elections which were slated to be held one month ahead of the Parliamentary Elections in November and December respectively. Flt Lt J J Rawlings, Chairman of the PNDC was put up as the presidential candidate for four parties: the NDC, Egle Party, DPP and NCP, that had formed 'the Progressive Alliance'. The other parties had the following as their presidential candidates:

- NIP – Kwabena Darko;
- NPP -- Professor Adu Boahen;
- PHP – Lt-Gen Emmanuel A Erskine;
- PNC – Dr. Hilla Limann.

5.16.5.9 The banning of the old political parties and the prohibition of the use of their symbols under the Political Parties Law, was seen by the leaders of the new political parties as a violation of the fundamental human rights, in particular, freedom of association. They therefore decided to contest the issue in court, and 29 persons, all leaders of the opposition, joined in the suit. They were led by K A Gbedemah, and included such prominent politicians as B.J. da Rocha, Dr. Hilla Limann, and Professor A. Adu Boahen. They sought a declaration that the Political Parties Law as published by the PNDC was a violation of the fundamental human rights of freedom of association of Ghanaians.

5.16.5.10 This action was dismissed by the High Court, which invoked its inherent jurisdiction in order to declare that it had no jurisdiction to entertain the plaintiffs' action. The Judge, Mr Justice Kwadu Amponsem, merely wished Ghana the "peace of God which passeth all understanding", and dismissed the suit. The newspapers reported that the court had struck out the case because it was frivolous and vexatious, yet the judge specifically stated that the court "was not saying that the Plaintiffs' action is frivolous and vexatious" (emphasis in original). The Interim National Electoral Commission (INEC) therefore proceeded to put arrangements in place for the elections.

5.16.5.11 The parties warmed themselves up into the political game in 1992, when they received their certificates of registration and started vigorous campaigns to win political power. During the elections, soldiers were deployed in Kumasi to keep order, but it was generally felt that they had been deployed to intimidate the electorate. In spite of the fact that the political temperature was high, Ghanaians went through the Presidential Elections peacefully, with the National Democratic Congress (NDC) winning the Presidential Elections in November, 1992.

5.16.5.12 The opposition parties were not satisfied with the results, alleging various electoral malpractices. Consequently, all the parties, with the exception of the NCP, Egle party and DPP announced a boycott of the parliamentary elections. These were the only elections for constitutional government that were held outside the terms of the 1992 Constitution that was to govern the affairs of the Republic.

5.16.5.13 Some activists of opposing parties in Kumasi, in particular, were arrested and detained for two weeks at the offices of the Bureau of National Investigations (BNI) in Accra. They were later released without charge. At Kwesimintsim in Takoradi, a man who was a well-known activist of the NDC was the victim of arson, leaving him nearly dead from severe burns. Activists of the NPP were immediately suspected and some prominent activists from Kwesimintsim were arrested and detained for about two months. There was evidence before the Commission that they were subjected to severe ill-treatment during the time in custody. They were eventually released when no evidence was found against them, and rumours emerged that the source of the arson was due to intra-party squabbles, and not inter-party rivalry.

5.16.5.14 The Fourth Republic was inaugurated on 7th January, 1993, the date for the coming into force of the 1992 Constitution.

5.17 CONCLUSION

5.17.1 Apart from a few which were formed between 1958 and 1968, most Professional Bodies (other than legal) and Civil Society Groups were formed in the 1970s and later.

Professional Bodies and Civil Society Organizations are generally expected, by virtue of their learning and expertise, to be more concerned about and more actively involved in human rights issues and, therefore, spearhead the fight against human rights violations and abuses.

5.17.2 Admittedly, some voices were raised by some of the Professional Bodies and Civil Society organizations at gross human rights violations and abuses during the mandate period. However, these were too feeble, too sporadic and too disjointed to make the desired impact on society, because it was generally felt by professionals that human rights issues are the preserve of political parties and that politics was a vocation that could not be mixed with one's professional practice. Thus, the culture of respect for, and tutelage of human rights per se was hardly one of the objects of the Professional Bodies and Civil Society organizations dealt with in this chapter.

5.17.3 Evidence shows the Professional Bodies (as represented by the ARPB), and the Civil Society Organizations, were very active in the fight for constitutional governance, in particular, during the latter days of the SMC I, through the short-lived SMC II, the AFRC days and finally, during the PNDC regime. The ARPB deserves commendation; it was the loudest voice of opposition, at the time, to unconstitutionality, which was and gave rise to several gross violations and abuses of the human rights of the citizenry

5.17.4 Professional Bodies should not confine themselves to the pecuniary interests of their respective associations alone, but also avail themselves of the opportunity to make human rights interventions when necessary. They should make human rights education and protection an integral part of their professional responsibility and ethics.

5.17.5 Of the four Civil Society Organizations that sprang from the roots of the AFRC Revolution that are discussed in this chapter, only the MFJ was anti-PNDC right from its inception. The others, NDM, KNRG and DWM were overtly pro-PNDC, and therefore saw nothing wrong vis-à-vis human rights issues of the regime. Their concerns were merely ideological, or were focused on widening the support base for the PNDC, and could not be said to have championed human rights issues per se.

5.17.6 It has to be admitted, though, that at the time, in a country where nearly everyone and every institution had either been cowed into silence or co-opted by the PNDC Government, it was no surprise that most Civil Society organizations could only mind their own business, or join the government band wagon in perpetrating further violations and abuses against fellow citizens and institutions that dared march out of step and tune with the “revolution.”

5.17.7 During the mandate period, political parties however, had a lot to do either defending human rights or violating them or even condoning with their violations and abuse. In the pre-Independence period, political associations and groupings were themselves founded, based inadvertently or otherwise, on considerations that promoted one abuse or the other of human and social rights. They were mostly founded on ethnic or religious or regional affiliations. Only later, were those ethnic – religion – region-based political associations compelled by law to team up and form an opposition that was nationalist in aspect. This was good for the promotion of a sense of nationhood, in a newly-independent country.

5.17.8 Throughout the mandate period, however, the two main political traditions, namely, the CPP and the UP took turns in violating and abusing the human rights of sections of the citizenry, or in condoning violations and abuses as and when they (the parties) were in power or were allied with the military regime that had usurped constitutional governance. Thus, one cannot say of the political parties that they pursued an agenda of championing human rights. Indeed, when in power, they abused and violated them and seemed insensitive to the human rights of those supposedly in opposition.

5.17.9 Invariably, these political parties and their membership too suffered violations and abuses of their human and institutional rights, whenever their governments were ousted in the military take-overs that characterized the mandate period. The power to suppress the human rights of the opponent, was seen as one of the spoils of victory over the opponent.

5.17.10 All said and done, there was not, indeed, a good or even fair sense of the notion of fighting human rights causes, let alone their respect and support among the elite, the leadership and practitioners of party politics. This is a serious shortcoming that calls for remedial action. There is the need to inculcate into the rank and file of the citizenry and also into institutions and organizations such as Professional Bodies and Civil Society Organizations, the need to champion, and so develop the culture of respect for the human and civil rights of all.

5.17.11 In the context of the political parties, this need is paramount, if the art and good practice of partisan politics, the bedrock of good and democratic governance, is to be sustained and the harmonious co-existence of citizens, irrespective of their ethnic, religious or political affiliation, is to be ensured.

5.17.12 On Civil Society generally, an expert on national security has outlined the part that Civil Society plays in maintaining national political stability. According to him,

An irresponsible citizenry is as much a threat to national security as an irresponsible leadership... Where the people do not know their basic rights, or do not care to know, there is a problem, because they can be tossed about and manipulated not only by politicians, but by all those who seek to exercise authority over others. Again where the citizenry is irresponsible to the extent that basic laws and rules that regulate good conduct in the society are violated, in some cases with impunity, there is a problem... An irresponsible or discontented or frustrated or disillusioned people constitute a fertile base for insecurity.

5.17.13 Civil Society must take its share of the blame in the events that have produced massive human rights abuses in the country. It must now be appreciated by all, that taking to the streets and dancing to welcome a usurper, has always been the first step towards condoning, and even giving approval to, all human rights abuses committed by a particular regime. The need to know, respect, uphold and defend human rights is of paramount importance in the march for peace, freedom and justice.

5.17.14 It is clear on the evidence, that abuses are most brutal and rampant during periods of non-constitutional rule. Therefore, it is in the interest of all citizens that democratic and constitutional forms of government be maintained, to create space for the nurturing of a culture of respect for human and civil rights of the citizenry. Therefore, Civil Society also plays a part in ensuring that no usurper is tolerated, or given room to operate, even in the event of seizure of power. Civil Society and Civil Society Organizations must stand up and give meaning to those words in our National Anthem:

“And help us to resist oppressors rule with all our will and might forever more.”

Volume 4 Chapter 6 - The Student Movements

CHAPTER SIX

THE STUDENT MOVEMENTS

6.0 INTRODUCTION

6.0.1 The Commission set out to examine the socio-political environment within which human rights abuses have occurred within the mandate period, and the role played by students, organized as political party wings on the campuses, as Student Representative Councils (SRCs), or as a movement known as the National Union of Ghana Students (NUGS). This chapter has chronicled the activities of the student movements during the mandate period, and has thrown some light on the experiences of their leaders and other prominent activists, either when the patron-governments were overthrown, or because their activities were a challenge to the sitting government. The Commission did not include in its focus of study, movements on the student-front that were not of political significance.

6.0.2 The chapter has also captured the flow of tides that characterized student-government relationships in some detail, to enable the public to follow the history of these movements within the mandate period; understand the activities of these movements under military and civilian regimes; appreciate their importance in the socio-political history of Ghana; be provided with the reasons for change and continuity in these movements; and also understand why some of the movements underwent a transformation, whilst others ceased to exist altogether.

6.1 PRE-INDEPENDENCE

6.1.1 The National Union of Gold Coast Students (NUGS) (later National Union of Ghana Students) was founded in about 1950 as the national representative of the World Youth Assembly, a body composed largely of university students, of which the Gold Coast was a member. This is understandable in view of the fact that the Gold Coast acquired a university institution in 1948. At that time, NUGS was an official organ with no power but it was transformed into a powerful organization in the 1960s. Agbodeka attributes this development to the coming into being of university-authority-sponsored Student Representative Councils, the breakdown of the Hall tutorial system and “the changing values of Ghanaian society”. Whatever that expression was intended to mean, it does not appear to take into account the rise of nationalism, the adoption of socialism as the national politico-economic philosophy and the transformation of Ghana into a One-Party State where all sections were mobilized into one unit for purposes of national development. It would appear that these events produced a chain of actions and reactions over time that transformed the NUGS from a mere association of university students to a major player in national politics. As subsequent evidence shows, the students were neither oblivious to, nor untouched by the national politics of the day.

6.2 6TH MARCH, 1957 -- 23RD FEBRUARY, 1966: CONVENTION PEOPLE’S PARTY (CPP) GOVERNMENT

6.2.1 Students And National Politics

6.2.1.1 The independence movement involved all sectors of Gold Coast society and this obviously included students. Oquaye observes that there were several youth groups in the forefront of social change, including the Ga Students Association in the then University College of the Gold Coast. Thus, students were active in national politics right from the time when the independence movement picked up steam. Indeed, it was as a result of the involvement in political activity that a group of students in some schools in Cape Coast and their teachers were dismissed in 1949, leading to the founding of the Ghana National College in Cape Coast in order to enable them to complete their education. It, however, took a while before the students were organized as a political entity.

6.2.1.2 The National Union of Gold Coast Students (NUGS) being the official body of the student-representation at the time assumed the role of students’ mouthpiece. Upon the attainment of Independence, the union changed the ‘Gold Coast’ part of its name to ‘Ghana’ but kept its acronym ‘NUGS’. Not too long after Independence, NUGS began to be critical of some of the government’s policies. In 1958, the use of the Deportation Act to silence opposition politicians of the Moslem Association Party (MAP) by deporting them to their countries of origin excited critical murmurs of the students. By 1959, these murmurs had matured into public expressions of disaffection and the students courted the ire of the government when they adopted a resolution that publicly criticised the passage and use of the Preventive Detention Act (PDA), 1958 (CA 7), to detain opposition figures, at its annual conference of 1959. The government's response according to Rathbone, was to "consider seriously the withdrawal of scholarships of all members of the union's executive". In the end, based on the intercession of the Minister of Education, Cabinet agreed to reprimand them instead.

6.2.2 THE CONVENTION PEOPLE'S PARTY STUDENTS UNION

6.2.2.1 Students were involved in partisan national politics before Independence. By June, 1960, a branch of the Convention People's Party, Convention People's Party Students Union (CPPSU), had been established on the campus of the University College of Ghana and was ready for inauguration. At the inauguration, the Prime Minister, Dr. Kwame Nkrumah, exhorted the students thus:

You who have come together to form this Union subscribe to the programme of the Convention Peoples' Party. You, and those that will join you, are a body of Ghanaian youth seeking knowledge in order to find truth. Your studentship of this College and your membership of the party are not incompatible. On the contrary they are complementary to the extent that the knowledge acquired by studentship is made relative to real issues of our country by membership of Convention People's Party.

6.2.2.2 The CPPSU was very active on the campus of University College of Ghana (UCG) and through the members, the CPP exercised great influence on campus. The government believed the college "had been associated with anti-Convention People's Party attitudes, which is the equivalent of saying that the University College is anti-government of the day". The Prime Minister expressed the hope that the presence of the Union was evidence of the "warm new life which is being injected into its veins by the presence in its halls of the Convention People's Party."

6.2.2.3 The division and dissension that existed on the Legon campus was real, as an atmosphere of fear was created on the campuses. Students reported on their colleague-students as well as on their lecturers. The dissension on the university campuses was exemplified by an event that occurred in 1965, and which Oquaye recounted as follows:

At a formal dinner in Commonwealth Hall, L. O. Cantey a fifth year law student led students to observe a minute's silence in Danquah's memory.[Dr. J.B. Danquah had been detained under the Preventive Detention Act and had died whilst in detention.] The CPP group in the hall led by R.A. Atta-Kesson and J.C. Akosah fiercely resisted the popular will to no avail. The following day, the CPP flag in Legon which had also become the national flag was found torn. Cantey and others were arrested and detained till after the 1966 coup.

6.2.2.4 With such incidents and the existence of a "web of spies that had been established in the universities and the application of the Preventive Detention Act against protesting students", it was no surprise that members of the CPPSU were the target of reprisals when the regime fell. Many students who belonged to the group were badly beaten up by some of their fellow students, and some were also detained in February, 1966.

6.2.3 THE NATIONAL AFRICAN SOCIALIST STUDENTS ORGANISATION (NASSO)

6.2.3.1 The National African Socialist Students Organisation (NASSO) was formed as the educational wing of the CPP. Although a party organ, NASSO operated as a state-sponsored organization of students who espoused the ideology of African Socialism - the official ideology of the CPP. It had local as well as international branches (in particular, in the United Kingdom) and it was to this organisation that the task of forming party study groups to study African Socialism was consigned. It also had the task of studying and explaining party decisions, programmes and policies of the government in order to achieve the “‘cipipification’ of the national life” . The intrusion of national politics into academic life was therefore mandated.

6.2.3.2 According to student activists of the time, NASSO though a student movement, enjoyed privileged status on campus. For instance, on the campuses, it had offices whilst NUGS had no office of its own. Members of NASSO were favoured with government attention and even sent to the Kwame Nkrumah Ideological Institute at Winneba to deepen their knowledge of socialist ideological thinking.

6.2.3.3 When the 1966 coup d'état occurred, some prominent members of NASSO on the Legon campus were held in “protective custody”. At the UST, the NASSO students burnt the records of the organization on the night of 24th February, fearing that records bearing their names would set them up for political reprisals. There was general insecurity on campus as these students worried about their fate. NASSO continued to exist in international circles on account of the students on government scholarship abroad. Its ranks were considerably thinned by the discontinuation of scholarships of certain students by a screening of all students on government scholarship. This exercise of determining who was a “genuine” student caused a lot of pain as it was seen to be arbitrary. Many otherwise genuine students lost their scholarships in the middle of their academic programmes.

6.2.3.4 The overthrow of the government in 1966 by and large ended the life and influence of NASSO within the country although the international branches operated for some time.

6.2.4 THE NATIONAL UNION OF GHANA STUDENTS (NUGS)

6.2.4.1 The loss of NASSO was the gain of NUGS. As the evidence showed, the leadership of NUGS nearly lost their scholarships as a result of their criticism of the operation of the PDA in 1959. It was thus no favourite of the government, and in 1964, six of its leaders including A.K.P. Kludze a Law student; Yao Fiagbe, a student of Pharmacy; and one Easmon, a student of Engineering, got into difficulties with the government and were detained under the PDA. It was therefore not surprising that the

NUGS would achieve prominence as the official mouthpiece of students in the country, when the government was overthrown. Although Agbodeka indicates that the “politicization of student issues” occurred after the 1966 coup, this does not accurately reflect the state of the student movement of the time because politicization of students and consequently issues affecting them had become a phenomenon by 1966. According to his own findings:

Around October 1964 it was alleged that certain people enjoying a considerable measure of public favour began to incite the university students to ‘watch out for’ and ‘expose’ those of their lecturers in whom they thought they detected unsuitable ideological tendencies.

Although the author excuses these activities on the grounds of necessity imposed by “violent opposition creeping into Ghanaian politics”, it is certain that well before this time, students had become involved in national politics and that NUGS rose up to fill a vacuum created by the demise of the CPP-sponsored student groups.

6.2.4.2 The student-body expressed great support for the act of the coup-makers who consequently formed the National Liberation Council (NLC). Indeed early in the morning of the day after the coup, i.e. 25th February, 1966, the students poured onto the streets of Accra and demonstrated the entire day in support of the coup d’état. The student-body expressed its support for the overthrow of the First Republic in unmistakable terms. There is little documentary evidence of opposition within the student community although one could not overlook the fact that there was such severe repression of CPP-related activity and the suppression of CPP-related documentation, that any exhibition of support for CPP and the former President would have landed that person or organization in serious trouble. It is thus an irresistible conclusion that although a powerful role had developed for students within national politics by the activities of the state-sponsored groups, all of these had died with the end of the regime.

6.2.5 THE UNIVERSITY COMMUNITY AND ACADEMIC FREEDOM

6.2.5.1 The university community is made up of staff and students. These component parts were affected in various ways. For instance, when lecturers or Hall officials were detained or dismissed or deported, it became a matter of concern for the students as they lost teachers and such other persons as made their lives what they wished it to be, on the campus. In November, 1961, the President was formally installed as the Chancellor of both the University of Ghana and the Kwame Nkrumah University of Science and Technology (KNUST). These positions gave him an opportunity to relate to the universities in a dual capacity: as President and as Chancellor. In the latter capacity, the Chancellor sought to control the university even to the extent of appointing professors.

6.2.5.2 A cleavage occurred between the academics and the political authorities, and as it widened, lecturers of the University of Ghana were dismissed or deported and academic freedom came under direct attack. At a university dinner in February, 1963, the President gave the assurance of his absolute respect for academic freedom and urged the staff to uphold it for “scholars must be free to pursue the truth and to publish the results of their researches without fear, for true scholarship fears nothing”. However, in the same speech he stated that academic freedom could “become the dangerous cloak for activities outside the academic interests and pre-occupations of the community or of the university”, and he urged the academics to “be ready to expose those individuals in the university itself who abuse academic freedom”. These were ominous words for it appeared that academic freedom in the nature of the “freedom to pursue the truth” was not absolute, but was limited to ideas that the government found acceptable.

6.2.5.3 The relationship between the academics and government continued to deteriorate, and by 1964, students were being incited to report on those of their lecturers who espoused “unsuitable ideological tendencies” so that they could be taken to task. Indeed, on 18th February, 1964, E W Nortey Dowuona, Member of Parliament for Accra East, when contributing to the Debate on the Constitution (Amendment) Bill made an ominous prediction:

The temptation given by the colonialists to our Judges to nurture the notion that they were above the law itself and the State, has now been removed and they have now been helped to realize the fact that there is a limit to everything. I pray that soon, indeed very soon, we should help students of our universities and their tutors also to realize this fact and behave accordingly.

6.2.5.4 In the latter part of 1964, a committee was announced to have been formed by the government to inspect books and publications in the bookshops and libraries of the universities to ensure that those that were not in consonance with the ideology of the Convention People’s Party would be removed. The Vice-Chancellor had to address the students on the essence of university education and the importance of developing habits of critical thinking as an integral part of the students’ ability to advance the development of the country.

6.2.5.5 NUGS itself did not escape the ravages of the PDA. In 1964, it reacted to the decision to hold a referendum to enable the President have power to remove the Chief Justice and other Judges on a panel that had acquitted the accused persons in an infamous treason trial involving an attempt on the life of the President by the explosion of a bomb. NUGS believed that this was contrary to the tenets of democracy and issued a statement condemning the act in a campaign for the restoration of the rule of law. The response to this condemnation was for CPP “loyalists” to invade the campus in “an unbelievable demonstration of the masses against the University”. The university students were asked to go home and vote, but other observers opined that the universities had been deliberately closed down in order to prevent the students from demonstrating against the referendum. As already stated, the leaders of the NUGS campaign were arrested and detained and this event silenced the students and a feeling of insecurity developed on the campus.

6.2.5.6 The government’s anxiety to curb the independence of the universities was manifested by moves made through the students to achieve ideological subjugation of the students, most of who were at an impressionable age. It therefore directed in 1964, that a mandatory period of two weeks ideological orientation at the Kwame Nkrumah Ideological Institute for all students should become a condition precedent to admission into university. It is uncertain what successes this policy achieved, perhaps except to breed more secret resentment against the party and the government. These developments may explain why the students poured onto the streets of Accra on the day after the coup and demonstrated the entire day in support of the overthrow of the government.

6.3 24TH FEBRUARY, 1966 -- 30TH SEPTEMBER, 1969:
 NATIONAL LIBERATION COUNCIL (NLC)

6.3.1 NUGS

6.3.1.1 On 24th February, 1966, the Government of the CPP led by President Nkrumah, was overthrown by a group of military and police officers. The coup was led by Col Emmanuel K. Kotoka, Maj Akwasi A. Afrifa, John W.K. Harlley (Commissioner of Police) and Anthony K. Deku (Commissioner of Police) who with others formed the National Liberation Council (NLC) with Lieutenant-General Joseph A. Ankrah as Chairman. The NLC was established to replace the overthrown government. This development electrified the student front, and they poured out onto the streets in support of the change of government. It was against this background that the first invasion of the UST campus by the police occurred.

6.3.1.2 According to contemporary accounts that are confirmed by the report of the Committee of Enquiry into the KNUST Affairs, the students had grievances against the university administration and the Vice-Chancellor Dr. R.P. Baffour. Before the 1966 coup, the students had grievances such as: the arbitrary withdrawal of a week-end bus service to town; poor catering services; official high-handedness; inadequate accommodation; conflicts between the workers and students; and several other petty grievances. In addition, the Vice-Chancellor was accused of practising occultism ; siting of the KNUST Guest House at Elmina (Elmina, in the Central Region, is off the beaten track and had no relationship with the hospitality needs of the university, except being the hometown of the Vice-Chancellor); nepotism in favour of persons hailing from Elmina in employment and promotion of staff in general, and the university laundry in particular. In addition to these, the students were disappointed when their NUGS leaders were detained and the Vice-Chancellor who had promised to help secure their release because of his personal relationship with President Nkrumah, was unable to do so. When the coup occurred in 1966, the students decided to demonstrate against him and his administration for being unable to resolve their grievances. It must almost certainly have been a factor that with his political connections gone, he had become vulnerable enough for the students to mount a public protest.

6.3.1.3 The demonstration was timed to take advantage of a scheduled visit by the leaders of the NLC, Col Kotoka and Maj Afrifa, who were then paying an official visit to Kumasi. This was because some of the students were the school mates, and indeed, even classmates of Maj Afrifa at Adisadel College, and so they intended to take advantage of their relationship, to make their grievances known. The students planned to meet the convoy of the NLC near the University Hospital to present their petition to the new national leaders. The students started the protest on the campus and went to the house of the Vice-Chancellor. He had then left for his office and so they followed up there. At this point, reports have it, that the Vice-Chancellor called in the police to suppress the demonstration. It was therefore with some surprise that the students found that the police had come onto the campus with armoured cars to prevent them from marching to the agreed spot near the University Hospital. A confrontation ensued between the police who were under orders to prevent the students from getting to that spot, and the students who were determined to get there to present their petition. The fight led by the students cadet corps, led to the arrest and detention at the Kumasi Zongo Police Station, of four students: J H Owusu-Acheampong, Kwasi Abeasi, Seth Anipa and Emil Dove.

6.3.1.4 Despite these clashes, the students did not give up, but intercepted the convoy and threw copies of the petition into the vehicles as they passed. When the leaders of the NLC read the petition and discovered that it was about student grievances, they agreed to meet with the student-leaders. A meeting between them resulted in the withdrawal of the police from the campus. When the students later learnt that the police action was occasioned by information from the Vice-Chancellor to the Police Commander, that some Malian students had linked up with a few Ghanaian students to intercept the convoy of the NLC members and cause mayhem, they understood the ferocity of the police response. They then moved for an investigation into the incident as well as into their grievances. The government set up a committee of enquiry. The students hired their own counsel and decided to pay counsel's fees by forgoing dessert in the dining hall for a period, thereby making savings on the funds allocated for their feeding.

6.3.1.5 The report of the committee resulted in the removal of Dr R P Baffour as Vice-Chancellor of KNUST (which had by this time undergone a name change from KNUST to UST, dropping the name 'Kwame Nkrumah').

6.3.1.6 However, these matters were brought into sharper focus when the students also began to enjoy "liberation" to the extent that authorities of the universities began to worry about their activities on campus. Ironically, the troubles at UST led once again to another closure of the University of Ghana during this period of "liberation".

6.3.1.7 More than a year on, the support was still solid; for, on 17th April, 1967, when an abortive coup against the NLC resulted in the death of Lt-Gen Kotoka, one of the leaders of the coup and a member of the NLC, NUGS issued a statement condemning the coup attempt and said, among other things:

Students this is the hour for concerted action. The future of Ghana which is yours is at stake. Be alert. Be prepared for anything. Stand by now. Long live Ghana.

This statement indicated that the students were even contemplating physical resistance to the coup d'état. Indeed one writer describes the relationship between the students and the government of the NLC as "cordial."

6.3.1.8 In general, 1968 was a difficult year for students and their authorities. There were strikes and demonstrations in secondary schools, training colleges and even in the universities. In at least one case, some students were put before court for unlawful procession, but in most others the students were sent home and the schools closed down. So many of these incidents involved the destruction of school property that the Commissioner for Education, Modjaben Dowuona had to administer a caution that students responsible for such destruction would be surcharged with the cost of repair. In October, 1968, a major upheaval occurred on the campus of the University of Ghana on account of four students who had been rusticated for publishing obscene material in the Siren, the student magazine of the Mensah Sarbah Hall. The student body refused to attend lectures and in the ensuing confusion, the police was brought in to maintain order. The university was closed down on 30th October, 1968, and was re-opened about four weeks later. The students were made to sign a declaration to be of good behaviour; to observe the Statutes of the University; and to pursue their studies with diligence.

6.3.1.9 These protests were against the institution's authorities and did not involve the government directly. Indeed the government expressed regret at the sight of steel-helmeted police on campus and hoped that those kinds of incidents would not recur. The government also pledged its intention to respect academic freedom and the autonomy of academic institutions.

6.3.1.10 Within this period, there were many student demonstrations in the various academic institutions, resulting in their closure for periods of time. One even ended in the courts. Thirty-two students of Amaniampong Secondary School were put before court and remanded in custody for rioting and destroying school property. From the length and breadth of the country, students took to the streets in protest against their school authorities, and it was as if the whole student front was on the boil. The verdict at the time was that students were also expressing their "liberation", and that the coup had created indiscipline among students. However valid the assertion was, it must not be forgotten that 1968 was a very tumultuous year for students in Europe and the United States of America as well, and that there might have been some global influences on the student movement.

6.3.1.11 In general, however, the relationship between NUGS and the government remained cordial. NUGS tried to reform itself by adopting a new Constitution and restructuring its operations so that it could be the mouthpiece of all students in Ghana, instead of just university students. At this time, there were opposing views as to whether or not the NLC should remain in power or hand over to a civilian government. The latter position, espoused by Professor Kofi Abrefa Busia in a statement advocating an early return to civilian rule, generated great controversy which was warmly embraced in academic circles. Despite the cordiality between the students and the NLC, they, being a part of the academic community, were not left out of the reckoning. They waded into the fray and their front was split on this matter of the length of stay in office by the NLC. Vigorous though the debates were, there were no physical clashes between the proponents and opponents, and NUGS as a body, insisted that it would remain neutral in politics when the ban on political activity was lifted and that it would not throw its weight behind any particular party.

6.4 1ST OCTOBER, 1969 - 12TH JANUARY, 1972:
THE SECOND REPUBLIC PROGRESS PARTY (PP) GOVERNMENT

6.4.1 NUGS

6.4.1.1 The ferment on the student-front continued. So numerous were the student disturbances that Parliament was forced to take note of the phenomenon. By 1971, Parliament had taken a decision to set up a Committee on Student Unrest to study the phenomenon since students of every level were taking to the streets to protest one thing or the other. Most of these protests were violent, and led to the destruction of public property. The Parliamentary Committee was made up of the following Honourable Members: K B Ntim (Chairman), Harry Sawyerr, Sam Okudzeto, J A Anyan, Victor Aidoo, T K Agadzi, S.A.Manson.

6.4.1.2 In 1970, the economy was in bad shape and people grumbled about the level of affluence being exhibited by the government. In a classic display of intellectual arrogance, a Ph.D student of the University of Ghana, G.C. Hutchful, confronted Prime Minister Busia whilst on a visit to the campus and told him bluntly “It is a disgrace to the country for you and your entourage to ride on Mercedes Benz cars. Why don’t you ride in smaller cars like Morris Minor? Why all this motorcade?”

6.4.1.3 In April, 1971, NUGS issued a statement calling upon the government to grant amnesty to all Ghanaians in exile, particularly ex-President Dr. Kwame Nkrumah, and all other Ghanaians who had gone into political exile since 1966 so that they could return and help to rebuild the nation. This call infuriated the government. Oheneba Kow Richardson of the Prime Minister’s Office described the students’ statement as “treacherous and treasonable”. The Prime Minister’s spokesman declared further “their action is overtly meaningful otherwise the NUGS could not have the courage to go to the treasonable extent of raising matters of political implications as contained in their statement. He further went on and called them “ the little minds of our society today” and warned them not to take the government’s magnanimity for a licence as they:

were aware of that scourge of young pioneer movement is making itself manifest in the students who when they were youngsters, joined that movement and were indoctrinated in the act of carrying out political manoeuvres.

6.4.1.4 This harsh response did not appear to have been justified unless one takes cognizance of the frayed relations that existed between the government and the students as a body. Indeed, soon after this diatribe, the NUGS President, Albert Cann Tamakloe, was accused by the President of Progress Clubs (the club of students of the Progress Party), that he was hiding behind NUGS to form a political party with the TUC leader B A Bentum. The President of the Progress Clubs stated firmly that:

we cannot deny them the right to form political parties or join hands with existing political parties, but we deny them the right to involve the whole student body and the entire workers of this country in their ...personal ambition for political power.

6.4.1.5 The President of NUGS defended the effort to co-operate with the TUC, but denied that they were forming a political party. He further explained that the idea had been mooted as far back as 1969, before he came into office as president. His defence notwithstanding, the Progress Clubs of Universities called on executives of NUGS to resign forthwith. The students further threatened that the failure of the NUGS Executive to resign would result in inviting the government to consider the advisability of withdrawing recognition of NUGS. This was a very serious split in the students' front. It showed that student political activists were willing to get the government to ban their own student union merely because they did not agree with the anti-government stance of their leadership.

6.4.1.6 NUGS went to its annual congress and resolved to give an ultimatum to the political leaders to declare their assets, as required the Constitution. Subsequently, the leadership got into difficulties with Parliament over their alleged misrepresentation of communication between the leadership and the Speaker on the issue of assets declaration. The President and Secretary of NUGS were hauled before Parliament on a charge of contempt, and they were made to render a formal apology to the House. This act of humiliation was not calculated to endear the Busia administration to the leadership of the student movement.

6.4.1.7 The government proposed the student loan for university students instead of the full scholarships that every student was enjoying and planned to implement it in the next academic year of 1972-73. This loan scheme proposal did not go down well with the students as it meant that they were no longer going to enjoy university education that was completely free. NUGS criticized the University Loans Scheme as "reactionary and premature", and further complained that the government's efforts to solve the country's problem and that of the university had been misplaced. NUGS therefore suggested that a fuller review of the whole structure of university education be undertaken instead. Prior to this formal reaction of NUGS, students of UST had gone on a four-hour demonstration against the scheme, and a like demonstration at University College of Cape Coast (UCCC) had been averted only at the last minute by the intervention of the Parliamentary Committee on Student Unrest.

6.4.1.8 In addition to the issue of student loans, the government was also proposing to enter into "dialogue" with apartheid South Africa, instead of the total freeze in relations favoured by the Organisation of African Unity (OAU), and pan-Africanists in general. The policy, termed "Dialogue with South Africa", was considered reactionary by the students, who had been raised on the Nkrumaist policy of total liberation of the African continent from imperialist domination, and they strongly opposed it. The relationship between the government and students was thus not very cordial when the military struck again on 13th January, 1972.

13TH JANUARY 1972 -- 3RD JUNE, 1979:
NATIONAL REDEMPTION COUNCIL (NRC)/
SUPREME MILITARY COUNCIL (SMC) I & II

6.5 NRC/SMC I

6.5.1 NUGS

6.5.1.1 The reaction of the student body to the military takeover was predictable. The new Government of the National Redemption Council (NRC) led by Colonel Ignatius Kutu Acheampong, promptly revoked the policy on the loan scheme, cancelled the devaluation; announced the repudiation of Ghana's external debt otherwise known as the "Yentua" ("We won't pay") policy; and renounced "Dialogue with South Africa". All these policies had the desired result of pleasing the student body and ensuring the support of that constituency. The agricultural programme of food self-sufficiency for the nation known as "Operation Feed Yourself" won instant support from the students. So voluble was the support expressed by the students, that the Chairman of the NRC publicly thanked students of the universities for their support.

6.5.1.2 At the 9th NUGS Congress in 1972, the students called for the death penalty for those who would be found guilty of embezzlement and misappropriation of funds; and to vest all land in the state. NUGS took a further decision to demonstrate their support for the government in more concrete terms. A decision was taken to volunteer services to help in national development, by constructing irrigation canals and other infrastructure for improving agriculture. The most famous of these were the construction of the Dawhenya Irrigation Project canal, which was required for the production of rice and the harvesting of sugarcane at Komenda to feed the sugar factory. As a contemporary account goes:

Dawhenya was probably the peak of the cordial relations between students and the Acheampong Government. Streams of students literally kept flooding to this camp every day in support of the government's laudable plan to build an irrigation scheme for the area.

It was great fun for the students as well as a big help to the nation.

6.5.1.3 Soon, the relationship between the students and the government began to deteriorate as the government began to propose policies that the students did not support. According to the NUGS President of 1972-73, the students' position was influenced by interests external to the student body. He has stated as follows:

The students supported the coup d'état of Colonel Acheampong because apart from the problems with the Busia Government, the student movement was under the influence of the old CPP politicians, in particular, Kojo Botsio, the Father of all radicalism at the time.

Although the CPP had been banned. Botsio was recognized by all as the father-figure of the CPP. Since the radical lecturers of the UCC tended to be CPP inclined, they all looked up to him for leadership and consequently, the student movement with its leadership then at UCC, was heavily influenced by him as the leader of the CPP.

When I became a student leader, I was introduced to CPP stalwarts such as Kojo Botsio, Dan Lartey, Tawia Adamafio, etc. by Dr. S.B. Arthur, who had great influence on us at UST. These national political figures gave us political direction in relation to student agitation and student demonstrations.

It was on account of this influence that NUGS and the student body showed such support for the coup d'état that was thought to be CPP-inspired. At an executive meeting, NUGS decided to demonstrate its support for the government by supporting the 'Operation Feed Yourself' Policy. This decision culminated in the "Walatu Walasa" at Dawhenya by the construction of an irrigation canal, and the harvesting of sugar-cane for the Komenda and Asutsuare sugar factories by students. Although it was the Cann-Tamakloe administration that planned the programme, I had to implement it. I had no choice but to continue in that vein.

The relationship between the students and government soured when the relationship between Acheampong and Botsio turned sour. They [Colonel Acheampong and Mr. Kojo Botsio] fell out over the political direction of the government, and General Acheampong even had a conversation with me during which he warned me as NUGS President to be careful of the leftist Lecturers and the 'Kojo Botsio group' under whose influence we operated. He told me that he knew Botsio wanted to overthrow him and so I was to be careful in my dealings with those people as they were leading us into doing things we did not fully understand.

6.5.1.4 The Acheampong Government also began to irritate the students with policies of which they disapproved. For instance, there was a suggestion that all students of tertiary institutions should undergo military training as National Service. This proposal eventually was transformed into the National Service Scheme as it now operates by the intervention of NUGS. Kabral Blay-Amihere gives the credit for the decision of NUGS to vote for National Service in the form in which it now is, to Professor Akilagkpa Sawyerr who addressed them at the NUGS Congress in 1973 and dissuaded the militant UCCC group from opting for military training.

6.5.1.5 At the 1973 Congress, NUGS formally adopted the ideology of Scientific Socialism as its official ideology. By this time, the Arab Oil crisis was underway and the economy had taken a turn for the worse. Rumours of corruption began to seep to the campuses, and students began to be unhappy with the government. The first major protest by students of the three universities was sparked off by an assault on a student of the University of Ghana, Kwesi Doe, by soldiers at Ho in the Volta Region. The act of the protesters, who failed to get to town from Legon as a result of a military blockade on the main Legon-Accra road, presaged more violent confrontations with the government later on.

6.5.1.6 In 1975, police brutalities on the campus of University of Ghana against striking workers of the university claimed a student-victim – Mekki Abbas, a Sudanese student of Legon Hall. The Police were using live ammunition to suppress the demonstration and a bullet killed the student who was not associated with the demonstration in any way. This incident caused great anger among the students and greatly embarrassed the government. The government sent a delegation to the Sudan to hand the body over to the Sudanese authorities, and gave a place on the delegation to the students. The students were represented by a Legon Hall student, Joe Dankwa who later became a police officer himself.

6.5.1.7 The 1975-76 academic year was full of restlessness among students. The economy was deteriorating whilst senior military officers were beginning to exhibit opulence in lifestyle, in a manner that did not match the general deteriorating economic conditions in the country. The students met the visiting United States Ambassador to the United Nations with protests at the Kotoka International Airport. The government was very unhappy about the incident and it reinforced the bad blood that had developed between it and the students. The government issued a stern warning to the student leadership to desist from such confrontations that had embarrassing international ramifications for the government. In May, 1976, the students had a major confrontation with the government over the deteriorating economic conditions. According to accounts of a contemporary student leader, this demonstration was meant to be an on-campus affair to present a petition to the Vice-Chancellor on the general conditions on campus and the deteriorating living conditions of the students. The government got wind of the demonstration and sent word to the student leaders to confine their activities to the campus. The leaders gave this assurance, but the demonstrators decided to hit the streets of Accra with their grievances. A confrontation with the police occurred at the university gates, dubbed “The battle of the Gate”, and a number of students sustained minor injuries.

6.5.1.8 The year 1977 opened with a report that at the 13th Annual NUGS Congress of the previous December, the Congress had adopted a resolution that called for the adoption of a One-Party Socialist system of government instead of the Union Government (Unigov) concept. However, within a few months thereafter, NUGS held a press conference at the National Cultural Centre in Kumasi at which it made a call on the Supreme Military Council (SMC) to lift the ban on party politics since it was busily campaigning for its own Unigov idea. In January, NUGS made an appeal to the government to help reinstate fifteen First Year students of University of Ghana who had been dismissed for attacking the Deputy Registrar of the University on 8th December, 1976. This led to a stand-off between the students and the university authorities. Eventually, some of the students were recalled, but the students wanted the sanctions lifted altogether. The university stuck to its guns and so the students appealed to the government.

6.5.1.9 At this time 50 students of UST had also been deprived of their residential status as punishment for breaching some university regulations. NUGS took up both causes and appealed to the government to step in, but this did not yield the desired response. In mid-

February, the students of University of Ghana began a boycott of lectures. They soon received support from the other universities and it looked as if the universities would be closed again, but the government added its voice to those urging the students to resume lectures by reminding them that boycotting lectures amounted to wasting taxpayers money. The stand-off finally ended when the Scholarships Secretariat gave the students a deadline of Friday, 25th February, to resume lectures, or forfeit their scholarships. The Legon SRC issued a statement calling off the boycott although a majority of the students had taken a vote to continue the boycott. The students did not forgive the government for not coming in to support them in their dispute with the university authorities.

6.5.1.10 On 13th May, 1977, there was another major student protest and this led to the closure of the universities on 14th May. The government proposed that the students would be redeployed in agricultural production since their protest was over the shortage of food and the high cost of living. This decision to close down the universities turned out to be a major mistake on the part of the government for the students dispersed from the campuses to the countryside and carried anti-government messages to all corners of the country. Although it was reported that the intervention of the National House of Chiefs, the Christian Council and the Catholic Secretariat, the Chairmen of University Councils and other well-meaning citizens had caused the government to relent and agree to reopen the universities after about four weeks on 10th June, this version is contested by the student leaders of the time who insist that the meetings were set up, but that they did not attend. The battle lines had clearly been drawn. Before the universities could resume serious work, more upheavals occurred as the government purported to retire two professors of the Medical School, Professors S R A Dodu and E A Badoe.

6.5.1.11 The government responded to these manifestations of instability, by sending intelligence operatives onto the campus to infiltrate the student movement. So heavy was the infiltration, that not only were many students recruited to spy on their fellow students and report on them, but some Military Intelligence personnel were actually assigned to the campus. Subsequently, three of their cars were burnt on the campus of University of Ghana. Although the students admitted to burning at least one of those vehicles, the reaction of the government later aroused the suspicion of the students, that not all of the three had, in fact, been burnt by students and that someone was trying to create an excuse for the students to be sent back home. Eventually, students were able to write their end of year examinations in September, instead of June, that academic year.

6.5.1.12 The year 1978, opened on a bad note in student-government relations. The 13th of January which was the anniversary of Gen Acheampong's coup d'état had, since 1973, become a public holiday marked by military parades. On 13th January, 1978, the students of University of Ghana decided to mark the day with a demonstration against the government on account of its attempt to remain in power by theory of Unigov. According to contemporary accounts, the demonstration was organized as a mock funeral procession on the campus, with students carrying a "coffin" containing the "mortal remains" of the SMC. The protesting students ended their march at the main gate of the university where they burnt the coffin. At the gate, the police had massed up in riot gear, believing that the students intended to go into town and whip up public sentiment against the government thereby causing disaffection towards it. The students hurled taunts at the police and a few were alleged to have thrown stones at two passing police vehicles. Later that day, the students in retaliation, kidnapped a policeman on guard duties at one of the banks on the campus and seized five rounds of ammunition. This “provocation” proved too much for the Police Command and an order was given for the police to attack the campus.

6.5.1.13 The police beat up the students, staff and even kitchen women in the dining halls indiscriminately. Several students were brutally assaulted and had to be rushed to the University Hospital. The university was closed that day and students were sent down after a two hour notice. The students suffered great hardship as there was no transportation and the university authorities were insisting that the students were to leave the campus or they would be forced out by the police. The academic year suffered great disruption. These events affected the two other universities at Kumasi and Cape Coast and therefore, all the universities were closed.

6.5.1.14 The government was determined to recapture the ammunition and so until 31st January, there was interruption of classes. On 5th February, 1978, representatives of the Police and Ministry of Defence went to search seven named students in the Halls for home-made explosives. They found none. After all these disturbances, more interruptions occurred in the third term which began on 14th April, because by that date some senior members were in detention.

6.5.1.15 There was, however, a curious aspect to the whole episode. This was because there seemed to be an insistence on the part of the student leaders to keep students off the campuses. Whenever the students were invited back onto the campus, the leaders declared “Campus is not safe” and that they were demanding “guarantees” of safety for the students yet they themselves remained on campus without being any the worse for it. Rumours began to circulate that students were being deliberately kept off-campus by the leaders. Available information now confirms that there was truth in the rumour. Had the student leaders compromised themselves with the government in order to prevent students massing up to demonstrate against the Unigov Referendum? Who were the student leaders who were also informants of the government as Blay-Amihere hints at when he writes:

As events and records at the Bureau of National Investigations were to prove later, some of the student leaders who accused my cousin (now Hon Freddie Blay, First Deputy Speaker of Parliament) and me of being government agents were indeed the real agents. After the 31st December [1981] coup d’etat the records of their duplicity and complicity were discovered?

6.5.1.16 Kofi Quantson, a senior intelligence operative, alleges that the government had set up a rival security network by recruiting its own agents who filed false reports against the students. He states categorically that:

Unigov agents filed a report to the Castle that there were three loud bomb blasts at the University of Ghana. That was the time when students had taken a confrontational stance against the Acheampong regime for a whole lot of reasons. Obviously to depict the students as violent and destructive, that very untrue report was secreted to the Castle. When we investigated we found that the report was fabricated by intelligence operatives drafted to join a Unigov conclave plotting to ensure that the outcome of the campaign resulted in government success. Actually there were no bomb blasts at the University at all. Some evil-minded persons had manufactured a report.

There is thus some indication that the government was actively involved in fomenting the unrest that disrupted the academic year.

6.5.1.17 The Universities re-opened for the completion of the academic year when the SMC was reconstituted after the Head of State, Gen Acheampong, had been removed in a palace coup on 5th July, 1978.

6.6 SMC II

6.6.1 NUGS

6.6.1.1 The University of Ghana finally resumed at the end of July and adopted a crash programme that made it possible for the academic year to be concluded at the end of October. It was on account of this that the academic year which should have been from October, 1978, to June, 1979, was transformed into January, 1979, to September, 1979, resulting in the students being in the middle of the academic year when the events of June, 1979, occurred.

6.6.1.2 During the 1979 academic year, there was not much disruption of a political nature on the university campuses. However, there were social difficulties. Water shortage in Legon was so serious that on 1st March, 1979, the University of Ghana had to be closed down. The government did not seem able to provide the social services necessary to sustain the operations of the university. However, the ban on party politics had been lifted for a return to civilian rule and people were hopeful that the future looked bright. The political parties were actively campaigning and students did not have any problem with the government. On Saturday, 5th May, the students of Commonwealth Hall, University of Ghana went to the Railway station to clean up the place as part of their annual Hall Week celebration. They got into an altercation with the police and one student, Adjei Barimah, was shot dead.

6.6.1.3 This event produced a student demonstration to the Castle, as the students demanded that a judicial enquiry be held into the circumstances surrounding the killing of the student. The committee that was eventually established was under the chairmanship of a High Court Judge, Mr Justice K A Agyepong. Students felt the committee was not sympathetic to the students' cause. The committee was still sitting when the 4th June Uprising occurred. These events may also explain the students reaction to the overthrow and punishment of their perceived "enemies".

6.6.1.4 The rise of the NUGS and the filling of the power vacuum helped to undermine the essence of the Hall System based on the “Oxbridge” model. Agbodeka opines that the effect of the decline of the system was that:

to the extent that Hall control over students was declining, to that extent the university was unwittingly becoming a means of congregating large numbers of young people with different backgrounds in one place with hardly any control apart from the influence of the student handbook which the majority, on admission, might have been too excited to read and digest”.

In addition to this development, “the habit of the government often dealing directly with students instead of through the university authorities further weakened the control [of the university authorities]” with little control and a government anxious to please the students, the students were set up as fodder for any agitator.

6.7
4TH JUNE 1979 – 23RD SEPTEMBER 1979:
ARMED FORCES REVOLUTIONARY COUNCIL (AFRC)

6.7.1 NUGS

6.7.1.1 The events of that day are constructed from contemporary accounts of students of the time. The 4th of June, 1979 was a rainy and cold Monday morning. There had been a blackout throughout the night of Sunday, 3rd June, to Monday, 4th June, 1979, with its attendant water shortage and the Legon campus was in a depressed mood. The announcement that there had been a coup d’état gingered up the campus. Several of the lecturers had not heard of the event. Contemporary accounts have it that the final year class (B A Part II) of Political Science explained their restlessness to their lecturer in the graphic words: “No light, no food, no water and no government” Later on that day Flying Officer Richard Forjoe and other Junior Officers came to the campus to solicit students’ support for the coup. At the frontage of Legon Hall, where quite a few students were congregated discussing the events unfolding in town, he, in a voice almost hoarse with screaming, informed the students that Flight Lieutenant Rawlings, who had then attained folk hero status on campus, had sent him to urge the students to go to town and jubilate in support.

6.7.1.2 With the outcome of the confrontation quite uncertain, many students thought it was somewhat foolhardy to go into town. Nevertheless a few students were rallied round when contact with the student leadership was made, and a bus was arranged to take them to Accra town to jubilate in support of the overthrow of the government. This incident which was reported in the Daily Graphic of 5th June, marked the first in a series of efforts to involve students as partners in the effort to “house-clean”.

6.7.1.3 The students entered the fray in full force and began issuing statements, and giving advice as well as direction to the AFRC. In the Daily Graphic of 9th June, it was reported that the Northern Students Union (NSU) had sent a statement containing a congratulatory message to the AFRC. The statement, signed by its national secretary

Napoleon Abdulai, recommended “the setting up of a government machinery to probe the activities of all top civil servants who have held office since 1972”. The report indicated that the union also “suggested that Managing Directors of all public corporations and other quasi government agencies and organizations should also be probed”. It further “stressed that the revolution must bring about radical transformation of society and suggested that all those who controlled large sectors of the economy should be forced to hand over any illegally acquired property to the poor.” The union then suggested:

a land reform policy under which all lands whether stool or skin should be confiscated without compensation. The NSU recommended that irrigated lands at Veia, Goliaga, Fubesi Valley & Dawhenya should be confiscated and redistributed to the poor.

6.7.1.4 In that statement, the NSU also had suggestions on the distribution of goods. It asked that “the names of all importers and import licences allocated them should be published by the Bank of Ghana in the dailies”. The union suggested that every family that has more than one car be deprived of the others. All Benz and BMW cars should be seized and turned into a nucleus of State Taxi Corp.” In the same statement, the union “warned the AFRC to beware of civilians who have been advising governments wrongly since 1957 and said the Council should let information on their activities flow freely to the public.”

6.7.1.5 On 7th June, NUGS, whose leadership was then at UST following a rotational system of leadership amongst the three universities of the time, issued a statement to the GNA signed by its President, Steve Akuffo. The statement contained an invitation to all NUGS Executive Committee members as well as all past Executive Committee members for the last three years to an Extraordinary Congress at Kumasi on Saturday, 9th June.

6.7.1.6 On 10th June, the extraordinary congress announced its suspension of the President of NUGS, Steve Akuffo, from his position on the ground that he was related to the deposed head of the SMC (II) Gen Akuffo. The Daily Graphic reported that the union believed that such suspension was in the president’s interest as well as in the interest of the union. At that same Congress, NUGS adopted a ten- point resolution in which it pledged its total support to the AFRC and urged “all progressive and democratic forces to support the Council’s revolutionary exercise”. The Congress observed that the house-cleaning exercise was to be accorded top “priority over all national programmes since the success of the Third Republic depended upon the success of the house-cleaning exercise”. The students further agreed with the statement of the Chairman of the AFRC that “A person is either part of the problem or part of the solution” Consequently, the students urged the Council that “all those who formed part of the problem should be eliminated in accordance with revolutionary discipline”.

6.7.1.7 On 12th June, the students of University of Ghana demonstrated through the principal streets of Accra in support of the revolution and ended the demonstration with a march to Burma Camp. The students chanted songs urging the AFRC to kill Gen Akuffo and “Mr” Acheampong, and carried placards, some of which bore the following inscriptions: “Let the Blood flow” “Akuffo no more, Kalabule no more” and “Probe Parties”. The group was addressed by the Chairman of AFRC who gave them assurances that the AFRC would translate the ideas that motivated them to seize power into reality, since “Ideas not translated into reality mean nothing”. A People’s Court was therefore promised, which would decide the fate of the “nation wreckers”. The newspaper further reported that the spokesman for NUGS, Sakkua Agambilla, explained why students had committed themselves to the revolution and stated that the students would support the AFRC as long as it stuck to its aspirations. The students urged the Council to shoot all those caught in the “net”, and encouraged the AFRC to resist pressure that some politicians were bringing to bear on the Council to hand over power to them.

6.7.1.8 During that address, persons who were in positions of authority were denounced as being guilty of acts that sabotaged the welfare of “ordinary Ghanaians” and the nation was told that since “power rests with the people and not the bosses” they were to “stand up and say ‘this is wrong. I cannot do it sir’”. Consequent upon the belief that it was people in authority who always gave bad instructions and got their subordinates to break the law and do other morally wrong acts against the public welfare, they were branded as “nation wreckers”, and the general populace was urged “to feed the Council with all the vital information (“hard, solid and concrete facts, nothing false”) about the nation wreckers”.

6.7.1.9 These demonstrations were obviously coordinated, for a report from Cape Coast in the same newspaper quoted a GNA report that more than 1,000 students of UCC had also demonstrated through the streets of Cape Coast for two hours in support of the AFRC. The students, according to the report, carried placards that read “clear managers and businessmen”, “workers expose your bosses”, “firing squad for nation wreckers”, “give workers good deal this time” and “watch out for imperialist manoeuvres”.

6.7.1.10 At this time, letters began to appear in the dailies written by persons who gave their addresses as being from educational institutions. These persons did not indicate whether they were students or teachers. These letters urged the government to use executions by firing squad as punishment for those who had indulged in kalabule. A letter bearing an Accra Polytechnic address and written by one E O Awudi, said:

I personally feel that the only drastic measures to clamp down on the Kalabule system of living is to introduce firing squad in the 3rd Republic. Even ancient Babylon which was a devoted Christian city underwent the law ‘An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth’ Why can’t Ghana adopt this method to bring sanity into our community. Ghanaians need an exemplary action. If two or three are fired to death it would serve as a lesson to the rest to refrain from their evil deeds.

6.7.2 REACTIONS TO EXECUTIONS

6.7.2.1 The first two Generals, “Mr” Acheampong and Maj-Gen E K Utuka, a former Commander of the Border Guards, were executed by firing squad on Saturday, 16th June. The execution in public of a former Head of State in this manner, was unprecedented and it was condemned in Ghana and abroad. Again on Tuesday, 26th June, 1979, two other former Heads of State, Gen Akuffo and Lt Gen A A Afrifa, as well as three members of the SMC – Maj-Gen Robert E A Kotei, Air Vice-Marshal George Y Boakyie, Rear Admiral Joy Amedume, and a former Commissioner for Foreign Affairs, Col Roger Felli, were executed. Thereafter, Ghana came under strong international pressure to end the executions. The Governments of United Kingdom, Nigeria, etc, fired protest statements to the AFRC.

6.7.2.2 A letter bearing a School address, Aburi Girls' Secondary School, and co-authored by two females - Caroline Acquah and Vida Nudekor – with no indication as to whether they were teachers or students, appeared in the Daily Graphic on 28th June. The letter expressed indignation at the reaction of foreign powers to the execution as follows:

We would like to comment on British interference on the execution published in the Daily Graphic dated June 27. The British should know that Ghana is no more their colony and is at liberty to do whatever she thinks is right for her provided it does not affect any other community. This execution is our own internal affair not theirs.

The first question we should ask them is the time we were eating yellow corn did they send us a better substitute? We of the lower class had to hang on with the eating of yellow corn whilst those of the higher class were eating delicious foods. We were being told in between their teeth to cope with the eating of the yellow corn which was meant to be given to pigs and for poultry feed.

6.7.2.3 This letter was instructive in airing some of the grievances of the time and indicated the direction of student response to the executions, but it is even more interesting for having been published on 28th June, in reaction to news published in the newspaper on 27th June. This means that the letter was written, sent to Daily Graphic, received and used the very same day, in time to appear in the newspaper the very next day after the publication to which it purported to react was published. This is a most unusual occurrence and creates the impression that it did not emanate from outside the newspaper.

6.7.2.4 At this time, NUGS also reacted to the criticism from the international community by complaining that the AFRC seemed to be losing the resolve to carry on with the “house-cleaning” after receiving international criticism and coming under international pressure to end the executions. In order to strengthen the resolve of the AFRC, NUGS sent a note to the AFRC encouraging it to stay the course, and urging it to keep up the tempo of the revolution. According to a Daily Graphic report, NUGS wrote that it had observed that the present house-cleaning exercise by the AFRC “has set a new precedent in African politics.” NUGS therefore urged the AFRC to keep up the revolutionary spirit, adding that it had no illusions that the Council would succeed. The students also noted that they believed that “through the series of stern actions we will have laid down a framework with all the necessary deterrents within which subsequent governments and future handlers of the peoples wealth will have to act.”

6.7.2.5 The Note further went on to give advice to the AFRC. In an obvious reference to the “National Week of Repentance” declared by the SMC I and II of Generals Acheampong and Akuffo respectively during periods of severe economic problems, the NUGS discounted the value of such measures and urged the AFRC to concentrate on a thorough “house-cleaning” of those who were most to blame for the woes of the country at the time, and that weeks of national repentance by previous governments had had no change whatsoever on the attitudes of the “looters of the peoples wealth”. With their patience exhausted by use of prayer to solve economic problems, NUGS advised that their revolution could only succeed if backed by action or by force. However, the students did not require the AFRC to continue in office after the “house-cleaning” and therefore requested it to hand over power to civilian politicians immediately after cleansing the body politic of its “nation wreckers”.

6.7.2.6 The Note also expressed disappointment of the students at the slow tempo with which the AFRC was enforcing its promises and warning that “any further delay can neither be in favour of the Council’s image nor in the ultimate interest of the common man who has suffered for far too long”. The students also accused Ghana’s neighbours of conspiring with the “nation wreckers”, “When our timber, cocoa, diamond, rice, maize and essential imported commodities were being smuggled to these countries by the few local enemies of the people of Ghana these good neighbours of ours actively collaborated with them”, the students charged. They stated that the foreign powers were protesting about the “house-cleaning exercise” “because they know full well that if this clean-up exercise succeeds it would cut off their supply of smuggled goods.” NUGS also accused the western powers of showing concern because of the zeal with which the executed officers had implemented directives of the International Monetary Fund “and other imperialist organizations”.

6.7.2.7 Since this Note was not an open letter and therefore not originally sent to the media but to the AFRC directly, it must have found its way into the public domain by a deliberate act of someone, to achieve a particular effect – to show that the young people of Ghana expected even more of the AFRC than it had already done. This was therefore intended to discount the value of the voices that had been raised in protest against the executions. Some of these were the Acting Editor of the Daily Graphic, Ms Elizabeth Ohene, who had written a powerful editorial which criticized the AFRC for the executions; the GBA; the Christian Council and the Catholic Secretariat; and a few others who had protested against the secret trials of the AFRC and the executions.

6.7.2.8 On Saturday, 30th June, the Chairman of the AFRC, Flt Lt Rawlings, in a dawn broadcast, informed the nation and “friends of Ghana” that there would be no more executions of people convicted by the Special Courts of the AFRC. Instead, such persons would be sentenced to penal servitude on penal farms and their properties confiscated. Flt Lt Rawlings stated that the AFRC “had taken note of the special appeals for restraint from the world community especially those from sister African states”. He assured Ghana’s friends that Ghana had not abandoned the rule of law and its adherence to the principles of United Nations Declarations on Human Rights, but appealed to them to understand Ghana's peculiar situation. He also appealed to Ghanaians to understand the situation.

6.7.3 STUDENTS PROTEST DECISION TO END EXECUTIONS

6.7.3.1 This 30th June announcement of the decision to end the executions did not go down well with the students. Believing that it was not just foreign "interference" that had caused the termination of the executions but also internal criticism from Ms Elizabeth Ohene, the Ghana Bar Association, etc. The students took to the streets to express their rage at the effect of those criticisms on the plan to execute more people. Early on Monday, 2nd July, students of the three universities began a series of demonstrations. The Daily Graphic carried the following report from Kumasi under the headline:

"STUDENTS BACK SECRET TRIALS":

Students of UST yesterday paraded through the principal streets of Kumasi to demonstrate their support for the secret trials and executions by firing squad of the eight top officers of the Ghana Armed Forces.

They chanted revolutionary songs such as 'let the blood flow' and carried branches of trees and placards some of which read 'Farming not a punishment, kill them all' 'Down with foreign pressures' 'Lawyers do not pay taxes – away with them' 'Nigeria hoard your oil – we shall clean our house'. 'Let the blood flow. A half revolution is no revolution'

Other placards read 'Elizabeth Ohene Acting Editor must go' 'Can Col Slater weed? Kill him', 'Bar Association, to hell with you' and 'For heavens sake kill'.

The students ended the parade at the Ghana National Cultural Centre where the President of the SRC Mr. Ben Odame handed a resolution to the Commander of the Fourth battalion of Infantry Capt. J.K. Attipoe to be forwarded to the AFRC.

The eight-point resolution which was read before being handed over condemned in no uncertain terms the unwarranted interference in the national affairs of Ghana by countries and bodies who have never shown any concern for the suffering people of this country and who can have no appreciation of the revolution process which is unfolding in this country today'.

It also called on the AFRC to take firm and revolutionary action 'against all the local reactionary forces' like the Ghana Bar Association, the Christian Council of Ghana, the Catholic Secretariat, the so-called political pressure groups defending only the propertied people because it is our contention that all these groups are mainly afraid of the house cleaning exercise for their own reason and have no concern whatsoever for the poor starving people.

It demanded that the AFRC should not relent the task of national housecleaning, which should embrace every sector of the society including the university and that allegations that certain student leaders in the past collaborated with the Acheampong government be investigated and those found guilty made to face the same fate as other saboteurs.

The resolution further demanded that the death penalty be reinstated immediately for ‘no revolution can afford to do without capital punishment and moreover, penal labour is hardly any encouragement to our farmers and labourers and furthermore, the constitution will not permit penal labour after October 1 1979.

It further called on the AFRC to remove Elizabeth Ohene immediately for her counter revolution and treacherous activities using the Graphic to mobilize forces against the revolution in general and the AFRC in particular. It urged the total support of the students for the AFRC and all progressive elements with the GAFF and wish to make it clear that if it is true that power truly belongs to the people, then only the people can determine the course of the revolution and the AFRC must not yield to pressure from any quarters without the people’s concern [sic]’

Captain Attipoe assured the students that he would forward the contents of the resolution and another resolution from the Armed Forces in Kumasi since the contents were similar. He stressed that in all revolutions, corrupt elements must be weeded out. He appealed to the students to come out with information about corrupt persons in the society to enable the AFRC to take revolutionary action against them.

6.7.3.2 The following day, about 200 students of the University of Ghana also took to the streets. In a demonstration through the principal streets of Accra that was reported to have lasted seven hours, the students of University of Ghana made the same demands as those of UST the previous day. The students protested against the punitive measures being adopted by Nigeria and other countries in their protest against the measures adopted by the AFRC to do its “house-cleaning”. The students chanted war songs and carried placards bearing various inscriptions such as “Shut up Nigeria”, “Expose British hypocrisy”, “Let no nation stand in our way”, “Hands off Ghana Imperialists”, “Down with isolationist policy”, “Graphic against the revo”, “Petrol or no petrol the revo must continue”, “People of Ghana don’t bow to external pressure”, etc. The students then went to various places to present protest notes to the following foreign embassies and organisations: the Nigerian High Commission, American Embassy, GBA, the Judiciary and the Graphic Corporation. The students were also reported to have declared their further intention of presenting similar notes to the Embassies of Upper Volta (now Burkina Faso), Benin, Togo and those of the European Economic Community (now EU) countries. They also named the Christian Council, Catholic Secretariat and the Makola Women’s Union as organizations they were upset with for their criticism.

6.7.3.3 In the protest notes, the students expressed disgust and serious concern about the attitude of the countries concerned since their decision to mount an economic blockade against Ghana was interpreted as an act of interference “in the internal affairs of Ghana”. To Nigeria in particular, the students wondered why she, a longtime close neighbour, should place an oil embargo on Ghana for carrying out a necessary house cleaning exercise. The students pointed out that the then leadership of the Federal Republic of Nigeria was afraid that similar events would be carried out in that country hence the punitive measures since the oil wealth of Nigeria had not benefited the ordinary Nigerian, but like Ghana had gone into the pockets of top military and public officers and foreign interests.

6.7.3.4 At the British High Commission and the American Embassy, the national flags of the two countries were torn into shreds. The students in their protest note addressed to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II through the British High Commissioner, stated that from recent developments, they were convinced that the British government decided to accord recognition to the AFRC in order to protect its trade links with Ghana. They also pointed out that they believed Britain's protestations about human rights in Ghana were meaningless since the protest was not backed by action to meet the basic needs of the people in terms of food, housing, clothing, transport and education. The students also drew the attention of the British Government to their own acts of oppression of human rights in Northern Ireland, Nigeria, South Africa and Rhodesia. Although the demonstration was described as peaceful and decent by Edward Holmes, Chargé d'Affaires at the American Embassy, his only regret was that the students had torn the American flag into pieces.

6.7.3.5 The newspapers reported further that, as "the students trooped to the city centre they were cheered and joined by onlookers including market women, workers and children." The demonstration ended up at El-Wak stadium where they were addressed by Flt Lt J.J. Rawlings and other AFRC members. At the El-Wak Stadium, they demanded that Miss Elizabeth Ohene, Acting Editor of Daily Graphic should be dismissed for her views on the executions and the secret trials. To this demand, Flt Lt Rawlings stated that he had respect for Elizabeth Ohene for her past stand on national issues, and so appealed to the students to leave her alone as she was free to speak her mind. He indicated that the Council had no quarrel to pick with the stand taken by the Daily Graphic in its editorials about some measures adopted by the Council in its "house-cleaning exercise".

6.7.3.6 As regards the other "revolutionary methods" for sanctioning wrongdoers, the Chairman took the opportunity to address the concerns expressed by the students in the note sent to the AFRC by NUGS a few days earlier. He therefore assured the students that there would "be no turning back in the Council's revolutionary actions aimed at redeeming the masses" from the economic difficulties they were labouring under, although the Council had had to re-assess its position on some aspects. He asked the students not to misconstrue this tactical retreat to mean "a loss of revolutionary fervor". Chairman Rawlings urged Ghanaians "to stand as solidly as one man behind the revolution", and gave the assurance that "if we are taking some steps which fall short of the expectations of some of you, that is not because we are pulling back." He stated that as they were good revolutionaries, they knew every action of theirs would bring reaction and therefore they had to pause at some point to assess their position so that they could evolve the correct policy to deal with particular situations in which they found themselves. The Chairman also pointed out that they would let down the revolution if they did not analyze their strengths and weaknesses. "To deal a sharp blow to the internal and external enemies who want to nip our revolution in the bud”, the Chairman cautioned Ghanaians to consider that “even the little that we have done has brought counter measures against us and the people have to understand so that when they feel the pinch, they will know why they are suffering ...” The students accepted this explanation and Vadis Kamassah, the President of the SRC of the University of Ghana, pledged the support of the students to the Council in its “house-cleaning” exercise.

6.7.3.7 On 8th July, the Chairman, whilst on a visit to Mampong in the Ashanti Region, paid a visit to the campus of UST and addressed staff and students on a “meet the people tour”. During his address, Chairman Rawlings attributed the greater part of the country’s present economic and governmental woes to some businessmen who had hidden behind the curtain to dupe the country through trade malpractices and other anti-social activities. He also criticized the past leadership of the country for the disorganized state of the country over the previous 22 years since Independence and accused them of mismanagement.

6.7.3.8 On the night of 12th July, Chairman Rawlings also addressed students of the University of Ghana on the campus. At that meeting he announced that the trial of the “corrupt people who are in military custody” had begun the previous night, i.e. the night of Wednesday, 11th July. Chairman Rawlings further appealed to them to assist in bringing home for trial all those who were on the run, and to exercise patience since caution should be taken in “drawing the line”. He also explained why it was necessary to end the executions because “if the gun were to be used, all of us would be victims because for five years I used my weapons to protect them while they raped the country.” He, however, gave the students the assurance that those who were being held would be severely punished for ruthlessly reducing Ghanaians to where they had got to at the time. He also alerted the students as to the possibility of fraudsters “taking advantage of the revolution for their own selfish ends”, and asked students to be vigilant in exposing them. He exhorted students to eschew cowardice and be bold to tell any person, group of persons or people in authority whose actions were inimical to the interests of the nations to put a stop to their “dubious ways.”

6.7.3.9 Following students protests at “western interference” in Ghana’s internal affairs, the All Africa Students Union (AASU) based in Accra and manned by Ghanaians, issued a statement signed by K. Gyan Apenteng, supporting the stand of NUGS on the “house-cleaning”. The statement condemned western interference in the internal affairs of Ghana and blamed the activities of “past military regimes and their political alliances who did everything to impoverish the masses of the people install a dictatorship and entrench neocolonialism and destroy the base for popular change.” AASU also stated that in appreciation of the political situation prevailing in Ghana, it had decided to hail “the positive democratic gains” in the interest of the people of Ghana. It went further to give the assurance that “in as far as the present situation in Ghana reflects the aspirations and genuine hopes of the people, the positive nature of the measures adopted by the AFRC cannot be denied”. AASU also explained that “the situation presented the revolutionary forces the enormous potentiality and diverse perspectives” and consequently, it assured the student, youth and people of Ghana of its support against imperialism and neo-colonialism.

6.7.4 MOBILISING STUDENTS FOR LABOUR

6.7.4.1 The student movement at the UCC decided to take a two-week break from their studies and go out to the rural areas to spread the message of the revolution and explain its tenets to the rural people. This decision by students of UCC was communicated to the public in a statement issued in Accra on 6th July, and signed by the President of the SRC, John S Achuliwor. According to the SRC President, the “students’ decision to undertake such an important national assignment was to ensure that the gains being made by the people towards creating a just society are in no way reversed.” Although the students recognized that such a move would affect their own studies they were willing to make that sacrifice as they were of the firm belief “that no efforts should be spared in thwarting the efforts of those who seek to turn back the moving hands of history.” The statement also informed the public that during the period of the assignment, the students would assist the authorities in locating piled up foodstuffs in food growing areas and would be so organized that where possible, they would assist in even the harvesting of food crops. They would also appeal to the producers of food to feel free to bring their produce to the market without fear of molestation or otherwise. This statement was obviously in response to the shortage of food on the market as a result of the fear of molestation from soldiers. This move to quit the campus in favour of conscientising the people in the rural areas was, according to Professor Kofi Awoonor, then a mentor of the student movement, unrealistic given the fact:

“that ninety-five percent of these students did not know what a revolution is. The exercise itself revealed a degree of arrogance on the part of the naïve idealists who actually believed that from the privileged citadels of bourgeois life, they could carry messages of a revolution to a depressed peasantry that had long been exploited...”

6.7.4.2 The AFRC approved this “initiative” of the students, and issued a terse notice on 11th July, informing the public that the students had offered to go to rural areas to explain the revolution to the rural people and that they were to be given any necessary assistance by regional and district authorities. However, on 14th July, the AFRC issued another notice directing the students of UCC to return to campus to complete the academic year. The notice was contained in a statement by the AFRC to the effect that it had come to its notice that students of the university had left their campus to explain objectives of the revolution to the people, and that since the students left without taking their scheduled exams this would disrupt the university’s programmes affecting new students now in the sixth form. The AFRC further noted that the students had already collected their feeding allowance for the rest of the academic term, and a late return to the campus would mean finding additional money to maintain them. The statement then expressed the appreciation of the AFRC for the support and enthusiasm of the students for the moral revolution, although it was of the view that the immediate aim of the students ought to be the completion of their studies.

6.7.4.3 The SRC of UCC promptly issued a statement denying that students of the university had already collected their feeding allowances for the rest of the term as published in the statement of the AFRC. The SRC with a degree of ire, stated that “the students knowing they will need this money after the programme did not take their feeding allowances for even two weeks. Their return to school had become a sore point with them.

6.7.5 RE-AFFIRMING THE BONDS OF FRIENDSHIP

6.7.5.1 The students of UCC became disaffected as a result of the decision of the AFRC in respect of their public education campaign. The announcement of the AFRC that they were to abandon their public education effort and return to campus because they had already collected their feeding allowance for the rest of the academic year, greatly offended the students. The AFRC tried to assuage the feelings of the students by explaining its position. At the 18th July meeting of students vacationing in Accra. Capt Oduro-Kwarteng, a representative of the AFRC, took the opportunity to congratulate the students of UCC for their initiative in “embarking on a worthwhile revolutionary duty countrywide in support of the national clean-up exercise”. He then explained to the students there gathered, that the AFRC had “no sinister motives” behind the decision to ask the students to return to their studies on campus.

6.7.5.2 When the students of UCC returned to campus, the SRC issued an indignant statement denying the fact of their decision being disruptive of the university’s programme, and the allegation that they had already collected their allowances for the rest of the year be taken on the matter, “and it should be clear to you in whose interest it is for such distortions to arise.” The Chairman went to the campus of UCC and interacted with the students. He declared that the AFRC had accepted responsibility for the statement put out in its name and commended the SRC for coming out with the “offensive distortion”. He went on to blame the media because, according to him, publications such as these were put out by enemies of the revolution who gave the wrong information to the AFRC, and attributed ulterior motives to the person since that untruth had succeeded in bringing the public education effort to an end. These same allegations later appeared in the readers’ letters column of 25th July issue of the Ghanaian Times, in a letter authored by one Kweku Arhin Dennis of UCC. The letter stated:

With no one coming out to accept having given false information to the AFRC, I take the opportunity to call on the AFRC to be wary of detractors and counter-revolutionaries who are determined to break the students support for the moral revolution...as we return to campus with our spirits rather low we reconcile ourselves to our belief that ‘It is easier to kill a revolutionary but not at all easy to kill a revolution.

6.7.5.3 This reaction from the students greatly alarmed the AFRC and the Chairman quickly paid a visit to the campus of UCC on 20th July. The Ghanaian Times banner-headlines screamed: “AFRC-STUDENTS BOND IS SOLID” and the Daily Graphic carried the banner-headline: “LET’S MOVE TOGETHER ...TO FIGHT COUNTER-REVOLUTIONARIES”. The newspapers reported that the Chairman of the AFRC had explained to the students that it was the acts of counter-revolutionaries who were trying to split the AFRC-students bond that had caused the decision to abort the public education campaign. The Chairman assured the students that the bond was stronger than what the distortions could destroy. The Chairman denied that it was the AFRC that put out the notice requesting the students to return to campus. In his own words, “the recently publicized statement attributed to the AFRC and widely publicized in the media seems to me as one of those attempts”, but, he went on:

We respect the initiatives students take because we know that we share common cause with you. Everybody knows how much students have stood in the forefront of resistance to tyranny in this country and how much since May 13 1977 you struggled relentlessly against corrupt and bankrupt leadership in this country... This is what unsettled those who wanted the revolution to be stillborn. They have adopted the strategy of inventing views and statements in the name of the Council in order to break the revolutionary solidarity between us ...I assure you that, we are investigating the circumstances surrounding the issuing of this statement so that appropriate steps can as the one the UCC students found offensive ... and that this was the work of ‘counter-revolutionary elements’ [who] still do not see eye to eye with us in the bureaucracy in the mass media who we have been trying very hard to educate.

6.7.5.4 To prove to the students that sections of the media had counter-revolutionary agenda, the Chairman complained that he had been misquoted on an issue affecting workers in a manner calculated to cause disaffection among the workers towards the AFRC. He took the opportunity to correct the impression created by the media in respect of the story affecting the workers, and also went on to assert that, “We knew too that our openness in not hiding our views or our actions in respecting the freedom of the press and not wishing to take action against even those who openly attack us is probably being abused by some.”

6.7.5.5 The Chairman used the opportunity to assure the students that the AFRC valued their support and initiative “in seeking to advance the revolution” and told them that, “Even while you are on campus there is much you can do for us by way of suggestion, even criticism where we seem to be going wrong.” The meeting ended with the SRC President, Achuliwor, suggesting to Chairman Rawlings to direct an announcement to be made to disabuse the minds of the public that students of UCC had collected their allowances for the rest of the term.

6.7.5.6 There is no indication that this announcement correcting the earlier “offensive” statement that the students had already collected their allowances was ever made. Despite the degree of unhappiness with the announcement, the students accepted the explanation that the earlier announcement was the work of “counter-revolutionary elements”. This hiccup in organization was smoothened over and partnership was restored after the students were made to appreciate that such incidents were to be expected from counter-revolutionaries.

6.7.5.7 The initiative of the students of UCC in going out of campus to do public education had exposed the utility-potential of the students in galvanizing the citizenry into publicly demonstrating support for the revolution. Their subsequent withdrawal to complete the academic year created a vacuum which had to be filled. The plan to mobilize all students on vacation in the towns and cities was then born. The plan caused the government to announce arrangements for the drawing up of an official programme in which all students would actively participate during the vacation. Efforts were made to draft other students such as polytechnic students, trainee teachers, secondary school students, etc, to replace the university students who had to return to campus to complete the academic year.

6.7.5.8 The move to involve students in activities to promote the revolution had support from various personalities within and without the student movement. On Thursday, 12th July, an appeal to students to volunteer to spread the message of the revolution was published in the Ghanaian Times. The message was from the President of the Brong-Ahafo Students Union Kusi Aborah who urged students to see it as their civic duty to “educate the masses” in the rural areas. According to him: “It behoves every student to voluntarily educate the people on issues at stake because the revolution is not one man’s responsibility.” It is instructive that at the meeting at which this appeal was made students of UCC were present, as well as a director of operations for the Brong-Ahafo, Wilson Benneh.

6.7.5.9 The 13th July issue of Ghanaian Times in reporting the meeting between the Chairman of the AFRC and University of Ghana students at Legon, the newspaper gave a cryptic report thus:

He [the Chairman] asked them to fight in a relentless war to protect the economy by exposing the profiteers, hoarders and smugglers, but left it to them to decide on when they plan to go to the villages to enlighten the farmers on the aims of the revolution and bring foodstuffs to the market centres.

6.7.5.10 In that same 13th July issue of the newspaper, an appeal was made by Kofi Lamptey, a former Secretary of NUGS, while addressing Oguaa Students Union at the Cape Coast Town Hall, for secondary school students to take over from university students in educating the rural dwellers. According to the report sourced from Ghana News Agency (GNA): “The former secretary asked the students to be in the vanguard of the present revolution whose objectives are in line with the aims of the struggle waged by NUGS a few years back.” This was the clearest articulation of the reason why NUGS saw itself as the partner of the AFRC in the enterprise of effecting societal change. Consequently, the need for the students to do their fair share of the work involved in the task of achieving this change in Ghana became pre-eminent. Since the students could be found in every nook and cranny of the country and had in fact been used to great effect in the anti-Unigov campaign of the previous year it was not surprising that their contribution to the “revolution” was cast in terms of their obligation to spread the message of the “revolution”.

6.7.5.11 The plan to mobilize the students was put into motion. The AFRC representative organized a meeting of students from secondary schools, training colleges, and Polytechnics on holidays in Accra. The students, reported to number over two thousand, (2000) were addressed by Fg Offr Forjoe and Capt Oduro-Kwarteng both representatives of the AFRC. Fg Offr Forjoe called on all student organizations in the country to mobilize their members to carry the objectives of the revolution to the rural folk. He explained the need for such education by stating that it would “enable the students play an effective role in lifting the country from the present chaotic stage.” He also told the students that the revolution was meant to better the lives of Ghanaians and called for their wholehearted support since they, as future leaders of the nation, would benefit from its success. The AFRC representative also asked the students to assist in the “clean up” effort which had started from the top, but which had to go down the lower rungs of society. He then advised them to start the “clean up” from their own homes and advise their own “kalabule mothers and fathers into repenting and turning over a new leaf.” He was also reported to have further advised the students “If you know your mother is a cheat and your father is kalabule, you better report them now.” An appeal was then made to female students to spend their vacation in more useful enterprises such as “cooking for their male counterparts who are spreading the revolutionary gospel to the people rather than putting on gorgeous dresses with the aim of enticing the corrupt managing directors and managers.”

6.7.5.12 The Daily Graphic’s report of that meeting stated that at that same meeting, six working groups based upon specified residential areas - Tema, Madina-Legon, Nsawam, Winneba, Oda and Accra Central were formed. The working groups elected leaders to join the Interim Co-ordination Committee to plan strategy for their operations. The importance of that meeting and the fact that it had the highest political support, was demonstrated by the fact that the Chairman and other members of the AFRC put in an appearance at the meeting. The students thus received assurances that the speeches and other operational plans were authorized by the AFRC. Thus from a volunteer programme, the decision by the students became a national programme for conscripting the students to give free labour.

6.7.5.13 The newspapers began to fill their pages with reports of student-activities in support of the revolution, but the fact that these activities were organized under official authority was underplayed as information to the public sought to portray the students as partners in the patriotic act of returning Ghana to the moral path. The newspapers failed to disclose the link between the meeting of 18th July, at the Accra Community Centre, where students had been organized into groups based on residential addresses, and the subsequent activities that the students undertook. This omission thereby created the impression in the public mind that the activities of the students was voluntary and on the students’ own initiative. However, the evidence of official organization was incontrovertible, as demonstrated by this notice titled “Student Volunteers” carried in the Daily Graphic of 27th July, which appealed to the public to support and gave a State-House address for receipt of donations in the following terms:

The Greater Accra students have volunteered to use their holidays in educating the public and assuring farmers to harvest their crops in connection with the campaign to spread the June 4 Revolution. A statement from the office of student affairs and signed by Pilot Officer [sic] Fordjoe said the student volunteers would welcome donations from organizations, firms, corporations and individuals.

The official nature of the publication as well as the existence of an office to coordinate student affairs was not left in doubt since the address of the student office provided in the notice indicated that it was based at State House in Accra.

6.7.5.14 From Koforidua came a report that the AFRC representative on student affairs addressed a meeting of students in Koforidua at the Hotel Eredec on 1st August. He urged them to stand behind the revolution and educate the rural people on its aims. He advised the students whose parents were kalabule to denounce them to their friends if they could not do so to the authorities themselves. He also advised those whose parents had already been caught in the net to put away sentiment and concentrate on supporting the revolution.

6.7.5.15 Students in various parts of the country were reported assisting in various ways to achieve the objects of the revolution. In a 2nd August report in the Daily Graphic, students were reported to have worked for five hours, helping to harvest some corn on the farms of Mankoadze Commercial Farms at Gomoa Abaasa. The harvesting group numbering over 200 students and 370 women volunteers from Mankoadze village, was under the Command of Fg Offr J M K Akom-Mensah AFRC representative at Swedru. The group of volunteers was later joined by about eighty “queue contractors” I e conscripts who had been rounded up in different parts of Swedru town for being in queues because queues breed kalabuleism which the AFRC wanted to discourage.”

6.7.5.16 Although there was no documentary evidence of a specific decision by the press or political authorities to manipulate public opinion by portraying students as patriotic and imbued with public spiritedness, the newspapers, then state-owned and government-controlled, began to report on the activities of the students regularly. On a daily basis, students appeared in the newspapers engaged in one activity or the other. The two newspapers reported on the same incidents, often quoting the same portion of documents presented or giving prominence to interviews that explained the rationale for engaging in that activity as “the students’ contribution towards the success of the revolution.”

6.7.5.17 In the newspaper reports, prominence was also given to the leaders of the student group, thus creating a platform for other students to emulate the worthy example of the others. For instance, the Daily Graphic reported that more than 400 students from various secondary schools and technical colleges and training colleges on holidays in Accra conducted a clean up campaign around community centers, main bus stop, Tema Lorry station and Department of National Lotteries. It then went ahead to name the leaders of the volunteers as Elvis Amedekar and Miss Gifty Dadson, and added a few words from the subsequent interviews. The same pattern was repeated in several other instances, such as a report from Ho, which stated that more than 80 students spending their vacation at Ho under the leadership of G S K Agrah, had undertaken a five-day voluntary labour programme by working on a canteen being built by the Public Works Department. This prominence in the media was bound to be flattering to students, who, like most young people must have been fascinated by seeing themselves in print and it created an incentive for more activism from more and more students.

6.7.6 VIGILANTISM BY STUDENTS

6.7.6.1 Students were reported to be engaged in field operations with uniformed personnel of the Armed Forces. In the Daily Graphic was a report that a combined team of students and Border Guards had impounded one hundred and ten cartons of fish allegedly being hoarded in a cold store at Kaneshie, Accra. The owner was arrested and taken away for questioning. The leader of the students was named as Alex Asare, and he was interviewed as to the circumstances of the arrest and seizure of the fish by L/Cpl Osei Owusu. The same group also intercepted a mummy truck carrying fourteen cartons of fish without any waybill. 4.00 a kilo. The fish was seized, sold to the public at the controlled price of and proceeds paid to the owner. A similar report from Kpando indicated that a combined team of army personnel and students had impounded ten truckloads of fish and that nineteen women had been arrested. The newspaper reported that the students had also taken the women to a nearby classroom and given them more than six hours of lectures on good citizenship.

6.7.6.2 From Ketu District came a report that student volunteers of the Dzodze Students Union had recovered assorted goods either abandoned or hidden in the bush by smugglers at Dzodze in Ketu district. The items included 80 drums of local gin and three bags of granulated sugar. J W K Achilles Akyea, leader of the volunteers and a student of the University of Ghana, explained to the press that they had received a tip off that a group of smugglers had hidden some goods in the bush apparently to smuggle them into Noefe in the Republic of Togo. Consequently, they went into action, and successfully retrieved the goods. The Dzodze Students Union also announced that it had embarked upon a one month civic education of people in the Ketu District.

6.7.6.3 These reports demonstrated the extent of student vigilantism. However, there were muted protests as the following report from Tema demonstrated: the report was to the effect that the activities of the students caused some anxiety and concern among members of the public. Students were accused of harassing market women and thus causing a food shortage which was described as “artificial” because the women were afraid that if they displayed their wares, “they would be subjected to humiliation at the hands of their children [ie students young enough to be their children].” The report went thus:

Students assigned for price control have been asked to go about their assignment with restraint so as not to scare food sellers from bringing their wares to the markets. Egya Ansah, General Secretary of the Tema Voluntary Club said much as the public appreciates the efforts of students in enforcing price control as their contribution to the success of the revolution, the mode of operation of some of them was scaring the women from bringing their wares to the market places for sale. Complaints have been made to the club at Tema that some students dictated their own prices and that when those prices were not complied with, the sellers were harassed. This Mr. Ansah said had resulted in food sellers being reluctant to display their wares for fear that they would be subjected to humiliation at the hands of their children.

6.7.6.4 Another report demonstrated that not only had student vigilantism been authorized and facilitated by the national authorities, but that difficulties were also addressed by officials of the new government at high official levels. Thus, when some of the students who had gone into the field to enforce price controls and do public education at Winneba began to experience difficulties with the general public, they complained to the AFRC and a meeting was held at Winneba with student representatives and heads of departments to discuss the issue. At the end of the meeting, Wing Commander AK Tamakloe of the Air Force Headquarters, was reported to have urged all, and in particular, traditional rulers and certain governmental agencies such as the police, to appreciate the work of students who had undertaken to spread the aims of the revolution and to give them much needed assistance. The students on their part were advised to stick to checking profiteering, hoarding, lateness and malingering. This advice had become necessary because some of the students were taking over the functions of the police in checking crime. In thus calling a meeting of “heads of departments” of government agencies to address these issues, anyone who doubted the degree of political support the students activities enjoyed was educated on that score.

6.7.7 THE STUDENTS’ SWANSONG

6.7.7.1 The AFRC was due to leave office on 24th September, 1979, when power was to be handed over to President Limann. On 21st September, 1979, the students organized demonstrations ostensibly to congratulate the AFRC and thank them for a job well done. Thus, they appeared to have maintained their support for the AFRC to the very end. The essence of the student demonstrations, was captured by the Daily Graphic in the headline: WELL DONE AFRC, and the Ghanaian Times as STUDENT VOLUNTEERS THANK AFRC. The newspapers reported that thousands of students from the secondary, technical and tertiary institutions had taken part in a peaceful demonstration through the principal streets of Accra, in appreciation of the efforts of the AFRC in bringing sanity into the country’s economy. They carried placards some of which read “WELL DONE AFRC”, “GHANA IS NOT A GOLDMINE”, “R.I.P. KALABULE”, “TAX INVADERS SHOULD BE WARNED”, “EDUCATION SHOULD BE A RIGHT NOT A PRIVILEGE”, “THE FIRE IS STILL BURNING”, “KALABULE YOU ARE NOT CHRIST YOU CAN’T RESURRECT” and “LIMANN BEWARE!”. The demonstration started from the Liberation Circle through Accra Central to the “Revolutionary Square” (El-Wak Stadium) where the students were addressed by Fg Offr Fordjoe, Liaison Officer for Student Affairs.

6.7.7.2 The students also pledged support for the incoming government of the People’s National Party (PNP) under Dr. Hilla Limann, but sounded a warning that the youth were now wide awake from their slumber and were in no way going to compromise principles.

They therefore hoped Dr. Limann and his team would do all they could to make life worth living for the people. They urged Dr. Limann's government to continue, in the revolutionary rhetoric of the time "without fail", the "house-cleaning" exercise as promised. In an interview, Alfred Vanderpuijje, spokesman for the students said the AFRC had done exceedingly well by eradicating to some extent kalabule and other social vices. He observed that the sure way to eliminate these evils is "rigid and frequent checks on public officials and traders' activities." Later, amidst singing of mourning songs, the students burned a coffin to signify the end of "kalabuleism" in Ghana.

6.7.7.3 The demonstration was not spontaneous, and appears to have been organized by the AFRC, or at least with its approval. This is because at the end of it, the report indicated that "the demonstration started from the Liberation Circle through Accra Central (a very "official route") to the "Revolutionary Square" (El-Wak Stadium) where the students were addressed by Fg Offr Fordjoe, [AFRC] Liaison Officer for Student Affairs". Clearly the route used by the students was a pre-determined route. The Liaison Officer had to know about where and when it was expected to end in order to be present to address the students, and the fact that it ended at the so-called "Revolutionary Square" (El-Wak Stadium) and not at the Castle or at Burma Camp was significant. It is in the light of this reality that the warning to President Limann to carry on the "house-cleaning" was ominous.

6.7.7.4 The news reports of the time gave little prominence to a new development that showed signs of the beginning of the end of the "honeymoon" between the students and the AFRC. Indeed, the Daily Graphic did not publish that aspect of the demonstrations. However, the Ghanaian Times gave a cryptic report of another aspect of the demonstration. The AFRC had announced an increase in boarding fees for the new academic year for secondary and technical schools. This did not go down well with the student volunteers because some of them were in secondary school. Therefore, during the demonstration to "thank the AFRC", a cryptic report in the Ghanaian Times confirmed that a "section of the students also demonstrated in protest against the increase in the boarding fees."

6.7.7.5 From Tema, the GNA reported that the Students Union had issued a statement criticizing the government's approval of increase in boarding fees 231.00, for secondary and technical schools in the public $\text{c}\text{150.00}$ to cfrom system. They complained that there had been an increase the previous year and therefore the new increases were not justifiable. The students, however, blamed "some top officials of the Ministry of Education and the Ghana Education Service" for trying to discredit the AFRC by convincing the council to approve such 'killing and prohibitive school fees'.

6.7.7.6 This was an ominous sign that suggested that the "honeymoon" between the two groups may have ended if the AFRC had remained in office longer than it did. The disappointment of the students was understandable because only six weeks before then, the AFRC had issued a warning to proprietors of private schools to decrease their school fees "before the government steps in to do it for them" and that "any proprietor who fails to comply with this instruction will have himself to blame". It was thus surprising that the same body would authorize increase in fees for public schools. It is therefore not surprising that the students believed that the advice they had received from “some top officials of the Ministry of Education and the Ghana Education Service” had been given by persons who wanted the AFRC to act to its own detriment.

6.7.8 INTELLECTUAL SUPPORT FOR THE STUDENTS

6.7.8.1 The students did not operate without intellectual support. From the mid-70s when the student movement had become radicalized, it had its intellectual fathers. The account of one student leader, Kabral Blay-Amihere, has been written in such fine prose that it is impossible to render the subject in more intelligible language. His account of the role of the intellectual fathers of the students’ movement in shaping its ideological direction goes thus:

Life at the University of Ghana in the 70s was quite an exciting one, marked by radical politics. We had very brilliant lecturers who became our intellectual mentors. There was Ebo Hutchful, an articulate lecturer in political science who hit the headlines during the short-lived rule of Dr. Kofi Busia. He made the headlines when he broke the protocol and security cordon of Prime Minister Busia during a visit to the University of Ghana and traded words with him...Returning after graduate studies in Canada, he joined the department of political science which had other famous names like Dr. Emma Hansen and Chris Hesse.

They constituted the left at the department which had other lecturers of rightist political persuasion, notably Professor Folson. Complementing the dominant leftist camp of lecturers were Dr. Kwesi Botchwey, Professor Akilagpa Sawyerr and Tsatsu Tsikata, all of the Law faculty. What these lecturers had in common was their academic brilliance and Marxism. They indeed inspired my generation to adopt a radical Marxist view of history and political developments. They were popular with the students and were always on the lecture circuit mostly at the University’s auditorium where they engaged other lecturers of the right in debate. Young, fiery and articulate, they obviously won the battle for the minds of students, at least in the radical leadership of the National Union of Ghana Students.

The cold war was still raging on fiercely in the 70s and universities were fertile grounds for winning souls. One lecturer who might have made the greatest impression on students was Dr. Kwesi Botchwey who was in his 30s. He was one of the socialist boys who on the overthrow of Nkrumah had been harassed for supporting the socialist policies of the Convention Peoples’ Party. He later studied at Yale University and taught at the University of Dar es Salaam during the same time that the famous leftist author and historian Walter Rodney who wrote the third world classic –How Europe Underdeveloped Africa was also teaching at Dar es Salaam University ... Dr. Kwesi Botchwey, many years later became Minister of Finance of Ghana and earned the reputation as the best spokesman and defender of policies of the International Monetary Fund. For the generation of students he so inspired as a lecturer, his new role as defender of IMF policies was a complete ideological U-turn and a paradox of the highest order.

From his radical beginnings to his years as a lecturer, Kwesi B as he was called by his friends was a bitter critic of the International Monetary Fund and other international organisations like the World Bank. For me and many others, his anti-imperialist neo-colonial stance on global developments was what made him an intellectual mentor. He was consistently emphatic in blaming these institutions for all the ‘woes of the third world’. It must have been a source of worry to him years later when he mounted political platforms and spoke of these institutions and their programmes as sine qua non for our development. Of course in the 70s when he was a simple lecturer in the same trenches as other leftists who years later would abandon the ship and become apologists for capitalism, his message touched base with the ideological struggles of many.

Another lecturer who made a lasting impression on students in those days was Dr. Jawa Apronti. He was the doyen of socialists on Legon campus. A soft-spoken, grey-haired noble-looking professor of the Institute of African Studies, he supervised many meetings of our small socialist circle. He was not as fire-spitting as Botchwey, but he made the same impact on us with his soft manner of articulating his views.

It was during this period that I met another lecturer, Atukwei Okai. ... Known as the logoligi man, Atukwei Okai was a staunch Nkrumaist and Pan-African [sic]. His unorthodox poetry had made him famous and popular. I was later to use many of his poems to give headlines to my articles...

These prominent intellectual fathers had several other followers within the academic community as well as the worker-population at Legon.

6.7.8.2 The students of the UCC had their mentors in the leftist academics such as Ms Ama Ata Aidoo, Dr Atta Britwum, Nkunu Akyea and Professor Kofi Awoonor. The UST students also had their mentors who were such leftists as the Soviet-trained Dr S B Arthur and Dr Akyeampong as well as Dr Amoo. Many student leaders acknowledge that these lecturers were a great influence on the student movement as they were held in very high esteem by the students. These mentors of the student movement thus acquired a national platform for their ideas, when the students came into partnership with the Junior Officers and Other Ranks of the Armed Forces. Indeed, as was the case with the youthful leaders of the NLC, many of the Junior Officers who were active in the AFRC were school mates, and even classmates of the leaders of the student movement. It was, thus, not surprising that the mentors of the student movement were roped in to mentor the “revolution” and provide intellectual support for the students.

6.7.8.3 Thus, it was, that on 26th July, 1979, a three-day seminar was organized for students on vacation in Accra at the Accra Community Centre under the theme “Spread the aims of the revolution”. It was unclear who organized the seminar, but it featured Kwesi Turkson, and some of the “intellectual fathers” of the student movement. Kwesi Turkson, a student of UCC explained to the participants the need for the students themselves to understand the background of the crisis in which they had intervened, hence the need for the seminar. The seminar was also addressed by the representative of the AFRC in charge of student affairs, Fg Offr Forjoe. He lectured the students on the need to keep the revolution going even after the AFRC handed over power, and criticized the Ghanaian public for always wanting soldiers to be at their elbows to protect them, instead of standing up for themselves.

6.7.8.4 The seminar was also addressed by N N K Aggrey Orleans of the Institute of Adult Education, at the University of Ghana, who charged the students to use the opportunity presented by the revolution as an instrument of change, and to act as watchdogs. Cameron Duodu, a journalist, on his part, urged the students to transmit the views of the rural people to the government during their public education effort. Professor Akilagpa Sawyerr of the Faculty of Law, University of Ghana also addressed the students on “The structure of the Ghanaian society and change”. He educated the students on the existing classes within the Ghanaian society as a result of colonialism, and urged them to arouse the consciousness of the citizens as to the presence of imperialist agents within the economy. He also encouraged them to appreciate the force of student power, in the achievement of the aims of the revolution. Other speakers were students of the University of Ghana, Kwasi Adu-Amankwah and Tony Akoto-Ampaw.

6.7.8.5 That these “leftist intellectuals” had great influence on the students is not in doubt. Blay-Amihere relates an incident to demonstrate the influence of these lecturers on the students. The government had proposed that all students should undertake military training as national service. The students of Legon were opposed to the idea, but those of UCC supported the idea. At that year’s NUGS Congress, Professor Akilagpa Sawyerr was invited to deliver a paper on the issue. The very fact that the students had opened up their movement’s congress to a lecturer showed what a high opinion they had of him. Blay-Amihere recounts that:

With careful analysis and powerful oratory he convinced everybody that the militarisation of tertiary students was not proper national service. That nailed the agitation for military training as national service. Instead NUGS voted for the present national service whereby graduates go to work in public institutions, schools and other facilities.

6.7.8.6 There were other academics on the campuses who were influential with the students and helped to shape their thinking. One student leader alleges that some of their resolutions were drafted by their lecturers. Other lecturers were involved in activities that supported the position of the students. For instance, operating under the banner of Society for National Affairs, Dr. Amoako Tuffuor, a lecturer of UST, had issued a statement supporting the executions, and the society had also organized a lecture on 31st July, on the theme “House-cleaning exercise – how to make the benefits permanent”. At this lecture, Dr. Yaw Saffu, a Senior Lecturer at the University of Ghana, expressed the view that “the benefits of the Revolution must be institutionalized, structured and taken beyond the reign of the AFRC”. He also advocated the setting up of a Special Court with a Special Prosecutor to try cases of tax evasion. At that lecture, Agambilla, immediate past President of the SRC of University of Ghana, and a law student, advocated that the incoming administration of the PNP ought to resist pressures from lawyers to review the decisions of cases tried by the AFRC Special Courts.

6.7.8.7 The views expressed at these lectures were important in indicating the direction of the thinking of the AFRC, because not only was the Special Court idea adopted, but Transitional Provisions containing “almost water-tight” ouster clauses were drafted into the 1979 Constitution. These ouster clauses purported to oust the jurisdiction of the courts in order to prevent them from questioning or reviewing the decisions of the AFRC Special Courts. The review of some of those decisions, despite the prohibitions set down in the Transitional Provisions to the 1979 Constitution, became one of the rallying points of the pro 4th June “revolution” group, and was eventually cited as the reason for the murder of three High Court Judges in 1982.

6.7.9 STUDENTS-WORKERS ALLIANCE COMES INTO BEING

6.7.9.1 Students and workers, particularly on the campuses had not been very cordial in relating to one another. Students constantly complained about the treatment that workers on campus meted out to them. Indeed, this lack of cordiality was not a recent phenomenon as it was one of the grievances that fuelled the disturbances at UST in 1966. Socialist rhetoric bases much of its criticism of the bourgeoisie on the exploitation of the masses, represented by the working people. Since “bourgeoisie” was synonymous with persons in authority at this time, support for the interest of the working people as the basis for societal transformation meant solidarity with workers’ unions. Consequently, an alliance was forged between the workers and the students.

6.7.9.2 On 9th August, 1979, the NUGS issued a statement in which it called on the AFRC to appoint workers on commissions of enquiry set up to investigate charges against corrupt officials. According to the students: “This will give these commissions a more revolutionary and worker character, which is better than their present slow and bureaucratic committees.” The statement explained that the recommendation stemmed from their belief that it was the workers who “lived nearest to the dirt and filth and could do the cleaning better.” On housing problems, NUGS called for extension of the “one man, one house” exercise in Tema to all other government-owned or government-built housing units in the urban centres especially at Dansoman and Teshie-Nungua. Those with more than one house in these areas should be brought to book and severely punished. They said they were satisfied with the implementation of the findings of the committee which probed the State Fishing Corporation and the action taken on Tata Brewery Ltd. NUGS also expressed the hope that time would not be wasted implementing reports on probes on the Black Star Line, the Cocoa Marketing Board, the Timber Marketing Board, RT Briscoe and all other organisations that deserved the broom in the “house-cleaning” exercise. The statement expressed students’ satisfaction with the AFRC’s action in bringing to book all tax evaders and reiterated that the “big fishes” should not be spared. It further called for maximum concentration on the big business houses in the anti-hoarding exercise and the elaboration of an effective system for the distribution of essential commodities and food items. It commended the AFRC for ensuring that these items were within the reach of the common man. The statement accused Irani Bros of hoarding a large consignment of flour, and other business houses of hoarding large stocks of essential commodities.

6.7.9.3 A few days after this statement, an announcement was made establishing a 58-member committee to dispose of seized assets. The committee included representatives from NUGS, University Teachers of Ghana (UTAG) Trades Union Congress (TUC), Ghana Armed Forces, the police and Lands Department. The committee was to oversee the disposal of assets that would be confiscated to the State.

6.7.9.4 The desire to “house-clean” spread to all other organizations. The demonisation of all persons in authority by the portrayal of all subordinates as hapless victims of the system created by immoral bosses, legitimized any force and violence perpetrated against them. The junior ranks of the Police also mutinied against their superior Officers. This resulted in the creation of a Committee of Enquiry into the Police Service. This Committee was chaired by Capt Karl G Huppenbauer.

6.7.9.5 On 14th August, 1979, NUGS issued a statement commending junior ranks of the Police Force for initiating a clean-up of their institution in tune with the spirit of the revolution. The NUGS took the opportunity to express its disapproval of the premature termination of the action of the junior ranks by the establishment of a committee of enquiry, and observed that the clean-up exercise should have been allowed to proceed to its logical conclusion just like the Armed Forces achieved theirs on 4th June. NUGS thus expressed solidarity with the junior ranks for rising up against their superiors and approved their action because “for far too long the rank and file had been manipulated by their seniors who coerced them to engage in activities that run counter to the ethics of the force.” NUGS, however, declared its faith in the work of the committee by noting that “recent statements by the chairman of the committee have given worried observers some relief and one would not be wrong to assert that the committee is on the right track”.

6.7.9.6 A group calling itself “Students Investigative Bureau” of the University of Ghana wrote to the Chairman of the PNDC complaining that the AFRC had been soft on B A Mensah, Chairman of International Tobacco Company Ltd, Ghana (ITG), who had committed tax offences on the same scale as J K Siaw of Tata Brewery. In the undated and handwritten letter, they alleged corruption on the part of Maj Boakye Djan and Maj Mensah Poku, two members of the AFRC, for this situation and ended with the statement: “all eyes are watching you in these your last days. Action Now. Long live Student/Chairman comradeship”. They supplied some documentation and quoted one Edward Akumfi Agyeman, a former Financial Controller of ITG, who had resigned from the company, and made a surprising request for the man’s re-instatement even though they themselves stated that the man resigned his office. The Student Investigative Bureau document stated that:

Our study of the character of Mr. B A Mensah shows that he is a robust character and therefore is a security risk to the armed forces revolutionary council and the chairman yourself in particular, and could use his wealth to topple any future government. We are of the view that whether he had paid the tax he evaded or not, once he had committed the offence, he should be brought to book ... We the executives of the Students Investigative Bureau believes [sib] that if the AFRC fails we the students of Ghana in general have failed and therefore we have to work in unison.

6.7.9.7 Although there was no named member of the Student Investigative Bureau, an article published by Kwasi Adu a former General Secretary of NUGS, in the Daily Graphic in 1980, asserted his membership of an investigative team that 20 million tax default, and repeated allegations investigated an allegation of corruption against Maj Boakye Djan as well as their previous associations as student-leader and Military Intelligence official respectively. Not only was this “investigation” the gist of the SIB letter, but it also showed a link between student-leaders and national security officials that is disturbing. Kabral Blay-Amihere, a former NUGS President laments the absence of the student movement in the anti-Unigov campaign in 1977, and categorically states:

it is evident that some student leaders worked then for the security forces. At least one letter from one of my opponents explaining to Acheampong’s Security boss, Buckman, actions he took to delay a demonstration by students confirmed this phenomenon of students working as agents.

Incidentally allegations were made by the Student Investigative Bureau against E K Buckman, the Security boss at the Castle during the SMC regime, as well, and a recommendation that some properties believed to belong to him ought to be confiscated. It is uncertain who these students of the Student Investigative Bureau were, and who provided information on whose properties ought to be seized by the AFRC. What is clear is that whoever they were, they were powerful enough on the student front to be able to assert the right to speak for “students”.

6.7.9.8 Subsequently, Kwasi Adu - then a prominent member of the June Fourth Movement (JFM) who also served on the Confiscated Assets Committee- defended the opposition of the JFM to a public call by Maj Boakye Djan for a probe into AFRC affairs. He maintained that the call was a “dangerous invitation to these international institutions who opposed the AFRC to dismember it”, because opponents of the AFRC would be enabled “to know the little details as to how major policy decisions were made.”

6.8 24TH SEPTEMBER, 1979 -- 30TH DECEMBER, 1981:THIRD REPUBLIC

PEOPLE’S NATIONAL PARTY (PNP) GOVERNMENT

6.8.1 NUGS

6.8.1.1 The Third Republic opened with skepticism from many in the student leadership about the capacity of the constitutional government to meet the aspirations of the people. Some of the new student leaders had tasted power during the brief period of the AFRC, and so linked up with other persons to form the JFM to “protect the gains of the revolution”. The students of the University of Ghana began to turn away from leftist politics and elected a new NUGS administration on the platform of the ‘Christian Right’. Although out of office at the NUGS level, the Leftist group was still in control of the SRC.

6.8.1.2 The expanse of the university campus provided good cover for any activities that should have been of interest to the state security agencies. As documented by Oquaye,

During the Third Republic, Legon became a den for conspirators against the Limann administration. Captain Kojo Tsikata [(the security chief of the PNDC government)] Amartey Kwei, [(later to be a member of the PNDC)]; Jerry Rawlings [(later to be the Chairman of the PNDC)] and E T Mensah [(then a worker on the campus and later a prominent member of the government of the PNDC)] (all future members of the PNDC) were part of the Legon alliance. Kojo Tsikata had identified the students as a viable source of strength to be exploited to the fullest.

This observation is corroborated by accounts of persons, then students, in the University of Ghana. One account is as follows:

[w]e often saw prominent personalities in the leftist movement on campus such as Mr. Tsatsu Tsikata a Lecturer at the Faculty of Law, Tata Ofosu a member of the leftist organization MONAS, Nyeya Yen, Nicholas Atampugire, Zaya Yeebo the editor of the NUGS magazine ‘Aluta’, Bright Oduro Kwarting (all these people named were in the leadership of the student -movement although they had already graduated from the university) and the former Chairman of the AFRC, packed into a Datsun 120Y vehicle zooming around the campus as if on an important errand. Occasionally, the group included Dr. Kwesi Botchwey also a lecturer at the Faculty of Law. It was the frenzied movements of the group and the fact of the jam-packed Datsun 120Y vehicle zooming off as if on an errand that aroused our curiosity and our suspicion that some untoward mischief was afoot. It was therefore no surprise to us when the coup occurred on December 31, 1981.

The “conspirators” used the freedom on the campus to freely organize and recruit students and this was not surprising as the “intellectual fathers” of the revolution were mostly lecturers of the University of Ghana, with some prominent ones in the Faculty of Law. The Chairman of the erstwhile AFRC was seen so frequently on the campus that it was no surprise when uninformed observers wrongly concluded that he had enrolled as a student of the university.

6.8.1.3 In 1980, the government mounted a sustained overt surveillance on Capt Tsikata (Rtd). This meant that being a frequent visitor to the campus, the intelligence officials always followed his car onto the campus. The SRC of University of Ghana felt concerned enough to write to the Director of Military Intelligence, protesting the Intelligence operation on the campus. In the letter signed by the President, W.K. Asiedu, entitled “TRAILING OF EX CAPT. KOJO TSIKATA ON THE UNIVERSITY OF GHANA CAMPUS” which was given very wide circulation, the SRC of University of Ghana complained about the operation which it described as “inhuman and undemocratic acts by the Military Intelligence” that was “causing unnecessary uproar and excitement among [the] students on campus”.

6.8.1.4 Later in the month of November, 1980, an anonymous piece entitled “RAWLINGS-TSIKATA AFFAIR” was mailed to lecturers and students on the campus of University of Ghana alleging that the overt operation against then retired Flt Lt Rawlings and Capt Tsikata (Rtd), was a plot by the American Central Intelligence Agency (CIA). The four-page mimeographed piece contained very serious allegations against officials of the Military Intelligence and demanded the deportation of certain foreign diplomats who, it was alleged, were CIA operatives under diplomatic cover. The document ended with an instruction to the addressee thus: “PASS THIS PAPER ON TO ANOTHER PERSON MAKE MORE COPIES FOR WIDER CIRCULATION SPREAD THEM TO OUR TOWNS AND VILLAGES THE TRUTH MUST BE KNOWN.” Such materials freely circulated on the campus at the time, and helped to engender hostility against the Government of the PNP and also prepared the minds of the university community against the Military Intelligence and the subsequent ferocious assault unleashed on them when the government was overthrown.

6.8.1.5 The 17th Annual Congress of NUGS in 1981 demonstrated the level of contempt that the NUGS leadership had for institutions of the Third Republic. The 17th Congress was reported in the Citadel Daily as noting that:

Parliament is now the immediate source of our problems and the first enemy of the people. As a result, our people cannot expect anything from that institution.

The Congress further adopted a resolution that offered congratulations to:

the parliamentarians of the 3rd Republic for doing very very well in the role of supervising the poverty, hunger, and disease of our people ... [and that] they shall never find in us friendship when the people of Ghana come to understand them full [sic] and demand their Birth Right back.

The NUGS' resolution is not surprising when examined against the backdrop of its participation in the 'Labone Forum' that decided that the PNP Government was not socialist enough to achieve anything purposeful for the poor in Ghana.

6.9 31ST DECEMBER, 1981 -- 6TH JANUARY, 1993:
PROVISIONAL NATIONAL DEFENCE COUNCIL (PNDC)

6.9.1 NUGS

6.9.1.1 The last day of 1981 saw a struggle between the forces supporting the democratically-elected government of President Limann and those of Flt Lt Jerry John Rawlings, former Chairman of the AFRC. The struggle was short-lived, and the government was overthrown. On 2nd January, 1982, Flt Lt Rawlings broadcast to the nation, and called upon “workers, farmers, fishermen, artisans, students and soldiers to make it their collective responsibility to take their destinies into their own hands.” He accused the PNP Administration of failing to continue the “house-cleaning” that it had promised to do and that it was the “most disgraceful government in the history of this country”. He also complained that the PNP Government had gone ahead to “mutilate all the positive and concrete achievements of the people in order to pave the way for their own corruption”, and made democracy mere paper guarantees. Flt Lt Rawlings then announced the suspension of the 1979 Constitution, the dissolution of Parliament and the formation of the new government, the Provisional National Defence Council (PNDC).

6.9.1.2 An invitation was thrown to all progressives and students to join the fight to rebuild Ghana. The students responded to the invitation to participate in the “Holy War” through the leadership of NUGS. The PNDC took a decision not to permit the re-opening of the universities for the second term in order to enable students assist in national reconstruction. In a speech by the Chairman of the PNDC, it was announced that it had been:

decided with immediate effect to constitute a number of task forces consisting of students of all three universities including the Medical and Law schools as well as the students of the Polytechnics, the IPS, the GIJ, the NAFTI and all equivalent institutions of higher education. These task forces will operate under some of the new units we are creating as under existing arrangements ... for the immediate provision of teaching and basic school facilities in our schools.

The justification for this decision as the Daily Graphic reported it was that,

The democratic education policy that was instituted in the country at Independence is what has provided skilled manpower that is now available not only to other countries, but to international agencies and institutions all over the world, even in developed countries. And we are entitled to ask did this country spend all those resources simply to create our own poverty simply so that all the trainees can scatter abroad [and pursue their] personal comfort and not contribute anything to our own development. What use is this expensive education if beneficiaries only see it as an avenue of personal enrichment and then exploit their own people? Have students simply been waiting to get degrees in June so that they can escape the crisis and find brighter pastures outside the country of their birth and their eventual destiny? We know that the development of our African community country is being served by the provision of our skilled manpower and we are not asking people to flock back and abandon their commitments elsewhere...

6.9.1.3 Following this decision, the PNDC caused a radio announcement to be made instructing the universities not to re-open for the second term. The Executive Committee of University of Ghana met on 6th January, 1982, and announced the postponement of the re-opening date which was to have been 8th January, 1982.

6.9.1.4 NUGS welcomed the decision of the PNDC to send university students out to work. Its central committee issued a statement signed by its President, Philip Gardiner, in which it commended the PNDC for taking a decision that was “a demonstration of bold initiative towards mobilizing the active youth to arrest the deterioration and decadence in the Ghanaian society.” The statement further revealed the fact that “it had always been the wish of students to be allowed to contribute towards nation building” and that “the call has offered us a chance to carry out this very wish.” NUGS took the opportunity to suggest that the task to be assigned to students should be:

the harnessing of students of such institutions to participate in the education of other students in our schools and colleges. The level of knowledge of the third cycle institution student qualifies him under the present circumstances to at least teach our younger brothers and sisters in schools and colleges.

The NUGS further suggested that: “While based in the schools and colleges, the students it stated could also study possibilities and modalities of mass literacy campaigns.” The rest of the statement was a call on: “all well meaning Ghanaians to use this opportunity to make Ghana a better place”, and “to be alert, offer suggestions and help shape out the destiny of the country.” The statement further called for the preservation of the political situation such that its democratic tendencies would be deepened, though in the tradition of student-support, the PNDC was warned that while giving of their best in the present situation, students would be watchful of deviations from the ideals of the PNDC and would not hesitate to criticize if the need arose.

6.9.1.5 Following this approval of the decision to conscript students for work in the rural areas, the PNDC appointed Lt B F Kusi as PNDC Coordinator-in-charge of Student Affairs. The office, with the support of NUGS, set up task forces which were inaugurated at a function held under the auspices of NUGS to launch the programme. The function was chaired by Edwin Oklu, former Secretary of NUGS, and the President of NUGS, Philip Gardiner, performed the formal launching. In a speech at the function, Lt Kusi stated that there was a need for “a vanguard of all structures of the community” and then revealed that the PNDC had made contact with NUGS because it had realized that students “constitute the most important structure in the revolution.” The speech was made to shouts of “yason” (“we have embraced it”), when he announced that the academic year had been suspended so that the programme could be started. He then expressed the hope that students would co-operate for the success of the onerous task ahead.

6.9.1.6 On his part, the NUGS President stated that the students were going out to the rural areas to exchange views with, and help the people to help themselves. He expressed regret that the country inherited an educational system that did not teach students enough about their own people, and that it was on this account that students were being sent to the rural areas to help the people “to initiate programmes of everlasting change”. The NUGS President also informed the students of the scope of the work: some students would be attached to schools that did not have the full complement of its teaching staff. Others would assist to rebuild roads and evacuate food crops and cocoa, and still others would help to implement communal health services and education programmes on electoral processes. Finally, he announced that participation was compulsory since it was “a period when nobody could escape work” and that “attendance to all functions would be recorded to ensure maximum success of the exercise”.

6.9.1.7 There was no doubt that the students formed a part of a mass mobilization programme that the PNDC had planned. This was because Lt Kusi indicated that the students were to “set the ball rolling” so that by the time they returned to school other people could continue from where they left off. He then announced that the PNDC was working on proposals for the establishment of a national secretariat as well as regional and district secretariats and that the outcome of modalities being worked out would be announced in a week. Clearly the students were to be a part of an already designed scheme. Unlike 1979, which saw the students seizing the initiative to be at the forefront of the “revolution”, the events of the first week of January 1982 revealed a project design that had the students as “canon-fodder”. When NUGS suggested that the students should go to schools to teach and that being in university they knew enough to function as teachers, NUGS was, in fact, pleading with the PNDC to limit the scope of work to one, more suited to the scholarly inclinations of students. Had the student leadership been consulted in advance, the “appeal” would not have been contained in the statement issued by its central committee. Another fact that bears out this view is that during the speech, Lt Kusi expressed the hope “that students would co-operate for the success of the onerous task ahead”. It is unlikely that this would have been the case if the students had agreed to be a part of this programme. What it is most suggestive of, is that the students were being presented with a fait accompli. Indeed, there was no evidence of broad support from students in general, although there was enough to suggest that the leadership of NUGS had condoned the plan to put students from the three universities and other higher institutions to work as conscripts.

6.9.1.8 The mobilization was extended to the other regions as evidenced by this announcement in the Daily Graphic:

All students from the universities and diploma awarding institutions under the GES and IPS who live in and around Ho are requested to meet at the Urban Council Hall, Ho, at 10 am this morning for the inauguration of the Volta regional task force. Similar exercises in the districts would be announced in due course.

6.9.1.9 Regional Co-ordinators were also appointed to administer the programme as evidenced by these newspaper reports a few days later:

Certificates of participation are to be awarded to students who will diligently take part in the mass mobilization programme in the current revolution to help improve the living conditions of the people. The Eastern Regional Co-ordinator, Mr Carl Kpetakpa disclosed this at Koforidua on Wednesday at the inauguration of the students task force for the region. He hinted that the certificates would in future be a major factor in determining the justification for the continued free education for the students in higher institutions. The decision was aimed at checking students who would take advantage of the closure of the country’s three universities to pursue their selfish and individual interest rather than the promotion of the ideals of the revolution. He appealed to all students to diligently participate in the programme to avoid any embarrassment to themselves. He told the students that they would be mobilized alongside other units to help cart cocoa and foodstuffs and would also undertake road construction and other development projects. Students would be assigned to schools where their talents would be required.

The same point was made by the following:

The regional co-ordinator of the Student Task Force for Greater Accra has lined up a number of projects such as road rehabilitation, community health, garbage collection and fertilizer bagging due to begin today. A statement by PNDC said students within the Greater Accra Region had been grouped into zones for the implementation of the projects.

Students living in and around the Airport area, Madina, Legon, Achimota and Kanda would constitute zone 1. And students at Nima, New Town, Kotobabi, and Alogboshie zone II ... Students living in areas not specified should join the nearest zone and buses would be provided to pick them up from the various city express bus stops in their zones to the project sites.

6.9.1.10 The Cape Coast branch of the Student Task Force was inaugurated at Cape Coast by H S Brew, Regional Administrative Officer. The group numbering about 300, cleared rubbish and drains in Cape Coast after the inaugural ceremony.

6.9.1.11 As the students were taken off the campuses, it became necessary to involve officials of the education system and, therefore, the following announcement was placed in the dailies:

The following persons are to meet the PNDC co-ordinator on youth and student affairs at the office of the former Council of State (State House) at 9am today. They are the Director-General GES, and a representative of the Council for Higher Education, 2 Representatives of NUGS, a representative of GNAT and a representative of Ghana Association of University Teachers.

The next day's newspaper carried a report that explained the purport of the previous day's announcement:

A national education committee, which is to examine the task of nation building in the use of the youth and students held its inaugural meeting at the State House in Accra yesterday under the chair of Lt Kusi. Organizations represented were the GES, National Council for Higher Education, and GNAT. Others were NUGS, UTAG and the Press. Lt Kusi called on the organisations represented on the committee to work as hard as they could to spread the message of nation building throughout the length and breadth of the country. He recalled Rawlings speech which said PNDC felt that the fresh energies of the youth of the country could be most taxed in nation building, the students and lecturers constituted a wealth of important talents to deal with the problems of the country. Lt Kusi said the committee on education would have branches in the various regions. The liaison officer made it clear that ... there could be no time wasting on the part of the committee.

After suggestions from members of the committee it was agreed that the meeting reconvene next week to work out the details of how the students and the youth were going to be used. The organizations were also to carry out a lot of homework and present memoranda on the issue. Representatives of NUGS said students would have to forgo most of the comforts because they would be involved in a national exercise of considerable importance.

At that meeting it was also announced that the involvement of students in teaching would initially last three months and that: "Provision would be made in the programme for the continuation of any project when the students return to the classroom."

6.9.1.12 Contrary to what the students had been told about being used to fill classrooms, the following news item appeared in the newspaper:

The PNDC announced that the 'Student Task Force of NUGS' would mount a nationwide cocoa evacuation exercise from Monday January 18th and that "the exercise will begin in Achiasse, Asamankese, Kade, Akroso, Ofoase, Akim Oda and Akim Techiman all in the Eastern Region.

6.9.1.13 Subsequently, on 16th January, the Daily Graphic reported that the task forces had started their work, and in the days that followed the newspapers carried report after report of the activities of the task forces. For instance, on 20th January, the newspaper carried the following report:

About 1000 students yesterday left Accra for Akim Oda to evacuate locked up cocoa in the Birim district of the Eastern Region. Students in very high spirits travelled in 7 Tata buses released by the States Transport Corporation and a Bedford bus provided by the CMB. Gardiner told newsmen that the secretariat initially planned for 450 but 1000 of them turned up at the Accra Community Centre to participate in the exercise ... The leadership had contacted the PNDC to provide more ration to supplement what has been earmarked for the exercise. Seventeen towns and villages will be covered in a three - phase programme in the Eastern Region. In all a total of 28,000 tonnes of cocoa is [sic] expected to be evacuated in six weeks.

The newspapers tracked the progress of the Students Task Force, as well as the various organizations which were donating money for the upkeep of the students.

6.9.1.14 The insistence that there was a shortage of manpower in the country became a little difficult to appreciate when the following notice appeared:

The PNDC has asked private farmers requiring the services of student labour to apply to the office of the youth and student affairs at the State House today. Applications should describe the type of farm, location number of students and the nature of work students would be required to perform. Where it would be inconvenient to submit labour applications direct to the office, such requests should be made through the various regional and district administrative offices for submission to the national co-ordinator for youth and student affairs by January 18.

6.9.1.15 The students in Accra were also sent out to undertake a clean-up exercise that lasted six hours according to a newspaper report . At the end of the programme, the students converged at the Nicholson Stadium at Burma Camp where they were addressed by the NUGS President, Philip Gardiner, and the Chairman of the PNDC. Gardiner was reported to have affirmed students support for the PNDC and warned that NUGS would force the removal of any imperialist agent who might be appointed to work with the PNDC. Gardiner made it clear that PNDC should not stand in their way if they wanted to change the country for the betterment of the ordinary people. The NUGS President then reminded students of their responsibility to the underprivileged and declared, “if we fail to use our education for the betterment of the people then we are traitors”. To the PNDC, he gave the caution that it should be wary of imperialists because they would do everything humanly possible to obstruct the success of the revolution. To this end, the NUGS President advised the PNDC to stay away from the old way of doing things. As a first step, it was to avoid appointing to high office any persons who could be shown to have subscribed to the past ideals of ruling the country and that no “person with a provable history of links to western imperialists” was to be allowed to control the council.

6.9.1.16 The Chairman of the PNDC then took over and addressed many issues of national importance. He reminded students of their responsibility within the society and urged them to use their creative powers, and abilities for the benefit of their citizens. He urged them to set the right tempo to enable Ghana assume her proper place in Africa and in the world at large, and exhorted them thus: “Your intellectual and physical power is mighty and must be harnessed to project the creative ability of the individual”. “ You are the consciences of this society and you must unearth the creative power in you for the development and growth of this our beautiful nation.” He ended by cautioning students not to permit themselves to be “disorganized by the detractors of the revolution”.

6.9.1.17 The news report makes interesting reading especially as the NUGS followed up on the threat by issuing a statement when certain personalities it did not approve of were appointed to head some Ministries a few days later. The newspaper reported the news thus:

The NUGS yesterday asked PNDC to revoke the cabinet appointments of 4 persons because they represent ‘the enemies of the people’. In a strongly worded statement reacting to the composition of the PNDC cabinet, students stated that they had been extremely disappointed in the inclusion of J A Kufuor, Obed Asamoah, Alhaji Mahama Iddrissu and K B Asante in his cabinet. It described the 4 persons as reactionaries, anti-people Ideologues and active political party functionaries. [The] Students’ body observed that the appointment did not reflect a broad sample of political tendencies but a simple amalgamation of rank reaction and ‘representatives of foreign interests’.

The NUGS explained that the action of December 31 in which several soldiers lost their lives was a move to destroy a situation with which a few political party tycoon of the same basic mould collaborated to rule this country in the interest of foreign imperialist powers to the detriment of the working people. The Statement made it clear that all political parties had the same interests and performed the same functions. This is why the military take-over made sense, rather than waiting for the next election for Ghanaians to vote an alternative party into power NUGS stressed. The statement said the union saw in the appointments the return of political power to the same group of politicians and their foreign masters.

The 31 December uprising appeared now as just another palace coup d'état replacing PNP government which at least was popularly elected with its opposite party the (APP) All Peoples Party. NUGS observed that the character of PNDC government was a wholesale adoption of a programme of the 'National Government' proposed by the professional bodies association and the Bar Association two bodies who have shown continually that they are on the side of the enemy. The student body asked the PNDC to resist the intense pressures of the agents of imperialism to dictate policy even through the Council. NUGS thereby warned PNDC to clearly make an alliance either with the people as it promised or with the enemy. There is no middle way. This national government will simply lead to a lack of direction and inertia which will allow ousted forces to consolidate their power and stage a complete come back. It said the composition of the cabinet was like a group within which the one or two popularly acceptable people would be paralysed and made incapable of fruitful contribution. In the interim, NUGS warned that it would advise itself on possible courses of action should satisfactory resolution to its demand not be immediately forthcoming. It called on workers, farmers, and students to come out and denounce the move in very clear terms.

6.9.1.18 In March, 1982, prominence was given to a statement by a group of students who attended a National Task Force Conference in Kumasi and resolved to continue the work "instead of rushing back to campus". The tell-tale signs of dissent among the students on their continued stay off-campus were visible when this group described those agitating for a return to campus as "anti-revolutionaries". Two days later, the news item was featured again, leaving the strong impression that their position reflected the official position. The following week, students organized under Zone Eight Task Force, issued a statement reacting to the resolution passed at the Kumasi Conference and attributed it to NUGS and maintained that since they had been made to believe that they would be allowed to return to campus in April, the extension of the programme would affect their psychological well-being. The Daily Graphic wrote an editorial on the conflict among the students, and urged the PNDC to intervene to resolve the conflict amicably. This cleavage began to show the non-voluntary nature of the Task Forces, as the leadership of the students appeared to be more worried about who would fill the vacuum created by the departure of the students, than they were with the welfare of their membership.

6.9.1.19 The Task Forces did not just evacuate cocoa, etc, but were reported to be effecting arrests of officials who had allegedly defrauded the state, enforcing price control on goods, and even demanding the dismissal of “corrupt” officials. They were also involved in checking smuggling and other unhealthy economic practices.

6.9.1.20 NUGS was subsequently awarded the “Order of the Star of Ghana (Civil Division)”, for the work of the Students Task Force. The award, which was presented to NUGS at the closing session of the 18th Annual Congress of NUGS at Cape Coast, was received by Philip Gardiner, then out-going President of NUGS, on behalf of the students.

6.9.2 STUDENTS’ TASK FORCE IS RE-NAMED

6.9.2.1 When the university students returned to the campuses and the secondary schools re-opened for the new academic year, the Students Task Force continued to function. However, it was clear at this point that those left to carry on the work of the Task Force were no longer students, as all “students” had returned to their various campuses. Consequently, those who had just ceased to be “students”, as well as other out-of-school youth were recruited to continue the activities, and so the group was then re-named ‘Students and Youth Task Force’ or just ‘Youth Task Force’. The Task Forces in their new form, continued from where the others left off. They conducted vigilante activities to effect arrests; performed anti-smuggling operations; and performed police duties, such as criminal investigations.

6.9.2.2 Eventually, the Students and Youth Task Force was converted into the National Mobilisation Programme, that was used to absorb the many young Ghanaians who had been deported from Nigeria in 1983, by forming them into work-gangs known as “mobi-squads”.

6.9.3 OTHER ACTIVITIES OF STUDENTS

6.9.3.1 The Ghana Bar Association (GBA) announced after its Annual Conference on 24th September, 1982, that it had no intention of appearing before the Public Tribunals for stated reasons. A group calling itself “Future Leaders Organization”, said to be composed of students and youth numbering “several hundreds”, took to the streets chanting revolutionary songs and accusing lawyers of arrogance. Although the report was careful to name a “Master Abu Mohammed Lawal, a form four student of West Africa Secondary School” as one of the leaders, the demonstration seemed somewhat contrived. The newspaper backed the action of the “students aged between 14 and 18” with a cutting editorial, stating that:

If progressive and honest lawyers do not make their own individual decisions, it seems quite clear that the Bar Association will bring the noose down the entire institution faster than the revolution would determine.

These were chilling words indeed, from the national newspaper, giving credence to the suspicion that the students’ demonstration was organized with official approval.

6.9.3.2 On the same day, the Daily Graphic carried an ultimatum from a group of youth associations in Koforidua calling itself “The Progressives of Eastern Region” to lawyers in Koforidua ordering them to close down their chambers within three days from September 30, or face reprisals. This order was in reaction to the decision of the GBA to boycott the Public Tribunals. One week later, the “Progressives in the Eastern Region” were reported to have besieged five chambers of lawyers in private practice taking away their “law books and legal documents during a four-hour operation code-named ‘Operation Close Down’. In the days following, lawyers’ chambers were attacked and their properties destroyed in a bid to force them out of business.

6.9.4 “INTERNATIONAL BRANCHES”

6.9.4.1 This period also saw the development of a new phenomenon: overseas branches of NUGS. The newspapers began to report on programmes organized by the United Kingdom branch of the NUGS. This was a strange bit of news as this branch had not been known to be in existence before this time. Thus, NUGS had not only assumed a supra-institutional character, but had allegedly developed international branches as well.

6.9.4.2 NUGS had also acquired permanent off-campus offices at the offices of Ministry of Youth and Sports in 1980. Since permanent offices required permanent staff, NUGS appointed some persons, who were former student leaders as staff to run the secretariat. NUGS therefore began to rely on persons who had ceased to be students, to run the offices as full-time staff. These were developments that changed the character of NUGS to a significant extent as it became possible for former student-leaders to retain their influence over the NUGS long after they had ceased to be students.

6.9.5 NUGS MOVES INTO OPPOSITION

6.9.5.1 By the beginning of December, 1982, the students’ disenchantment with the government had begun to spill over. The government and its allies in the labour movement had mooted the idea of students being sent off from campus for up to two years to assist in the reconstruction effort. The students on the various campuses began to protest the policies of the PNDC. On 14th December, some students of the University of Ghana under the leadership of the SRC, went on a demonstration against the government on the campus, echoing a call by the Religious Bodies for the government to hand over power to a National Government. They carried placards, some of which read “DOWN WITH DICTATORSHIP”, “PNDC HAND OVER TO NATIONAL GOVERNMENT”, “NO MORE DETENTION WITHOUT TRIAL”. Another group of students calling itself “Concerned Students” held a counter-demonstration. The Daily Graphic account headlined “LOYAL WORKERS FORCE ANTI-GOVT STUDENTS TO RETREAT AT LEGON” described the confrontation as follows:

Suddenly the WDC members of the university also arrived on the scene carrying placards and chanting war songs in support of the PNDC under the leadership of Flt Lt J J Rawlings. They then took control of all vantage points of the university. Sensing danger, the anti-government student demonstrators started retreating in small groups to escape the wrath of the workers. The workers and the ‘concerned students group’ then marched to the various halls warning that minority group of students calling on the government to hand over to a national government to stop what they described as evil deeds.

6.9.5.2 The confrontation so affected the atmosphere on the campus of the University of Ghana, that the Executive Committee of the University closed the session a few days early, citing the students’ apprehension about their safety on the campus.

6.9.5.3 The same type of confrontation occurred at UST and with the kitchens and canteens closed by reason of the workers action, the students had to leave the campus for the Christmas vacation a few days early as there was no food. The anti-government students began to be described by such epithets as “reactionaries” and “imperialist agents”, and were accused of being in the pay of “crooked politicians”. The University of Cape Coast also had its “concerned students” group that issued an 11-point resolution in Accra, criticizing the demands of their colleagues as unreasonable, whilst they remonstrated with the workers to be more understanding of the students. NUGS, under its new President, K Amoah Labi, stoutly defended the students’ position and insisted that it was not reactionary, but that its new position had been born out of their experience on the Task Forces earlier in the year.

6.9.5.4 From this point onwards, it appeared that the alliance that had been forged between the students and workers at the beginning of the year was broken. The workers of the University of Ghana persisted in their calls for the university to be closed down and for the students to be put to work to assist in national reconstruction, whilst the students stoutly resisted this demand. It had become clear that the workers resented the students for enjoying privileges funded by the tax-payer, whilst being unwilling to sacrifice for the comfort of the underprivileged in the country.

6.9.5.5 The year 1983 was a difficult year for NUGS, as its anti-government stance widened the breach between the government and university workers on the one part, and students on the other. At the urging of the workers, a proposal was mooted to extend the National Service Scheme to two years instead of the original one year, because students ought to contribute more to national development. NUGS resisted this idea, maintaining that it was doing enough. NUGS renewed its call for the PNDC to hand over power so that a civilian government could take over the reigns of government.

6.9.5.6 As if on cue, there was a newspaper publication two weeks later to the effect that the leadership of NUGS and the Association of Recognised Professional Bodies (ARPB) had met an agent of the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) of the United States of America and assisted the agent to collect sensitive information about Ghana. Those leaders were also accused of secretly circulating the report of the Special Investigation Board to foreign embassies. These accusations, coming in the middle of an anti-CIA campaign that demonized the agency in Ghanaian eyes, had very grave implications for the persons concerned as anti-student sentiments had been whipped up among workers. Stephen Asamoah Boateng, one of the student leaders concerned, denies this alleged NUGS link with the CIA, maintaining that it was he who, as the NUGS officer in charge of international relations, sent those materials in person to foreign embassies as part of NUGS strategy to fill a perceived leadership-vacuum and to keep the wider world informed about the goings-on in Ghana.

6.9.5.7 On 4th May, 1983, the NUGS Annual Congress, meeting at UST, was disrupted by a demonstration by workers of Obuasi Mines. The miners had been transported to the campus in a large number of buses by the Ashanti Regional Secretary, Kwame Dwemoh-Kessie, to UST ostensibly to demonstrate in favour of the Workers Defence Committee (WDC) of the University. Why it was that it was miners from Obuasi, rather than other workers of Kumasi itself, who travelled on a working day to demonstrate on the university campus in solidarity with the workers of the university is not immediately obvious. However, what is not surprising is that the students read this as an attack on them on their own campus and a violation of their “territory” and fought off the miners. The miners thus got the worse of the encounter as the terrain was unfamiliar to them and so they could not make a speedy exit. About five persons were injured, and one of their vehicles was set ablaze by the students. The next day, TEWU of University of Ghana issued a press statement in which it condemned the students of UST whilst congratulating the miners for demonstrating on the university campus. The government also issued a statement in which it condemned the students of UST and the stage was thus set for a showdown between the students on the one hand, and the government and workers on the other.

6.9.5.8 On 6th May, 1983, students of the three universities went on demonstrations against PNDC in Accra, Kumasi and Cape Coast, asking the government to hand over power to the Chief Justice in preparation for a civilian government. The students of University of Ghana led by the NUGS leaders, Arthur Kennedy and Asamoah Boateng carried placards, some of which read: “JJ WE HELPED YOU IN AND WE SHALL HELP YOU OUT” and “WE DETEST MILITARY RULE”, and marched to the centre of town. At the Makola area, they burnt the effigy of the Chairman of the PNDC. They then re-grouped and set off for the offices of Graphic Corporation and the New Times Corporation to demonstrate their displeasure at the uncritical support the press was lending to the government. The march turned violent when the students were ambushed on the New Times Corporation area which is a narrow corridor linking Ring Road East to the Industrial Area of Accra, and attacked by soldiers and persons suspected to be thugs. According to eye-witness accounts, the fleeing students were chased to offices of businesses in the area where they had sought refuge, dragged out and subjected to severe beatings. Many students suffered various degrees of injury. The People’s Daily Graphic report gave a slightly different account of the incident, maintaining that the protesting students banged on a passing military vehicle and the occupants fired warning shots. The newspaper account did not explain why the occupants of the military vehicle abandoned their journey and chased the students from office to office.

6.9.5.9 Following this incident, the National Defence Committee (NDC) and the TEWU of University of Ghana met and passed a resolution asking for the universities to be closed down. Some workers of the university also arrested a vehicle belonging to the American Embassy, suspecting it of espionage on the campus, manhandled the Ghanaian driver, and sent it to the Graphic Corporation to show it to the press. They urged the government to close down the universities for five years, after which the students were to be made to re-apply for admission. At Cape Coast, the students of UCC also marched to the offices of 'Graphic Corporation' and 'New Times Corporation' at Cape Coast and seized about 800 copies of 'People's Daily Graphic'.

6.9.5.10 A group calling itself the Progressive Students Front of University of Ghana issued a statement dissociating itself from the demand of NUGS and accused Arthur Kennedy and the other NUGS leaders of being in league with reactionaries to derail the revolution. The statement, signed by its leader, Marlon Anipa, criticized the NUGS for its "reactionary posture" and that the NUGS leadership was only representing its own self and no one else. The statement further alleged that Sam Okudzeto and William Ofori-Atta, two veteran Ghanaian politicians described as "bankrupt politicians", participated fully in the NUGS Congress and suggested that it was these personalities who had influenced the adoption of the anti-government stance. This statement from the Progressive Students Front, showed a split in the student front at a time it was engaged in a life and death struggle with the government. The NUGS leadership was subsequently isolated politically, and it was no surprise when it was reported in the newspapers in June that the President of NUGS, Arthur Kennedy and another student, Stephen Asamoah Boateng were on the run. Unfortunately for one other student leader, Hans Djaba, a medical student, he was arrested and detained in prison.

6.9.5.11 On 9th May, 1983, Accra-Tema Central WDC and workers of University of Ghana took over the university following a People's Daily Graphic report that the students claimed to have access to arms, and were determined to use petrol bombs against the workers. The situation was so chaotic that the university authorities sent the students home. The JFM hailed the closure of the universities by the workers as a good step that would let the students stay at home and also experience the kind of suffering that workers had had to undergo. The campus of the University of Ghana was occupied by "cadres of the revolution" to undergo a "course" using the university's lecture rooms and Halls of Residence.

6.9.5.12 On 16th May, 1983, the government issued a statement that the universities should remain closed indefinitely, and that consultations would take place with the university authorities and representatives of workers on the future of the two universities. Subsequently on 2nd June, 1983, the University of Cape Coast was also closed down following clashes between the pro-NUGS and pro-Government student groups. Although Civil society organizations, in particular UTAG and the Religious Bodies mounted pressure on the government to re-open the universities, they remained closed for ten months. As time passed and there was no word from the government, parents and students began to experience frustration. Meeting after meeting between the authorities of the universities and the government yielded no result. Finally, after eight months, with one set of school-leavers waiting at home for the old academic year to be completed so that they could also enter university, the government began to relent. The government agreed to reopen the universities on condition that the students would reapply for admission.

6.9.5.13 On 12th January, 1984, the Committee of Vice-Chancellors of the three universities met and issued a notice informing the students to re-apply for admission. The application had to contain the following pledge:

“I of the Department ofin the University of do hereby apply for re-admission into the University. I make this application on the understanding that

- (1) I will not at any time engage in any activities which could have the effect of disturbing the academic life of the university.
- (2) I will behave responsibly in accordance with the University’s statutes and regulations as well as the laws of the land.

Date..... signed

Each student was expected to fill this form, sign and return it to the registrar of the university concerned.

6.9.5.14 The universities were finally allowed to reopen at the end of March 1984. The University of Ghana, which suffered the take-over by “occupation forces” lost a great deal through theft, involving even some of the university’s own employees, rough use of facilities by the cadres” and sheer vandalism. It is officially estimated that this eventually cost the university the equivalent of $4 million because during “the sojourn of the ‘occupation force’”, a lot of damage was done to public and private property.

6.9.4.15 By the time of the re-opening, many students had found placement abroad in foreign universities. Sixth Form leavers had to wait one year before entering university and so they were put on National Service in order to use the wait-time profitably. Those who had options to attend school outside Ghana exercised the option and thus began the practice of students aiming for foreign universities and filling application form after application form in order to attend a university – any university – outside Ghana. The workers of the universities had by this time, managed to press their demand to be represented on the governing councils of the universities. Consequently, in February 1984, the university councils were dissolved and reconstituted with worker and student representation.

6.9.4.16 The clashes did not end. In 1986, the government announced a planned withdrawal of subsidies from the Second and Third cycle institutions. This caused tension between the students and the government. The students began to agitate against the government. In the course of such agitation , the Secretary of NUGS, Kakraba Cromwell, was arrested allegedly on charges of being involved in drug trafficking. A statement by Kwamena Ahwoi indicated in a public statement that Cromwell was arrested at the airport in 1982, for attempting to smuggle marijuana out of the country and that he had since been on bail. He had also been implicated in a marijuana smuggling case in Dakar, Senegal, and that his name was on the list of international drug traffickers. This explanation did not sit well with the students since no attempt had been made to pursue the charges until he became a student leader. Eight students of the university and one from the Ghana School of Law, who had met with government on the Kakraba Cromwell issue, reported the proceedings to the student body. Their report led to a boycott of lectures by the students of University of Ghana.

6.9.4.17 The government reacted by dismissing them from the university, claiming that they had so skewed the report that they had misinformed the student body on campus about what had happened at the meeting with government. The affected students were: Kwame Akyianu, Kofi Ofori Yeboah, Kofi Gyamfi, Bedu Ansah, Abeku Brew, Amoah Larbi, Kwaku Paintsil and Arthur Kennedy. In addition to this order, Amoah Larbi, Arthur Kennedy, Tony Akoto-Ampaw and Augustina Agyirigah were ordered to report at the Nima Police Station on the following 9th May, 1987, and were also barred from entering any educational institution in the country. On 8th May, 1987, however, the government closed down the university, and issued a statement in which it alleged that the disturbances on the campus were the result of “activities of political agitators and agent provocateurs as well as people hiding behind the cover of the student movement to perpetrate criminal and subversive activities.” The government statement further stated that it:

“would not tolerate the adventures of infantile leftists who would under the hypocritical guise of championing legitimate causes, were seeking to create conditions for the paralysis and destruction of certain vital national structures. The permanent closure of the university is only one of their callous designs on the insane and simplistic premise that universities are breeding grounds for elitism, reactionaries and the bourgeoisie.”

6.9.4.18 The government seemed to be addressing particular persons, and the inclusion of Tony Akoto-Ampaw, a prominent member of the New Democratic Movement (NDM) in the list of persons banned from entering any educational establishment was very revealing for more than one reason. First, the statement cast the dispute in the old mould of the struggle for control of the revolution that occurred between the intellectual Left and the leadership of the PNDC. This appeared to be the last phase of the struggle since the leadership of the PNDC had, by this time, abandoned all trappings of leftist ideology. Second, it was revealing because the government had a substantial number of past student leaders amongst its own ranks, and must have been familiar with the political agenda of student leaders.

6.9.4.19 The People’s Daily Graphic followed this blistering statement from the government with a diatribe of its own in the form of an editorial on the front page entitled “Dishonest Poison”. This editorial, remarkable for its personalised use of invective against the individual student leaders and their intellectual mentors with swipes against some family of their members in a state-owned newspaper, was remarkable in other ways. It stated that:

This nation is presently having to examine the extent to which the fabric of our revolutionary process has been contaminated by the unprincipled, dishonest poison of little minds which have been turned sour by empty ambition.

We are referring to those who, on our university campuses have been focal points of misinformation and distortion and have spread their own poison to young minds in a bid to destroy that which they cannot control”.

It proceeded to further explain its position on the closure of the university thus:

When the government closed down the University of Ghana and dismissed certain students last week, many people may have thought this was a harsh step.

Others who have been more aware of the activities of the past and present student leaders may, on the other hand, have wondered why the government has been so tolerant for so long, and why it has gone to considerable lengths [sic] to avoid publicizing and holding up for public ridicule and condemnation the carefully orchestrated game which they have been playing. It is about time, we consider, that their tactics were exposed.

6.9.4.20 The newspaper editorial then took to task some named persons described as “pseudo-intellectuals, the super leftists, the pretentious talkers who have become campus fixtures over the past decade” behind the students’ action. Accusing them as a “super radical clique”, they were blamed for having corrupted many “good cadres by poisoning their minds.” In specific terms, blame for the 1982 misadventure of Sgt Alolga Akata-Pore that led to his departure from the PNDC was laid squarely at the door of these “infantile leftists.” The newspaper also stated that it was these same “super radicals” whose impractical theories had led to confusion in the Interim National Coordinating Council (INCC) of the PDCs/WDCs and that it was their influence that had so misled the PDCs/WDCs that they had to be changed to Committees for the Defence of the Revolution (CDR). The People’s Daily Graphic editorial left one in no doubt, by the way it attacked the “super radicals”, that the 1987 student-government clash was known to be a part of the 1982-84 struggle for ideological supremacy that caused the extreme leftists in the PNDC to attempt to usurp power in 1983, and that also immobilized and destroyed the INCC.

6.9.4.21 Akoto-Ampaw denies this link between the two events and explains that the NDM had nothing to do with Akata-Pore’s problems with the PNDC; but that the link was drawn in an attempt to discredit all the leftists by lumping unrelated events together. Be that as it may, a cryptic notice appeared in the Daily Graphic of 15th July, 1987, requesting all persons in the TUC, NDC, INCC, NDM and KNRG to hand over all weapons and ammunition in their custody to the Inspector-General of Police for registration by the 16th of July. The inference from this notice is that some civilians were provided with arms and ammunition without proper registration procedures being respected. However, Akoto-Ampaw denies this, and maintains that the notice was part of the intimidatory tactics adopted against them, and that they had never been provided with arms and ammunition as the notice claimed. It is uncertain whether he could make this denial on everyone’s behalf since it is unlikely that he knew what everybody in those named groups had been involved in within the relevant period.

6.9.4.22 The end to this saga came when the student leaders, with the exception of Akoto-Ampaw, failed to report to the police and instead, fled into exile. From this point on, NUGS became even more disaffected with, and estranged from the PNDC and actively worked to see a return to constitutional rule. In May, 1991, it organized a demonstration at Cape Coast after a meeting of its central committee, to protest the membership of the Consultative Assembly. Some of the placards the students carried, read “What do HAIRDRESSERS, MECHANICS AND BUTCHERS KNOW ABOUT CONSTITUTIONS?”, “PNDC HAS DESTROYED THE ECONOMY”, “NO REFERENDUM”. At Tamale, a week later, another demonstration, obviously under the auspices of NUGS took place. The placards there read: “JJ STEP DOWN”, “PNDC ENOUGH IS ENOUGH” and “NUGS CALLS ON PNDC TO QUIT”. What is worthy of note is that such demonstrations no longer took place in Accra, nor were they reported on the front page of the state-owned newspapers where such action used to be a few years earlier.

6.9.4.23 A few months later, NUGS joined a group known as the Coordinating Committee of Democratic Forces (CCDF) that organized press conferences, beginning from 6th August 1991, to take a stand on the need for a return to civilian rule. The group was said to be open to “all independent organizations that stand for multiparty democracy, respect for fundamental human rights, the rule of law and the sovereignty of the people of Ghana.” (emphases in original). The need to form the group was made manifest “by the continued intransigence of the PNDC in the face of popular and democratic demands and by the need to unite all democratic forces to press forward, with greater effect, the struggle for democracy in Ghana and the assertion of the sovereignty of her people”.

The group was made up of the following organizations:

1. The Movement for Freedom and Justice
2. The National Union of Ghana Students
3. The Danquah-Busia Memorial Club
4. Our Heritage
5. Great Unity Club
6. Ex-PP Group
7. The Kwame Nkrumah Welfare Society
8. The Ashanti Youth Association
9. The Gold Coast Ex-Servicemen Union
10. The Kwame Nkrumah Revolutionary Guards
11. The New Democratic Movement.

The NUGS had thus come full circle when it joined other democratic forces in the struggle for a return to constitutional government and multi-party rule.

6.9.4.24 1992, NUGS condemned the transitional timetable of the PNDC, the continued detention of political prisoners, as well as the inclusion of indemnity provisions in the Draft Constitution. NUGS expressed its opposition thus:

It is a paragon of bunkums for the PNDC to have convicted and punished innocent Ghanaians since 1981 through its own kangaroo court viz. the Citizens Vetting Committee only to turn round to indemnify itself against the due process of justice. Is it not ironic to extend the indemnity to the coup plotters of 1966 and 1972 when their leading members have already been killed by the incumbency? Of better profit to them would have been for the PNDC to wish them “rest in peace”.

NUGS also asked for a general amnesty to be declared, to enable political exiles to return home.

6.9.4.25 Following the disagreement over the results of the Presidential elections in 1992, NUGS adopted a resolution on 26th December, declaring a boycott of the 29th December, 1992 Parliamentary Elections, complaining that it was a subtle attempt to “return this country to a one-party dictatorship”, because the Voters Register was flawed. NUGS thus shares the credit for the victory that pro-democracy forces achieved, when they enabled Ghana to return to constitutional rule in January, 1993.

6.10 CONCLUSION

6.10.1 The student movement was active in national politics throughout the mandate period. It co-operated with the military rulers and was always in the forefront of public demonstrations of support for every usurper-government. However, the students were usually, also the first to publicly oppose the government. This usually marked the government’s decline and subsequent inability to hold on to power.

6.10.2 It is obvious that the student movement played a big role in national affairs during the mandate period. It was also observable that the role got even larger during periods of unconstitutional government than during periods of constitutional rule. During the AFRC days in 1979, it became a partner of government as it put its numbers behind every policy of the government. It participated actively in the events that resulted in massive human rights abuses. The student movement will never live down the moment when it made the call “Let the blood flow”, in agitation for more executions. During the first few days of 1982, it was also counted on as a base for support when the PNDC came to power.

6.10.3 The leaders of the student movements also suffered harassment and detentions in much the same way as the politically-active members of the general population did. During the SMC I days, students did a lot to bring down that government.

6.10.4 The anti-government position it took up early in the life of the PNDC, gave the government the impetus to break up the body so that it could be neutralized. It could be stated that a government that started its life with past student-leaders as its basic human resource, ended its life as an implacable enemy of the student movement.

Volume 4 Chapter 7 - The Youth Movement

CHAPTER SEVEN

THE YOUTH MOVEMENTS

7.0 INTRODUCTION

7.0.1 The task of the Commission was to determine whether or not the youth movements had contributed to the violation or protection of human rights during the mandate period. The chapter has chronicled the activities of the politically-inclined youth movements of the mandate period. In the main, these were the Boy Scouts and Girl Guides Movements; Ghana Young Pioneers movement (GYP); the National Youth Service Corps (NYSC); the June Four Movement (JFM); the People's Revolutionary League of Ghana (PRLG); and the Movement on National Affairs (MONAS). The chapter endeavours to shed some light on their activities, mode of organization and funding. In addition, the impact of their activities on the human rights terrain is also highlighted. In this regard, the fate suffered by their leaders and other prominent activists when the governments that sponsored them were removed from office. It also discusses the nature of the relationship between members and leadership of these movements and government during their period of office.

7.0.2 The chapter is organized to reflect the historical chronology of their life as youth movements under particular regimes, and the part they played in sustaining the regime. The hope is that the public would better appreciate the whys and wherefores of these movements, as well as the importance of their contribution to the socio-political history of Ghana; be provided with the reasons for change and continuity in these movements; and understand why the movements underwent a transformation or ceased to exist altogether, during the mandate period.

7.1 PRE-INDEPENDENCE

7.1.1 Mobilisation of the youth had always been a part of traditional society, and the youth had a place within the social and political arrangements of traditional society. "Youth" was not necessarily a reference to people of a certain chronological age, but of social standing as well. Consequently, those referred to as "nkwan kwaa" or "youth" were the "commoners" or non-royals. Youth movements began to be a feature of the national landscape as a result of the introduction of the modern political economy, the subsequent urbanization and post World War II social developments that released young people from traditional control without putting in place any measure to include them in the new political arrangements.

7.1.2 The part played by the youth in the independence movement and the place of the youth in the formation of the CPP put the youth at the centre of the socio-political arrangements of the country after Independence. A start was made to organize the youth soon after Independence with the formation of the CPP Youth League which was made up of young people with affiliation to the CPP. It functioned as the youth wing of the CPP and it had the same aims as the mother-party. However, it was formally abolished in 1959.

7.1.3 BOY SCOUTS ASSOCIATION AND GIRL GUIDES ASSOCIATION

7.1.3.1 The Boy Scouts Association was incorporated in England by a Royal Charter granted on 4th January, 1912. The Association of Girl Guides was also incorporated as the Girl Guides (incorporated), on 24th September, 1915. Branches of these associations were started in the Gold Coast by the instrumentality of Lord and Lady Baden Powell. They were given statutory recognition under the Boy Scouts Association Ordinance, 1918 (Cap 265), and the Girl Guides (incorporated) Ordinance, 1922 (Cap 271), respectively.

7.1.3.2 These associations organized young boys and girls of the Gold Coast and taught them how to use their leisure hours profitably for self-development and service to others.

7.2 6TH MARCH, 1957- 23RD FEBRUARY, 1966: CONVENTION PEOPLE'S PARTY (CPP) GOVERNMENT

7.2.1 BOY SCOUTS ASSOCIATION AND GIRL GUIDES ASSOCIATION

7.2.1.1 Upon the attainment of Independence, the two associations were re-named the Ghana Boy Scouts Association and the Ghana Girl Guides association (Incorporated) on 16th December, 1960, and 13th February, 1960, respectively. The Associations began to come under pressure when nationalists began to criticize them for not teaching nationalism to the Ghanaian children and holding out foreign role models for Ghanaian children. There was even a suggestion on the floor of Parliament that it should be abolished in favour of an indigenous youth movement.

7.2.1.2 The members of the associations were used at public functions to perform errands, assist in crowd control, etc. When the GYP was born, the associations fell into official disfavour as the GYP tried, with official backing, to supplant them in schools. The roles performed by them at functions were given over to the GYP and the associations were so side-lined that they lost their vibrancy, although they were never formally abolished.

7.2.1.3 Following the 1966 coup d'état, efforts were made to restore both associations to their former status, as the GYP had been banned. The Scouts and Guides Decree, 1969 (NLCD 399), was passed to regulate the activities of the associations. For the first time, the objects were put on statutory footing. Some of the objects were specific to Boy Scouts and some to Girl Guides. The two shared the following objects:

- (a) to encourage loyalty, thoughtfulness to others and good citizenship among boys (or girls) and help develop their character;
- (b) to promote the physical, mental and spiritual development of boys (or girls), and
- (c) to encourage international goodwill and understanding by establishing friendly contact with boys (or girls) of other nations.

The objects that were specific to the Scouts were as follows:

- (a) to train boys in habits of observation, obedience and self-reliance;
- (b) to teach boys services useful to others and handicrafts useful to themselves.

The Guides on their part, had these specific objects:

- (a) to train girls in habits of courtesy, obedience and service to others;
- (b) to develop in girls an interest in homecraft, health, social service, love of nature and traditional arts and customs.

7.2.1.4 The members of these associations were specifically prohibited from claiming or pretending “to be or to act as the police force or of the Armed Forces or any agent or officer of the Government.” They were also specifically prohibited from engaging in any:

attempt by virtue of wearing any uniform or badge token of either association or appearing to be such, to enforce or exercise authority otherwise than in accordance with and as authorized by the bye-laws, rules or orders of either association.

7.2.1.5 Once the State formed its own Youth Association, the associations reverted to their roles of character-moulding and the cultivation of useful leisure hour activities, as well as service to others.

7.2.2 THE GHANA YOUNG PIONEER MOVEMENT (GYP)

7.2.2.1 After Independence in 1957, a need was felt to attack attitudes born of the socialization produced by a state of mind derived from colonial subjugation. The need to improve the education of young people and to mobilize them for national development was also keenly felt. The CPP Youth League was largely made up of children of CPP members and was restricted to a few urban areas. One truth that was not lost on the leadership of the CPP, was that anyone who wished to influence the future with new ideas, had to get to young children and introduce those ideas to them. The need to inculcate patriotism of the new country called “Ghana” into its newly-liberated citizens meant that the youth had to be targetted if the changed relationship between the citizen and the State as well as the new responsibilities inherent in the changed relationship were to be properly appreciated. Subsequent governments found the youth a ready vehicle to reach impressionable minds and harness their energies in favour of the government’s policies.

7.2.2.2 The Ghana Young Pioneer movement (GYP) was founded on 14th June, 1960, as a youth movement to “inculcate in the children of Ghana a feeling of pride for the country. It would also seek to foster physical fitness, respect for manual work, self-discipline, sense of duty and of responsibility and above all love for and a strong desire to serve the country”. The model for its formation was derived from the findings of a delegation sent on a study tour to various countries to study their mode of youth training. The delegation was made up of Kofi Baako; Krobo Edusei; Professor William Abraham; Kofi Batsa; Mowbray Elliot; and Reverend J S A Stephens. The group brought home a recommendation that, based on what they had seen, the most appropriate models for youth training were those of East Germany and the USSR. There was close collaboration between Russian Committee of Youth Organization and the leadership of the movement. Indeed, many of the leaders were sent to Russia under the aegis of the Russian Komsomol Schools and to other institutions in Eastern Europe to study youth training. At the time of the overthrow of the CPP Government in 1966, many GYP members were in Eastern European countries undergoing training in youth leadership, and other academic disciplines, and their scholarships were withdrawn. Consequently, many of them got stranded in Europe.

7.2.2.3 At the formation of the GYP, the Ministry of Finance was requested to make £G5,000 available for the administration and organization of the movement; and so it was a fully-funded state organization. In 1961, it was put on a statutory footing by being made a part of the Ghana Youth Authority (GYA) under an Executive Instrument, the Ghana Youth Authority Incorporation Instrument E I 130. The National Organiser of the GYP was also appointed the Chief Executive of the GYA, and although the GYP was to operate under the general direction of the GYA this was a cosmetic provision since the chief executive of the authority was also the National Organiser of the GYP.

7.2.2.4 Even though the GYP began in Accra as a voluntary movement, it was soon introduced nationwide by order of the President, into schools for children and young people aged between four years and twenty five years. It also covered out-of-school youth, and was reported by the Evening News to have a membership of 20,500 within a year of its formation; and according to official reports, had ballooned to 500,000 within two years of inauguration. According to a post-Nkrumah Government of Ghana publication, the GYP reported to the President in September, 1964, that its membership had risen to one million children and young people, and it was operating 3000 centres in various districts. It was organized by age-group in four categories, each with its focus. Group I was known as Young Party League, consisting of ages twenty one years to twenty five years, and these were given various forms of technical and ideological training both in and outside Ghana. Group II known as “Nkrumah Youth” consisting of ages seventeen years to twenty one years, focused on providing technical and ideological training for mostly out of school youth. Group III known as ‘Young Pioneers’ was made up of ages 8 years to sixteen years, and concentrated on cultural activities such as drama and artistic crafts. Group IV, the “African Personality” group, was for children aged between four years and seven years. The main activity of this group was to sing and recite poems about “The Great Osagyefo”. School teachers were recruited as organizers and instructors and there was a code of discipline which was rigidly enforced.

7.2.2.5 The GYP was fully funded by the State though supposed to be a wing of the CPP. The Minister of Education and Social Welfare justified the state expenditure by declaring that “The C.P.P. is Ghana, and Ghana is the C.P.P.” Although membership was said to be voluntary, this was not its mode of organization in reality. At least for children in the rural areas, membership was compulsory for all school children and was enforced by school authorities as such. When the Hon Miss Regina Asamany suggested in Parliament that “it is wise to abolish such youth movements as the Boy Scouts and other similar organizations”, the Minister’s response was that the suggestion was “too true”, and that a Bill was going to be put before Parliament to ensure that Boy Scouts and Girl Guides movements were abolished. A little later on, the President directed that the GYP, having been “constituted as the sole youth authority in Ghana”, had the responsibility to ensure “that all organizations of youth are conducted in accordance with our national directives and not in relation to any foreign directives.” This was obviously a reference to the Boy Scouts and Girl Guide movements which had their roots in British colonialism.

7.2.2.6 With support from the highest political authority in the land, the GYP developed a fearsome reputation. Heads of institutions who were not keen to promote it in their schools suffered punitive action. There were also whispered allegations of how public criticism of the movement could lead to one’s detention under the Preventive Detention Act. By the time it celebrated its third anniversary, the President could order that its programmes be made compulsory for all youth groups. This was a clear indication that the government was not in support of the existence of any other youth groups. The President justified the new policy thus:

The youth of Ghana should stand together in singleness of purpose in order to meet loyally and boldly this supreme challenge of our time. We can no longer afford to see the energies of our youth dissipated and their loyalties confused, as a result of protracted membership of a variety of organisations, the aims and policies of which, however worthy they may be, are not always in our national or cultural interest.

7.2.2.7 Thus young people lost their freedom to freely associate or not to associate and parents their right to determine what activities their children could engage in, or to what ideas their children could subscribe.

7.2.2.8 GYP programmes were held after school and even during school hours, and all children had to attend or face punishment in school. Red silk scarves with borders in the colours of the CPP had to be worn by school children. Many people felt that the movement was a vehicle for indoctrination of children and the promotion of a personality-cult of the President. For instance, M N Tetteh corroborates allegations of blasphemous acts taught to children, although he blames enemies of President Nkrumah, whom he described as “fascist secret agents within the movement with a definite mission to destroy the image of the movement and its founder”. According to him, these “fascist agents” “were reported to have gone to one selected centre in a region and actually orchestrated the blasphemous act of dropping some sweets and food items from a ceiling of a Pioneer Centre while calling on Nkrumah in a mock prayer”. Thus the blasphemy lay in the fact that according to contemporary accounts, the ability of the President to supply the children's wants by having "sweets and food items" rain down during a mock prayer was contrasted with the inability of God to do likewise since nothing happened when they called upon God. These accusations were denied at the time, and the denial is supported by Pobee who states that "in our researches we have not come across any youngster who experienced it". It is thus somewhat surprising that one of the officials who ought to know the truth would recount the incident many years later and blame "fascist agents" who had been planted on the GYP.

7.2.2.9 The GYP also had sentences extolling the greatness of the President that had to be recited by school children everyday. For instance, the Young Pioneer Pledge was seen as a vehicle for indoctrinating the children and building up a personality cult around the President. This criticism had some justification as the text reproduced below, of the pledge that was to be recited any time the youth met, suggests:

"YOUNG PIONEER CODE AND PLEDGE"

- I sincerely promise to live by the ideals of Osagyefo Dr. Kwame Nkrumah, Founder of the State of Ghana and Initiator of the African Personality;
- to safeguard by all means possible, the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the State of Ghana from internal and external aggression;
- to be always in the vanguard for the social and economic reconstruction of Ghana and Africa;
- to be in the first ranks of men fighting for the total liberation and unity of Africa, for these are the noble aims guiding the Ghana Young Pioneers;
- as a young Pioneer, I will be a guard of workers, farmers, cooperatives and all other sections of our community;
- I believe that the dynamic Convention People's Party is always Supreme and I promise to be worthy of its ideals."

7.2.2.10 Some of the sentences such as: "Nkrumah does no wrong"; "Nkrumah is our Leader"; "Nkrumah is our Messiah"; and "Nkrumah Never Dies", were thought by many to be an undue indoctrination of school children and the creation of a personality cult around the President. Some of the lyrics of popular GYP songs had images borrowed from the Bible. One of such songs was:

If you follow him, If you follow him,
Kwame Nkrumah, he will make you fishers of men, fishers of men, fishers of men, he will make you fishers of men if you follow him.

Other songs had secular lyrics but put to tunes of church, especially Hymns, were viewed as an attempt to imbue the personality of the President with Christ-like qualities since the phrase “fishers of men”, was derived from the Biblical story of the calling of the first disciples by Jesus Christ. Indeed, in some elementary schools, the practice was for the leader of the Young Pioneers in the school to conduct a parade and raise the GYP Flag and the Ghana Flag during the school’s Morning Prayer assembly while the school’s teachers looked on.

7.2.2.11 Opposition to the movement was strong, being largely spear-headed by the churches, but largely covert as any expression of open opposition at the time could portend detention for the particular person or deportation for a foreigner as the experience of Anglican Bishop Reginald R. Roseveare, Chairman of the Christian Council, amply demonstrated. He was deported as a result of an address he gave at the Anglican Annual Conference in 1962. In that address, he criticized the movement in the following manner:

Not only myself, but the heads of churches in Ghana, are shocked by the godlessness of this movement and by some of its phrases and songs for the children to repeat or to sing. We made our views known to the Minister of Education last April, saying that we found it impossible to give our support and co-operation in the development of the movement as at present constituted. It is an affront to our age-long traditions that, in Ghana of all countries a national institution for the training and development of boys and girls should entirely ignore the existence and claims of Almighty God. Moreover, it seems that the movement confuses the work and example of a great man with divine acts which are unique in history. The incipient atheism is quite foreign to the traditional concepts of African Personality. Surely it is our duty to ask that some consideration be given to convictions of loyal citizens of Ghana who, by virtue of their Christian Faith, desire that nothing shall hinder their children from growing up to be loyal and faithful Christian men and women. Is there a finer basis for citizenship than this?

7.2.2.12 Bishop Roseveare was promptly deported as being a person whose “presence in Ghana was not conducive to the public good”, after being subjected to name-calling in the state media as “the neo-colonialist Lucifer”. He was also criticized for being a part of an “ungodly clique and quislings”, who did not appreciate that: “God does not like imperialist chicanery, religious sabotage and anti-national manoeuvres (sic), nor is he impressed by chauvinistic Christian ballyhoo or hypocritical and deceptive Synod addresses”. He was accused in CPP quarters of stabbing the President in the back since he had had dinner with the President the night before the Synod. He was eventually allowed back into the country only after he had apologized and had formally applied to be allowed to return. From then on, there was no indication that the church ever openly criticized the GYP.

7.2.2.13 The motivation to inculcate patriotism in children of school-going age was a good idea, but the implementation was problematic. There was no doubt that the organizers of the GYP were overly high-handed in their treatment of dissent, but this was in line with the culture of those days. Blaming “fascist agents” from within for the excesses of the GYP, is obviously a disingenuous attempt at blame-shifting and revisionism since the same Tetteh himself admits that at some point in time, stories that reached the President caused him to set up a five-member committee to study the situation and submit a report, and that the report led to the adoption of some reforms. Since, in those days, it took much less than obvious subversion of the government for a person to be detained under the Preventive Detention Act, it is somewhat curious that no one was punished as a “fascist agent”, when the committee submitted the findings upon which reforms were initiated.

7.2.2.14 The GYP attracted other types of criticism such as it being a means by which parental authority was being weakened in favour of loyalty to President Nkrumah. The movement was alleged to be encouraging children to spy on their own parents. M.N. Tetteh denies this, though he asserts that the children were asked to join the search for the bomb-throwers who were maiming and killing some of their colleagues. Therefore if any parent happened to be a bomb-thrower, then it was in response to this patriotic duty that the children informed on them.

7.2.3 Bomb Outrages

7.2.3.1 The GYP came under physical attack when many of its members became victims of the bomb-throwing incidents that became a feature of Ghana’s politics as certain persons alleged to be members of the opposition, in a bid to assassinate the President or cause disaffection for the government, detonated bombs and other explosives at public gatherings when the Young Pioneers would be in attendance. Many children, not necessarily Young Pioneers only, were killed on such occasions, and others maimed for life. At least on three of such occasions, twice at Accra Sports Stadium and at Arena in Accra, Young Pioneers attending functions at which the President was to be present were prominent among the victims when the explosive devices were detonated. Ms Elizabeth Asantewa, Master Ayikwei Hammond and Ms Elizabeth Hammond were prominent among such victims of each of those incidents.

7.2.3.2 At Kulungugu in the Upper East Region, an assassination attempt was made on President Nkrumah, and it was alleged that a number of GYP children were killed. Indeed, contemporary accounts of the time indicated that the source of the bomb was a bouquet presented by a young girl who was consequently killed in the blast. As recounted by Tetteh, “a member of the movement in the infants division was blasted to death in cold blood by a bomb which was secretly planted in a bouquet which a young lass was given to present to the President”. However, this account of the incident is contradicted by an eye-witness, Gariba Ndego Tijani, then a 12-year old boy at the time, and now a graduate of the University of Ghana and a tutor at Bolgatanga Secondary School:

I had to struggle with adults on a tree top to catch a glimpse of President Nkrumah on the first day of his arrival from Accra (Saturday, 30th August) en route to Haute Volta (now Burkina Faso). Tree trunks along the road through the village were whitewashed before the day since the President was to make a stop over in Kulungugu before proceeding to Burkina Faso. He arrived after twelve noon on 29th August amidst shots of gun salutes [sic]. I could not see the sequence of events around the President since the crowd of adults shielded him from my view. And after about thirty minutes, the President proceeded across the border into Burkina Faso [then Upper Volta].

7.3.1.1 The life of the GYP formally ended when the First Republic ended in 1966, when the CPP was proscribed, and membership of it banned by the National Liberation Council (Establishment) Proclamation Decree, 1966 (NLCD 1). The National Organiser of the GYP, as well as all its functionaries were detained under the Protective Custody Decree, 1966 (NLCD 2).

7.3.1.2 The NLC caused the accounts of the CPP and its wings to be audited by the Auditor-General, and then declared all those accounts confiscated to the State by the National Liberation Council (Forfeiture of Assets) Decree 1967, (NLCD 23).

7.3.1. 3 The GYP died as it were in 1966, but its influence still lingered on for many years.

7.4 1ST OCTOBER, 1969 – 12TH JANUARY, 1972:
THE SECOND REPUBLIC PROGRESS PARTY (PP) GOVERNMENT

7.4.1 NATIONAL YOUTH SERVICE CORPS

7.4.1.1 The Progress Party (PP) Government had a problem as to what to do with out-of-school youth. The National Youth Service Corps (NYSC) was started on 15th December, 1969, to encourage young people to contribute to national development by putting them to work on community-improvement projects. With its motto “Brotherhood in Action”, the NYSC set out to support the government’s rural development programme.

7.4.1.2 Registration for membership of the NYSC began with the unemployed youth, who were then sent to work on community projects, such as building places of convenience, cultivation of farms, etc. Its popularity and mass appeal was diminished by criticism that the government was starting another GYP in a different form, and that the Prime Minister was asking other people’s children to do manual work in rural areas, whilst his own children schooled abroad.

7.4.1.3 Although the programme went into abeyance when the life of that government also ended. The idea was resuscitated, and re-instituted into a National Service Programme in 1972.

7.5 13TH JANUARY, 1972-3RD JUNE, 1979:
NATIONAL REDEMPTION COUNCIL (NRC)/
SUPREME MILITARY COUNCILS (SMC) I & II

7.5.1 NATIONAL SERVICE SCHEME (NSS)

7.5.1 Following the withdrawal of the Loan Scheme for students of the universities and the restoration of full scholarships, it became clear that students had to offer some service in reciprocal generosity. The National Redemption Council (NRC) initiated discussions towards the involvement of university students in nation-building as their contribution to a nation that had provided them free university education. The original proposal was for military training for the university students to improve their level of discipline. However, further discussions with the student leadership resulted in the institution of the National Service Scheme, as it currently exists.

7.5.2 GHANA NATIONAL RECONSTRUCTION CORPS (GNRC)

7.5.2.1 The NRC government found it necessary to mobilize unemployed young people to support the “Operation feed Yourself” programme. Under the leadership of Sarpong Kumankumah, young people were mobilized to go into farming, and were settled on some of the State Farms that used to be operated by the Workers Brigade. They were fully funded by the State, but they did not make the desired impact on the food supply situation.

7.5.2.2 Many of the GNRC members were involved in the Unigov campaign, and were involved in the physical attacks that were perpetrated on some citizens. Indeed the GNRC was listed among the political organizations that the GBA demanded to be banned after the referendum.

7.6 4TH JUNE, 1979 – 23RD SEPTEMBER, 1979: ARMED FORCES REVOLUTIONARY COUNCIL (AFRC)

7.6.1 The AFRC was in power for a very short time, however, the youthfulness of its leaders inspired many young people to flock to them in response to the call for the youth to save their country. Under its youthful Chairman, Flt Lt Jerry John Rawlings, and its Spokesman, Capt Kojo Boakye Djan, the AFRC itself was, in many respects, a Youth Movement.

7.6.2 Before the end of its short tenure of office serious differences had emerged, splitting the AFRC into two factions led by Flt Lt Rawlings and Capt Boakye Djan respectively. These factions had their following in the young civilians who associated themselves with the AFRC and it led to the birth of three Youth Associations, all claiming leftist ideological leanings: the June Fourth Movement (JFM); People’s Revolutionary League of Ghana (PRLG); and the Movement on National Affairs (MONAS), that were to influence the politics of the nation for many years.

7.6.3 MOVEMENT ON NATIONAL AFFAIRS (MONAS)

7.6.3.1 This organization was formed and inaugurated on 22nd September, 1979, two days before the inauguration of the Third Republic when the AFRC handed over power to President Hilla Limann. It was inaugurated by the Spokesman for the AFRC, Maj Boakye Djan at the Accra Technical Training College (ATTC) at Kokomlemle in Accra.

7.6.3.2 It was formed as an organization to structure a front for political activities by students workers and youth in the country. The group was made up of students, workers and youth organizations either as individuals, or as corporate members. For instance, the following examples would suffice to show who the members were:

1. Labour Movement – Peter Arthiabah (Administrative Secretary of TUC); and Opare Ababio – (of the Public Services Workers Union (PSWU))
2. Youth elements who used to be members of Socialist Revolutionary Youth League of Ghana, an organization registered with the National Youth Council as a youth movement - Yaw Adu Larbi, Nat Ayivor, Kweku Baako (Jnr).
3. Groups - Pan African Youth Movement (PANYMO).

7.6.3.3 At about the beginning of September, 1979, about two weeks before the end of the rule of the AFRC, Maj Boakye-Djan met with the above-named persons at the Star Hotel in Accra to plan the formation of a movement that would assist in consolidating constitutional democracy. This was made up of persons who had actively supported the Uprising of Junior Military Officers against the Senior Officers on 4th June, 1979, but who also firmly believed that the soldiers had no role in governance after a civilian government had come into place, and therefore, they were to return to barracks and remain there, playing their traditional role of ensuring internal and external security.

7.6.3.4 This group had emerged because in the course of AFRC rule, there were cleavages based on ethnic, ideological and political differences. One of the causes most central to the cleavage was whether or not there should be a handing-over at all. Although every one on the AFRC publicly supported the handing-over, the story was different in private. Consequently, two factions developed: the Rawlings faction; and the Boakye-Djan faction. The former emerged because some people were opposed to the handing over of power after such a short period of time to civilian politicians. They therefore conspired to disrupt the handing-over ceremony and so abort the entire process. In order to effectively counteract the activities of the Rawlings faction, the Boakye Djan faction made up of persons in favour of the return to civilian rule re-grouped and sought ways of thwarting the objectives of the Rawlings faction. Intense rivalry between the two factions developed and it is alleged that it was when the more powerful Boakye Djan group won the day, that the handing-over occurred.

7.6.3.5 MONAS was thus formed and inaugurated as part of the strategy to provide support for the return to a constitutional order in the course of the struggle for power between the two factions. It was also intended to ensure the survival of constitutional rule by providing a platform for constructive criticism of the government and its policies although its commitment to the maintenance of constitutional rule was beyond question.

7.6.3.6 MONAS was headquartered at Labone at the residence of the late Kofi Baako – a prominent Minister of State in the First Republic and the father of one of the members, Kweku Baako (Jnr).

7.7 24TH SEPTEMBER, 1979 – 30TH DECEMBER, 1981:
THIRD REPUBLIC PEOPLE’S NATIONAL PARTY
(PNP) GOVERNMENT

7.7.1 The Genesis Of The Youth Groups Of The Revolution

7.7.1.1 After the handing-over to the civilian administration in 1979, it was felt in many sections of the country that the civilian government would be unable to protect the “gains” of the 4th June Uprising on account of the fact that some of the “nation wreckers” and “corrupt politicians” had jumped on the political bandwagon of the PNP. Some students, former student leaders and out-of-school youth, formed various associations either to protect “the gains of the revolution”, or to defend the concept of constitutional government. These groups attained some pre-eminence on the political landscape as events on the political landscape began to unfold, leading eventually to the toppling of the PNP from political power.

7.7.1.2 The roots of some of these groups lay in the events that produced the 4th June Uprising (usually referred to as the “June 4 Revolution”), and the subsequent modes adopted for addressing the fallout of that event. After the AFRC handed over power to the PNP administration, the problem was what to do with these young army officers and other ranks, amongst whom were twenty-two year-olds who had to be rehabilitated in order to protect the cohesion of the army. This was because problems affecting Command and Control within the military had been created by the fact that Senior Military Officers had been obliged to pay respects to very junior officers and other ranks on account of their membership of the AFRC. This turned the Army’s traditions upside down and greatly affected morale on both sides of the Command Structure. Another major problem was the great factionalism that had been spawned by differences - both personal and ethnic - between the Chairman of the AFRC, Flt Lt Rawlings, on the one part and the Spokesman and Number-Two man of the AFRC, Maj Boakye-Djan, on the other. These differences split the AFRC down the middle, and spawned two major factions both within and outside the Armed Forces. The government took a decision to offer the AFRC members a resettlement package to go abroad for further education. Many of them, including Maj Boakye-Djan, accepted the offer and left Ghana, but Flt Lt Rawlings is said to have turned down the offer of resettlement, and remained in Ghana.

7.7.1.3 The respective decisions by Maj Boakye-Djan to leave Ghana, and Flt Lt Rawlings to remain in Ghana had consequences for their respective factions. The Boakye Djan faction became orphaned, whilst the Rawlings faction grew from strength to strength. Notable among the latter faction were personalities such as Kwasi Adu, Tony Akoto Ampaw, Augustus “Gussie” Tanoh, Yao Graham, Nicholas Atampugire, etc. Some members of the two factions formed the People’s Revolutionary League of Ghana (PRLG); and others in the Rawlings faction split up into two groups, the June Fourth Movement (JFM) and the New Democratic Movement (NDM).

7.7.1.4 These groups were instrumental in shaping the direction of Ghanaian politics after 1979. Even the overthrow of the Limann government was an act endorsed by the leftist youth groups of the time. An event occurred on 3rd October, 1981, that was to prove the watershed for the continued survival of the Third Republic. On that date, there was a Forum of leftist youth and workers organizations at Labone Secondary School. Most of these were groups such as: NUGS, MONAS, JFM, PRLG, NDM, Socialist Society of Ghana (SSG), African Youth Command (AYC), African Youth Brigade (AYB), Pan African Youth Movement (PANYMO). The convenors of the “Labone Forum” were Osei Poku the editor of Evening News, and S S Baffour-Awuah of the African Youth Command (AYC). The Forum, attended by senior members of the PNP (“Old Guard”), deliberated on the state of the nation and arrived at the consensus that the government of the PNP had veered off the path of socialist ideology. The Forum also articulated the view that the constitutional regime no longer represented the aspirations of the people, and its downfall would have popular support. Many of those who participated in the Forum and who were outspoken in their criticism of the lack of ideological direction of the PNP Government, ended up being a part of the structures of the PNDC when the constitutional government was overthrown two months later.

7.7.2 THE JUNE FOURTH MOVEMENT

7.7.2.1 The June Fourth Movement (JFM) was a leftist movement made up largely of young people, workers, radical young academics and students that began after the AFRC handed over power to the civilian government of President Limann. Before the handing over, there were concerns that the aims of the “June Fourth Revolution” would not be pursued by the incoming government and that whatever the revolution had achieved would be lost. Therefore this movement was born in order to defend the “gains of the revolution” and it was no surprise that the Vice-President of National Union of Ghana Students (NUGS) in 1979, became one of its early General Secretaries. The JFM was vociferous in its opposition to the call by Maj Boakye-Djan for a probe into AFRC affairs. It is alleged that originally, Flt Lt Rawlings was not a member of the JFM, but became a member after his forced retirement from the Armed Forces in 1979.

7.7.2.2 The Movement was organized along Marxist lines and propounded ideas as to how Ghana could be governed after the fashion of Marxist countries such as Cuba and Libya. Within the Movement, there were Revolutionary Committees modelled after the Libyan system. According to Emmanuel Hansen, Flt Lt Rawlings paid a visit to Libya in the summer of 1980, and came into contact with this organizational structure, and adopted it. He further maintains that the Revolutionary Committees formed the basis for the organisation of the People’s Defence Committees and Workers’ Defence Committees that were introduced into this country in early 1982, after the Provisional National Defence Council (PNDC) came to power.

7.7.2.3 The JFM published a newspaper, the Workers Banner, that contained this notion of PDCs /WDCs and that is credited with radicalizing some of the soldiers who took part in the coup of 1981, to participate in the process. However, Shillington maintains that “His [Rawlings] forced retirement from the Air Force notwithstanding, his leadership of the JFM brought into the organization a number of useful radical soldiers, especially from among the non-commissioned ranks.” In the editorial of 14th-20th July, 1981, the Workers Banner, the organ of the JFM, wondered whether indeed, there was a revolution under way or we were merely engaged in a “reform”. The Workers Banner insisted that “if we were in a revolution we should be seeing activity at Teshie firing range, even identifying, by name, possible targets.”

7.7.2.4 The pre-eminence of the JFM in the plot to overthrow the constitutional order of the Third Republic as well as the initial direction of the government that was established thereafter cannot be underrated. According to Shillington:

The JFM, NDM and other left-wing movements of the period were important in providing the ideological rationale for the 31 December revolution ... as well as providing a corps of dedicated cadres who could implement a revolutionary programme on a national scale... [T]he JFM in particular, provided Rawlings with a public platform from which to 'sensitise' people and to hold the government accountable.

7.7.2.5 Indeed it was under the auspices of the Movement that the most public of the threats against the government of President Limann were uttered during a speech to celebrate the first anniversary of the June Fourth Uprising. Little wonder that it was represented on the PNDC by no less a person than Chris Bukari Atim, then the General Secretary of the JFM. According to Hansen, the move to make the JFM visible on the PNDC was to bind the JFM, the student movement and the youth to the revolutionary initiative. At the 17th Annual Congress of NUGS, fraternal greetings sent by the JFM and the PRLG ended with "REVOLUTION OR DEATH". "The JFM was crucial in providing the link between the military who had staged a coup and the civilians who would turn it into a revolution."

7.7.2.6 The JFM came to the attention of national security during the Third Republic as it was suspected of plotting subversion. The JFM started a farm at Katamanso, which land was procured through the instrumentality of the President of the Nungua Branch in order to go into farming in fulfillment of its belief in the dignity of farming. However, National Security thought otherwise, and insisted that far from it being an attempt to take to farming, the JFM was using the place as a training ground for revolutionaries to subvert the government. The JFM was also associated with the activities of a foreign revolutionary then known as Wilhelm Harrison Buller, and later as Albert Odinga, a national of Belize (former British Honduras), who had been expelled from his own country for subversive activities. He was suspected of carrying on subversive activities by giving military training to some young Ghanaians for purposes of overthrowing the government and was arrested for overstaying his visa. Although the government could not prove the allegation of subversion and subsequently deported him, the suspicion of untoward activities hung around the JFM until the coup occurred on 31st December, 1981. As subsequent events proved, the suspicions were not unfounded.

7.7.3 MOVEMENT ON NATIONAL AFFAIRS (MONAS)

7.7.3.1 One week after the handing over of power, Maj Boakye-Djan left Ghana in fulfillment of an agreement between the AFRC Government and the new administration of the PNP, leaving the group somewhat orphaned, but it carried on its activities. In its role of supporter of the constitutional order, it needed to collaborate with institutions of state to concretize the support. MONAS therefore formed official and organized links with the state security agencies, the Youth Wing of the People's National Party (PNP)

and Members of Parliament, all with a view to ensuring that the regime could serve its first term, and thereafter give the people of Ghana a chance to use the ballot box to decide the way forward. MONAS also published a newspaper known as “The Message” in which it espoused its beliefs. The movement was also in the forefront of public criticism of the decision by the National Olympic Committee in 1980 to boycott the 1980 Olympic Games in Moscow. In 1980, the movement was described in a newspaper as:

“a clique... which describes itself as ‘a mass research organization – for whatever that means – but believed in student circles to be working closely with Mr. Kofi Batsa of the PNP.”

This view of MONAS as a PNP government-influenced outfit seems to be supported by the admission by one of its leaders that since their avowed aim was to support constitutional government, they co-operated with the Intelligence system.

7.7.3.2 Early in 1982, MONAS attempted to facilitate the organization of a counter coup and so the leaders were arrested and detained for periods ranging between six months and two years initially in military guardrooms, and later in State prisons.

7.7.3.3 The long period of incarceration of the leaders, coupled with infiltration by national intelligence made it difficult for a meeting to be called. MONAS therefore fizzled out as a mass movement and its influence as an active player on the political scene effectively ended.

7.7.3.4 Funding

7.7.3.4.1 MONAS was funded from various sources. Contributions were obtained from Maj Boakye-Djan, the family of Kweku Baako (Jnr), Nana Okutwer Bekoe, Chairman of the PNP and other “friends” of the society.

7.7.4 PEOPLE’S REVOLUTIONARY LEAGUE OF GHANA (PRLG)

7.7.4.1 The PRLG was another leftist group that was also active on the youth front. It was related to both MONAS and JFM because it shared common membership of some of the organisations already named as being members of MONAS. Born during the AFRC rule, its membership was eventually split between the MONAS and JFM. In August, 1979, the President of the Central Committee of the PRLG was Kweku Baako (Jnr), later of MONAS, whilst T Kojo Nubour Ababio, the General Secretary, later became a member of the JFM. The PRLG considered itself a group to the extreme ideological left. For instance, in October, 1979, when an Accra High Court reviewed and granted bail to some convicts of the AFRC ‘People’s Courts’ and ordered their release, the PRLG that took to the streets to demonstrate against the reviews, ending at the Castle where the leaders, Kweku Baako (Jnr), Nubour Ababio and Quaynor-Mettle, presented a petition to the Vice-President.

7.7.4.2 Late in 1979, a leaflet appeared attributed to Military Intelligence in which allegations of tribalism were made against Flt Lt Rawlings. Some members of the PRLG such as Kweku Baako (Jnr), Riad Hozaifeh, Nubour Ababio and Flt Lt Rawlings planned a counter-strategy of producing counter leaflets to refute the allegations and distributing them at various places, including Burma Camp, and at other military installations. In the course of distributing the leaflets in the Military Hospital area, some of the members were arrested for carrying on subversive activities in a restricted area.

7.7.4.3 A split in the PRLG occurred when in February, 1980, Maj Boakye-Djan and Maj Mensah Poku, both members of the former AFRC, paid a visit to Ghana, and held a press conference at the Ambassador Hotel to refute some allegations of corruption levelled against them. This was on account of the fact that the newspapers had begun publishing various allegations of misconduct on the part of AFRC members. At the press conference the two ex-military officers asked for two things:

1. A commission of enquiry into the affairs of AFRC in order to investigate allegations of personal misconduct of AFRC members and even supporters; and
2. A fact-finding commission to find out whether in the course of dispensing revolutionary justice, some miscarriage of justice occurred so as to give a basis for a review of the Transitional Provisions in the Constitution.

7.7.4.4 The request by the two men to clear their names was supported by some of the members of PRLG, and they gave their support to the request publicly. The reason for the support, according to them, was that some effort was being made by some persons to set aside decisions made by the People's Revolutionary Court in respect of certain persons. For instance, a letter from the "Office of the Chairman of AFRC, Arakan Barracks Burma Camp to the Director of Prisons copied to The Chairman, Special Tribunal, State House" dated 19th October, 1979, asking for the "setting aside of the sentence of J W K Harlley by the authority of the People's Revolutionary Court." This letter, ostensibly signed by Squadron Leader E K Dargbe, the President of the erstwhile People's Court, and written nearly one month after the AFRC ceased to exist as a legal entity, suggested that there were clandestine efforts to review some of the sentences even after the AFRC handed over power to the government of the Third Republic. Such clandestine efforts were tantamount to an admission that not all the decisions of the People's Court were unassailable, and created sufficient doubt that the call to re-open the cases was well-founded. The public support given to the call for a public probe, did not go down well with the Rawlings faction. The tensions between the two factions boiled over into the public domain, as those members of the Boakye-Djan faction who had given public support to the request were accused of betraying the cause publicly opposed by the PRLG, ie the review of the decisions of the AFRC People's Court. Those members of the PRLG in question were therefore announced to have been dismissed, but this occurred at the same time as they also claimed they had resigned their membership. A break between the PRLG and MONAS then occurred, as those who had been "sacked"(or who had "resigned") were mostly those who belonged to MONAS as well.

7.7.5 RIVALRY BETWEEN THE FACTIONS (MONAS AND JFM)

7.7.5.1 In 1981, Maj Boakye-Djan, member of the former AFRC and patron/founder of MONAS returned to Ghana with Capt K. Baah Achamfour, another member of the former AFRC, and repeated the earlier request for a probe into the affairs of the AFRC. At this time, Flt Lt Rawlings was reported to be still going to the barracks to intervene in Command and Welfare problems, thereby undermining the Military Chain of Command. The soldiers still called him “Chairman” and deferred to him more than to the legitimate political authority. These acts were obviously incompatible with his status as a subordinate officer of the Ghana Armed Forces, and the information was brought to the attention of President Limann. Members of MONAS believed that the President had by then, cultivated such a cordial relationship with Flt Lt Rawlings that he did not take appropriate action. They also contend that the President’s apparently inexplicable conduct was occasioned by wrong information that Maj Boakye-Djan was the one planning a coup against his government, and that this contradictory information became a distraction such that even warnings by Military Intelligence as to the danger presented by Flt Lt Rawlings to the stability of the regime were ignored by President Limann. However, Professor Nabila, then Minister for Presidential Affairs, contests this information, and maintains that the lack of action was caused by indecisiveness and “too much ‘buck passing’ “ by the professionals within the national security apparatus”.

7.7.5.2 The JFM dominated NUGS, as many of its members were in the leadership of NUGS. It had become one of Rawlings’ platforms, although he himself did not become a member of JFM until 1980. The political positions of NUGS were therefore more in alignment with the JFM than with MONAS. The battle between the two groups was carried on in the press. In the “Citadel Daily”, a newspaper published by Dan Lartey and edited by Nubuor Ababio, the attacks on the person and character of Maj Boakye-Djan was a constant theme, as well as articulating the political position of NUGS. This attitude was understandable since the editor of that newspaper was also the General Secretary of JFM, and also a former leader of NUGS. The newspaper also published articles that damned the civilian administration, that is, the Executive and Parliament, and called for a revolution. MONAS disagreed with the position of the Leftist forum and this completed the break between it and the other groups such as the JFM.

7.7.5.3 The rivalry between the two groups was very much in evidence on the university campuses and this divided the front of the student leadership.

7.7.5.4 On 1st January, 1982, Sgt Alolga Akata Pore, a member of MONAS, is alleged to have paid a visit to his MONAS friends, to persuade MONAS members to join Flt Lt Rawlings who had overthrown the constitutional government the previous day. This was a surprising development since he was a member of MONAS. Clearly some of its members had not been faithful to the objectives of the movement, and the personal animosities that had developed between the MONAS and JFM had rendered the group very vulnerable. Their position was made more difficult because Maj Boakye-Djan had granted an interview to the British Broadcasting Corporation (BBC) radio on 1st January, 1982, condemning the takeover. MONAS drafted a three-paragraph statement that was non-committal and designed to buy them time.

7.7.5.5 The statement did not achieve the desired result, because Nana Okutwer Bekoe, Chairman of PNP and one of financiers of MONAS, while in custody at Gondar Barracks, had allegedly stated that Maj Boakye-Djan had accepted a bribe of US$200,000 from the PNP to share among his “boys”.

7.7.5.6 The members of MONAS were arrested and detained for periods of up to two years, when information leaked to the authorities that they were involved in a plot to subvert the new regime. The battle for supremacy between the two AFRC protagonists appeared to have ended with the emergence of Flt Lt Rawlings as the unchallenged leader in 1982, and the JFM as the most-favoured youth group.

7.7.6 THE JFM

7.7.6.1 On 3rd January, 1982, barely forty-eight hours after the PNP Government had been overthrown, the JFM led a group of workers to demonstrate in support of the revolution. As part of their demonstration of support, they paid a visit to the Graphic Corporation to threaten the journalists there not to publish negative news about the revolution because the workers would not suffer that to happen. The spokesmen of the group, Kwasi Adu and Quaynor Mettle, both former student leaders and recent graduates of the University of Ghana, complained about the hardship in the country and accused the Daily Graphic of unfair editorial slant against the June Fourth Uprising on account of the publication of negative stories about the event. The newspaper quoted Kwasi Adu as saying: “We shall meet the enemies pen for pen and boot for boot.”

7.7.6.2 The JFM and the NDM were put in charge of giving direction to the PDC/WDC concept by the formation of an Interim National Coordinating Council (INCC) because this was largely a JFM idea. Shillington blames ideological conflicts between the two groups as largely responsible for the absence of clear direction and proper organization of the PDCs. Chris Atim was instrumental in establishing WDCs all over the country and was constantly on the move, inaugurating the committees. These PDCs/WDCs were to be made up of junior staff and working class people. Managers and other persons of high social standing in the communities were not allowed to be members. This resulted in a bisecting of Ghanaian society into “people” and “citizens”. The need for the PDCs/WDCs to be brought under more central control was amply demonstrated by the amount of power that those who were involved in their organization had managed to accumulate within a short space of time. The implementation of the concept also demonstrated the importance of a mass movement organized from the local level upwards for purposes of political control of the country.

7.7.6.3 JFM is also credited with proposing Dr. Kwesi Botchwey, a member of the NDM, as a member of the Economic Management Team that was formed, before he eventually got appointed as the Secretary for Finance and Economic Planning, as well as influencing the initial socialist policies of the PNDC. Indeed on 21st July, 1982, the Association of Recognized Professional Bodies (ARPB) held a press conference at which it read a Resolution which, among other things, urged the PNDC to hand over to a “Government of National Unity”, while making arrangements to return the country to a constitutionally elected government by 1983. The association buttressed its proposal by making a complaint that “Not even the June Four Movement (JFM) was altogether certain about what the nation had embarked upon.” This statement suggested the importance of the JFM in giving direction to the new government. A member of the Steering Committee of the JFM, Kwasi Adu, promptly accused the association of double standards. In particular, he criticized the Ghana Bar Association for being behind the Resolution adopted by the ARPB, and accused the lawyers of starting a reactionary campaign against the revolution, since they were the same people who had aggressively defended the AFRC convicts.

7.7.6.4 The end came for the extreme leftists in the JFM when they were accused of plotting to depose Flt Lt Rawlings as leader of the revolution and they were purged from the leadership. It is alleged that led by Sgt Alolga Akata-Pore, the leftists made a move to oust the Chairman of the PNDC, Flt Lt Rawlings, because they began to feel that the revolution was losing leftist impetus. As they erroneously believed that their control of the “grassroot organization” could be exploited to their political advantage, they sought to use their influence to isolate the Chairman and to effect his removal. Chris Atim, the mouthpiece of the ideologues at the time, categorically denied this assertion and stated in his letter of resignation to the Chairman of the PNDC that those of his friends so accused, had been framed by their political enemies in order to get rid of them. Whichever version of events represents the true situation, there were interesting developments after he resigned from the government. He left the country and went into exile.

7.7.6.5 After the purging of the leftists, the JFM was heard of mostly when the anniversary of the 4th June event was approaching, when they issued statements glorifying the event and organized public activities and programmes. The political power of the JFM within the revolutionary movement, became greatly diminished although the appearance of importance and influence was maintained by the leadership of the revolution.

7.7.6.6 In 1986, the PNDC announced that it was going to celebrate the 4th June anniversary as a national event. The day was declared a public holiday, and an elaborate programme of celebration was drawn up. The tri-colour flag of the JFM was hung on all major streets and a carnival of events was launched. The JFM was a central piece of this celebration of its “birthday”, and the day became the occasion when route-marches were held by the Security Services, fiery revolutionary lectures were delivered, and glamourised versions of the events of 4th June, 1979, were recounted. Nugent observes that by 1986, the “revolutionary banner” had become an illusion even though the leadership tolerated the behaviour of the cadres who were inclined to behave as if the revolution was still on-going.

7.7.7 OTHER YOUTH GROUPS

7.7.7.1 Early into the rule of the PNDC, several youth groups made their presence felt by issuing messages of support. Whilst the Akropong Youth Association urged the PNDC to nationalize all lands, the Dagomba Youth Association thanked the PNDC for releasing some of the Ministers from custody, and indicated that that act had demonstrated the good intentions of the PNDC.

7.7.7.2 A decision was later taken to establish a National Youth Organising Commission (NYOC) to replace the National Youth Council following a two-day seminar on the youth, that was organized at the University of Ghana. A 15-member Commission made up of individuals as well as representatives of some youth groups was appointed to help organize the youth. The individuals were Dr. Kwesi Botchwey, Kwesi Pratt (Jnr), Shaibu Ahmed Gariba, Ms Belinda Agoe, Ms Cynthia Nuamah and Obliteyfi Akwetey, President of NUGS. The other nine who were not named, were to be representatives of the then nine regions. Kwesi Pratt (Jnr) was the first elected Secretary of the NYOC and the task was to form a mass youth movement on the lines of the GYP. However, the objective was not achieved, and many of its leaders left it to take up other responsibilities such as the Finance and Economic portfolio for the Chairman, etc.

7.7.7.3 The Democratic Youth League of Ghana (DYLG) was a “mass youth movement” that was launched in Accra on 19th November, 1982. Its first major statement was to criticize the students of the universities who had begun to oppose the government on some of its anti-student policies. However, it does not appear to have achieved any purpose and was never a major player on the political field.

7.7.8 BOY SCOUTS ASSOCIATION AND GIRL GUIDES ASSOCIATION

7.7.8.1 In 1982, the Boy Scouts entered into public life again, perhaps in answer to the call for mass mobilization for national development. In September, 1982, the Scouts held a meeting at Baden Powell Hall in Accra to discuss how to mobilise the youth to play vanguard roles in national reconstruction. Consequent upon these deliberations, the Scouts set up a committee to enable the association play a vanguard role in national reconstruction.

7.7.8.2 Despite the stated objects of the association, Scouts joined the revolutionary organs in activities of law-enforcement. Without proper authority, they began to enforce curfew regulations and to engage in acts of vigilantism. In rural communities, they were accused of harassing traders and were involved in the policing of curfew-compliance, the enforcement of price controls leading to the locking out of women from markets, whipping of market women, and enforcement of sanitation laws of district authorities. At the Border areas, they joined in border patrols to help check anti-smuggling activities. Indeed, some saw themselves as, and acted the part of, a uniformed branch of the PDCs and Students and Youth Task Force.

7.7.8.3 In consequence of the complaints engendered by these acts of vigilantism, a one-day seminar was organized for them by the Military authorities at Ho, under the theme “The role of Scouts and Girl Guides in the Revolution”. The seminar, reported to have attracted over 400 members of the associations, was intended to educate the membership of the associations to respect the human rights of the citizenry even though they were expected to assist in exposing economic saboteurs.

7.7.8.4 The acts of vigilantism brought the Scouts into conflict with the communities in which they operated. In 1983, an alleged smuggler was killed because he allegedly threatened a Scout on border patrol with a knife.

7.7.8.5 It is uncertain how long this para-military posture of the association was maintained, but what is certain is that, in the communities in which they operated, the Scouts lost their image as a friendly civil society organization.

7.8 CONCLUSION

7.8.1 No youth movement has ever been given the place and prominence that the GYP enjoyed in its heyday. The National Youth Council was revived, and in 1967, it regained its seat on the International Youth Council lost in 1961, as a result of the formation of the GYP as the sole organization for young people. Every government found it imperative to organize the youth, particularly the out-of-school youth and those without employable skills. Other political interests found the idealism of the youth a fertile ground on which to sow ideas of societal change. As the post-Independence population increased, the significance of the youth in national politics became more and more obvious.

7.8.2 The Youth Associations that were born out of the 4th June, 1979 Uprising, brought together young people with energy and drive, who defended the idea to which they had given their support. They were behind many of the human rights violations and abuses that occurred, as, in their youthful exuberance, they urged “revolutionary” punitive measures against “enemies of the revolution”. They competed for control over power at the national level, with deadly consequences for some of its members.

7.8.3 Other youth groups that were meant to provide moral training for young people, such as the Boy Scouts, corrupted their mission and perverted their existence by joining in activities that resulted in the perpetration of human rights abuses on the communities in which they operated, particularly against women traders.

Volume 4 Chapter 8 - The Role Of Chiefs - Complicity Or Resistance To Human Rights Abuses

CHAPTER EIGHT

THE ROLE OF CHIEFS - COMPLICITY OR RESISTANCE TO HUMAN RIGHTS ABUSES FROM 6TH MARCH, 1957 -- 6TH JANUARY, 1993

8.0 Introduction

8.0.1 This chapter deals with the role that chiefs have played in the political history of Ghana between the period 6th March, 1957, and 6th January, 1993. The assessment of the role of chiefs is done with specific reference to their efforts in the protection or otherwise, of human rights. One fact that became obvious from the work of the Commission was that, the chiefs themselves were often victims of human rights abuses, and that the chieftaincy institution suffered human rights abuses more than any other institutions, during the mandate period.

8.0.2 Land ownership in Ghana since colonial days has been in the hands of families, clans, and traditional rulers or chiefs. The latter's position on land ownership supersedes the rest in most Ghanaian societies. The chiefs were seen as holding economic power, controlling, as they claimed to do, access to land and the people who worked on the lands, as well as what could be grown on it, dug out of it, and the labour to do all these works. By and large, not until the establishment of the 1992 constitution, all lands in the Northern, Upper East and Upper West Regions of Ghana were vested in the Government of Ghana. On the other hand, from Brong-Ahafo Region down to the coastal regions of Ghana, lands are in the hands of families, clans and traditional rulers.

8.0.3 Those in charge of these lands usually release them to individuals who want to invest on the land and in return these people pay royalties or some kind of compensation or rent. One could obtain a parcel of land for a project by lease or outright purchase from the land owners. However, the acquisition of land and its management is bedevilled with a myriad of problems, ranging from double sale of a parcel of land; improper documentation, encroachment by unauthorised individuals or groups or families; litigations and disputes. Along side these, most lands compulsorily acquired by government; and its agencies, little or no compensation has been paid to the owners of these lands. Where compensation has been paid, the land has been left unattended to for so many years, allowing all kinds of peoples, individuals and families to claim ownership.

8.1 Pre-Independence

8.1.1 In modern times whatever role chiefs have played in the governance of Ghana, has depended very much on the attitude of the nation to the chieftaincy institution. In Ghana, the interference in the exercise of powers by chiefs formally began with the signing of the Bond of 1844, under which some chiefs claimed protection from the British and agreed to respect British authority in respect of the adjudication of specified crimes. As Kumado put it, "the British convinced themselves with the cumulative effect of the treaties like the bond and the various Annexation and Protection Orders in the Council to mean that they have vested in them, the power to administer the areas".

8.1.2 One major legislation that created some kind of uncertainty with regards to some of the powers of the chiefs, was the introduction of the Supreme Court Ordinance of 1876 and Native Jurisdiction Ordinance of 1878. These laws facilitated and regulated certain powers and jurisdiction of the chiefs and more so the power to dismiss chiefs, but with prior approval from London . In 1883, the 1878 Ordinance was repealed, after some chiefs had protested.

8.1.3 In 1904, the Chiefs' Ordinance was passed, and this provided a situation whereby chiefs could apply to the Governor for the confirmation of their election and installation. The confirmation by the governor determined the lawfulness of the applicant's status as chief in his traditional area and the colony. As Kumado observed, "by 1910 the central government had, through legislation, weakened the authority of the chiefs, by making their position dependent both in law and on central government prop".

8.1.4 As the process of colonisation crystallised, the chiefs gradually lost their judicial and military roles, since the defence of the territory became the prerogative of the colonial government. In addition, more and more disputes were adjudicated upon in courts set up by the colonial government as the authority of the chiefs' courts was pared down by legislation. By the time the colonial government introduced Indirect Rule as a formal administrative policy in the Gold Coast in the early part of the twentieth century, the subjugation of the chiefs to British authority had become complete and the political and judicial roles of the chiefs had become circumscribed.

8.1.5 The history of Ghana is replete with cases, in which several courageous chiefs stood up to colonial governors and challenged their authority. In 1866, for instance, King Aggrey of Cape Coast refused to recognize the authority of the Governor of Cape Coast Castle beyond the bounds prescribed by the Bond of 1844. King Aggrey considered himself to be the lawful enthroned King of Cape Coast, for which reason the Governor had no right to set limits to his powers as king, and to set free, persons he himself had tried and imprisoned. The dispute between the King and the Governor led to the dethronement and exile of the King to Sierra Leone .

8.1.6 Some chiefs attained prominence within the colonial administration of Sir Hugh Clifford and Sir Gordon Guggisberg as Governors. Chiefs, such as Nana Sir Ofori Atta I, Nene Sir Azu Mate Kole, Togbi Sri and Nana Sir Tsibu Darko even served as members of the Legislative and Executive Council in the Gold Coast . The Guggisberg Constitution of 1925 introduced the Provincial Council of Chiefs. Through this council, the chiefs of Gold Coast had the opportunity to participate in government at the highest possible level as it was the first organised group to be consulted by government on major issues .

8.1 .7 The struggle against the colonial government as to whether it had the authority to interfere in the chieftaincy institution continued well into the twentieth century and those chiefs who maintained their opposition to the colonial government were marginalized.

8.1.8 The picture was somehow different in the northern part of Ghana. In the Northern Territories, even though kingdoms existed, their political authority had been weakened on account of the activities of the slave raiders, before the impact of colonialism and formal politics in Ghana was felt. Treaties concluded with the British government were signed during the closing years of the 19th century bringing those areas under the protection of the British Government.

8.1.9 By 1911, Northern Ghana had been subdued by the British with the use of the Gold Coast Police Force. Having consolidated their control of the area, the British decided to involve chiefs in their administration just as they did with the chiefs in Southern Ghana. At that time, Northern Ghana had two categories of political groups – the acephalous and the centralized groups. The acephalous political groups lacked a centralized authority and machinery of governance, whilst the centralized political groups had chiefs. On account of possessing more identifiable political authorities, the authorities of the centralised groups were easier to locate and appoint as agents of the colonial government, than were those of the acephalous groups where the exercise of political authority was more diffuse in nature of political authority.

8.1.10 The weakness inherent in the absence of a centralised authority was further accentuated by slave-raiding activities of Samori and Babatu. Even in the centralised states, the slave raiding activities contributed to undermine the authority of the chiefs, but the effects were worse on the acephalous groups. A further significant factor was the incidence of intra-state and inter-state wars in the late 19th century. The result of all these factors that weakened the chiefdoms was that chiefs were unable to control the people who were supposed to be their subjects. This situation was even worse for the non-centralized groups. Once they had no institution around which to rally, the British took advantage and created new political organisations with the chiefs of the centralised communities as heads. The introduction of indirect rule in the northern part of Ghana empowered some chiefs to be political authorities, and brought whole areas under their control. This was done by putting smaller and independent chiefs under bigger ones and then creating paramountcies out of the bigger polities. Consequently chiefs, who were previously autonomous were forced to come under these paramount chiefs. Prominent among such Paramount Chiefs were the Nayiri of the Mamprusi, Ya Na of the Dagomba, the Yagbumwura of the Gonja, the Wa Na of the Wala, and the Krachi Wura of the Krachi.

8.1.11 The British Government empowered the chiefs to exercise their authority within the new political organisation. They also had to create chiefs in the acephalous areas that had no chiefs. State power was put at the disposal of the new paramountcies and new chiefs used State power to suppress all resistance from new subjects. Consequently, the foundation on which the chief's power rested in the northern part of Ghana was in the hands of the "white man." With the outbreak of the First World War, and the withdrawal of colonial officials for service outside their stations, the weaknesses in the new system began to show, as the chiefs became vulnerable in the absence of colonial support.

8.1.12 As a result of these developments, a fundamental contradiction in local administrative policy in Northern Ghana became evident. The chiefs had become agents of colonial rule, many, with little or no claim to traditional authority, or to the status of chiefs, and were thus completely dependent on the colonial administration. This situation made them vulnerable to manipulation by the colonial government.

8.1.13 When partisan politics became prominent in Northern Ghana in 1954, the two main political parties, Convention People's Party (CPP) and the Northern Peoples' Party (NPP) began to court the support of the chiefs. The parties realized that they could not make any progress among the people, who were still under the effective control of their chiefs. During the 1954 and 1956 Elections, the NPP was regarded as the party of chiefs and the CPP was seen as being anti-chief. In the 1956 elections, the CPP recognised the necessity to find and field candidates with chiefly backgrounds in order to make an impact. Though the two parties courted the support of chiefs, the NPP had more support from the chiefs and this showed in the massive support that the NPP enjoyed. It thus became imperative for politicians, who wanted votes in Northern Territories, to court and win the support of chiefs first. This phenomenon has remained in Ghana's political life till the present time.

8.2 Chiefs And Land

8.2.1 Pre-Independence To 1957

8.2.1.1 The British Colonialist was reticent and even more cautious when it came to regulating Gold Coast's (now Ghana) economic resource, land. There were many discussions about the importance of land reforms, but no such reforms were ever to take place. So far as the vast majority of Ghanaians were concerned, land allocation mostly in the form of confiscation, taxation and rights were matters controlled by chiefs and their council.

8.2.1.2 The British then passed the Native Jurisdiction Ordinance (NJO) in 1883, which entrenched them in Southern Ghana and reduced the traditional rulers and their people from the status of protégés to that of subjects of the British. The Ordinance also set up democratic local councils, which took over certain lands in the Colony (the south) and in the Ashanti Region onto their care. As a result, the chiefs lost control of what were traditionally stool lands, and even if the general ownership of those lands remained vested in the stools and hence, the communities which owed allegiance to those stools.

8.2.1.3 In 1900, the Concessions Ordinance was enacted to regulate the granting of concessions for the exploitation of timber and mineral resources. The law was made to certify as valid a concession, granted by the persons having authority to do so and which protect the customary rights of the people living in the area. The concession rent was to be paid to a treasurer appointed by the Governor and distributed to the entitled individuals. It thus meant that, the revenue from these lands, derived from local taxes on farmers, land and concession sales as well as from royalties on timber from the forest and minerals, which was the ancient basis of chiefly inheritance, was to be collected by the newly created local councils, as one element of local revenue. Chiefs were no longer at liberty to alienate stool lands without the assent of local councils.

8.2.1.4 From these reforms, the revenue accruing from stool lands and from native courts went directly to the treasuries of local councils, and they appropriated the annual grants to chiefs for their administration and for the maintenance of their retinues.

8.2.1.5 Although the NJO met with the resistance and protests from chiefs, it was the protest over land that was to channel all such dissidents into a single protest movement in the late 1890s, led by the Aborigines' Rights Protection Society (ARPS). The ARPS protest against the Land Bills of 1894-1897, centred on the contention that there was no waste land or public land which could justifiably be taken over by the government; and secondly the claim that the bill would reduce all the chiefs to mere squatters and lead to the abrogation of their ancestral rights. In view of this, the ARPS appeared to be right to assist the chiefs, and successfully, they protested against the Land Bills that would have vested all vacant lands in the Crown. From then on to the late 1950s, governments have invigorated their effort to acquire lands through series of legislations

8. 3.0 Post-Independence Governments

8.3.1 Like the colonial governments before them, post-colonial governments of Ghana also recognised the importance of chiefs in the mobilization of their subjects. The post-colonial governments, however, sought through legislation to control the chieftaincy institution and the personalities that occupied those offices. Post-Independence governments made development projects dependent on loyalty to government. Chiefs were in effect, forced to do the will of government in order to attract development projects to their traditional area, otherwise, the chiefs risked facing the displeasure of their subjects for the absence of such projects.

8.4. 6TH MARCH, 1957 -- 23RD FEBRUARY, 1966: CONVENTION PEOPLE'S PARTY

8.4.1 Nkrumah And The Chiefs

8.4.1.1 One scholar has said: "Dr. Kwame Nkrumah rode partly on the back of discontent against chiefs to gain political victory in 1951 and subsequently through all pre-independence elections until independence was attained in 1957". This discontent of Dr. Nkrumah and his followers was directed against chiefs, because they were perceived as "agents of the colonial government." Nana Ofori Atta II observed that in victory, and after independence, Dr. Nkrumah and his supporters waged war against chiefs, and in some instances, he openly taunted chiefs saying that those of them who refused to conform and would not do business with the CPP Government "would run away and leave their sandals behind."

8.4.1.2 The CPP Government realized the need to take a firmer control over the chieftaincy institution. It therefore devised a way of ensuring that only people whose support it could count on, could become chiefs. The first Chieftaincy Act of the Parliament of Ghana, the Chieftaincy Act, 1961 (Act 81), stipulated that government recognition was required to validate the enstoolment/enskinment and destoolment/deskinment of chiefs. The clear result of this was that persons who did not support the government were never given the necessary recognition, notwithstanding the fact that they had been customarily nominated, selected and enstooled/enskinned as chiefs. This Act thus compelled loyalty of those chiefs who did not wish to fall foul of government and excluded from office, those who did not support the government.

8.4.1.3 By operation of Act 81, the Government of Dr. Nkrumah was able to give recognition to supporters and sympathisers, while it removed from office those chiefs, who identified themselves with the opposition. In the Ashanti Region where the CPP had the biggest opposition, it was reported that the Government considered the position of 27 chiefs, who were to be officially recognised through a publication in the Government gazette. In a similar situation, the government withdrew its recognition of the Okyenhene, Nana Ofori Atta II, Chief of Akyem Abuakwa. This was on the grounds that the Okyenhene was a staunch supporter of the National Liberation Movement (NLM), which was then the opposition party. In fact, in August of 1958, the Okyenhene was destooled. A Ghana Gazette notice declared the Okyenhene, Nana Ofori Atta II, as destooled with effect from June 13, 1958. Following the report in the Daily Graphic, Nana Ofori Atta II was evicted from his palace.

8.4.1.4 Soon after independence, the government mounted an assault on some of the structures through which the chiefs were exercising power under colonial rule. Dr. Nkrumah was reported to have said: "The Chiefs' Regional Officers had had their day." He further claimed, that the chiefs "often found themselves in the difficult position as Civil Servants endeavouring to carry out duties which are really appropriate to a member of government.... it is therefore necessary to abolish the posts of Chiefs Regional Officers." In a memorandum dated 2nd April, 1957, to the Cabinet, Dr. Nkrumah decided to have in each region, political representatives of the government and as Chief Executive Officers of the government. This immediately deprived the chiefs of revenue that was going to them for the administration of those offices.

8.4.1.5 The role of chiefs came under attack when it was announced that they were going to be restricted to their "local administrative duties." The Joint Provincial Council, which was then the mouthpiece of the chiefs, formally disapproved of the impending change, and as a result, sent a letter to the then Minister of Local Government. A portion of this letter described the planned change as "an insidious attempt on the part of government to subvert the office of the heads of the regions and place them under an effective control of party interest." The policy pursued by Dr. Nkrumah's Government was one that tended to treat chiefs with disdain, and this was particularly directed towards chiefs, who either opposed or attempted to oppose government. In the infamous statement that "the chiefs would run away and leave their sandals behind" if they continued to oppose his government, Dr. Nkrumah showed that he meant to get tough with chiefs who were supporting the opposition. The chiefs realised that soon after Independence they had to ensure their own survival. It was reported that the then Ga Mantse, Nii Tackie Kome II, on behalf of the Joint Provincial Council of chiefs, submitted a 29-point memorandum to the government on the "role of chiefs in self-governing Ghana". Earlier on, the council had forwarded a 21-point resolution of protest to the government after meeting at Dodowa in reaction to the government's plans to appoint or create Regional and District Political Commissioners, to take charge of government programmes. According to the resolution, the government's decision regarding these appointments was to be regarded as acting “ultra vires.” The chiefs viewed the imposition of district political authorities over them as an attempt by the government to usurp their power over these district authorities.

8.4.1.6 The creation of Regional Commissioners led to the reduction of financial aid from central funds to traditional authorities. Subsequently, the then Minister of Local Government, Mr. Kofi Baako was alleged to have made some remarks at Kade saying: “We are only accountable to God and the people and not to those who continue to classify themselves as occupants of this stool or that stool.” The chiefs perceived this pronouncement as an indication of the CPP Government’s intention to sideline the chieftaincy institution. Mr. Kofi Baako was also reported to have said, “A chief is a chief, because the government recognised him as such.” Sensing danger, the chiefs met on 18th October, 1957, to discuss the position of chiefs in the country. The then President of the Joint Provincial Council, Nene Annorkwei II, lamented that the future looked bleak for the chiefs. Subsequently, the chiefs held discussion with the Prime Minister, Dr. Nkrumah, at his office, on a number of issues, concerning the chiefs and the withdrawal of recognition by the government from the Okyenhene.

8.4.1.7 In view of this development, some chiefs saw that continuing to oppose the government was a risk. The majority of the chiefs therefore, began to succumb to or soften their stand when it came to dealing with the CPP Government. The impact of all of this upon vulnerable chiefs was predictable. Many chiefs began their courtship with the CPP Government. For instance, on 29th October, 1957, the Omanhene of Abura, speaking at an emergency meeting of the Abura State Council, decided that it was now his “civic duty to support the government in power.” Following this, the Omanhene of Assin Attandansu, Nana Tsibu Asare X, also said, “it is my duty to support the government in power.” Since these developments many chiefs have felt obliged not to be critical of the government on issues considered to be political.

8.4.1.8 It could be said therefore, that the situation in Ghana during the administration of the First Republic, was one in which chiefs could not fight against the human rights violations that were perpetrated by the government. Some chiefs were, in fact, themselves victims of human rights abuse, under the recognition clause of Act 81 and the Preventive Detention Act, 1958.

8.4.1.9 In order to streamline the institution of chieftaincy, the CPP Government set up the National House of Chiefs in November, 1958, by an Act of Parliament. This national body replaced the territorial assemblies of chiefs namely, the Asanteman Council, the Joint Provincial Council, and the Northern Territories Council. The first President of the National House of Chiefs was Nana Kwafo Akoto III, who was then the Omanhene of Akwamu Traditional Area. In his maiden address, he admonished all chiefs to refrain from politics, and cooperate with the government. The Omanhene of Western Nzema, Nana Amakye III, described those who opposed the Prime Minister, Dr. Nkrumah and his CPP as no more than “tittle-tattle.” The term “doing politics” became a phrase synonymous with expressing opposition to government policy, whilst expressing support for the government was viewed as responsible leadership.

8.4.1.10 These changes in attitude were precipitated by the fear of the government's power to recognize and/or withdraw its recognition of a particular chief. Throughout Dr. Nkrumah's era, rumour persisted that chieftaincy would be abolished, and this went a long way to cause many chiefs to sway allegiance and focus their interest on the CPP Government. Chiefs who were regarded as "good boys" were promoted to the status of paramountcy. In like manner, some sub-chiefs were also made paramount chiefs, thus making them equal in status to their traditional overlords.

84.1.11 The carving out of Brong-Ahafo Region from Ashanti for administrative purposes without affecting customary allegiances, also created a situation where chiefs in the Brong Ahafo Regional House of Chiefs owed allegiance to Asantehene in Ashanti Region, thus creating split loyalties. This has left a legacy of conflict within that Region.

8.4.11. 12 It could be said that Dr. Nkrumah and the CPP dealt a heavier blow to chiefs and chieftaincy by the introduction of Regional Political Representatives, Reduction of funds, the recognition clause, and the introduction of Preventive Detention Act, than any acts of the colonial government. The only way for the chiefs to survive was for them to openly support the government in power or to keep silent, even in the face of human rights abuses and violations.

8.5 24TH FEBRUARY, 1966 – 30TH SEPTEMBER, 1969
 NATIONAL LIBERATION COUNCIL (NLC)

8.5.1 Chieftaincy And NLC

8.5.1.1 The treatment meted out to chiefs during the Nkrumah regime was to focus the attention of Ghanaians on the proper role that must be assigned to the chiefs in our society when the regime was overthrown in 1966 . Legislation was passed by the NLC Government, ostensibly to correct the problems afflicting the chieftaincy institution. The NLC therefore promulgated the Chieftaincy (Amendment) Decree, 1966 (NLCD 112), Chieftaincy Decree, 1967(NLCD 136), Chieftaincy Decree, 1967 (NLCD 203), and Chieftaincy Decree, 1968 (NLCD 287).

8.5.12 In passing these Decrees, it was hoped that the chieftaincy institution would be healed of the abuses committed against it by the CPP Government. In other words, the aim was to restore tradition to its correct and respectable place. Under these Decrees, people who had become chiefs, apparently because they were party faithfuls were removed; and those who had been raised were also to be reverted to their former positions. A newspaper report categorically stated: "All chiefs who were elevated to the status of paramount chiefs during the Nkrumah's regime were to be restored to their original status by the N.L.C Decree." The newspaper report went further to state that all those who were enstooled/enskinned in place of non-CPP chiefs were also to lose government recognition. In the report, it was stated that the NLC could not rectify illegal acts of removal with proper judicial process that was why recognition was to be withdrawn from all chiefs, who were made chiefs in place of those removed without proper judicial process. Subsequently, there was another newspaper publication, which carried the caption: “133 Nkrumah Chiefs sacked.” The report stated that the NLC had withdrawn recognition from 133 persons who were made chiefs by the Nkrumah regime in place of those who were lawfully and customarily elected by their people and were opposed to the previous government. The newspaper also carried the list of sacked and demoted chiefs as provided under the Second Schedule of NLCD 112. The regional breakdown was as follows:

- Eastern Region - 42;
- Central Region - 3;
- Western Region - 1;
- Ashanti – 35;
- Brong Ahafo – 18;
- Northern – 1;
- Upper Region – 25; and
- Volta - 9.

8.5.1.3 The Decree was not without its own difficulties. According to Kumado:

the Schedule to the Decree which was to effect the NLC policy made the Kukuom (located in the Brong Ahafo Region) chief, a sub-chief to the Asantehene. But the chief refused and he was prosecuted. The Kukuom chief argued that by custom, he was independent chief of the Asantehene and therefore refused to pay customary allegiance to him. The battle between the customary constitutional position as it was claimed under the Kukuom Constitution and Statutory scheme of things contained in NLCD 112, was resolved interestingly in favour of the Kukuom Constitution.

8.5.1.4 Some chiefs and traditional councils in the country joined in the public condemnation of the wrong done by the deposed CPP Government. These condemnations were largely done through newspapers, of which one of the captions read: “Chiefs back the big revolution.” This particular quote is attributed to the Eastern Regional House of Chiefs, during an emergency meeting of the House, held at Dodowa. At this same meeting the Eastern Regional House of Chiefs also expressed its profound gratitude to the Ghana Armed Forces and the Police for delivering Ghana from the tyrannical rule of Dr. Nkrumah and his henchmen. Nana Kwafo Akoto III, then the Omanhene of the Akwamu Traditional Area and the President of the House, said chiefs had been deprived of their resources and subjected to indignities, which were shameful to recount. He said that chieftaincy, which was entrenched in the Constitution of Ghana, was actually being abrogated step by step. Recounting the numerous hardships chiefs had experienced under Dr. Nkrumah, Nana Akoto said that after Dr. Nkrumah had come to power, he amended the Constitution, removed heads of regions and replaced them with Regional Commissioners. He further complained that laws were made to take over proceeds on stool lands and this rendered the chiefs very poor; and chiefs who spoke against these actions of the CPP Government were threatened with removal and detention. Subsequently, the House passed a resolution pledging its wholehearted support to the NLC.

8.5.1.5 The Ashanti Regional House of Chiefs on its part, sent a congratulatory message to the NLC for appointing various Commissions of Enquiry to look into the malpractices of the deposed regime of Dr. Nkrumah. The Asantehene, Otumfuo Sir Osei Agyeman Prempeh II, declared the wholehearted support of the Ashanti Regional House of Chiefs for the overthrow of Dr. Nkrumah and his regime. This stance of the Asantehene also revealed that he had to sacrifice his linguist, Baffour Osei Akoto, to save the Ashanti Kingdom from being destroyed by Dr. Nkrumah and his CPP Government. According to the Asantehene, Dr. Nkrumah threatened to put him in detention if he failed to renounce Baffour Akoto. In view of this, he had no alternative, but to give up Akoto to save the Ashanti nation from destruction, because Dr. Nkrumah had the power to destroy the Ashanti nation.

8.5.1.6 All over the country, chiefs expressed their support for the overthrow of the CPP Government. In the Volta Region, Togbe Adedza II, Awomefia of Anlo, who was also then President of the Volta Regional House of Chiefs was reported to have led about eight thousand jubilant supporters, including chiefs, to a mock burial of two officials of the deposed CPP Government. Nana Kwaku Kwaah II, Omanhene of the Atebubu Traditional Area and the President of Brong Ahafo Regional House of Chiefs, on behalf of his people congratulated the NLC Regime. The Omanhene, together with the chiefs and people of Brong Ahafo pledged their total co-operation and full support for the efforts being made by the NLC Government to restore to Ghana, true liberty and democratic freedom. In addition, the Brong Ahafo Regional House of Chiefs sent a 26-point petition, which was signed by twelve paramount chiefs of the House to the NLC Government to allow the Brong Ahafo Region to continue to remain autonomous. The Chiefs supported the NLC because they believed the NLC Government was the surest means to retain the dignity of chiefs and preserve the chieftaincy institution. In the petition, were allegations that Brong Ahafo Region had been neglected in the award of scholarships and in the provision of development projects. They also complained that paramount chiefs had been placed under sub-chiefs in Ashanti.

8.5.1.7 The chiefs and people of the Ga Traditional Area, in a message signed by the Ga Mantse and President of the Ga Traditional Area, Nii Amugi II, pledged that they would do everything possible to assist the NLC to right the wrongs, which the former government had for fifteen years, inflicted on the people of Ghana.

8.5.1.8 The views expressed by these traditional councils, showed that they wholeheartedly supported the NLC Regime. There was thus no room for them to criticize the undemocratic means by which the NLC Government had taken over power from a constitutional government. Indeed, most of the reports criticized the previous CPP Government and not the existing government of the NLC. The negative feelings the chiefs had towards the CPP made it impossible for them to even condemn detentions without trial in the form of protective custody as well as the ill treatment that CPP activists suffered at the hands of the Government of the NLC.

8.5.1.9 This support also manifested itself in the condemnation that greeted the coup attempt of 17th April, 1967, in which Lt Gen Emmanuel Kwasi Kotoka was killed. After the failed coup attempt, several newspaper publications and reports showed that the chiefs were in full support of the NLC Government. Some chiefs called for action to be taken against all persons, be they military or civilian, who were involved in the coup act against the NLC. To this end, the Eastern Regional House of Chiefs sent a three-point resolution to the NLC, through Nana Kwafo Akoto III, the Akwamuhene. Several traditional councils and chiefs in the country also made donations to the NLC and signed the Book of Condolence. Among such chiefs were, Nana Akuamoah Acheampong, Omanhene of Kwahu Traditional Area, and Nana Ofori Atta II, Omanhene of Akyem Abuakwa. The Chief of Juaben also donated cash to Kotoka's family, and when the Asantehene went to the Christianborg Castle to express his condolences upon the death of Lt Gen Kotoka, he made a cash donation to the NLC.

8.5.1.10 Although the NLC had pledged not to meddle in chieftaincy affairs, it however got involved in the Yendi Skin Affairs. In November, 1968, the NLC supervised the enskinment of Mion-Lana as Ya-Na Andani III. This move of the NLC was approved and supported by the District and Regional Administration, and by local units of the Army and Police. The Abudulai family, however, protested against this to the NLC Government, and a committee was appointed under the chairmanship of Nene Azu Mate Kole, Konor of Many Krobo to investigate the Yendi Skin affairs. The terms of reference for the committee was for it to ascertain the customary procedure for the selection and installation of a Ya Na, and also to determine if Ya-Na Andani III had been properly selected and installed or not. The committee was also to determine whether or not, if the said installation was unduly influenced by the presence of armed soldiers and policemen as well as the District Administrative Officers in the area.

8.5.1.11 While the committee was at its work, the NLC Government concurrently gave Ya-Na Andani III de facto recognition. As a follow up to this action, representative of the government paid a courtesy call on the Ya Na in early December 1968, and Ya-Na Andani III also received the salary of a Ya Na. This move clearly prejudiced the outcome of the committee's investigations and led to a protest by fourteen chiefs of Dagbon. It, however, won for the NLC some influence with the Ya Na.

8.5.1.12 The committee eventually declared the installation of Ya Na Andani III null and void but by this time Ya Na Andani III had died. Members of the Andani family occupied the palace of the Ya Na and refused to leave. Government troops sent to evict the occupants, fired on them, and in the ensuing melee, 23 members of the Andani family were killed and about 40 of them wounded. Members of the Andani Family put the number of their dead at 36. On account of the fact that there was no judicial inquiry into the killing of at least 23 citizens, it is impossible to know for certain how many really died in that incident. This event has left a legacy of bitter feuding between the two Gates of the royal family.

8.6 1ST OCTOBER, 1969-12TH JANUARY 1972:
THE SECOND REPUBLIC (PP GOVERNMENT)

8.6.1 Aliens Compliance Order And “Apollo 568”

8.6.1.1 The main issues of controversy during the time that the Progress Party (PP) was in power under the leadership of Dr. Kofi Abrefa Busia were the government’s policy on the Aliens Compliance Order; and the dismissal of 568 public servants now known as “Apollo 568”. Perhaps the silence of chiefs on human right abuses during the Progress Party government might have emanated from the fact that it was an era of democratic governance, and for which reason, the affected persons had many avenues and the opportunity to seek redress for their grievances. This notwithstanding, there were no opposing views from the chiefs, especially on the Apollo 568, which definitely affected some of their own subjects.

8.6.2 The New Chieftaincy Act

8.6.2.1 In 1971, a new Chieftaincy Act, Chieftaincy Act, 1971 (Act 370), removed the recognition clause from the definition of “Who is a chief.” The removal insulated chiefs from having to court government support.

8.7 13TH JANUARY, 1972 – 3RD JUNE, 1979 NATIONAL REDEMPTION COUNCIL / SUPREME MILITARY COUNCIL (SMC) I&II

8.7.1 Chiefs and NRC policies

8.7.1.1 The Military Government of the National Redemption Council (NRC), which later evolved into the Supreme Military Council (SMC) I & II, overthrew the PP Government on 13th January, 1972. In spite of the initial lukewarm attitude to the coup, the NRC received public acceptance as it gave redress to the various interest groups that were in dispute with the PP Government. The new government announced a war on hunger with the new policy ‘Operation Feed Yourself’. Chiefs all over the country openly expressed support to the NRC. The Asantehene, Nana Opoku Ware II, for instance, paid the new Military Government of the NRC a visit at the Castle, where he expressed support for the government and its policy of “Operation Feed Yourself”, and pledged the readiness of his chiefs to make lands available for farming to ensure the success of the “Operation Feed Yourself” programme. Just as in the past, messages of support for the NRC came from chiefs throughout the country.

8.7.1.2 Several other chiefs also paid visits to the Chairman of the NRC. The Ga Mantse met the NRC Chairman and pledged the support of the Ga Traditional Area to the NRC. The National House of Chiefs, then headed by Nene Annorkwei II, the Paramount Chief of Prampram and President of the Eastern Regional House of Chiefs, presented a resolution, which the House had adopted in support of the NRC. The Chairman of the NRC at an emergency meeting held in Kumasi received the resolution of the House.

8.7.1.3 In order to win the favour of the chiefs in Ghana, the NRC issued a statement that the NRC Government would not meddle in chieftaincy affairs. The Chairman of the NRC, Col Ignatius Kutu Acheampong, re-affirmed the government's position when he addressed a delegation of eighteen chiefs from the National House of Chiefs at the Burma Hall in Accra, in July, 1972. The Chairman also told the chiefs that the action taken by the Armed Forces on 13th January, was not against chieftaincy. The chiefs were so delighted by the NRC Chairman's statement that they also registered their unflinching support for the NRC government and wished it well. The chiefs further asked the NRC to deal ruthlessly with those involved in an alleged coup plot that had just been announced. After this meeting between the NRC Chairman and representatives of the National House of Chiefs at Burma Hall, the Central Regional House of Chiefs condemned the plot to unseat the NRC. Nana Akyin IV, Omanhene of Ekumfi Traditional Area also accused Dr. Busia, the deposed Prime Minister of the PP government, of masterminding an alleged coup plot to overthrow the NRC. This statement was followed by similar ones from Nana Kwaku Boateng II, Omanhene of New Juaben in Koforidua and Togbe Adom II, Chief of Akoefe Zorko in the Volta Region. In all these messages, the chiefs called on the NRC government to request the British government to extradite Dr. Busia to Ghana to stand trial for treason.

8.7.1.4 In order for the NRC to win complete allegiance of the chiefs, the government adopted the bulk of the 1971 Chieftaincy Act and re-enacted it in a Decree. Under the Decree, chiefs in the Traditional Councils, the Regional House of Chiefs and the National House of Chiefs were assigned the following statutory functions:

- a. The settlement of chieftaincy disputes with final appeals, not to the political authorities but to the Court of Appeal; and
- b. Advising the Central Government on, and helping the revision of customary laws.

This Decree appeared to have gone down well with the chiefs, perhaps that is why the NRC had support from the National House of Chiefs. However, contrary to the NRC's declared policy of not meddling in chieftaincy affairs, the chiefs of Akyem Kotoku and Wenchi were removed by Decree by the NRC regime.

8.7.1.5 In 1975, the NRC was transformed into the Supreme Military Council (SMC). During the campaign for Union Government (UNIGOV), the SMC committed a series of human rights violations. In all these instances of human rights abuses, the chiefs were silent. On the contrary, they trooped to the Castle and pledged "unflinching support" to Gen Acheampong and praised Unigov as a divinely inspired concept to cure the ills of partisan politics.

8.7.1.6 Gen Acheampong was overthrown in a palace coup by his colleagues, and the Supreme Military Council II was formed under the chairmanship of Gen Frederick W K Akuffo.

8.8 4TH JUNE, 1979 – 23RD SEPTEMBER, 1979 ARMED FORCES EVOLUTIONARY COUNCIL (AFRC)

8.8.1 Chiefs And AFRC Policies

8.8.1.1 On 4th June, 1979 a section of the Ghana Armed Forces, mutinied and the Government of SMC II fell. The AFRC was formed under the chairmanship of Flight Lieutenant Jerry John Rawlings of the Air Force.

8.8.1.2 The AFRC Government under the policy of “house-cleaning” perpetrated and permitted the perpetration of serious human rights violations and abuses, during its short tenure of office. Notable among such acts were: the execution of eight senior military officers including three former Heads of State; killings; the public flogging of Ghanaian citizens, some of whom were stripped naked; seizure and the destruction of property; the demolition of houses, markets and market stalls; rampant searches of citizens for acts of hoarding; and detentions without due process. All these acts of human rights violations and abuses, demanded public or institutional protests or at least criticism, but there was none.

8.8.1.3 Newspaper reports of the period show several appeals made by chiefs to their subjects, requesting them to adhere to the “control price” policy. The chiefs, however, failed to say anything concerning the atrocities that were meted out to their subjects by the AFRC Government. Apart from declaring their support, some of the chiefs also asked the AFRC Government to extend the “house cleaning” exercise to all manner of people.

8.8.1.4 In reaction to the price control enforcement exercise, farmers and market women refused to sell food items in the urban areas. The chiefs stepped in to encourage their subjects to take their wares to the market centres and sell them at control prices. Some of the chiefs supervised the sale of foodstuffs at the Kwahu District in the Eastern Region. In the Central Region, Nana Mbrah V, Omanhene of the Oguaa Traditional Area, visited a number of villages to educate the farmers and market women on the need to send their goods to the market and sell at reasonable prices. In Accra, the Ga Mantse, Nii Amugi II, also appealed to market women in Accra and its environs to forget about any molestation they might have suffered soon after the 4th June Uprising, and bring out their wares for sale at control prices.

8.8.1.5 Other chiefs expressed support for the aims of the 4th June Uprising, because they saw the event as the panacea to Ghana’s problems. The then Kadehene, Barima Appiawia II, was reported to have called on the village development committees in his area to mobilise the rural people for them to give their best towards the success of the new regime. In like manner, Nana Osei Kwadwo II, Omanhene of Bekwai, told his people that no traditional ruler would go to the aid of any person who fell foul of the new regime, if that person made himself a stumbling block in the way of the revolutionary process.

8.8.1.6 In support of the new regime, Otumfuo Opoku Ware II, the Asantehene, stressed that civilians could not escape blame for the harassment and molestation allegedly meted out to them by some soldiers, and he proceeded to ban sixteen traders from selling in any market in Kumasi. These traders had been brought before the Kumasi Traditional Council for allegedly selling foodstuffs at prohibitive prices. Otumfuo also warned traders that anyone of them found selling at unapproved prices would forfeit his or her stalls, be banned from selling in any market and would then be handed over to the military.

8.8.1.7 Admittedly, the short stay in power by the AFRC Government was full of apprehensions; yet the chiefs did not speak out, except to urge their subjects to respect the price control laws.

8.9 24TH SEPTEMBER, 1979- 30TH DECEMBER, 1981:
THE THIRD REPUBLIC

8.9.1 Chiefs and the Third Republic Constitution

8.9.1.1 The 1979 Constitution guaranteed the institution of chieftaincy, as it exists under customary law. Further, article 205 (6) entrenched the clause by providing that it could not be amended except by referendum. This constitutional provision was of great advantage to the chiefs, because it removed the power of governments to interfere in chieftaincy affairs. During the previous regimes the lack of acknowledgement of chiefs prevented even the best of them from being independent arbiters between government, or senior statesmen and the people in times of conflicts.

8.10. 31ST DECEMBER, 1981 – 6TH JANUARY, 1993:
PROVISIONAL NATIONAL DEFENCE COUNCIL (PNDC)

8.10.1 Chiefs And PNDC Policies

8.10.1 The 31st December 1981 coup d'état brought into power the Provisional National Defence Council Government, headed again by Flt Lt Jerry John Rawlings. The PNDC, like any of the previous military regimes, sought to establish a good relationship with chiefs. One of the steps it took to realize this goal was to reinstate some chiefs, who had been removed by the NLC, under NLCD 112. To this end, the PNDC passed the Chieftaincy (Restoration of Status of Chiefs) Law, 1983(PNDCL 75). The preamble to this law states in part:

...And Whereas the Provisional National Defence Council having considered the circumstances of the withdrawal of recognition by the then Government of the National Liberation Council of the persons named in Part I of the Schedule to this Law as chiefs is satisfied that the said person having been lawfully enstooled or enskinned as chiefs should be restored to the original status as chiefs of the places specified respectively in relation to them....

On the basis of this law therefore, the PNDC Government purported to restore to their respective stools and skins, those chiefs that the NLC had removed.

8.10.1.2 The PNDC abrogated the 1979 Constitution, but retained the definition of chief contained in article 181 of the 1979 Constitution . Despite this retention, the early sign was very disturbing. There was the Osu Stool Property (Seizure) Law authorised the Accra City Mayor, to take possession of Osu Stool Property. Other legislative instruments were laid down to affect places like Nungua and Winneba Traditional Areas.

8.10.1.3 PNDCL 75 appears to have been an attempt by the government to restore some chiefs to the status quo ante NLCD 112. However, the exercise failed to do so for all as it was limited to only sixteen of such chiefs, all from the Upper East Region, out of the 133 chiefs that were removed under NLCD 112. It is unclear what criteria the PNDC government used to reinstate the 16 chiefs. What is clear, however, is that it marked a return to the old way of doing things, and was bound to have a ripple effect on the chiefs since it encouraged them to foster closer links with the government of the day.

8.10.1.4 Upon assuming power, the PNDC Government declared a “Holy War” to clamp down on kalabule, and in the process, perpetrated widespread human rights violations and abuses. These violations included killings, disappearances, the violent seizure and occupation of private and public property respectively, the beating up and harassment of citizens, the detention of political opponents, torture of suspects and the wrongful dismissal of hundreds of people from their employment. Notable among the human rights abuses of the period was the kidnap and murder of three High Court Judges and a retired Army Officer. In all these cases, soldiers and/or other agents of the PNDC Government were to a large extent, the perpetrators of these violations.

8.10.1.5 As had happened during previous military takeovers, chiefs openly expressed support for the PNDC coup. For this reason, the chiefs were not able to speak against the myriad of human rights abuses that occurred during the era of the PNDC Government. There is no evidence that chiefs complained about the numerous human rights violations that took place during PNDC era.

8.10.1.6 The few chiefs who spoke out, concerned themselves only with the criticism of kalabule traders, the establishment of community farms and expressions of support for the cocoa evacuation exercise. Chiefs were exhorted by some of their own colleagues not to sit on the fence, but to mobilise their subjects to play an effective role in the PNDC Revolution. One of the chiefs who made such a call was Nana Kyei Baffour, the Omanhene of Twifo Hemang Traditional Area in the Central Region. According to him, the “Holy War” declared by Flt Lt Rawlings was to be seen as Ghana’s salvation from her economic and social woes. The chiefs and people of Abura Dunkwa in the Abura Traditional Area also declared their unflinching support for the PNDC and charged the PNDC to uproot kalabule once and for all, from the Ghanaian society. Some of the chiefs concerned themselves with the cocoa evacuation exercise that took place during the era. For instance, the Omanhene of the Akyem Kotoku Traditional Area, Okofrobuo Agyeman Attafuah IV, together with his elders, led a team of about 200 young men to give a helping hand to the Student Task Force, to evacuate tons of cocoa from Akim Oda in the Eastern Region.

8.10.1.7 Some of the chiefs did not urge only their subjects, but indeed, all Ghanaians to embrace the 31st December Revolution. Nana Kusi Appiah, Omanhene of Manso Nkwanta in the Ashanti Region, urged Ghanaians to accept the December 31st Revolution and make it work. He summed up his call as follows: “If we have been sitting on the fence, let us now remove ourselves from that position. After all the gains of the revolution will be for us all.” Nana Kusi Appiah delivered this message after he had led his people to clear a 300-acre land earmarked for a local community farm. The Asantehene, Otumfuo Opoku Ware II, also pledged support to the PNDC. He assured the PNDC Government of the readiness of all the chiefs under him to assist in making the revolution a success. Consequently, he urged chiefs to freely release land for the establishment of community farms.

8.10.1.8 It is to be noted that the activities for which the chiefs supported the PNDC Government were not bad in themselves. Indeed, it was morally binding on them to help the government of the day succeed. What was regrettable, however, was that they all appeared to be interested in championing the cause of the new government, to the neglect of the human rights abuses suffered, both by themselves and some of their subjects at the hands of the very government to whom they had made pledges of support. Even though the chiefs appeared to be acting in favour of national development and aspirations, they failed to speak up for those who were undergoing abusive treatment.

8.11 Chiefs And Land

8.11.1 Post-Independence 1957-1993

8.11.1.1 In the late 1950s, and during the First Republic (early 1960s), Dr. Nkrumah in his haste to develop the newly independent nation socio-economically and industrially, embarked on massive projects including the construction of new roads and bridges, and improvement/upgrading of existing ones, schools, colleges, hospitals and clinics. Others were irrigation and hydro-electric dam, large housing estates, manufacturing (import substitutions) and industrial estates, and the establishment of state farms which demanded large tracts of land.

8.11.1.2 The newly acquired independent State with powers and new conception of the nature and role of the Ghanaian State resulted in massive compulsory acquisition of land, sometimes for purposes which were not demonstrably public. Governments have controlled land use throughout the country, and have manifested the control by the promulgation of a number legislation, each of which reduced the level of the chiefs' control over their lands.

8.11.1.3 Most of the lands that were "acquired" by the state, for the purposes outlined above, were taken from skin/stool, families or private land owners. The state at that time, in taken the land, took the position that land acquired (for public use) was in the public interest. The State Land Act, 1962 (Act 125) , provided the power for the government to acquire land compulsorily and thereby control its use as owner. In some cases, the government declared the state land or stool land, to be a selected area for a specific purpose, such as the Accra International Airport, Achiase Jungle Warfare training sites, etc.

8.11.1.4 Some traditional rulers have also entrusted stool lands in the care of the government, for the stools concerned and directed that the whole community be beneficiary of the revenue accruing thereof. Such moves marked the first bold attempt by governments to assert power over the management and administration of the customary proprietorship. Beside, the government can take over the ownership of concessions created on stool lands in trust for the stool concern . Again, for the consolidation of laws relating to land administration and to introduce uniformity in the system throughout the country, an Act was passed on 1962 , which sought to split ownership such that legal ownership in vested land passed on to the state, while the beneficial ownership remained in the stool . More so, the ownership and control of lands endowed with mineral deposits, has been vested in the care of the President in trust for the people of Ghana . All these were been done to control land use by governments towards an effective and efficient sustainable land management and administration in Ghana.

8.11.1.5 The problems associated with these acquisitions of land are many and these leave much to be desired. In some cases, little or no effort was made by the state agencies effecting such acquisition, to follow the legal procedures, and properly register the lands. There were instances where no compensation at all was paid. In others, what was paid to the land owners was grossly inadequate. It must be admitted that in some instances, no compensation was paid largely because, there were disputes as to ownership, over who were to the rightful recipients of compensation. There were instances where site plans for acquired areas were found to be inaccurate, due to mistakes in surveying or other technical difficulties.

8.11.1.6 This has led to delays in payment of compensation and commencement of development projects, as disputes have had to be litigated in court, and over very long periods of time. Such unfortunate situations have often resulted in the extensive encroachment on these lands by individuals, families and groups who felt that the land belonged to them, because they were never paid the appropriate or adequate compensation.

8.11.1.7 Some individuals, families and chiefs in their bid to protect their lands, have engaged land guards, to whom they paid huge sums of monies (sometimes they also sold plots of land), to drive away prospective investors and developers, on their acquired lands. The land guards have many times destroyed building structures, and even, maimed and sometimes killed innocent people who they perceived to be encroaching on the lands that belonged to their bosses.

8.12 CONCLUSION

8.12.1 Various governments have ruled Ghana since 1957. Through the promulgation of Decrees and Acts, these governments made it impossible for chiefs to be independent of central government control. The dependence of chiefs on the central government was also partly due to the relative powerlessness of the chiefs themselves, as they were not able to exert themselves enough to protect their independence. The situation was such that while chiefs were supposed to be independent from government control, they had no power of their own to be so. This was the dilemma in which chiefs found themselves, during both constitutional governments and military regimes, starting from 6th March ,1957 to 6th January, 1993.

8.12.2 The CPP Government, led by Dr. Nkrumah, was able to get its supporters to become chiefs by means of the recognition clause in Act 81, as this clause enabled the government to give or withdraw official recognition to the claimants of stools or skins at will. Consequently, after the overthrow of the First Republic in 1966, the new military government, the NLC purported to correct the situation by enacting legislation such as NLCD 112, NLCD 136, NLCD 203 and NLCD 287 designed to remove chiefs who were described as “CPP Chiefs”, and also to restore stools and skins to their proper customary positions.

8.12.3 Part of the chieftaincy dilemma in Ghana during the period under review (from 6th March, 1957, to 6th January, 1993), was that, chiefs were permitted to engage in partisan politics. Thus, it was not at all easy to keep politicians and chiefs in two separate worlds. The problem was exacerbated during periods of military rule.

8.12.4 During the mandate period, the governments, especially the military ones, courted chiefs for support, and chiefs courted government for development projects. Many chiefs sought partnerships with the government of the day with the hope of using their contacts to secure projects for their respective traditional areas. Accordingly, chiefs usually expressed full support for a government as soon as the old government was overthrown. They thus rendered themselves liable to the tag of collaborators of whatever human rights abuses were perpetrated by the various governments.

8.12.5 Another consequence of such act of collaboration was that it weakened the independence of the chieftaincy institution, and created a situation where the individual chiefs could not be critical of sitting governments, and therefore could not offer their subjects any protection when it came to government-sponsored human rights violations and abuse.

8.12.6 The chiefs, families and individual land owners have constantly protected their land since colonial days and continue till date. However, where it matters most legislation by successive governments have rendered such protection ineffective, and some of these land acquisitions cases have also been battled in the corridors of the judiciary. More over, seeking legal action against families, individuals, chiefs or the state has not always been successful, since none of them seeking the relief may have proper title to the lands in question.

8.12.7 Within the mandate period, chiefs did not exert their collective influence to protest against any of the violence and excesses that emanated from military regimes nor did they confront civilian governments on issues of human rights violations. The Regional and National Houses of Chiefs still remain an untapped asset for strengthening the influence of chiefs in the governance of the country.

Volume 4 Chapter 9 - The Role Of Religious Bodies – Complicity Or Resistance To Human Rights Abuses

CHAPTER NINE

THE ROLE OF RELIGIOUS BODIES – COMPLICITY OR RESISTANCE TO HUMAN RIGHTS ABUSES

9.0 INTRODUCTION

9.0.1 The interventions of religious bodies on matters of social concern, especially socio-political issues, have always carried weight. Therefore, the protest or silence by these bodies or institutions, on human rights violations and abuses influences the perceptions of many people in Ghana. To facilitate the assessment of the role, if any, of religious bodies regarding the complicity or resistance to human rights violations from 6th March, 1957 to 6th January, 1993, the Commission focused its work on the Churches in Ghana, the Islamic religion, both the Orthodox and the Ahmadiyya Muslim Mission, the Traditional Religious groups with reference, particularly, to the Afrikania Mission.

9.0.2 The religious bodies are the conscience of the nation. In this regard, they are expected to be able to point out abuses, and work to protect and defend the rights of all Ghanaians, with a view to bringing about improvement and progress in socio-political life. religious bodies can transform individuals in society, and bring about social change that prevent human rights violations and abuses. Consequently, the following roles are expected of them

- to provide prophetic witnessing;
- to oppose human rights abuses in society;
- to build awareness on morality and human rights issues;
- to provide moral education;
- to seek moral transformation through advocacy;
- to speak clearly and without equivocation and provide moral direction on important moral issues; and
- to counsel, exhort, warn or commend the leaders and general citizenry, as and when the occasion demands.

It is expected that these roles would be performed through constant prayer regular calls for prayers, positive use of their moral authority and effective social actions.

9.0.3 The focus of this chapter is to examine the role of religious bodies in spearheading resistance to human rights abuses, contributing to the promotion of respect for human rights, as well as the impact that these activities had on the human rights landscape during the mandate period. The chapter also highlights the significance of statements, communiqués, pastoral letters, Press releases etc, from these religious bodies, at the critical times when they were issued. It is hoped that the religious bodies would be strengthened to keep up with their advocacy role and continue to provide moral guidance to the nation.

9.0.4 The chapter is divided into three parts, based on the three main religions represented in Ghana, namely Traditional Religion, Islam and Christian religion. The discussion is organised in the chronological order of the various political eras within the mandate period.

9.1 ABOUT THE THREE MAIN RELIGIONS IN GHANA

9.1.1 THE TRADITIONAL RELIGIOUS GROUP

9.1.1 History

9.1.1.1 Traditional Religion is the oldest religion in Ghana. It is not organized in the manner of Christian or Islamic religions. The nature and history of the Traditional Religious group is quite different from other religious groups. It has no organised hierarchy or association to spearhead its activities at the national level and so its influence on national politics has been minimal. In 1985, the late Osofo Okomfo Damuah, a Roman Catholic Priest, left the Catholic Faith to establish the Afrikania Mission of Ghana. This Mission, for the first time, provided a mouthpiece for the various traditional religious groups that had come together to form the Mission.

9.1.1.2 The practice of Traditional Religion has different cults that deal with specific issues or aspect of life. For example, there are fertility cults, healing or medicine cults, war cults, protective cults, prosperity cult, witchcraft cults, etc. Secondly, Traditional Religion is the belief system underlying the Ghanaian culture, and could be described as the belief or spiritual substructure of Ghanaian culture. This is because some aspects of this religion are practised at the sub-conscious level, such that even though the average Ghanaian might not be an adherent of the practices of Traditional Religion, its belief system pervades the entire culture as reflected in the use of language, names, naming and burial systems, etc.

9.1.1.3 The role that traditional religion played in human rights abuse was an indirect one. Rumours of rituals for protection have become part of our socio-political culture. The phenomenon of ritual murder has been part of the Ghanaian system of cultural beliefs, and has, in fact, gained prominence in legends and folktales. This phenomenon has also served as explanation for strange or extraordinary homicide cases in the country.

9.1.1.4 There was also an Akan belief that a messenger must accompany a dead chief on his last journey to the land of his ancestors. Someone therefore had to be killed to serve that purpose. The murder of Akyea Mensa (Apedwahene), a case popularly referred to as “Kyebi Murder Trial” was purported to have served as a ritual sacrifice, to accompany a dead paramount chief of Kyebi. The deceased was killed and buried on a riverbed, after the murderers had diverted the course of the brook and redirected the same brook to conceal the grave .

9.1.1.5 Another belief system relates to the acquisition of power through the use of juju. This involves rituals performed with human blood or body parts. On 23th February, 1988, Nana Twene, Krontihene of Abesim, and his wife, Susana Ameyaa, together with four others at Abesim near Sunyani, in the Brong Ahafo Region , kidnapped and murdered a 38-year old housewife, Madam Lamley Sampah. During the trial by the tribunal sitting in Sunyani in the Brong-Ahafo Region of Ghana, it was revealed, inter alia that, the Krontihene wanted the blood and some body parts of the named victim to enable him secure power, so that, no one could challenge him when he spoke.

9.1.2 Traditional Religion In Relation To Ritual Killing For Political Power

9.1.2.1 In the 1960s, rumour was rife, that office holders carried out ritual killings to consolidate their political power. In 1967, for example, during the abortive coup in which Lt-Gen Emmanuel K Kotoka lost his life, it was widely rumoured that the fetish priests who made juju for his successful coup the previous year, were the same ones whom the coup makers from Ho Mortar Regiment approached. This therefore accounted for the ability of the coup makers to overcome Lt-Gen Kotoka. Whether these rumours were true or not, they are alleged to have been the basis for the elimination of some fetish priests many years later. A case in point is the killing of the popular fetish priest, Akakpovi Ahiaku, a.k.a Yeye Boye of Atidzive near Abor . There was evidence before the Commission that the fetish priest was arrested by soldiers at his village in March, 1982, and taken to the Residency of the Volta Regional Administration at Ho, ostensibly to be transported to Accra to meet with the political authorities. He was later found dead, with his body partially burnt. His home containing his shrine was vandalised and burnt to ashes, as were also the homes of the elders of the cult.

9.1.2.2 Traditional Priests were also believed to have power to assist persons plotting to destabilize governments of the day, through the use of magico-religious powers. They therefore featured in every allegation of coup plot in the mandate period.

9.1.3 Traditional Religion In Relation To Killing For Ritual Purposes

9.1.3.1 Traditional religion has also been linked to human rights abuse on account of the widely-held belief that through the use of human parts, rituals could be performed to affect the material circumstances of the individual making the request. Consequently, some individuals were killed for purposes that must have been related to the performance of rituals. The circumstances surrounding certain killings that occurred, and the way the dead bodies were found, lent credence to the suspicion that they were not ordinary murders. Very often the bodies were found mutilated with some vital parts missing. A number of murder cases reported in some parts of Ghana in the 1980s fall into this category. For instance, in January, 1981, the body of Kingsley Ackaah, alias Kwame

Kaya, a fifteen-year-old schoolboy and native of Baakrom near Sefwi Bekwai, was found without his head. Again, in November, 1981, the body of nine-year old Kwasi Gyimah was found at the outskirts of Sefwi Bekwai without his head. Similarly, in November, 1984, Kwaku Nkrumah, a sixty five-year old palm wine tapper of Sefwi Bekwai, was found dead in the bush without his head. Also, in May, 1986, thirteen-year old Akwasi Ampomaning, a schoolboy from Sukusuku near Sefwi Bekwai was found dead with his arms missing. Again, Kumade Mensah Zormelo was killed for a sacrifice that is required annually, in accordance with traditional practices, to enable the fishermen of Kedzi, to have bumper fishing season. All these killings are believed to have been committed to serve ritual purposes.

9.1.3.2 There is also the quest for wealth. For this reason, there are some people who believe that through the use of juju, their state of poverty can change for the better. Thus, with the hope of becoming rich overnight, the drive to commit ritual murder has been noted among certain categories of persons. In one murder case, which took place in Sefwi Bekwai in the Western Region of Ghana, the killers were the victim's uncle and three other men, who were promised a reward of an amount of c3 million as "contract fee". Similarly, the Chief, Nana Agyei who was charged together with the killers, was said to have been the one who requested a human head, to send to a shrine located along the Ghana - Côte d'Ivoire border in the Western Region for it to be changed into cash.

9.1.4 The Perpetrators Of Ritual Murder

9.1.4.1 There are two main categories of perpetrators – namely, those who hire the services of others to do the killing on their behalf, and those who do the killing themselves. Many a time, the people who are arrested or charged on murder cases appear to be poor people, struggling to make ends meet. They are hired by the well-to-do in society to do the killing on their behalf, such as the case of the Sefwi Bekwai murder case. Nana Agyei, one of the culprits, was said to have engaged the services of the four others charged, in return for a certain amount of money, if the plan was well executed. In other instances, the well-to-do actually took part in the ritual killing.

9.1.4.2 Some fetish priests and herbalists are also believed to be involved in ritual murder. Some fetish priests have been accused of using human body parts and blood to prepare juju for their clients. Where these body parts and blood were secured from, is yet to be ascertained. However, one of the rumoured charges against some traditional priests tortured and killed in the Volta Region, was the allegation of murder against them. In April, 1982, for instance, soldiers arrested Avorga Ahiagba of Wlite near Akatsi, for possessing human skulls. He was alleged to have pleaded that the skulls were ancestral property. Possessing no other evidence to the contrary, the court fined him ₵700.00. Subsequently, Ahiagba mysteriously disappeared, after his release from prison-custody, but was later found dead with his body partially burnt, near the Ho stadium.

9.1.4.3 In all the known ritual murders tried in the courts, women have been conspicuously missing in the list of alleged perpetrators. There was, however, one instance in which a woman was involved, and in which the victim was a woman.

9.1.4.4 One other fact that also needs to be mentioned is that some of the perpetrators either know their victims or have close blood relations with them. In the case of Kofi Kyinto in the Sefwi Bekwai murder case, it was his uncle, Benjamin Affi, a 28-year old farmer, who lured him to be killed. Benjamin Affi witnessed the actual execution of his nephew.

9.1.5 Trokosi

9.1.5.1 Trokosi is a traditional religious practice, which evolved among the Ewes and Dangmes and which prevails in shrines where there are deities. In the past, the essence of the deity was to protect the community, and the fundamental problems and questions of everyday life were also addressed to these deities. In those societies, it is to the shrines that a large number of people turn for resolution of life's problems – be they physical, mental or spiritual. The exact period when the Trokosi system began is unknown. Oral tradition estimates that the practice could have started in the 17th century. The first original Trokosis in Eweland were, Torgbui Adzima, Tornui, and Sui. The practice of giving up of vestal virgins by families as payment to the shrines for an infraction committed by one of its members evolved from these original Trokosis. A Trokosi is also sometimes called Fiasidi, meaning “a marriageable King's initiate.” Many reasons have been put forward to explain why young girls and occasionally young boys, are committed to the gods. Foremost among these reasons is that it forms part of the administration of justice and maintenance of law and order within the particular society. The practice also involves pledges made to the gods in time of war to ensure victory.

9.1.5.2. Trokosi practice is now mainly regarded as a means of averting the wrath of the gods. This is done by invoking the gods for mercy, in cases where an offence has been reported to the shrine. It is also a traditional judicial system, but one fraught with serious human rights violations, as the practice involves the incarceration and abuse of innocent young women. The practice of Trokosi is now recognized to be akin to slavery. The predominant modern view is that the Trokosi system is obnoxious, inhuman and a violation of the human rights of the persons involved, and therefore must be stopped.

9.1.5.3 There are 51 known shrines where the practice of Trokosi still goes on in the country. The composition and the geographical spread of the practice in Ghana show that the Volta Region accounts for forty three out of the fifty one shrines, Greater Accra Region, five and Eastern Region, three. In the Eastern and Greater Accra Regions, the shrines are concentrated in the Dangme East and Dangme West Districts. The 3 shrines in the Eastern Region seem to be related to those in the other regions. There are three shrines in the Yilo Krobo area, three in the Dangme West, and 2 in Dangme East. The victims of the practice are mostly female, although on rare occasions, males are also involved. It was estimated that by 1998, there were about four thousand and forty two Trokosi in bondage, out of whom only about ten were male. There are both priests and priestesses who administer the various cults.

9.1.6 Witches' Camps

Belief in witchcraft is widespread in Ghana. People are sent to shrines to be “de-witched” after being accused of being witches, often by their close relations. Sometimes, the formal “outing” of a witch is done by a fetish priest(ess) of a shrine in the locality. The practice of ostracising such persons from their community, and confining them in hopes of eliminating their evil influence, has been identified as a cultural practice in parts of northern Ghana. In Gambaga and Gnaani in the Northern Region, the site of two major Witches’ Camps, there are to be found, people, mostly women, who have been chased out of their communities for practising witchcraft. On arrival at the camp, they are sent to the chief or the elder, who performs rituals on them to “de-witch” them. Thereafter, they are absorbed into the community, and although permitted to return to their original homes if they so desire, the hostile social milieu and stigmatisation, discourage such re-entry. Most of these women are poor and elderly women, and the practice removes them from the support, financial and material that old age requires. This therefore violates their right to a peaceful old age and the right to live with their families.

9.1.7 Summary

9.1.7.1 Traditional religious practices have been labelled as being obsolete, thus, crimes such as the serial killing of women, which took place in Ghana in the later part of 1999, have been explained away by some people as ritual killings.

9.1.7.2 Again, so long as it is believed that the acquisition of power and wealth accords one instant respect and the best treatment wherever one finds oneself, and the fact that this can be achieved through the use of juju, the drive to commit ritual murder may continue to persist.

9.1.7.3 The impact of legends and folktales on the belief systems and motives of traditional religion may drive some people to resort to such practices that invariably trample upon peoples rights.

9.2 THE ISLAMIC RELIGIOUS GROUP

9.2.1 Historical Background

9.2.1.1 There are two main branches of Islam in Ghana, namely, the Orthodox Islam, and the Ahmadiyya Muslim Mission. The inception of Islam in the country was through the efforts of traders and itinerant Islamic clerics and teachers. There are many Orders in Orthodox Islam. The two best known in Ghana are the Qadiriyya, founded by Abdal Qadir, and the Tijaniyya, founded by Ahmad Tijani in Algeria.

9.2.1.2 In 1921, a movement was introduced into the Gold Coast, known as the Ahmadiyya Movement. This movement originated from the Indian sub-continent, and was founded by Mirza Ghulam Ahmad in the nineteenth century; it began as a reform movement within Islam.

9.2.2 Government-Muslim Relations

9.2.2.1 Successive governments since the colonial era have tried to influence the leadership and organizational structure of the Muslim community. They did so either in the name of uniting the Muslims or soliciting their loyalty in the implementation of their programmes.

9.2.2.2 Since the inception of multi-party politics in Ghana, various Muslim communities have allied themselves with different political parties that they believed would best protect their interests.

9.2.2.3 Prior to agitations towards Independence, the Muslim community was apprehensive that its right to exist might not be recognized. In view of this, the only way for the community's existence to be guaranteed was to come together as a unified body. This, they did by forming the Moslem Association Party (MAP) in 1954, that assumed a violent anti-CPP stance. The MAP was later banned, when the CPP government promulgated the Avoidance of Discrimination Act in 1957.

9.2.2.4 The Gold Coast Moslem Association (GCMA) was among the early Muslim organizations to emerge. Its leaders were Imam Abass (Chief Imam) and Alhaji Amadu Baba (Zongo Chief of Kumasi). GCMA's objectives were to harness the material resources of the Muslims, and also to cater for the social and religious needs of the Gold Coast Moslems. The GCMA departed from its social objectives to actively participate in politics in 1939, after the earthquake in Accra. The Muslims felt that there was unfair distribution of building materials to the affected Muslim communities. Thus, it was GCMA's social concern for Muslims that pushed it into politics. When it turned to politics, an Accra lawyer, Mustapha Awoonor Renner, and a Kumasi lawyer, Cobbina Kessie, became its leaders. The GCMA later metamorphosed into the MAP in the early 1950s.

9.2.2.5 The Nkrumah administration saw the emergence of this party as a threat to his effort to win more Muslim support, and to increase CPP membership. Consequently, Dr. Nkrumah established the Moslem Youth Congress (MYC) of Ghana to serve as the mouthpiece of Muslims. It was believed that the formation of the MYC was intended to undermine the leadership of the GCMA, and to limit its political influence in the country. In addition, Muslim leaders considered the establishment of the MYC as an imposition, since the government handpicked the leaders. The MYC was therefore not only seen to be opposed to the GCMA, but also a wing of the CPP.

9.2.2.6 The leadership of the MYC gradually gained prominence and political influence. For example, Z B Shardow, who was the co-Chairman of the Muslim Youth Congress, became the National Organiser of the Ghana Young Pioneer movement (GYP). In the same way, Mallam Futa was made the Imam of Accra, after Dr. Nkrumah had removed Mohammed Abass from that office in 1959. Both the MYC and the GCMA became ineffective and lost their prominence after the overthrow of the CPP Government in 1966.

9.2.2.7 In reality both the GCMA and the MAP were anti-CPP, because they thought the policies of CPP were a threat to the people they represented. By adopting this anti-government position, the leaders of these two Muslim groups lost some rights and privileges. In addition to these, the deportations of some of their leaders and the removal of the Imam from office, coupled with detentions under the Preventive Detention Act silenced them and reduced their influence in national affairs.

9.2.3 6TH MARCH, 1957- 23RD FEBRUARY, 1966 :
CONVENTION PEOPLE'S PARTY (CPP)

9.2.3.1 The MAP

9.2.3.1.1 In the late 1950s the MAP, was dismembered by a series of Deportation Orders made by the government, as the leaders were alleged to be of Northern Nigerian extraction. Over a period of time the number of people within the leadership of the MAP who were deported was as follows: 68 in 1957, 62 in 1958, 75 in 1959, and 54 in 1960 . The issue of the deportations raised some moral questions in their application. There were allegations of riots among the various Muslim groups, that made them liable to the charge of violence, and the CPP Government resorted to the deportation of some of the Muslim leaders. Those who were deported were known allies of the National Liberation Movement (NLM).

9.2.3.1 2 Later, the MAP merged with others to form the United Party, when the Avoidance of Discrimination Act , 1957 (CA 38) prohibited the existence of religious-based political parties.

9.2.4 24TH FEBRUARY, 1966 – 30TH SEPTEMBER, 1969:
NATIONAL LIBERATION COUNCIL (NLC)

9.2.4.1 The National Liberation Council (NLC), which toppled the CPP Government on February 24, 1966, banned the GCMA and the MYC of Ghana, due to their anti-CPP and pro-CPP rivalry.

9.2.4.2 The issue of human rights abuses during the NLC against certain individuals that raised public concerns were the public ridicule of Boye Moses, one of Dr. Nkrumah's security aides, who was paraded in a cage on the streets of Accra , the strike involving the mine workers of Ashanti Goldfields in Obuasi, during which three of the workers were shot dead by the police , and the decision of the government to ban most of the leading members of the former CPP from contesting the 1969 general elections. All these violations did not elicit any comment from the Muslim communities and their leaders at the time. In short nothing much can be said about the activities of Muslim Organizations under this regime.

9.2.5 1ST OCTOBER, 1969 – 12TH JANUARY, 1972
THE SECOND REPUBLIC

9.2.5.1 In 1969, the efforts of the Busia Government to unite the Ghana Muslim Mission and the Ghana Muslim Community led to the creation of the Supreme Council for Islamic Affairs. Some Ga Muslims and Muslims in the northern part of Ghana formed the council. Alhaji Haruna Attah, then a Minister in the Second Republic, inaugurated the council in April 1970 at Tamale. In his inaugural speech, Alhaji Attah praised Muslims for coming together to form the council to deal with Islamic Affairs. He urged them to render genuine services, adding that by their unity, they would be laying a firm foundation for a better administration of the affairs of Muslims.

9.2.5.2 One of the most significant landmarks of this regime was the enforcement of the Aliens Compliance Order. Many Muslim immigrants were affected by this Order. The implementation caused great suffering, and there were many pathetic scenes as the deportees scrambled for transport to locations that were completely foreign to some of them. For instance, according to an eye-witness account, a man committed suicide by slashing his throat on the steps of a bus, while he and others were being transported to Upper Volta (now Burkina Faso), because he had no idea where he would stay in Upper Volta, having been born and bred in Ghana.

9.2.5.3 There was also the dismissal of 568 civil servants that became known as ‘Apollo 568’ and caused unease in the era. This too might have affected some families of the Muslim community. There were no such petitions or protests from the Muslim groups or their leaders.

9.2.6 13TH JANUARY, 1972 – 3RD JUNE, 1979:
NATIONAL REDEMPTION COUNCIL (NRC) AND
SUPREME MILITARY COUNCIL (SMC) I & II

9.2.6.1 Ghana Muslim Representative Council (GMRC).

9.2.6.1.1 Colonel Ignatius Kutu Acheampong came to power on 13th January, 1972, as Chairman of the NRC and Head of State. He received pledges of support from the Muslim leadership. In the same year the NRC set up the National Islamic Committee to settle all disputes among Islamic organizations in the country and to ensure unity among Muslims. The NRC was of the view that, it was only reconciliation and unity of purpose that would restore to the Islamic groups the influence that they had lost .

9.2.6.1.2 On 10th October, 1972, Alhaji Mahmoud Lampitey, an Imam of the Armed Forces who was the chairman of the committee presented to the NRC Government, a report on the proposals for a Muslim organisation in the country. The Report was received on behalf of the government by Major Roger J A Felli, who congratulated the Committee for a good work done and said it was the aim of government to unite all Islamic organisations in the country .

9.2.6.1.3 The efforts of the NRC Government in ensuring peace and harmony among Muslim bodies gave birth to the Ghana Muslim Representative Council (GMRC). It was inaugurated on 23rd March, 1973, at the Accra Community Centre by the Commissioner for Information, Lt Col Chumogo D Benni. In a special message to Muslims on the occasion, the Head of State, expressed his happiness for the country, that a distinct body had succeeded in settling amicably, all disputes among Muslims. On the Muslim front, Alhaji Dauda Otoo praised the government for its contribution to the unity of the Ghana Muslim Community, the Ghana Muslim Mission and the Supreme Council for Islamic Affairs, a goal that had been impossible to achieve over a period of 20 years by previous governments .

9.2.6.1.4 Indeed, the GMRC after its formation became the mouthpiece of all Muslims in national politics .The council was very instrumental in the campaign for the adoption of the Union Government (UNIGOV)concept, which was proposed by the SMC in the late 1970s. Alhaji Mohammed Alhassan, who was of the GMRC declared in a seminar that: “it will be suicidal for the country to return once more to the game of party politics which has no respect for old age and which had sowed seeds of dissension in the country” . The GMRC also represented the Muslim Community in the 1979 Constituent Assembly, which drafted the 1979 Republican Constitution. Alhaji Bashiru Futa, a legal practitioner, represented the Council.

9.2.6.1.5 On 6th February, 1979, a press conference was held in Accra by a number of Muslims, who claimed to represent the entire Muslim community. At the press conference, they rejected the idea of party politics, which “once divided the Islamic religion by the formation of the erstwhile Muslim Association Party.” Therefore they embraced the idea of UNIGOV. In a statement read on behalf of the Muslim chiefs by their secretary, Alhaji Ramadan Ibrahim, they said:

We overwhelmingly embrace the proposed Union Government, which is in line with the basic principles of the Islamic concept that all men are equal and united.

9.2.6.1.6 In another development, Sheikh Ibrahim Amartey of the council urged Ghanaians to eschew their apathetic attitude to the proposal of UNIGOV and unite to support the government in the search for a suitable government for the nation.

9.2.6.1.7 The statement was typical of the several statements that came from various Muslim groups between January and March, 1978. For instance, a nine-member committee led by Chief Adama Damaley, head of the Sabon Zongo community in Accra, urged all religious people to vote ‘Yes’ at the 30th March, 1978 Referendum, to ensure progress and stability . Also, Alhaji Yakubu Tetteh, founder and National Organiser of the Muslim Association asked an audience at Zenith Hall, Sekondi, to support UNIGOV, because Islam and the Holy Quran stressed, in essence, unity.

9.2.6.1.8 A fact worthy of note is that some of the Muslim chiefs were also politicians. For example, Alhaji Salihu Maikankan was the Chairman of the Darkuman branch of the Ghana Peace and Solidarity Council. That body was a political wing of General Acheampong’s Unigov campaign. Therefore, suggestions that some of them were involved in politics in the name of religion, cannot be ruled out of discussions on this issue.

9.2.6.1.9 Having openly declared their support for UNIGOV, they were not in a position to criticise the human rights abuses that the regime indulged in, during the campaign for the referendum on Unigov.

9.2.7 4TH JUNE 1979 – 23RD SEPTEMBER 1979:
ARMED FORCES REVOLUTIONARY COUNCIL (AFRC),

9.2.7.1 The AFRC under the chairmanship of Flt Lt Jerry John Rawlings. replaced the ruling Supreme Military Council government on 4th June, 1979. The government proceeded to deal ruthlessly with people it perceived to have committed various offences. These atrocious actions of the AFRC government included public caning, especially of market women stripped to near-nakedness, arbitrary dismissals, seizure of property and indiscriminate killings by soldiers men.

9.2.7.2 Such actions of the military government elicited public outcry from civil society, religious bodies and other organisations. However, the GMRC, under the leadership of Alhaji Dauda Otoo commended the AFRC's decision to despatch those found guilty by revolutionary courts .

9.2.7.3 The Ahmadiyya Muslim Mission in Wa suffered abuse of its rights, when soldiers seized many bags of grains meant for the poor in the area. It was thus only the Ahmadiyya group that spoke vehemently against the arbitrary seizure of property of which it had fallen victim.

9.2.8 24TH SEPTEMBER, 1979 – 30TH DECEMBER, 1981:
THE THIRD REPUBLIC

9.2.8.1 The political influence of Hajia Amina Baby Ocansey, the National Women's Organiser of the People's National Party (PNP), brought about the formation of the National Assembly of Muslim Women in 1981. This Assembly was established to organise and co-ordinate the activities of Muslim women. Although, the GMRC was still the official mouthpiece of the Muslims, it was not vibrant.

9.2.9 31ST DECEMBER, 1981 – 6TH JANUARY, 1993:
PROVISIONAL NATIONAL DEFENCE COUNCIL (PNDC)

9.2.9.1 The GMRC continued to champion the cause of Muslims and constituted the official mouthpiece of all Muslims until the 31st December, 1981 coup. This coup brought into power the PNDC, again under the chairmanship of Flt Lt Jerry John Rawlings. A number of Islamic associations such as the United Ghana Muslim Representative Council (UGMRC) and the National Muslim Task Force, emerged after the coup. The National Muslim Task Force was under the leadership of Alhaji T.B. Damba, and it aimed at mobilizing Muslims towards the National Economic Recovery Programme of 1982.

9.2.9.2 Attempts by the PNDC Government to unite the GMRC and the UGMRC led to the establishment of the National Islamic Secretariat in 1985. Again, when Colonel Muammar-al-Qathafi of Libya paid a visit to Ghana in 1985, he made a call for Muslim unity. This brought about the formation of the Federation of Muslim Councils in 1987. In response to PNDC Law 221, to monitor the activities of religious bodies in the country, Din-il-Islam was also established in Ghana in 1989, to register under this law, “as the superstructure” for all orthodox Islamic associations, as one religious body in the country.

9.2.9.3 The way and manner, these organizations were set up, coupled with the fact that, the initiatives were not generally from the Muslim masses, limited their activities. The new organisations failed to receive the mandate of the general Muslim body, and this situation led to the manipulation of the organisations by a few, in the name of all Muslims, particularly in its dealings with the central government.

9.2.9.4 Thus, rivalry developed between the GMRC and the UGMRC in championing the destiny of Islam and Muslims in the country and this situation led to calls from individuals, Islamic institutions, Islamic and Arab Missions and government for peace and unity in the Muslim community. Among these were personalities such as Hajia Amina Baby Ocansey, National Assembly Women’s Organiser, Sgt Muhammed Alidu Upper East Regional Organising Assistant of Police, in-charge of Committee for the Defence of the Revolution (CDR), and the Royal Embassy of Saudi Arabia.

9.2.9.5 Ultimately an accord between the GMRC and the UGMRC was signed on 7th July, 1985, in Accra, and led to the formation of the National Islamic Secretariat as an umbrella body for all Muslim organizations (Sunni) in the country. Each of the two bodies had five representatives on the National Islamic Secretariat with Alhaji Dauda Otoo and Alhaji B A R Braimah, as the first two National Co-ordinators.

9.2.9.6 Colonel Muammar-al-Qathafi’s call for Muslim unity as a means of promoting the advancement of the 31st December Revolution was accompanied by his pledge of Libya’s preparedness to provide financial support to the Islamic Council. The pledge was redeemed in January, 1987, when a Libyan delegation participating in the 5th Anniversary of the 31st December Revolution, made a presentation of items worth ₵22 million to the National Islamic Secretariat. The delegation also extended an invitation to the leadership of the National Islamic Secretariat to attend an International Islamic Conference to be held in Tripoli .

9.2.9.7 Thereafter in 1987, the National Islamic Secretariat sent a high-ranking delegation of over 30 Muslim leaders, to participate in the 3rd National Islamic Conference of West African Countries held in Tripoli, Libya. The Ghanaian delegation held a series of discussions with the World Islamic Call Society (WICS). These discussions led to the signing of the Tripoli Accord between the two parties. One of the issues contained in the “Tripoli Accord” was that the National Islamic Secretariat, be replaced with the Federation of Muslim Councils. This was to serve as the General Secretariat, and it was to be run by the heads of the various Islamic Councils in the ten regions of Ghana.

9.2.9.8 On the 4th April, 1987, Chairman Rawlings inaugurated the Federation of Muslim Councils in Accra. In his inaugural speech, Flt Lt Rawlings made it clear that the Federation of Muslim Councils would not by itself guarantee the hopes and aspirations which led to its formation, unless Muslims, as individuals, and as a group, were prepared to support the Federation to achieve its goals, with singleness of purpose, understanding and tolerance.

9.2.9.9 Alhaji Dauda Otoo, again, served as the first National Co-ordinator of the Federation of Muslim Councils. The structure of the Federation of Muslim Councils was not different from that of National Islamic Secretariat, thus constituting a departure from the Tripoli Accord.

9.2.10 Summary

9.2.10.1 Looking at the facts presented above, it can be seen that, since Independence, various Muslim communities have allied themselves with different governments, which they considered would best protect their interests. Political parties in government have also used Muslim communities to further their own sectoral goals.

9.2.10.2 By and large, there have been many attempts to institute a Muslim council, which would act as the umbrella organization for all Muslims, but the attempts have not always been successful. There is now in existence the Office of the National Chief Imam and the Head of Ahmadiyya Muslim Mission. These are all attempts to establish an identifiable national identity and give Muslims a voice in national affairs.

9.2.10.3 Generally, the Muslim communities feared that colonial rule would impose Christianity on them. This led the Muslim communities in Ghana to isolate themselves from active participation as a group to react to issues, which bordered on human rights abuses against either them or other people in society.

9.2.10.4 It could therefore be said that Muslims in Ghana had, never as a group, championed any cause, when it came to issues of public agitation against human rights violations and abuses. During military takeovers in Ghana, people were maltreated, maimed, whipped, killed and some properties were seized, but none of these produced official comment from the Muslim Community. This is not surprising since at most times the leaders of the new Muslim unity organizations were handpicked by the government of the day. The result of this silence has been the marginalization of Muslims in issues relating to the protection of human rights. Apart from a few Muslims in politics, the Muslim communities have not been politically active in terms of formal protests or endorsement of government policies and directives. The Ghana Muslim Mission was not in favour of the Preventive Detention Act, yet because of its non-political stance, the Mission could not officially and openly condemn the Act, although some of its members suffered under it.

9.2.10.5 The Ghana Muslim Mission has stated that because of its non-political stance, it did not make any official protest against the effects of the PDA. It is unclear what “non-political” means, because the refusal to comment on the arrest and deportation of its own members on account of non-political stance would appear to be an abdication of the organization’s social responsibility to its own members. It is fair to conclude that the organization did not get involved for fear of reprisals.

9.2.10.6 The implementation the Deportation Act to get rid of prominent leaders of the Muslim community during the CPP regime, helped to silence the Muslim community.

9.2.10.7 Neither the Ahmadiyya Muslim Mission nor the Orthodox Muslims supported brutalities, killings, seizure of property and other related human rights violation. However, although they frowned on human rights violations such as flogging in public, detention without trial and the parading of human beings in iron-cage, they did not openly protest those atrocities.

9.3 THE CHRISTIAN RELIGIOUS GROUP

9.3.1 Historical Background

9.3.1.1 Christianity came to Ghana, then Gold Coast, through Christian Missionary work in Elmina. It all started with the arrival of the Portuguese in 1471, and from that time to date, a lot of churches have sprung up. Notable among them are the Presbyterian Church, the Methodist Church, the Anglican Church, the Roman Catholic Church, and several Pentecostal and Charismatic Churches.

9.3.1.2 The Christian Church has had a great impact on the Ghanaian society and has shaped a number of our modern national institutions. This is as a result of the nature of the missionary activity, such as formal education, that brought Christianity to Ghana. Although in principle, the colonial government practised the modern theory of separation between church and state, its modus operandi inadvertently propagated and infused Christian ideals and values into national institutions. Ghana was therefore regarded as a Christian nation, not by virtue of numbers, but by institutional affinity and residual Christian ideals and values in our society. The close relationship between the Christian church and colonialism, whether by default or design, gave the Christian Church a great social recognition in the socio-political life of this country.

9.3.1.3 In Ghana, some leaders of the various Christian religious groups have been vocal in drawing government’s attention to what is seen as human rights violations abuses in Ghana’s political life. Christian religious bodies and successive governments have sometimes collaborated in various areas, especially on issues of socio-culture interest, because in Ghana there has not been a clear distinction between the sacred and the secular.

9.3.1.4 The rapid socio-cultural and political transformation of Ghana, made it necessary for adjustments to be made in such collaborations between Church and State in the post-Independence Ghana. Consequently, when Christian religious bodies got involved in politics, they did so not as a matter of civic duty, but mainly on the basis of certain ideologies, laws, and pronouncements by certain personalities, which were perceived as blasphemies and in contravention of international human rights laws.

9.3.2 6TH MARCH, 1957 – 23RD FEBRUARY, 1966:
CONVENTION PEOPLE’S PARTY (CPP)

9.3.2.1 From the time of Independence, ie from 6th March, 1957 up to at least 1962, it was clear that majority of the people of Ghana supported Dr. Kwame Nkrumah; the reason being that he had created order, after the chaotic campaign for independence. Through this feat also, he won respect for Ghana from the international community. For many Ghanaians, Dr. Nkrumah had saved them from unemployment, personal degradation and humiliation. Even, foreign powers saw him as a force to be reckoned with.

9.3.2.2 The first sharp conflict between the State and the Christian Church occurred, when Bishop Reginald Richard Roseveare, the Anglican Bishop of Accra, criticized the formation of the Ghana Young Pioneer movement (GYP). Bishop Roseveare was subsequently deported after having been vilified in the press. Although he was later allowed to return, the church had been sufficiently cowed. Rev Fr Vincent K. Damuah of the Catholic Church, was also briefly detained for criticising the government over Bishop Roseveare’s deportation and other church-related issues. It took the personal protest of Archbishop John Kodwo Amissah, Catholic Archbishop of Cape Coast, to secure his release.

9.3.2.3 Again, some of the heads of educational institutions owned by the Christian religious groups displeased the government when they failed to show support for the formation of the GYP movement in their institutions. For example, the Headmaster of Mfantsipim School in Cape Coast was dismissed, and the Headmistress of St Monica’s Girls Secondary School Mampong, Ashanti, came under official pressure, when they would both not support the formation of the GYP in their respective schools.

9.3.2.4 In general, the relationship between Christian religious bodies and governments has been fairly respectful and cordial. Since Independence, Christian religious leaders have been accorded a high position in the Ghanaian socio-political context, and they have been influential in various areas, particularly in the provision of schools and the moral formation of the citizenry.

9.3.2.5 There were a few occasions when the churches openly protested actions that they believed to be blasphemous, during President Nkrumah’s administration. In particular, the churches were unhappy with the messianic ascriptions that were used in adulation of the President. After his statue of about 20 feet had been erected in front of the Old Parliament House in Accra, with the inscription, “Seek ye first the political kingdom and all other things shall be added unto you”, the Christian Council, found it necessary to challenge this. This was because the inscription was an adaptation of the biblical quotation, “But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you.” The Christian Council of Ghana sent a letter, dated 28th

April, 1958, to the Minister for Works, E. K. Bensah, asking him to remove the quotation from the statue of Dr Nkrumah and substitute it with a non-biblical inscription. Threats were issued from the government that such an action from the Christian Council was an offence against the provisions of the Avoidance of Discrimination Act. The government further tried to silence the Christian Council by accusing it of carrying out a political agenda.

9.3.2.6 On 1st July, 1960, the programme for the celebration of Republic Day included the pouring of libation to solicit spiritual protection. The Christian Churches considered this as idolatry and unacceptable and therefore protested against it, even though Ghana was a secular State. The churches felt that if spiritual protection had to be sought, then it had to be according to Christian practice and teachings.

9.3.2.7 There were many instances in which people sought to deify Dr. Nkrumah. In fact, there emerged a cult of President Nkrumah that was nurtured by the CPP. Part of the practices of this cult in its deification of Dr. Nkrumah was to ascribe several appellations to Nkrumah. Such appellations included “Osagyefo”, “Kantamanto”, “Oyeadecyie”, “Kasapreko”, “Asuo’dumgya”, and even “The Messiah.” The churches frowned on these appellations, which seemed to elevate President Nkrumah above other mortals.

9.3.2.8 The people of Ghana were subjected to propaganda that suggested that President Nkrumah’s emergence was more extraordinary than the emergence of Buddha, Jesus Christ and the Prophet Mohammed. In an editorial of the Evening News was the inscription, “All day, all night we are reinforced in our belief that the whole phenomena [sic] of Dr. Nkrumah’s emergence is second to none in the long history of the world messiah from Buddha, Mohammed and Christ.” To enhance that image, there were continued appellations in the media and on various platforms. For example, Dr. Nkrumah was alleged to have gone to the wilderness for spiritual exercise just as Jesus Christ did. Again, according to the Evening News, just as John the Baptist heralded the Mission of Christ on earth, Dr. Nkrumah’s emergence was also said to have been foretold by Dr. Kwegyir Aggrey. The Evening News in a report captioned: “The Seven Days in the Wilderness”, and “Nkrumah in the Hour of Transfiguration”, graphically compared Dr. Nkrumah and Christ. Dr. Nkrumah was also considered martyr par excellence by J R P Marutle in the following poem:

For your sake he was imprisoned;
For your sake he deliberately plunged himself into supreme sacrifice by declaring
Positive Action at a time he knew fully well the imperialists would hit back;
For your sake he suffered shame and degradation;
For your sake he abandoned law and came at the call of the UGCC;
For your sake he has incurred the hatred of imperialist hypocrites and all who do not want the common man to have a place under the sun;
For your sake he was tortured, suffered persecution, libel cases, contempt of court and all sorts and manners of injustices;
For your sake his residence at New Town was bombarded by an executive officer... of the opposition.

This poem is just an extended parody of the biblical exhortation, “For your sake, he was crucified.” Some began to sing Dr. Nkrumah’s praises by substituting some words of the Canticum “Te Deum Laudamus”. All these acts of deification offended the churches.

9.3.2.9 On 24th May, 1961, the CPP Member of Parliament for East Nzema, J A Kinnah, announced that a “shrine” should be built to the name of President Nkrumah, in Nkroful, President Nkrumah’s hometown, in the Western Region of Ghana. These ideas did not sit well with the Christian Council of Ghana, especially as P K K Quaidoo, CPP Member of Parliament for Amenfi Aowin, who spoke against the erection as being premature was described as a “Catholic slave and hypocrite”. The shrine received visits from many people who believed they were on a pilgrimage. In 1962, about 100 members of the GYP from all the regions of Ghana went on pilgrimage to the shrine where they kept an all-night vigil, and organised a route march. The Christian Council felt that the adulation of the President had gone too far and was becoming idolatry. The last straw that broke the camel’s back was when President Nkrumah was called “The Messiah” and children of the GYP were seen as being indoctrinated into a cult that upheld the immortality and infallibility of the President.

9.3.2.10 Between 1957 and up to the overthrow of the CPP Government in 1966, the Christian religious bodies mainly played a human rights advocacy role under the name of the Christian Council of Ghana. The Catholic Church also later joined in this crusade. During this era, the issues of concern included the introduction of the Preventive Detention Act (PDA), the Deportation Act and the bomb-throwing outrages that resulted in many deaths, especially those of GYP, in the 1960s.

9.3.2.11 The Christian Council put in a lot of effort to stop Parliament from passing the Preventive Detention Bill, but the Bill was rushed through Parliament in July and passed. Later, in a letter dated 7th January, 1960, Rev G Thackray Eddy, the retiring Chairman of both the Christian Council of Ghana and of The Methodist Church, Ghana, wrote to the Prime Minister, Dr. Nkrumah, indicating the council’s concern over the PDA. Indeed, later that month of January, 1960, Reverend Eddy wrote another letter stating the following:

The council believed the bill to be contrary to natural justice, which requires that any accused person should be given an opportunity to defend himself face to face with his accusers. The letter further indicated that the bill would discourage free and honest criticism and that it would cause people to live in apprehension.

The Prime Minister in response stated:

I am satisfied that my party and government have taken their stand in this matter from a realistic point, and I am unable to advise them to shift their ground. I think that if the Christian Council and the churches want the Preventive Detention Act to be withdrawn, it should be their duty first of all to take positive steps to remove the causes, which led to the passing of the Act. As long as they have not done so, my colleagues and I cannot see that you and your colleagues have any right at all, moral, or otherwise, to intervene in this matter.

Dr. Nkrumah thus rejected the concern expressed by the Christian Council.

9.3.2.12 In 1962, the Christian Council expressed the concern of its members on the assassination attempt made on President Nkrumah. A press release by the council after he escaped assassination at Kulungugu read in part as follows:

The Christian Council of Ghana meeting at Accra on the September 14, 1962, reaffirms the Majesty and the Lordship of Jesus Christ, realizing that he is still in control. The Council rejoices in the President's escape from assassination. The Council strongly condemns the recent acts of violence and has shown their sympathy in a practical way by giving the sum of (£G150) One Hundred and Fifty Ghanaian Pounds towards the relief of those who suffered. The Christian Council recognizes the right of the churches to affirm its conviction that the church has its duty to speak on any issue, which affects the spiritual and moral welfare of its members and the nation in general.

9.3.2.13 The Christian Council followed up with a personal letter to the President on his lucky escape, and the following response was received a few days later:

Donation for the relief of Kulungugu victims: I am directed by Osagyefo to acknowledge on his behalf receipt of your letter dated September 15, 1962. Osagyefo also wishes me to convey through you the Christian Council of Ghana an expression of his deep gratitude for its very handsome contribution towards the relief of the Kulungugu victims.

9.3.2.14 In the early part of 1960, Bishop Andrew van den Bronk, the Catholic Bishop of Kumasi, fell foul of some people due to his utterances, perceived to be anti-government. He was attacked in the press as indulging in "crook politics". In a write-up captioned "Bishop Bronk Must Go," Rev V G Kobina-Mensah, of the Church of Africa, Accra, urged his expulsion from Ghana. It is also believed that some people, even of the Catholic Church, wanted an indigene as bishop of Kumasi, were therefore behind the political situation of the time, to compel his departure. His house was actually attacked with dynamite on one occasion. He eventually became a victim of the Deportation Act. There is no evidence that the Christian Council offered any visible support to the beleaguered Bishop.

9.3.2.15 However, when in October, 1962, the Deportation Act was used against Rt Rev Roseveare, the Christian Council took up the matter. A letter was sent to President Nkrumah pleading for Roseveare's return. The result was his return to Ghana in November, 1962, upon which the Christian Council sent the following telegram of gratitude:

On behalf of Ghana Christian Council, we request you to kindly convey to Osagyefo the President warmest gratitude for graciously granting council's humble petition and permitting Bishop Roseveare's return. This most generous gesture will rejoice the heart of multitudes of Christians throughout Ghana and in many other Lands. We pray for the Almighty God's continued guidance, support and blessing for Osagyefo.

9.3.2.16 The Christian Council of Ghana, in collaboration with the Joint Provincial Council and the Asanteman Council, also protested the deportation of some Muslims leaders including Alhaji Amadu Baba, Lardan Lalemie , Salami Lagos, Aliu Allao, Musa Derikikiyi, Idris Braimah and Sam Moshie .

9.3.3 24TH FEBRUARY, 1966 - 30TH SEPTEMBER, 1969
 NATIONAL LIBERATION COUNCIL (NLC)

9.3.3.1 In March, 1966, the Christian Council of Ghana held a non-denominational service at the Accra Sports Stadium, following the overthrow of the CPP Government by the NLC. It was a Thanksgiving Service to thank God for liberating the country from the one-party rule of the CPP Government. This gesture and the accompanying message of the Christian Council was, undoubtedly, a show of support for the coming into power of the NLC.

9.3.3.2 Following the overthrow, CPP office holders and other government functionaries were detained without trial. Indeed, one of the security men of President Nkrumah, Boye Moses, was put in a cage and paraded through the principal streets of Accra, amidst public ridicule. The security apparatus of the President had been so feared and hated, that no one gave a thought as to what ill-treatment was being meted out to those who constituted it; and so no one, not even the Churches, condemned this undignified treatment of a human being, and the violation of Boye Moses' human rights, in particular.

9.3.3.3 On 17th April, 1967, there was an attempt to overthrow the Government of NLC and as result Lt-Gen Kotoka , Capt Cephas Y. Borkloe, Capt Anthony Avevor and Sgt Osei Grushie, the personal Orderly of Lt-Gen Kotoka, were killed. The leaders of the attempted coup, Lt Samuel B Arthur and Lt Moses Yeboah, were subsequently executed in public on 9th May, 1967. This was the first public execution to be carried out in Ghana. The Christian Council protested against the public execution of Lt Arthur and Lt Yeboah. An excerpt of the letter of protest sent by the Christian Council to the NLC read as follows:

Sir,

Holding of Executions in Public: At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Christian Council, on May 16, 1967, the subject was discussed and we were made aware that many members of the churches and of the general public, were profoundly distressed that the public should have been involved to witness the execution of the Lieutenants Arthur and Yeboah on May 9. There was no questioning of the verdicts and sentences on these men, but the Executive agreed with the view that holding the executions in public encourage crude demonstrations of hatred and excites morbid curiosity in the on-lookers and in the public at large.

9.3.3.4 In view of the possibility of other executions, the Executive Committee asked that these views should be made known to the NLC in a letter to be presented by a delegation of church leaders. In reply to the above, the NLC sent the following:

Dear Sir,

I am directed to acknowledge with thanks, the receipt of your memorandum on the above subject dated 30th May 1967, and to assure you that the council has no intention of carrying out, in the near future, any execution in public.

There were no further public executions during the NLC regime.

9.3.4 1ST OCTOBER, 1969 – 12TH JANUARY, 1972:
THE SECOND REPUBLIC PROGRESS PARTY (PP) GOVERNMENT

9.3.4.1 The leaders of the Christian religious bodies did not approve the overthrow of the Government of the Progress Party under Dr. Busia. This was because Dr. Busia was generally considered to be a good Christian and a God-fearing leader. However, a few incidents occurred which called for critical comment from the churches, such as the mode of implementation of the Aliens Compliance Order, and the dismissal of the 568 senior civil and public servants. There is no evidence of the churches' official protest to these events that caused such human suffering.

9.3.5 13TH JANUARY, 1972 – 3RD JUNE, 1979:
NATIONAL REDEMPTION COUNCIL (NRC) /
SUPREME MILITARY COUNCIL (SMC) I & II

9.3.5.1 Soon after Col Acheampong seized power from the government of the Second Republic in 1972, his style of administration became suspect in the eyes of the leaders of the Christian religious bodies. The government launched the "Operation Feed Yourself" programme which was very popular with the entire citizenry. Members of the NRC also embarked on a programme of instilling discipline in the Ghanaian body politics. Although this entailed the use of force and unorthodox methods, such as military-style drills, the churches did not disapprove because falling standards of discipline within the Ghanaian social life had been one of their constant themes since 1966.

9.3.5.2 As the same economic problems that led to the overthrow of the Progress Party re-emerged, opposition to the continued stay in office by the Military began also began to coalesce. In addition, to the economic mismanagement, the growth of kalabule and the attendant degeneration in moral standards roused the Christian religious bodies to action. They began to send Memoranda and Joint Pastoral Letters to the government, expressing concern over the emerging social problems. They also began to preach against the immoral lifestyles that were emerging and the social consequences of such immorality.

9.3.5.3 The change in structure of National Redemption Council to Supreme Military Council merely changed the membership but not the policies or the lifestyles of which the churches had been so critical. The Chairman of NRC and the new SMC, now General Acheampong, began to court the disfavour of the Orthodox Churches.

9.3.5.4 The Christian Council of Ghana, and the Ghana Catholic Bishops' Conference opposed Gen Acheampong's proposal for the formation of a Union Government (Unigov). This was to be a constitutional government, which was to have representation of the Armed Forces, the Police and civilians. The two religious bodies saw it as an attempt to perpetuate military rule in the country. As time went by, anti-military sentiments of the church leaders became more vehement, because of serious human rights abuses then being perpetrated by the government.

9.3.5.5 As wanton arrests and beatings continued, heads of the Christian Council and the Catholic Bishops' Conference issued a joint memorandum of protest, after a meeting with Gen Acheampong in which they protested against acts of arbitrary arrests. They specifically, protested the arrest and detention of K Addai-Mensah, National Secretary of the Ghana Bar Association, in Kumasi on 21st February, 1978; the brutal beating up of Peter Owusu Donkor, Headmaster of Opoku Ware Secondary School, as well as the Assistant Headmaster and students of Opoku Ware Secondary School; and students of Mfantshipim School in Cape Coast respectively, by supporters of the concept of Unigov. The Memorandum also protested the denial of such basic human rights as the freedom of speech and of association to the citizenry.

9.3.5.6 A pastoral letter by the Catholic Bishops' Conference condemned the human rights violations perpetrated by members of the security forces; and more particularly, complained about the denial of freedom of expression to such civil society organization as the People's Movement for Freedom and Justice (PMFJ) during the months preceding the referendum on the Unigov concept. The repression of the PMFJ was criticised as being the antithesis of government pronouncements on public education on the concept of Unigov, since the law-enforcement agencies should have been the ones to give protection to the PMFJ, and not the ones to lead in the molestation of citizens expressing their dissent. The pastoral letter also protested against the biased nature of the campaign, which was supposed to educate people on the impending referendum, as evidenced by the fact that members of the government and other personalities were either openly campaigning on behalf of Unigov or the so-called National Government.

9.3.5.7 In order to promote the concept of Unigov and to give it some spiritual backing in order to hoodwink the ordinary citizen of its divine origin, Elizabeth Clare Prophet, also known as Mother Prophet, of the Summit Lighthouse of the Keepers of the Flame Fraternity of Southern California, was invited to Ghana by Gen Acheampong's government in January, 1978. She re-defined and expounded the Christian doctrine of the Trinity in terms of Unigov. She urged that the Unigov was to be accepted, because it demonstrated the Christian doctrine of the Trinity. The Armed Forces represented God the Father, the Police represented God the Son, and the Civilians represented God the Holy Spirit, leading people to confer the nickname 'APC' on her version of the Unigov concept. She even discovered a "fourth person of the Trinity" in the Mother of God, represented by the Women of Ghana. She therefore exploited the Christian religion to support the new political concept of governance of General Acheampong. The Christian Council vehemently expressed disagreement with Mrs. Clare Prophet and on 14th February, 1978, issued the following statement:

The Christian Council wishes to express its disagreement with the religious and constitutional opinions of Mrs. Clare Prophet ...She was ill-advised to make a statement about Christian belief which has no basis in the Bible and in the tradition...We deplore that whereas the place of the army and the police in any future government is a controversial issue, Mrs. Clare Prophet took the opportunity to claim on behalf of the soldiers and police among others a “divine right”, no less, to participate in government. The Christian Council wishes to declare that no individual or section of the public has any divine or other right to participate in government except by the choice of the electorate freely expressed through the ballot box.

In the light of this, the orthodox churches boycotted all activities of Mrs. Clare Prophet’s two-day seminar .

9.3.5.8 The role of the Christian Council of Ghana and the Ghana Catholic Bishops’ Conference, established the Orthodox Churches also as credible reconcilers of warring factions in society as was evident during Gen Acheampong’s regime. For example, their mediatory role in the clash between the Ghana Registered Nurses Association and the government, and between university students and the government, showed them in a positive light. They, on many occasions, established themselves as the voice of the voiceless, pleading for the cause of political detainees, and in this role earned the wrath of Gen Acheampong. According to the Christian organisations, “the church’s task is to protect and defend the rights of every human being and to protest against the violation of these rights by any fellow man or woman.” It is possible to conclude from the events of those days that during the Acheampong regime, the orthodox churches were by virtue of circumstances, dragged into the political life of the country . In a nutshell, when the orthodox churches opposed General Acheampong’s regime, they were accused of meddling in politics. The same accusation was, however, not heard when the orthodox churches intervened on behalf of the government in disputes.

9.3.6 GEN ACHEAMPONG’S RELATIONSHIP WITH THE NEW PENTECOSTAL CHURCHES

9.3.6.1 It was impossible for General Acheampong to influence and win the support of the leadership of the Orthodox Churches of Ghana, during his campaign to popularize the Unigov idea. He therefore turned his attention to the new Pentecostal Churches. He found ready allies in the leaders of the “spiritual churches.” He went as far as attending their church services and this gave him the opportunity to launch his campaign on the Unigov either personally from the pulpits of these churches, or through the church leaders .

9.3. 6.2 As a result, some individual religious leaders were driven by personal ambition to seek public office. In view of this, some of the spiritual church leaders were placed in high positions and this enabled them to campaign for General Acheampong’s Unigov.

For example Rev Dr Blankson Amankwa, leader and founder of the Bethany Church of Ghana, and Presiding Director of the National Christian Ministers' Union, also belonged to The Friends, one of the pro- Unigov political organs of Gen Acheampong, was appointed Chairman of the University Council of the University of Science and Technology, Kumasi. When in 1974, Bishop Peter Kwasi Sarpong, Catholic Bishop of Kumasi, declined to serve on the Charter of Redemption Committee, it was Rev Charles Yeboah-Koree, founder and leader of F'Eden Church, and an ardent supporter of Unigov, who was appointed in his stead as a member of the National Committee of the Charter of Redemption. Rev Yeboah-Koree at the Easter Convention of his church at the Jackson Park in Koforidua, asked his congregation to endorse Unigov, since it was divinely inspired. They were also to use divine wisdom and power to influence the next constitutional committee . He went on to say:

To balance the moral and political imbalance of the present and the past, Ghanaians must be committed to the search for God's divine plans, for, in it alone can one enjoy lasting peace.

9.3.6.3 On several other occasions, Rev. Yeboah Koree went on national television to proclaim Unigov during his televised sermons. There were many others in the pentecostal churches, who saw Unigov as a revelation from God. Examples of these were Rev Dr KO Thompson, one of the leaders of the Cherubim and Seraphim Church of Ghana, Takoradi , and Rev Francis Walters of the African Religious Congress. Some also joined secular groups to campaign for the concept of Unigov.

9.3.7 4TH JUNE, 1979 – 23RD SEPTEMBER ,1979:
ARMED FORCES REVOLUTIONARY COUNCIL

9.3.7.1 The 4th June, 1979 coup brought untold hardship to many Ghanaians for the first time in the annals of Ghana's political life. The AFRC regime lasted for only three-and-a-half months, but it perpetrated widespread human rights violations dubbed 'house cleaning', in the nature of killings, beatings, flogging in public, seizure of property and detentions. Some religious leaders pledged open support for the "house cleaning" exercise by the AFRC Government, and even called for its extension to other social sectors.

9.3.7.2 However, the Catholic Bishops' Conference and the Christian Council of Ghana hoped that the AFRC would not resort to unreasonable force in the execution of the 'house cleaning' campaign. Other individual church leaders such as Bishop Dominic Andoh showed concern about the acts of atrocities committed by the AFRC. The Catholic Church denounced violence of all kinds and protested vehemently to the arbitrary killings that took place. There was also a strong affirmation that each Ghanaian had the right to security of life and legitimate prosperity. Each Ghanaian was bound by the divine commandment, "Thou Shall Not Kill." In a joint memorandum, submitted to the AFRC in July, 1979, however, the Catholic Bishops' Conference and the Christian Council merely expressed the hope that the 'house cleaning' exercise embarked upon by the AFRC would be pursued without recourse to acts of vengeance and violence.

9.3.7.3 The AFRC executed eight Senior Military Officers, including three former Heads of State, in two batches. After the second batch of executions, the leaders of the Christian Council and the National Catholic Secretariat were among the other civil society groups that appealed for justice to be tempered with mercy. However, there were other members of the clergy, who supported the execution. Such supporters included priests such as Rev Fr Dr. Vincent Kwabena Damuah of the Catholic Church, who wrote:

We do not love those executed less but we love our country more. Why all the fuss about execution? I believe that the A.F.R.C has the right to exact capital punishment for the common good of the country. We hope and pray that the number is not too large. Christ died on the cross to save mankind. We hope and pray that those who have to die, accept the challenge courageously and prayerfully to save Ghana.

9.3.7.4 The Standard, a Catholic Weekly, also expressed similar views on the executions as a way of ensuring social justice in the future. In an editorial under the heading: “The Great Lesson,” it stated the following with reference to the executions at the Teshie Range

:

The sordid history surrounding the notorious second military regime, which put itself in power in 1972, has come to a close. The disciplinary action has been taken by the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council in public to serve as deterrent to anybody who goes about clinging on to power to amass illegal wealth and put Ghanaians into the economic predicament in which we find ourselves today.

9.3.7.5 The seizure of assets of a large number of people, the demolition of private houses and the establishment of “People’s Courts” to try people in secret for various alleged crimes against the state, received public support. Although there was very little information on the operations of these “People’s Courts,” no one demanded an open trial for the supposed offenders.

9.3.7.6 The AFRC Government had the shortest life-span in the annals of governance of this country. However, the atrocities perpetrated under this regime were phenomenal. The killing of the Senior Military Officers, the public flogging of people, some of whom were stripped naked, the seizure and destruction of people’s property, were enough instances of human rights violations that caused great concern in the country. In the main, the Christian Religious Bodies protested against such acts of inhumanity.

9.3.8 24TH SEPTEMBER, 1979 – 30TH DECEMBER, 1981:
PEOPLE’S NATIONAL PARTY (PNP) GOVERNMENT

9.3.8.1 There were very few occasions on which the churches had cause to protest against government action. One of those occasions was when the government mounted overt surveillance Capt Kojo Tsikata. The Standard criticised the flagrant violation of the rights of Capt Tsikata.

9.3.9.0

31ST DECEMBER, 1981- 6TH JANUARY, 1993 PROVISIONAL NATIONAL DEFENCE COUNCIL

9.3.9.1 The Government of PNDC under Flt Lt Rawlings initiated what he described as “Holy War” on vices. The spate of violence, terror, arbitrary imprisonment and torture that characterized the early stages of the revolution attracted sharp criticism from various quarters, notably, the Christian Council of Ghana and the Catholic Bishops’ Conference.

9.3.9.2 Early in the life of the PNDC, certain events occurred that caused the religious leaders to express disagreement with the government. The Catholic Church’s unequivocal stand against human rights abuses was contained in a joint pastoral letter of the Catholic Hierarchy of Ghana on “Moral Conversion and National Reconstruction,” issued on the occasion of the 1982 Easter celebration. This was to serve as the church’s reaction to the political situation in the country at that time. The Catholic Church denounced violence of all kinds, including the arbitrary killings that were going on, emphasizing that each Ghanaian has the right to security of life and legitimate prosperity. The church, once again affirmed that each Ghanaian is bound by the divine commandment: “Thou Shalt Not Kill”.

9.3.9.3 In separate memoranda, the Christian Council of Ghana and the Catholic Bishops’ Conference called on the PNDC Government to publish the interim report submitted to the Attorney General by the Special Investigation Board, which investigated the kidnap and murder of three High Court Judges, and a retired Army Officer on 30th June, 1982. They also urged the government to consider the immediate possibility of handing over power to a representative government.

9.3.9.4 It was clear, during the PNDC period that the terror unleashed by the regime was such that only established bodies such as the Christian Council of Ghana, the Catholic Bishops’ Conference and Association of Professional Bodies were capable of collectively expressing condemnation of the regime's excesses. One Christian leader has remarked that, “It was a miracle that the leaders of the Christian Council of Ghana and the Ghana Catholic Bishops’ Conference were able to exhibit such courage during the early 1980s and to survive the fury of Rawlings' regime.” This, according to him, was due to the grace of God.

9.3.9.5 Rev Dr Vincent Kwabena Damuah, a Catholic Priest, became a member of the PNDC and took active part in most of the decisions during that time. A few Ghanaian priests spoke against the membership of Rev. Damuah on the PNDC, such that social commentators were divided on the issue of the involvement of religious leaders in politics. While some believed that priests should eschew politics, others were convinced that the appropriate role for the clergy was in the advisory capacity. Rev. Dr. Joseph Osei-Bonsu, then a lecturer at the University of Ghana, Legon, indicated that although the inclusion of a Catholic priest on the PNDC was indicative of the regime’s recognition of the important contribution which the church could make to the development of the country, it would have been better if he had been appointed to an advisory role, as such participation in the government could cause a rift in his congregation. The official position of the Catholic Church was to suspend him from priestly duties.

9.3.9.6 In November, 1982, the Catholic Bishops' Conference in its Statement on the State of the Nation, condemned the "cold-blooded, cowardly murder" of the three High Court Judges and a retired Officer of the Ghana Army, and also expressed the hope that those found guilty of the savage act would be punished. The Statement further expressed concern about the lawlessness in the country and recklessness of the People's Defence Committees in sowing seeds of discord and bitterness in the country; the unrestrained violence of the security forces that had claimed many lives and maimed others; and the situation of insecurity created for every one in the country.

9.3.9.7 In a Memorandum from the member Churches of the Christian Council of Ghana to the PNDC, the churches entreated the government, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, to listen and pay attention to the cries of the people. The memorandum mentioned the following atrocities:

...the numerous kidnappings, confiscation of properties, buildings, and cars without adequate enquiry or even any investigation at all...Detentions without trial of politicians and other citizens and increasing violence by progressive organizations...

9.3.9.8 In a document entitled, "20 Points for Study," The Christian Council of Ghana mentioned other concerns including the following:

Never before in our history have so many Ghanaians disappeared in suspicious circumstances as in the period since December 31, 1981. The cases of the three judges and a retired major are typical of the other incidents including two hundred listed on the 28 July 1982 by the Association of Recognised Professional Bodies.

These criticisms did not go down well with the government.

9.3.9.9 The Standard also consistently criticised the government on the atrocities of the time. The government took umbrage at these criticisms and expressed its displeasure by banning the newspaper on 13th December, 1985.

9.3.9.10 In 1989, the government sought to control religious bodies by requiring that all religious bodies should be registered under the Religious Bodies Registration Law, 1989 (PNDCL 221). The Catholic Bishops' Conference and the Christian Council informed the Chairman of PNDC, by a joint memorandum on 11th August, 1989, of their displeasure at that law and refused to register under the Law. The message explained to the Chairman and members of the PNDC that the law constituted an infringement on the fundamental human rights of the basic freedom of worship as stated by article 18 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. The message further alleged that the Law also contravened article 8 of the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights, and even the government's own enabling Law, the Provisional National Defence Council (Establishment) Proclamation (Supplementary and Consequential Provisions) Law 1982, (PNDCL 42). Section 1(b) of PNDCL 42 which provided as follows: "Respect for fundamental human rights and for the dignity of human persons are to be cultivated among all sections of the society and established as part of the basis of social justice."

The religious bodies believed that the registration requirement was the first step in a bid to deny legal existence to those bodies that the PNDC might not favour. The Christian Religious Bodies in keeping with the ethics of rendering “service to mankind” protested against all the above-mentioned incidents of human rights abuses.

9.3.9.11 In the same year of 1989, four religious groups made up of the “Jehovah’s Witnesses”, “The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints”, ‘The Lord is My Shepherd’ Church, Kumasi and Prophet Ekwam’s Church at Gomoa Budumburam were proscribed. The Orthodox Churches protested in meetings with the government, on their behalf. In particular, the ban on those groups demonstrated the importance of resisting the registration requirements being introduced, since that would have given power to governments to determine questions of doctrine and religious orthodoxy.

9.4 CONCLUSION

9.4.1 The CPP Government was generally regarded as dictatorial. The NLC Government was therefore described as a “liberator,” when it overthrew the CPP Government. Even though it was an unlawful take-over of power by force of arms, the Christian religious organizations supported it.

9.4.2 Even though numerous acts of brutality took place during the initial period of the NLC regime, public protests against such acts were minimal. Furthermore, a number of laws were promulgated to disqualify some people from contesting or holding public office. Notable among these laws were the Elections and Public Officers Disqualification Decree, 1968 (NLCD 223), and the Public Officers Disqualification Decree of 1969 (NLCD 332), which disqualified 152 CPP functionaries from holding public office for ten years, and prevented them from contesting elections to public office. The failure of Ghanaians in general, and Christian Religious Bodies in particular, to protest against these discriminatory and unduly punitive laws gave the impression that these laws were justified.

9.4.3 During this period, a number of laws were made that took retrospective effect, but this did not elicit any protest.

9.4.4 The religious bodies did not have open clashes with the Governments of the Second and Third Republics. There was, however, at various times, tension between the Christian Religious Bodies notably, the Ghana Catholic Bishops’ Conference and the Christian Council of Ghana on the one hand and on the other, the Governments of NRC, SMC, AFRC and the PNDC.

9.4.5 From the facts outlined above, it is clear that Christian religious bodies have clashed with various governments that ruled Ghana. This was because of the particular stance that they took on certain human rights abuses perpetrated by these governments. In pursuance of their advocacy role, the religious bodies have engaged in activities in the form of issuing protest letters, communiqués, memoranda, pastoral letters etc. For example, the Christian Council of Ghana, and the Ghana National Catholic Secretariat have often spoken with one voice on matters that they considered worthy of such joint action. It is worth noting that, not much has been heard from the Islamic Religious groups in an advocacy capacity, and the Traditional Religious groups have played no advocacy role at all.

9.4.6 Religious bodies have members in every stratum of society. Consequently, the opinions and actions of the leaders of these bodies shape public morality and behaviour. The ‘culture of silence’ that pervaded the political fabric of Ghana during the days of the PNDC, had a serious impact on the advocacy role of the Christian religious bodies. All the same, the Christian religious bodies especially, the Christian Council of Ghana and the Catholic Bishops’ Conference were always persistent and consistent in criticizing governments on human rights issues.

9.4.7 Instances of religious groups seriously engaging governments in terms of protests and other actions on human rights issues have been commendable, even though on a few occasion such protests fell short of expectation. On issues such as the Preventive Detention Act, the bomb outrages of the 1960s, the killing of the Senior Military Officers, the flogging of citizens in public, the demolition of public properties, the disappearance of certain individuals, and the abduction and gruesome murder of the three High Court Judges and a retired Officer of the Ghana Army, have all elicited protest from them.

9.4.8 It is hoped that now that some of the traditional religious groups are organized under the Afrikania Mission, they would be more vocal in speaking out on national issues as well as reforming some of their practices that constitute human rights abuse.

9.4.9 The Muslim groups should also be heard more on matters of human rights, so that the task of infusing morality into our governance would not be left to the Christian groups only. Already there are hopeful signs that the need to ingratiate themselves with ruling government has become a thing of the past, and so this should enable them to criticize the government whenever the need arises.

LIST OF ABBREVIATIONS

NRC – National Reconciliation Commission
MAP – Muslim Association Party
CPP – Convention peoples Party
GCMA – Gold Coast Muslim Association
NRC/SMC– National Redemption Council/Supreme Military Council
GMRC – Ghana Muslim Representative Council
UGMRC – United Ghana Muslim Representative Council
UNIGOV– Union Government
PNP – Peoples National Party

AFRC – Armed Forces Revolutionary Council
WISC – World Islamic Call Society
PDA – Preventive Detention Act
NLC – National Liberation Council
NLCD -- National Liberation Council Decree
PMFJ – Peoples Movement for Freedom and Justice
NPP – Northern Peoples Party
PNDCL – Provisional National Defence Council Law